AN abstract of title is a brief statement of all the conveyances, liens and tax sales of record affecting the title to a lot or tract of land. A set of Abstract Books shows the conveyances on every lot of land in a county, and to be of value must be thoroughly made and MINUTELY ACCURATE. WHAT THE CIRCUS DID. Before we went to the Circus!

Nobody had ever seen us go At all too fast, or at all too slow: No matter how gayly we talked or sang, We never have used a word of slang, Before we want to the Circus!

We went to church or we went to school, By the very most orthodox kind of rule; For we were a people of Dutch descent, And rather phlegmatic of temperment, Until we went to the Circus! Alas and alas! 'tis a woeful sight. The way we were changed at the time I write

Father is swaying against the breeze,

Hung by the toes from a high trapeze,

Trying to copy the Circus! The boys on their heads, with feet in air, Are riding wild horses on each high chair; Or down on their backs on the sidewalk brick Are balancing tubs for a juggling trick; The girls have painted their hands and face. And got themselves up for an Indian race, As they saw them do in the Circus!

Swinging the baby with many a rub, And brandishing him like an Indian club! While baby himself, in a terrible fright, Howls like Zulu from morn till night. Since we went to the Circus! Alas and alas! I can only say, wish in the night, I wish in the day, wish with my heart, I wish with my head, wish with my ears, which are nearly dead,

Swinging the baby with both her hands,

Mother high on the table stands, wish with a shrick that would rent the air, We never had gone to the Circus!

MR. WILSON'S WIFE. BY MARIE HAZEN.

Mr. Wilson was an overbearing, selfwilled, tyrannical man-feared by his servants, dreaded by his sisters, and disliked by his male acquaintances. And yet, strange to say, he was a favorite among the ladies of his set. Some one has said, "Woman loves her master." If so, perhaps the selfwill which made him obnoxious to other masculine self-wills was the charm which caused so many gentle hearts to flutter at his footstep, so many pretty girls to long for his presence. It cannot be denied that Mr. Wilson -"Percy Wilson" his cards ran-was an exceedingly good looking man. He was tall, well made, and had reached just that degree of embonpoint which is becoming. His hair was of raven

His teeth were perfection in whiteness and evenness. Those who disliked him insisted that they were too white, and had an unpleasant way of glistening through his heavy black mustache. But as perfect teeth are as rare as they are desirable, very likely that was only envy.

Admired as Mr. Wilson was-many as were the cheeks which flushed at every low-spoken word of his, and ears that longed for more satisfactory and definite love-making, he had skilfully evaded the shoals and quicksands of matrimony, and arrived at the age of thirty-five without entanglement. Indeed, our worthy hero rather prided himself—not only that he had run the gauntlet of many seasons and was still free, but even congratulated him-self upon his hardness of heart, which was absolutely without a wound.

It had been written in the book of fate that Mr. Wilson should no longer be free, and so it came about in this wise:— Mrs. Dolson gave a ball in honor of her niece, Miss Ellen Dolson, "just out." Mr. Wilson was present, of course.

Miss Dolson was young, pretty, piquant, with just a touch of temper, without which a pretty girl is like wine without flavor, or flowers without perfume, worthless and unattract-

In fact, Miss "Nellie" had rather more than a touch of temper, and was withal the possessor of a self-will and "equal to the d- himself." So-said her father. Now certainly her father ought to know, for he had been the miserable victim of her "resolutions" often Once, when she was but ten enough. years old, she had rebelled at the injustice of a governess who had punished her for a fault she had not committed. Nellie complained to her father, and demanded that the governess should be displaced. Mr. Dolson refused to resort to so extreme a measure for what he considered but a slight over-severity, at the worst. "Then," said this ten-year-old Spartan, "I will not speak to her, nor for her, as long as she remains in this house." And she didn't. Commands, punishments, threats, were all alike unavailing. The governess was discharged.

Mr. Wilson, bending over her chair, speaking soft nothings into the little pink ear, saw nothing of this terrible will. He saw only a bright, animated face, a low white forehead, from which the soft brown hair rippled back with many a vagrant curl. And the eyes-saucy brown eyes-matched the saucy words which fell from the rosy lips. Mr. Wilson was delighted, and decided that Miss Dolson was charming. 'An innocent little thing, too," he mentally added, at some naive remarks. But when he smilingly suggested that she forget a partner or two, and come for a walk with him on the piaz za, and was told that she preferred to remain and dance. Mr. Wilson, the elegant, was mildly astonished. Being cased in an armor of self-love and con-ceit, he decided it was simply because she was unversed in the coquetries of society, and anticipated quite a fresh pleasure in teaching her the honor he bestowed upon her by his attentions. The evening passed without much progress. So did a week-two weeks -a month. Miss Dolson was saucy, pert, exasperating, but always charming. Mr. Wilson was surprised, interested, piqued.

As Miss Dolson was the first and only girl who had ever dared defy and tantalize him, so Miss Dolson was the first and only girl he had ever cared to possess. Not that Mr. Percy Wilson was in love. No! Men like him never fall in love; they are incapable of it. Their selfshove, precludes the possibility. They fill their whole hearts with so much of admiration for the man they esteem themselves to be, that no woman can find room to enter and reign in the inner temple.

And as this | of life, he took the surest way to raise obstacle was most provoking—this wo-man lovely and young—Mr. Wilson re-solved to remove the one by winning the other. "Once married," reasoned this wise young man, "I'll bend her will; mine will do for both." Miss Dolson was, however, much more interested in her admirer than she cared to show. Not in love-perhaps scarcely more so than he with her; but she liked him, and what was better still, she understood him. She saw all his faults, and thought herself able to endure them-perhaps cure them. She saw that he was gook-looking, and heard that his bank account was handsomer still. My little heroine was not nearly so simple-minded as she appeared. She had decided that Mr. Wilson was a very good catch—as twenty other girls had done before her. She resolved, therefore to capture him-so had they. She knew what to do and when-so had not they. Instead of being delighted at his calls, she was, or appeared to be, somewhat indifferent. When he was devoted she was pert; when he known almost every one shook his or her head. Some pitied her, some him, but all agreed upon one point: they were sure to be miserable. His friends thought she would worry him to death with her bold, pert ways. (These were principally the twenty.) His enemies knew he would kill her with his savage temper and tyrrany. In the summer they were married, with the usual amount of fuss and ex-trip to Niagara Falls—for in those days Europe was not so near at hand. Not long after their arrival at Niagara, Mr. Wilson saw-or thought he did, which is all the same-occasion to reprove Mrs. Wilson, and hinted his intention to be obeyed. Nellie had been guilty of a grave misdemeanor. She had, in a moment of haste, laid violent hands on one of his two pet hair-brushes, and not only brushed those brown waves of hair, but hadhorrible to relate-wet the tip.end of said brush to do so. Mr. Wilson was angry. "Nellie," he said, in terrible tones, holding up the brush, and frowning darkly, "perhaps you do not know that I never permit any one to use my brushes. I think from the appearance of this one that you not only have used it, but have actually gone so far as to dampen it. Understand, if you please, for the future, that I forbid you to touch them. Remember what I say-

for I must be obeyed."
So saying, Mr. Wilson threw down the brush and left the room. The morning passed slowly. Mr Wilson did not feel exactly pleased with himself. He had been married less than a week, and here he was passing the morning alone, while Nellie, doubtless, was crying her eyes out over his first harsh words, shut up in their room at the hotel.

me? Everybody has been staring at me! Speak! Can't you?" Still, Mr. Wilson consoled himself with the reflection that there must be a beginning, if he intended to be master. and the sooner, perhaps, the better. Of course it was disagreeable for both, but Nellie must learn that a husband commands where a lover sues. As one begins so one must continue, he repeated over and over. At last the dinner hour arrived, and

Mr. Wilson returned to the hotel, determined to be kind and forgiving. No doubt Nellie's eyes would be swollen and red—quite unfit for the public dining-room. He would order dinner in their own room, and dine with her. Filled with this magnanimous resolve, he rapidly mounted the stairs and entered his room. No one there! Everything in order, but no Nellie! What was that in the water pitcher? He crossed the room, and pulled with resting place his two pet brushes, and held them up, dripping, limp, ruined, while he stupidly stared at them. The daring of the impious deed was too much for him. For full two minutes he held them in his hands; then, as he realized the state of affairs, he threw them down with a muttered curse, and dressed for dinner.

I am afraid Mr. Wilson's raven locks were not arranged with their usual nervous hand from out their watery care, for besides the two miserable objects on the wash-stand, nothing better than a whisk broom presented itself wherewith to dress them. After some delay incident to the first use of a broom for a hair brush, Mr. Wilson descended to the dining-room. There sat Mrs. Wilson, beautifully and becomingly dressed, gayly talking to a party of old friends whom she had chanced to meet. Now a bridegroom, no matter how exasperated he may be at his new wife, cannot well show it at a public table, and before strangers; so Mr. Wilson was forced to appear happy and gay, and even smile-somewhat faintly, it must be confessed-when Nellie took slyly from his hair two bits of brown

After dinner Nellie accepted an invitation to drive for both, and again the unhappy man smiled and tried to look calm and pleasant. Of course there was no time for a word. Nellie invited two of her friends to her room, while she donned a saucy little bonnet. In spite of all, they passed a very pleasant afternoon, and it was not till they had retired to their

room at night that Mr. Wilson had an opportunity to refer to the disagreeable subject. It was somewhat awkward, but Mr. Wilson had been so long accustomed to rule his family and servants with a rod of iron that he decidedly objected to yielding the point to Mrs. Wilson. So he opened the subject by saying: "Nellie, did I not forbid you to touch my brushes? Why did you place them in the pitcher?" "Why, to wet them, of course," was the pert rejoinder. "As for your for-bidding me to touch them, I believe you did say something disagreeable be-fore you went out; but I forgot and forgave it before you were down stairs. Didn't the old things look funny sticking out of the pitcher? I guess they are ruined"—taking them up and looking at them doubtfully—"they look horribly limp. You'll have to get new ones, Percy, my dear. I'll lend you mine till you replace them. Therethere!" as Mr. Wilson opened his astonished mouth to speak. "Don't bother any more about them. I'm going to say my prayers." Down on her knees dropped the naughty little sinner, (as was her nightly practice) thus effectually putting an end for the time to all conversation. When her devotions were ended, Mr. Wilson wisely refrained from renewing the unpleasant topic.

You may be sure so signal a defeat rankled in our worthy hero's mind; Daily he assured himself that the next encounter should find him victor. Shortly after their return home, Mrs. Wilson purchased for herself two long and splendid curls, with which to adorn her small head on state occasions. These same curls were Mr. Wilson's abomination. Doubtless, had he requested his fair wife to refrain from wearing them, as they were particularly displeasing to him, she would have done so at once; but true to his habit opposition.

Before going to business, one morn-her again to wear them. Mrs. Ellen said nothing, and Mr. Wilson departed.

His disgust may be imagined when, on his return, he beheld the offending curls disporting themselves on Nellie's small head.

"Madam," he said, white with rage,
"did you hear me when I forbade you to wear those abominable things?" touching the curls with the end of his failed to mete out sure and smarting reply. "I am not in the least deaf."

"Then am I am to infer you do not intend to heed?" growing still whiter, and fairly trembling with anger.
"Pray infer what you please," was the daring rejoinder. Speechless with passion, Mr. Wilson lost all control over himself. Striding across the floor, he reached his wife's side, seized the innocent cause of all the trouble, and with no very gentle touch unfastened them and tossed them into the fire.

Not one word said Ellen. She rose, calmly re-arranged her hair, and accompanied her husband down to dinner without the smallest show of temper, save an added color in the cheek and glow in the beautiful eyes.

After dinner they were going out. Mr. Wilson almost expected Nellie would refuse to go, in which case he intended to insist. His easy victory had whetted his appetite for battle, and he thirsted for more rebellion, that he might crush it. He was doomed to disappointment. Nellie called a servant, and dispatched her for some needed trifle. On her return-after a short whispered direction or instruction-she announced her readiness to accompany her lord.

The evening was delightful—Nellie's manner demure and respectful—Mr. Wilson's calm, dignified, benignant. At a late hour they returned home, as amiable a couple as one could desire to Late hours at night make late hours in the morning. Mr. Wilson found up-on waking that he had overslept himself. The fatigue and the darkened room made the late hour seem much earlier. There was nothing to do but to hurry. Nellie was still sleeping, so Mr. Wilson did not lighten the room, but hurriedly dressed in the dim light, deluged his hair in bay rum, gave it a hasty brush, and ran down stairs. Servants looked at him curiously.

People in the street car stared at him. Two pretty school-girls giggled outright. Mr. Wilson began to feel nervous. At last his friend, Charlie Davis, got into the car. No sooner did he see

Wilson than he exclaimed in astonishment,-"Good gracious! Wilson, what have you been doing to yourself?"

"Doing? Nothing! What's amiss?"
Charlie leaned back and laughed. Mt. Wilson's face grew very red.
"Don't act like a fool!" he angrily exclaimed. "What is the matter with "What color is my hair?" he asked. "Well," said the old gentleman, with faint twinkle in his bright eye, "I should say a cross between a straw color and a French gray." Poor Wilson made one bolt from the car, Davis at his heels, and rushed into the first barber shop. One glance at the glass was enough-his lovely black hair had disappeared, and in its place

Wilson dropped into a chair and groaned. "Call a cab, Davis-call a cab," he said, hoarsely. "Let me get home!"

Davis did as he was desired, then hurried down town to tell everybody he knew "the splendid joke about Wilson." You may be sure it was enjoyed Before night every acquaintance had heard of Wilson's "blonde" hair. Meanwhile the angry victim was last he threatened.

"A divorce, madam!" "A divorce!" exclaimed his wife calmly. "What for? Will you go into a court and tell how you tore my curls from my head and threw them into the fire, and I, in revenge, filled your bottle with hair-bleach instead of bay rum? Oh, no you won't, Percy!' crossing the dainty slippered feet and half closing her eyes, while a curious smile hovered round the rosy lips. "No you won't! Everybody would laugh at you—it would be even funnier than the blonde hair! Listen to me, my dear. You can't tyrannize over me! I'm not one bit afraid of you, for every time you do or say a rude, ungentlemanly thing to me I'll pay you with interest. We need not quarrel unless you prefer it; but bear in mind, while I shall be careful not to interfere with your business, dress, or friends, I shall brook no interference from you with mine." Mr. Wilson stood dumb before this wisp of a girl. For the first time, perhaps, since boyhood, he felt absolutely cowed. In spite of her calmness and lazy ease, there was a determined look in the pretty face, a fire in the clear eye, that spoke a will greater than his own—a daring that would flinch at

It's no joke to be made ridiculous before all one's friends, and worse still before one's fees; and Mr. Wilson shivered as he reflected, and wisely con-cluded to make a treaty with the indomitable little warrior before him. eral, who, at the close of the war did not surrender, but marched his men to Mexico and offered his services to Max-imilian, is an old friend of mine, and he had been urging me for a long time to come down to his splendid place in Lafayette county and spend a few days hunting and fishing. It was shortly, a few days, perhaps, after the Gads Hill robbery, on the Iron Mountain railroad, that, completely worn out by close attention to business in the Sedalia courts, I determined to run down to the farm and rest a few days. I took the train on the Lexington branch of the Missouri Pacific, and got off at the little station near the Shelby place, called Page City. It was a beautiful moonlight fight, and as the house was but a little over a mile distant, I shouldered my double-barreled shot-gun, which I had taken along for some sport, and trugged over the white lane leading to the homestead. The old home was surrounded by some tall forest trees, and I had just imerged from their shadow into the moonlight, 20 steps from the home, when a clear, ringing voice cried out, "Halt!" and at the same instant I saw, shining in the moonlight, a polished rifle barrel protruding from a partially raised open window. I intuitively felt that the man at the other end of the rifle had a spite of me. "Wait a minute," was the reply.

I waited five minutes, and then there was a rattling of bars and chains, and the front door opened cautiously, and I was bidden to lay down my gun and approach. I did so until I came close to the door, when Shelby's voice said, "It's all right, boys; I will vouch for him." I then entered and looked about me. The cosy little sitting-room had been converted into a fortress. The windows barricaded securely, and furniture was moved up against the door, while on a table in the center of the room lay a collection of revolvers and repeating rifles that would have excited the admiration of a pirate. There were five men in the room whom I did not know. They sat around and did not talk. The gentlemen also wore their small arms. "These are some friends of mine," said Shelby, and I was not introduced further. I immediately knew that the visitors were the two James boys and the three Younger brothers. Shelby and I indulged in a conversation for some time, which the others showed no disposition to enter, and at last I was shown to bed, where I tossed until daylight in a troubled sleep. When I came down to breakfast the curtams were drawn; old Joe sat in an easy chair calmly smoking his pipe and playing with a couple of youngsters. The traveling arsenals of the night before had departed—so quietly as not to break my light sleep—hours before.
Shelby did not refer to the visittors of the night before, nor did I. I did not know, however, whether they would return that night, and so I pleaded pressure of business and limited my stay to one day. And that is the only time I met the Missouri bandits. About one-and-thirty years ago, at the wharf of a well-known coal merchant on the Surrey side of the water, there worked a man named John Godfrey. The man owned a dog, which was in the habit of accompanying his master on his visits to the publichouse which were frequent. This dog was taught by his master (who ought to have known better) to drink malt liquor; and the animal became so used to it, that he would not leave the public-house without it. On one occasion when John Godfrey and one of his companions visited a beer shop in Gibson street, Waterloo road, his companjon said, "Let us make the dog drunk!"

This was agreed upon; more than the usual quantity of liquor was given to the animal, which had the desired éffect. On reaching the house where his master lodged, the poor animal could not ascend the stairs leading to amidst the haunts of men, a wiser if his master's room, but kept rolling down as fast as he got up. THURSDAY, MAY 4, 1882. FOR ATTORNEY GENERAL. The Republican press of the State is just now announcing the names of distinguished gentlemen for the various State offices, and as the time draws near for the selection of the various candidates it is proper that the attention of the people should be called to the names that will be brought forward for their support in the State convention and for their votes at the polls. THE RECORD has but one name to propose to the Republican State convention for a State office—that of Hon. Jacob J. Van Riper of this place, for re-nomination as Attorney General. Weask his nomination not only because it is a time-honored custom of the Republican party to give an officer a second term, but also because Mr. Van Riper is eminently fitted for the position and has made a capable officer during the term he has held the office. From every part of the State where his business has called him the word comes that he has faithfully attended to his duties. He has probably given the office more time than any of his predecessors. It has been his pride to leave nothing undone where the interests of the State were to be served, and we believe not a complaint has been made from any quarter or by any person that he has been derelict of duty, the State in his official capacity. For the office of Attorney General Mr. Van Riper ought to have no opposition in the Republican State convention, and indeed, from present indica-\ tions we believe he will be the only candidate before the convention for that office. The Marshall Statesman has brought forward the name of Hon. James H. Campbell of Muskegon for the same position, a gentleman who is well fitted for the office, and for whom the Statesman is probably not too enthusiastic in his praise, but Mr. Campbell recognizes the claims of Mr. Van Riper to a second term, and on this subject writes as follows to the editor of the Detroit Post and Tribune:

my name is presented as a candidate for the office of attorney general, and the article intimates that my name will be presented in that connection before the State convention which will meet this year. The understanding of the writer must have been that Attorney General Van Riper would not be a candidate for re-nomination, and doubtless the article was written on that assumption, which may have arisen from the fact that it has been stated in the press that Mr. Van Riper would be a candidate for Congress in his district. I desire to say that if he desires, or will accept, a re-nomination as Attorney General, I will not allow my name to so, but I do not want any misappre-

Tardy Justice to a Congressman.

The House of Representatives, having finally reached the contested election case of Lynch vs. Chalmers, has given Mr. Lynch his seat as representative of the sixth district of Mississippi. This result was inevitable, on the simple merits of the case, yet Mr. Lynch has been deprived of his seat for more than a year, another man has voted in his stead and drawn his pay, and the minority instead of the majority in his district has been represented. That such injustice should be done by the body to which alone an aggrieved congressman-elect can look is simply outrageous, and reflects disgrace upon every one whose partisanship or neglect is in any degree responsible for the delay. Two or three such cases occurring at a single time may change the entire political complexion of Congress and bid defiance to the will of the majority. The House now proposes to look into the other contested seats. It cannot do so too soon if it has any regard for its own reputation.

Fun at a Farmers' Club.

The Tuscola county farmers' club meeting at Millington, Friday afternoon, was the scene of an episode not usually on the programme of farmers' clubs. Enos Goodrich, the veteran bourbon Democrat of Tuscola county, was down on the bills for an essay on "Responsibility of Farmers," and he thought the opportunity was a good one for getting in some sidewinders on his political enemies. He accordingly sailed in on his intellectual muscle dealing blows right and left at the Republican party, Senator Conger and the Republican policy generally. H. H. Hatch of this city was present, and when Enos finished his inconsiderate diatribe there were vociferous calls for "Hatch!" "Hatch!" The gentleman responded and metaphorically mopped the floor with Enos. It is said that he combed him down in a way that was refreshing to the Republicans and gave satisfaction to the Democrats present who did not sympathize with Goodrich's attempt to turn the farmers' club into a political meeting. Agriculture was not very much discussed at the Millington meeting.—Bay City Tribune

High Bonds and the Liquor Traffic The effect of requiring high bonds of the liquor selling interest, besides put-ting the traffic under more stable responsibility, operates directly to diminish the number of drinking places. The Telegraph's Battle Creek special, Friday, noted that four saloons had been closed there by raising the bonds. The stringent and effective police law of Michigan when enforced does a great deal for the morals and temperance habits of the community. The support of this law is the most practical of temperance work. The attention of the village authorities is especially directed to the question of the bonds.—Kalamazoo Telegraph.

We have it from an intelligent farmer, and successful corn raiser: After selecting the seed he hangs it in the smoke house and smokes it well, sometimes until it is quite black. By this treatment the corn is not liable to rot before sprouting and insects will not disturb it. Where he has used smoked corn he has never been obliged to replant, which is often a serious drawback on corn raising. It is but little trouble to try it, and should it prove true it will pay every farmer, especially in a cold, wet spring.—Hartford Day

Some of our solid men of these parts say they are willing to be taxed to construct country roads if they are made of a solid and durable character, a proper foundation being made, and either stone or gravel used in the construc tion. But as to planking they will have none of it. It is said that even now the roads are so bad that farmers can scarcely get to town at all, except on horseback. Which fact interferes very much with business both in and out of the city.—Bay City Press.

Pillow Case Holder.

Among the recent inventions is a pillow holder. It is explained that the pillow holder is for the purpose of holding a pillow while the pillow case is being put on. We trust this new invention will sight more beautiful to the eyes of man than to see a woman hold a pillow in her teeth while she gently manipulates the pillow case over it. We do not say that a woman is beautiful with her mouth full of pillows. No one can ever accuse us of saying that, but there is something home-like and old-fashioned about it that cannot be replaced by any invention. We know that certain over-fastidious women have long clamored for some new method of putting on a pillow case, but these people have either lost their teeth, or the new ones they have bought do not grasp the situation. They have tried several new methods, such as blowing the pillow case up, and trying to get the pillow in before the wind got out and they have fried to get the pillow in by rolling up the pillow case until the bottom is reached, and then placing the pillow on end and gently unrolling the pil-low case, but all these schemes have their drawbacks. The old style of chewing one end of the pillow, and holding it the way a retriever dog holds a duck, till the pillow case is on, and then spanking the pillow a couple of times on each side, is the best, and it gives the woman's iaws about the only rest they get during the day. If any invention drives this old custom away from us, and we no more see the matrons of the land with their hair full of feathers and their mouths full of striped bed ticking, we shall feel that one of the dearest of our institutions has been ruthlessly torn from us, and the fabric of our national supremacy has received a sad blow, and that our liberties are in danger.—Peck's

Health.

BY V. CLARENCE PRICE, M. D.

The importance of health cannot be too much appreciated. There are thousands who consider it of but little consequence, until, by some unexpected or unforeseen event, a violent attack of disease takes place. It is then that the necessities of the case call forth their utmost energies; but having, while in the enjoyment of health, given it but little reflection, all that regards their restoration appears to be involved in impenetrable darkness. They fly to those means which their imagination suggests might be useful, or which they may hear of as being beneficial to another, or that which may be recommended by friends, without the possibility of even being able to judge whether the application may prove beneficial or injurious. It may prove successful or it may not; if not it must produce injury. Simple medicines by injudicious administration is often calculated to prove injurious, for, if no other effect is produced, time is lost, and the disease, by delay, allowed to become more firmly fastened upon the organ or part implicated. In no instance should any person be allowed to prescribe or suggest the use of any article however simple, for any disease, unless capable of fully understanding the character of the disease and the remedy necessary to remove it. There is no doubt but that thousands are yearly, through ignorant and unsystematic practice, hurled into eternity. The design of medicine is to remove the cause of the disease, and if of the right description, will remove it if judiciously applied. The uncertainty of its action is not so much the fault of the medicine as it is the ignorance of the person prescribing it. But how do medicines act? All medicines for the removal of the cause of disease, if too freely administered, must produce more or less debility. Disease in no instance should be thrown from the system faster than by means of food. and the loss sustained by throwing off this diseased matter is re-supplied. This cannot but be apparent to all; yet how generally is the opposite result experienced. Stimulants are generally much in use; scarcely do we hear of any case of debility but that bark, wine and other stimulants have been resorted to. The use of stimulants upon general principles we op-What are their action? This can be plainly exemplified by reflecting upon the free use of ardent spirits on any individual. He rises in the morning, his nervous system much impaired; every limb trembling and shaking nor can he acquire anything like steadiness until he shall have taken a few glasses of liquor. Their action is here obvious. His nervous system, previously strong, by the use of stimulus which excited them to action beyond their ability, becomes soon exhausted. their energies partially paralyzed, and it now requires the same stimulus to keep up even a natural state of excitability. The nervous system soon wears out under this unduly excited nervous irritability. With this fact before us, who, upon reflection, can justify the use of stimulants to those already laboring under nervous excitement? Such persons, the longer they resort to them, the more will the powers of the nervous system be gradually wasting away. Like other parts or organs of the body, no debility can take place in them unless it arises from the impoverishment or deficiency of the fluids destined to circulate in them. Therefore, in order to cure it, we must attack the original cause. The various organs are all supported by the fluids which circulate in them and according to the healthy or unhealthy property, sufficiency or insufficiency of it is health, strength or debility. Food is the only natural stimulus, and that is sufficient. If the stomach or digestive organs are incapable of performing duly their part, they require repairing. If the blood is thick and viscid, it requires attenuating in order that the nerves may be capable of absorbing that nutriment from it requisit for their support. Could it be otherwise expected that the nervous system should be weak, if the blood was so thick and viscid that the nerves could not absorb the nervous fluid from it? How soon would a spear of grass dwindle and die if deprived of moisture? How soon does a burning lamp become extinguished when the combustible materials that support it are exhausted, or obstructions prevent the combustion. And can we be surprised that when such impediments from the viscid state of the blood takes place. that the nerves, ligaments, muscles and cartilages cannot be supplied from the blood with that fluid necessary for their support, that they should become weak, and that the whole system should become debilited. The ing fact before us should manifest to our mind what course to adopt. Under such circumstances the blood must be attenuated, rendered more fluid, that the absorbing vessels, which are plentifully distributed throughout the whole system, may be enabled to exercise duly their office. Diseased matter must be removed from the blood, but in order to do this we must be able to determine what the character of the morbid matter changing the blood is. It will not answer to guess at it, as thousands of imposters and quacks do. We were prompted many years ago to undertake the investigation of the various character of disease and medical agents, by a critical analysis of both vegetable and animal matter. The investigation enabled us to ascertain with certainty the nature of that substance circulating in the system, first causing, then supporting disease. Our analysis of many of the agents employed as medicine, enaoled us to ascertain their mode of ac tion upon the fluids and solids of the human body-how and why they produce the effects which they are known to do. With this knowledge, the true principles of the treatment of diseases became divested of the mysterious ambiguity in which they were formerly enveloped. We do not consider all diseases in all stages curable. If a disease has attacked a vital organ, and it be allowed to remain until that organ be rendered incapable of performing its requisite functions before the prop-cannot be arrested, and death must sooner or later ensue. The proper er remedies are resorted to, the disease

> LIGHTNING struck the Clifton house, in Niles, now occupied by John Montague's hardware store, Monday. The plastering was pretty badly marred in several of the front rooms, and some glass broken out. No estimate of the damage done can well be made until repairing is completed. No one was hurt, but they all heard it who were in the store.

the Grand Lodge, I.O.O.F. of this State for the session of 1882, we learn that there are 14,832 members in good sianding in the State, and that in this county there are 671 members distributed in 14 Lodges. The lowest membership in any Lodge in this county is 18 and the highest 114. The various Lodges in the State paid out for relief of its members and for charity during last year, the sum of $17,751.86.

THE expense of running the village of St. Joseph during the past year was $3,741.04. It cost Buchanan for the same time $5,278.92. Among theitems of St. Joseph's expense are engineers' He has also highly decorated the inner | salary, $180, nightwatchman's salary, $156, and insurance on engine house and city hall $42. Included in Buchanan's expense is the cost of a side walk law suit, some new fire apparatus, and a few other extraordinary ex-

> THE next meeting of the Buchanan Grange is to be held Saturday, May 13. It is expected the following question will be discussed at that meeting:

Resolved, That Chinese immigration to this country should be prohibited. The persons appointed to introduce the discussion are B. Chamberlain and No. For. Pupils. 40, 27, 42, 44, 40, 60 Hon. Levi Sparks. A number of other persons are also expected to be present and take part in the discussion. A good attendance is desired.

THERE are some people occupying rooms in the old Tremont building who need the attention of the health officers, and more particularly of the proprietors of the property. The manner in which they use some of the vacant rooms is simply abominable and far from being for the best interest of the neighbors. The matter should be attended to at once.

MRS. DERINDA WEAVER is having a fine large dwèlling house built on her lot, at the corner of Oak and Third streets, that will considerably improve that section of the village. The removal of ten or twelve of the old barns on the opposite side of Oak street would materially improve the appearance of the street, if not quite so convenient to the owners.

DAYTON, of this county, was visited by a destructive fire on Sunday last, which destroyed a number of buildings before it could be checked. It commenced in the shoe store of Adam Curran, which was entirely burned; also was the adjoining house of James Reynolds, occupied by Jacob Hoffer. The store of Mrs. Lamb, and the houses of Mr. Weaver and Mr. Curran, and persistent efforts those buildings and the mill were saved, but not without damage. It was a close shave for the entire town .- Niles Democrat

The above is all correct excepting: No such man as Adam Curran lives in Dayton or owns property there; the fire did not commence in the shoe store; Mrs. Lamb does not own a store in Dayton, excepting as being the wife of Curtis Lamb, and the store did not take fire; the house of Mr. Weaver is not Mr. Weaver's house but Mrs. Weav-not take fire.

Excursion.—There will be an excursion from this place to St. Joseph on Sunday, May 14, by steamer May Graham, leaving Buchanan at 6:30 A. M. sharp. Returning, the boat will leave St. Joseph at 2 o'clock P. M. Tickets for the round trip are limited to 125 in number, at $1.00 each, and are for sale at Morris' restaurant. Nearly the entire number of tickets are already spoken for, so that those who wish to go and have not yet secured tickets had better speak early, or they may be unwillingly among those left at home. It is expected the Buchanan Cornet Band will attend.

A dispatch from South Haven to the Inter Ocean, dated May 2, says: "Last night the peach crop was seriously injured by a severe frost. Some growers report their entire crop killed, while others report more favorably. It is generally conceded that but few Crawfords will survive, and on the lowlands other varieties are badly used up. Peaches being a staple production of this locality, the loss will necessarily be severe. Reliable reports from interior points show almost a total loss of fruit of all varieties by the recent cold snap. Probably additional damage will be done here to-night, as there Darwin. Dr. R. W. Darwin, and grandson of Dr. Erasmus Darwin, both of whom rose to distinction. The naturalist and author was born at Shrewsbury, Feb. 12, 1809, and received his early education at a grammar school there; and when sixteen years of age went to the University of Edinburgh, studying two years, and and then entered Christ's College, Cambridge, where he took his degree in 1831. The autumn of that year found him volunteering as naturalist to accompany Captain Fitzroy, in the ship Beagle, on his exploring expedition around the world. The voyage lasted from 1831 to 1836, and during it the greater part of the South American coast, the Pacific islands, Australia, New Zealand, and the Mauritius were visited and examined. During this voyage Darwin was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society. When several volumes on this voyage were published, he contributed papers on the discoveries in natural history and geology, and several editions were issued. His more recent works include the "Origin of Species," which is probably the best known of his productions, having gone through many editions, and been translated into a number of languages. Darwin's work has been an attempt to account for the diversities of life on the earth by means of continuous development, without the intervention of special creative fiats at the origin of each spe cies. His "Descent of Man" appeared in 1871, and probably, next to the "Ori-

Twelve months later the ants again invaded his garden, and again he treated them to a strong dose of carbolic acid. The ants, as on the previous occasion, were at once withdrawn from the garden, and two days afterwards he found all the survivors at work on one track that led directly to the old nest of the year before, where they were busily engaged in making new excava-tions. It was a wholesale and entire migration. Mr. Belt adds: "I do not doubt that some of the leading minds in this formicarium recollected the nest of the year before, and directed the migration to it."

Are Sharks Man-Eaters.

[Compercal Advertiser.] Our younge: readers will be surprised and shocked to hear that a book has recently been published with the sole object of proving that, contrary to the settled belief of centuries, sharks do not eat human beings or animals. The author of "Are Sharks Man-eaters?" says that he has examined hundreds of seamen, whalemen, pearl-divers, South seamen, whatemen, pearl-divers, South Sea Islanders, Kroomen wreckers, those whose lives are mostly spent upon water, and he can state positively that he had never seen or heard of a well-authenti-cated instance of a shark seizing and carrying off a living man or a living land animal of any kind whatever. In order to prove at least that the author is not afraid of sharks, he says he has made a practice of bathing, whenever he has had an opportunity to do so, without any consideration for sharks, and that he has seen hundreds of others doing the same thing all over the tropical waters infested by suarks. More than that he has been overboard with two companions, far from relief of any kind, within five fathoms of three large sharks of the most blindly voracious variety, whose large fins were plainly in sight between them and the shore, to which they were swimming." Naked divers he has also seen jump from a boat al-most on top of a ground shark. Nevertheless, in spite of time testimony, we believe there is good evidence to show that sharks do ear men-or kill them, at least—when they get a chance. We shrink from b.l. ing that all of the thrilling stories of "death struggles with sharks," etc., are pure romance. And what a loss to the juvenile repertory of marvels! We can't afford to lose the

My practice, not one of experiment, but founded on the laws of Nature, with years of experience and evidence to sustain it, does not tear down, make sick to make well; no harsh treatment, no triffing, no flattering. We know the cause and the remedy needed, no guess work, but knowledge gained by years of experience in the treatment of Chronic diseases exclusively; no encouragement without a prospect. It is a startling fact, that quinine, arsenic and other poisonous minerals, form the basis of most of the "Fever and Ague Preparations," "Specifics," "Syrups," and "Tonics," in the market. The preparations made from these mineral poisons, although they are palatable, and may break the chill, do not cure, but leave the malarial and their own drug poison in the system, producing quinism, dizziness, ringing in the ears, headache, vertigo, and other disorders more formidable than the disease they were intended to cure. In the sluice-way the wheel, which revolves in the current, is gauged so as to sweep within a foot of the bottom, and the salmon are scooped up in the tanks or buckets, which latter let out the water as they ascend. On the wheel descending the fish are thrown out into a through or gutter, leading to a pen below, where they remain until taken away to be canned. to the duration of memory in ants, it does not appear that any direct experiments have been made; but the following observation by Mr. Belt on its apparent duration in the leaf cutting ant may here be stated: In June 1859, he found his garden invaded by these ants, and on following up their paths he found their nest about a hundred yards distant. He poured down their burrows a pint of diluted carbolic acid. The marauding parties were at once drawn off from the garden to meet the danger at home, while in the burrows themselves the greatest confusion prevailed. Next day he found the ants busily engaged in bringing up the antfood from the old burrows, and carrying it to new-ly formed ones a few yards distant. These, however, turned out to be intended only as temporary repositories; for in a few days both old and new burrows were entirely deserted, so that he supposed all the ants to have died. Subsequently, however, he found that they had migrated to anew site about the band and areads from the old one two hundred yards from the old one, and there established themselves in a

Troy, N. Y., April 8th, 1880.

Dr. D. Kennedy, Rondout, N. T.

Dear Sir:—Until within a recent date I had for several years suffered greatly from gravel, called by the doctors the Brick-dust Sediment. For about a year past this sediment has not passed off in the usual quantity, but has accumulated, causing me untold pain. Having heard of "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy" I tried it in my case, and after using about one and one-half bottles, I voided a stone from the Bladder, of an oval shape, 7-16 of an inch long, and rough on its surface. I send you the largest piece that you may see of what it is composed. Since then I have felt no pain. I now consider myself cured, and cannot express my thankfulness and gratitude for signal a deliverance from a terrible disease. You have my consent to use this letter, should you wish to do so, for the benefit of other sufferers.

Yours truly,

JAMES ANDREWS.
