Abstract of Titles.

N abstract of title is a brief statement of all the A N abstract of title is a brief statement of all the A conveyances, liens and tax sales of record affecting the title to a lot or tract of land. A set of Abstract Books shows the conveyances on every lot of land in a county, and to be of value must be thoroughly made and MINUTELY ACCURATE. The making of such an abstract is a work requiring the greatest care and patience in searching, and the closest scrutiny of all matters relating to the same.

To successfully conduct this branch of business and enjoy the confidence of the fuels, persons must have large experience, a thorough understanding of the business and a conscientions appreciation of its importance and responsibility. or this is the BEST GUARANTEE that their wor. will be ACCURATE AND RELIABLE.

SHE WOULD BE A MASON.

The funniest thing I ever heard. The funniest thing that ever occurred, Is the story of Mrs. Mehitable Byrde, Who wanted to be a Mason.

Her husband, Tom Byrde, a Mason true-As good a Mason as any of you; He is tyler of Lodge Cerulean Blue And tyles and delivers the summons due. And she wanted to be a Mason, too, This ridiculous Mrs. Byrde

She followed round, this inquisitive wife, And nagged him and teased him half out o his life; So to terminate this unhallowed strife, He consented at last to admit her.

and first, to disguise her from bonnet an This ridiculous lady agreed to put on His breech-ah! forgive me-I mean, pants

And miraculously did they fit her. The lodge was at work on the master's degree The light was ablaze on the letter G; High soared the pillars J and B. The officers sat like Solomon, wise; The brimstone burned amid horrid cries; The goat roamed wildly through the room; The candidate begged them to let him

And the devil himself stood up in the east As broad as an alderman at a feast, When in came Mrs. Byrde. Oh, horrible sounds! oh, horrible sight!

Can it be that Masons take delight In spending thus the hours of night? Ah! could their wives and daughters know The unutterable things they say and do. Their feminine hearts would burst with woe But this is not all my story.

Those Masons joined in a hideous ring, The candidate howling like everything, And thus in tones of death they sing (The candidate's name was Morey): Blood to drink and bones to crack, Skulls to smash and lives to take, Hearts to crush and souls to burn, Give old Morey another turn.

And make him grim and gory." Trembling with horror stood Mrs. Byrde, Cnable to speak a single word. She staggered and fell in the nearest chair On the left of the junior warden there, And scarcely noticed, so loud the groans, That the chair was made of human bones

Of human bones! On grinning skulls That gastly throne of horror rolls. Those skulls, the skulls that Morgan bore; Those bones, the bones that Morgan wore. His scalp across the top was flung, His teeth around the arms were strung. Never in all romance was known Such uses made of human bone.

There came a pause—a pair of paws Reached through the floor, up siding doors And grabbed the unhappy candidate! How can I, without tears, relate The lost and ruined Morey's fate? She saw him sink in a fiery hole, She heard him scream, "My soul! My soul!" While roars of fiendish laughter roll, And drown the yells for mercy. Blood to drink," etc., etc

The ridiculous woman could stand no more, She fainted and fell on the checkered floor, 'Midst all the diabolical roar. then, you ask me, did befall Mehitable Byrde? Why, nothing a all-

From Waverly Magazine. HOW SHE LOST HIM

BY GUINEVERE. In the largest, airiest room that the Columbia Hotel can afford, sit two ladies; one is a stout, over-dressed woman of forty or thereabouts; the other a tall young girl with a haughty, patrician face and sparkling dark eyes. A book lies open in her lap, but she is not reading; her face is turned toward the blue summer sky, and the white, fleecy clouds that fleck its surface; her eyes wear a far-away, dreamy expression, and a soft smile curves the proud red lips. "Of what is my Rosalind thinking?" asks her companion, in a slow, languid "Of the young stranger, pertone. haps?"

The girl starts suddenly, and a deep blush suffuses her cheek. "What do you mean, mother?" she

"Ah, my dear! I have found out your secret," replies her mother. "Well, well, all right, Rosalind; he is wealthy, and would be a very good match for you." Rosalind Valmore closes her book with an impatient gesture, but does

"You should not wear your heart upon your sleeve, however," continues her mother, "for sharper eyes than mine have discovered your secret, also. I heard Mrs. Miller say to Agnes Snow this morning, 'Agnes, don't you see that Miss Valmore is setting her cap for Mr. Breighton?' 'Yes,' replied Ag-nes; 'but men like Clyde Breighton don't care a snap for women who exhibit their affections as Rosalind Val-

"Nothing," answers Rosalind, sullen-

"Nothing!" echoes Mrs. Valmore.
"Why, I think it is dreadful. But of course, Agnes--' Rosalind turns with dilated nostrils and flashing eyes.

"I'd thank Miss Snow to mind her own affairs," she says; "and you also, Mrs. Valmore!" Her mother laughs softly, and rising, smooths down the ruffles of her silken "Good-bye, my dear," she says. "I'll leave you until you recover your good

She throws a lace scarf over her shoulders, fastening it with a silver dagger; sets her dainty hat jauntily on the dark braids, and descends the stairs to the lower hall, where Clyde Breighton is waiting for her. Agnes Snow stands on the piazza, slowly twisting the flaxen curls that fall over her round shoulders; and she smiles blandly when she sees the couple approaching. "Good afternoon," she says, tossing back her ringlets. "This is a lovely day for a ramble in the woods, is it

"Ah!" she exclaims, with a low laugh. Rosalind darts her a quick, triumphant glance from her dark eyes, and they pass by.
"What a handsome couple they are says Mrs. Miller, in an undertone. Agnes Snow shrugs her shoulders. "Mr. Breighton is certainly hand-some," she replies; "but as for Rosa-lind Valmore—well, I never admired that sort of a beauty, you know. Rather a bold flirtation, I think; but who can blame Mr. Breighton? What man wouldn't pay a little attention to a girl when she puts herself in his way?"

"Does she put herself in his way?" asks Mrs. Miller.
"Yes, indeed," is the reply; "I can see through all her little wiles and artifices. Why, he wouldn't have taken her out this afternoon if she had not beat about the bush,' as they say". And, having delivered this little falsehood, Agnes turns and walks slowly away, leaving Mrs. Miller to inform her acquaintances of this new proof of

Rosalind Valmore's artfulness. Meanwhile, Rosalind and her escort stroll down the road and enter a narrow path leading into the shady woods. After a few minutes' walk they come to a house—a low, rudely built cottage standing in a small clearing, where a few garden vegetables were planted. "What an odd-looking place!" ex-

on the threshold.

A voice, sweet and clear as the chimes of a silver bell, floats out on the still air, warbling the notes of that old familiar melody, "Annie Laurie." When the song ceases, Clyde, turning to his companion, says: "What a sweet voice! I must see the face of the singer."

Rosalind laughs musically, but there is an angry light in her dark eyes. "Your request shall be granted," she replies, and knocks lightly on the door with her gloved hand. It opens, and a young girl appears

"Will you please bring me a drink?" Rosalind asks sweetly. The girl obeys; and as she stands in the doorway, Clyde Breighton thinks he has never seen a fairer vision. She is not tall, but slender and graceful; her eves are dark blue, and long-lashed her features regular; her complexion a delicate pink and white, and the hair that falls in tiny ringlets on her brow is bright and glistening as spun gold. "What a pretty child!" says Clyde,

as they retrace their steps through the woodland path. "Child, indeed!" exclaims his com-"Why, Norma is seventeen, if she's a day!" "Norma," repeats Clyde Breighton to himself. "A pretty name, and a beautiful girl." When they reach the hotel, Agnes Snow comes forward to meet them. "Oh, you naughty folks!" she says, with a simper. "We have been waiting ever so long for you to return and join us in a game of croquet."

"I do not care to play," says Rosa-

"I am sorry to have kept you wait-

"No, indeed," answers Clyde, offering her his arm. "What have you done or said to offend her?" "Nothing that I am aware of," Agnes replies, as they saunter toward the croquet lawn; "but do you know, Mr. Breighton, I fancy that Miss Valmore game commences. From her open window Rosalind can see the players, and she watches them earnestly, especially the figures of Agnes Snow and Clyde Breighton. "Agnes Snow and Norma Serle," she mutters beneath her breath. "I hate them both! I am sure that Clyde Breighton has fallen in love with Norma's pretty face; yet she is a poor girl, and he is proud and wealthy. O Clyde,

Clyde!" she whispers, and a tender expression flits over her face. "I love you—love you so dearly!" A few days later, Agnes Snow, while standing at the window of the hotel parlor, hears a rustling of garments behind her; and turning, sees Rosalind Valmore, attired in a walking costume.

"Going for a walk?" she asks. Rosalind bows her head, and Agnes "Well, Mr. Breighton has just gone. I heard him say he was going for a walk to Lone Pine Cottage. By the way, doesn't a beautiful gırl live there?" "I believe there is a girl there," replies Rosalind, and a vexed expression crosses her face. "Perhaps you will meet him," suggests Agnes, with a malicious smile. "It happens I am not going that says Rosalind, haughtily, and way,"

"Up to Lone Pine Cottage," she repeats, as she walks slowly down the road, with her eyes bent upon the ground. "Can it be that he has actually fallen in love with Norma Serle, and visits her? I will see." She looks hastily around her, and seeing no one, turns up the path that leads through the woods, and walks quickly in the direction of Lone Pine Cottage. Near the clearing she pauses, and utters an exclamation. At the cottage window she sees Norma Serle leaning over the sill, with her sleeves rolled up above the elbows, and her dimpled chin resting upon one palm; while, on a rustic bench just below the window, Clyde Breighton is seated; and the two are chatting pleasantly. Rosalind turns away, with clenched hands and a fierce, angry light in her dark eyes. She hastens back to the hotel, and meets Agnes Snow on the piazza steps.

"Didn't you find Mr. Breighton?"

that little person whispers. Rosalind makes no reply, but goes at once to her own room, where she throws herself on the lounge, and buries her face in the crimson cushions. Poor Rosalind! She must fight her battle alone; she dare not ask sympathy of her mother, and she has no true friend in whom she can confide. Her love gets the better of her reason; and when she rises to dress for dinner there is a stern, determined look on her face, and a steely glitter in her dark eyes, that betokens no good to Norma Serle. A week passes by. Every day Clyde Breighton pays a visit to the little cottage in the woods; yet he is as attentive to Rosalind Valmore as ever; and Agnes Snow casts spiteful, jealous glances at her rival, who throws aside her hateur and reserve, and becomes the gayest of the gay. She is an enigma even to her mother, who looks after her with a puzzled expression in her eyes, as if wondering at Rosalind's new freak. It is a pleasant, sunshiny day when

"Exactly," replies Rosalind. "And do you think it was an honorable thing to do to try to lure him from his af flanced? For shame, Miss Serle! I had thought better of vou.' Norma looks at the speaker, with errified expression on her pretty face

"And you will refuse to let him con inue his visits here?" asks Rosalind. The young girl's face flushes, and she replies, in a low voice: "Yes, I will." "Promise!" says Rosalind, bending her dark eyes on the girl before her.

"I promise!" replies Norma, solemnly "I do not!" exclaims a voice near them; and, turning, Rosalind sees Clyde Breighton standing beside her, with a look of unutterable scorn and indignation on his handsome face. . She cowers and turns pale before his piercing glance; and then, drawing herself up haughtily, stands with flashing eyes and dilated nostrils, like an animal at bay. Clyde looks at both the girls, one haughty and defiant, the other shrinking and tearful, and then speaks:

"Pardon me for playing eavesdropper; but, hearing my name spoken, and noticing the attitude of the speaker, I was naturally curious. I am surprised, Miss Valmore, that you could stoop so low: and now allow me to make an explanation. Miss Serle is engaged to one of the village lads; and he, being in some financial trouble. I offered to loan him a small sum. Norma and her father expressed their gratitude, and invited me to call, which I have done several times, often meeting her betrothed, who, by the way, is a good, trustworthy fellow; and we have had many pleasant chats together. And, he adds, in a lower voice, "while I admired and respected Norma Serle, my first and only affections were given to you, Miss Valmore. Yes," he continues, bitterly, as Rosalind starts and grows pale, "I loved you once; but now make this confession, knowing that my secret will be safe;" and he looks kindly at Norma, who stands with bowed head and clasped hands. An agonized sigh bursts from Rosalind's lips, and she falls fainting to the ground. Clyde stoops, and lifting her up tenderly, carries her into the house; but his face remains stern and unrelenting. Ten minutes later Rosalind Valmore walks slowly homeward, and there is an expression of dumb despair and agony on her face piteous to behold. Under the pine tree that shades the little cottage stands Clyde Breighton and Norma. She looks up into his brown eyes with tears in her own. "Can nothing ever unite you?"

And Clyde answers sternly,—
"Nothing! And now good-bye, Norma; good-bve forever." He takes her small, white hand in his own, and presses it gently. Then he turns quickly; and Norma, watching him until his tall figure is lost in the shadow of the woods, knows that she will never see Clyde Breighton again. A year later, Rosalind Valmore, while walking down a principal street in Philadelphia, hears a familiar voice; and looking up sees Clyde Breighton approaching her, with a pretty, smiling lady leaning on his arm. Their eyes meet; he raises his hat with a courteous air, and they pass by. And Rosalind Valmore turns away

A St. Louis Chinaman is completing what he calls a world's fair. It consists of a miniature house of Mongolian architecture, about four feet high and five feet long, and its rooms are all open on one side, in order that the spectator may see what is taking place within. Directly in front of the house is a yard in which two Chinamen are playing at a Mongolian game, and two others in the act of building a brick wall. On the steps two ladies are standing face to face, in the act of saluting each other. Three Chinese ladies sit on the veranda engaged in close conversation, while two men on the veranda directly over their heads are leaning forward and endeavor to overhear what they are saying. About the building butterflies, that look as natural as life, are seen with wings outstretched, in the act of flying. In one apartment is seen an army of soldiers mounted on horses, in another a solemn procession of priests, and in another a lot of wild animals, etc. When the clockwork is wound up and started, the effect produced is decidedly striking. The butterflies trem-tle on invisable wires, and appear to rendering the home more cheerful and attractive. be flying about in the air, the men at the brick wall work vigorously, the characters in front of the main entrance bow gracefully with their hands clasped before them, Chinese fashion, oore a marked resemblance of a thorthe soldiers move around briskly, the animals run swiftly, and the women on veranda over the main entrance vociferate wildly.

As Large as France.

Lucy Hamilton Hooper writes from Paris to the Cincinnati Enquirer: "It is amusing to find how little is known of the United States in France. A colonel in the French army once asked me, with a polite peroration respecting the vast size of my native land, if the United States were not twice as large as France. 'We have one State,' I answered, 'that is as large as France, mean Texas—'and there are forty States in the Union.' The old gentleman looked at me with an expression that said, as plainly as words could know she is lying.' So he made some vaguey remark and changed the canversation. Yet this intelligent military man prided himself on having Rosalind Valmore again goes up the woodland path; but this time she does crossed the Atlantic and visited the United States—that is to say, New Orleans."

Composted Muck.

A correspondent of the Country Gentleman says: Forty bushels or one wagon load of dry muck, 5 bushels of unbleached ashes, 100 pounds of bone flour, 100 pounds of plaster can be thrown into a heap 3 months before using, and fermentation will take place. As a fertilizer he says this is worth double that of cow manure. It will also be composed as above leaving out the bone flour, and substituting 5 bushels of unslacked lime. The lime and ashes decompose the vegetable matter, liberate the salts, and expel the acids, fitting it for plant food. One pint or more in a hill gives vigorous start to corn or potatoes. A few bushels of hen manure added increase its value, as I have known for I have witnessed its good effects. This extra quantity of manure can be applied to some poor knolly and weedy pasture, the sod turned over, leveled and pulverized in hoed crops till well subdued, then seeded down. The same ground which produced little or nothing is now yielding from $2 to $10 per acre above cost. In the U.S. Senate, last Thursday, the bill for the extension of the charters of National Banks being under discussion, the following spirited talk took place between the Democrats and Greenbackers that will be of special interest to the members of those parties who contemplate a collation in this

Mr. Brumm, of Fa., said the Democrats had treated the Greenbackers with such disrespect that at the last Congress they had not even given them a hearing. At this session, however, the Greenbackers had been treated well. They had been recognized on committees of the House; they had been recognized as a party. You Democrats say: "We don't know whether the Greenbackers are right or wrong, but right or wrong, we will not treat you even with respect." [Applause on the Republican side, followed by counter applause on the Democratic side.] You have been all things to all men. You have in Indiana and Ohio and Pennsylvania had platforms of greenback and fiat money as staunch as I would have them. You are divided among yourselves, as you always bave been since 1856. You can be found on every side of every question. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] That has been your record, and I say that you are in the way of progress. You are only a stumbling block in the way of greenback doctrine today. [Applause and laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Bland, of Mo., criticised the action of the greenback party in the House, declaring that the members of that party elected from Missouri were pledged to vote for a Republican speaker in case their votes were necessary to carry the election. The gentlemen of that party denounced corporations, but yet they voted against propositions which would prevent those corporations dragging their constituents hundreds of miles to federal courts. The rentleman from Texas (Jones) would find that the people of Texas were not so crazy to take up his fiat and Mahonize that State, and the gentleman would find some trouble in explaining to his constituents why he voted against the proposition to substitute treasury notes for national bank notes. Mr. Burrows, of Mo., denied that during the canvass for Congress the Missouri Greenbackers pledged them-selves to support the Republican nominee for speaker. Once during the campaign he had seen that statement in a local paper, but he had called upon the editor to prove it or stand branded as an infamous liar. Mr. Ford, of Mo.,—"I emphatically deny the truth of the assertion, coming from whom it may, that Greenbackers were ever pledged to support the Republican speaker.'

Mr. Jones, of Texas, said the position taken by Mr. Bland was such that he could say to the Greenbacker: "I am a better Greenbacker than the Greenbacker himself;" and then, turning to a hard money Democrat, say: "I am very careful to avoid fiat money." He then proceeded to attack the Democratic party, comparing it to a weaker man in a quarrel, who says to his opponent: "If you hit me I will give old Uncle John fits." So with the Democratic party; when it met the Republican party it was a coward, but said: "Here is the little Greenback party, and we'll just give it fits."

Guiteau's former wife. the court held that the question of the sanity or insanity of Guiteau was not a question the answer to which could pe ruled out as a communication breaking the privity of marital relationship. The court held that there was no error in fixing the day for execution, and generally that the murder was committed where the murderous blow was struck, regardless of the locality of the actual demise.

The bill to enable national banking associations to extend their charters, which passed the house on Friday, provides that within the next two years any national bank, previous to the date of expiration of its corporate existence, with the approval of the comptroller of the currency, may extend its period of succession by amending its articles of association for a term of not more than twenty years; such existence to continue that period unless sooner dissolved by the act of shareholders owning two-thirds of its stock, or unless its franchises become forfeited by some violation of the law. Shareholders owning two-thirds of the capital stocks must agree in writing to the amendment for extention of charter. National banks are placed on the same footing in regard to suing and being sued as private banks. After certificate of extension has been granted by the comptroller of the currency any shareholder not assenting to such amendment, may give notice in writing to the directors, within thirty days from the date of the certificate of approval, of his desire to withdraw from such association in which case he shall be entitled to withdraw the value of the shares so held by him. Circulating notes of any association so extending the period of its succession which shall be issued to it prior to such extension shall be redeemed at the treasury of the United States as provided in section 3, of the act of June 20, 1874. Under this law any gain that may arise from failure to present such circulating notes for redemption shall inure to the benefit of the United States, and from time to time as such notes are redeemed or lawful money deposited therefor, such notes shall be replaced by new circulating notes bear ing such devices, to be approved by the comptroller of the currency, as shall make them readidistinguishable from circulating notes heretofore issued. The cost of preparing new plates for the printing of notes must be paid for by the banking association. National banks having a capital of $150,000 or less, shall not be required to keep on deposit with the treasurer of the United States bonds in excess of $100,000, as security for their circulating notes, and such of those banks baying on deposit bonds in excess of that amount are authorized to reduce their circulation by the deposit of lawful money as provided by law. It appears that a certain Hungar an countess, well known for her riches and beauty (the same spirited lady who seconded her brother in a duel) graced with her presence the performance at the Aresa, or summer theater. On one of her fair fingers my lady wore two splendid diamond rings, exactly like each other. During an entr' acte there presented himself in her box a big fellow in gorgeous livery-six feet of the finest flunkey imaginable. Quoth he, in finest Hungarian: "My mistress, Princess P--, has sent to your ladyship, to ask the loan of one of your rings for five minutes. Her highness has observed them from her box opposite and is very anxious to have one made after the pattern." Without an instant's hesitation the countess handed a ring to "Jeames," who bowed with respectful dignity and retired. The performance over, the two great ladies met on the staircase, and the countess begged her friend to keep the ring at her convenience. "What ring, my dear?"

Denoucment! Tableau! The "powdered menial!" was no flunky at all, but a thief, and the ring was gone. The police were informed of the impudent trick. Justice seemed to have overtaken the culprit in a very few strides, for next morning the countess, while still en robe-de-chambre, received a letter informing her that the thief had been caught and the ring found on his person. "Only," added the note, "the man stoutly denies the charge and declares the ring to be his own. To clear up all doubt pray come at once to the police station, or send the duplicate ring by bearer." To draw the second ring from the finger and intrust it joyfully to the messenger—a fine fellow in full police uniform, together with a hand-some "tip," for the glorious news, was the work of a moment. Only when my lady an hour later betook herself radiant to the police-station to recover her jewels, a slight mistake came to light. "Well, my rings? I could not come to myself the instant I got your letter,"
"What letter, madam?" Denouement!

The Condensed Trowsers. An editor in Chicago had ordered a pair of new trowsers from the tailor. On trying them on they proved to be two or three inches too long. It being late on Saturday night, the tailor's shop was closed, and the editor took the trowsers to his wife and asked her to cut them off and hem them over. The good lady, whose cucumbers or melons had perhaps disagreed with her, brusquely refused. The same result followed an application to his wife's sister and the eldest daugh ter. But before be ltime the wife relenting, took the pants and cutting off six inches from the legs, hemmed them nicely and restored them to the closet. Half an hour later the daughter, taken with compunction for her unfilial conduct, took the trowsers, and cutting off six inches from the legs, hemmed and replaced them. Finally the sister-inlaw felt the pangs of conscience, and she, too, performed an additional surgical operation on the garment. When the editor appeared at the breakfast, chieftain had arrived, for the trowsers reached only to the middle of his thigh. A Curious Anecdote. The late Baron James Rothschild was persuaded by his friend, Engene Delacroix, the distinguished painter, to sit for him as the model of a beggar, as much by way of a joke as because of his capacity for excellently assuming the appearance of a mendicant. While he was thus disguised one day in the artist's studio one of Delacroix's young friends and disciples entered, and was so completely deceived by the model's woelegone appearance, that in passing out he stealthily pressed a coin into the old man's hand. Rothschild greatly enjoyed his success in his assumed character, and took the money; but he afterward made inquiry concerning the young man, and learning that he was in used circumstances and ekeing out an existence by teaching, became a very useful friend to him and the source of substantial pecuniary aid.

What is that which has three feet but no legs, is all body but no limbs, has no toes on the feet, no head, moves a great deal but never uses its feet for that purpose, has one foot at each end and one in the center of the body? This is a queer creature in some respects, and is very popular among the ladies and some gentlemen. It never walks out, but goes with one foot where the head might be, dragging the other foot behind. These feet have nails, but no toes, no heels and no bones in the feet. Answer —A yardstick.

A Perfect Cup of Coffee. Coffee is the fine issue of Eastern hospitality—the climax of the visit. One recognizes, on entering, the sound of the coffee-mortar, for in every properly regulated household in the East the coffee is not ground, but pounded to an impalpable powder, having been roasted that morning, each day its provision, and pounded the moment it is needed. And no one who has not drank it there and thus, can presume to judge of the bever-

In England we roast it till it is black, grind it as we would cattle food, boiling it like malt for beer, and when we drink the better and unaromatic fluid which remains and say we have taken our coffee. The eastern coffee-drinker knows all the grades of berry and preparation as a silk merchant knows the quality of silk; the caffejee knows that to roast it a shade beyond the point where it breaks crisply under the pestle is to spoil it, and when the slow pulverizing is done, each measure goes into its little copper ibrik, receives its dose of boiling water, just one of the tiny cupsful, rests and instant on the coals to restore the heat lost in the il rik, and is poured into the eggshell cup, and so it came to us, each cup in a gold enameled holder. The rule in these lands seems to be that few things are worth doing but these few are worth doing well, and there is no waste of life or material by overhaste. — Pall Mall

The Woman Who Wrote "Evelina." In 1752 Frances Burney was born. Nothing in her childhood indicated that she would, while still a young woman, secure for herself an honorable place among English writers. She was shy and silent. Her brothers and sisters called her a dunce, and not without some show of reason; for at eight years of age she did not know her letters. An education, however, which to most girls would have been useless, but which suited Fanny's mind better than elaborate culture, was in constant progress during her passage from childhood to womanhood. The great book of human nature was turned over before her, and every marked peculiarity instantly caught her notice and remained engraven on her imagination. When she was fifteen her father took a second wife, and the new mother insisted that nothing could be mere disadvantageous to a young lady

than to be a novel-writer; so Frances

Berrien County Record: Buchanan, Michigan, Thursday, May 25, relinquished her favorite pursuit and made a boafire of her manuscripts. Although the propensity for writing was for a time kept down, it again rose stronger than ever. The heroes and her ims of tales which had perished in the flames wrist ll in her mind. By degrees these shr lows required stronger and stronger consistence; the impulse to write became irresistible, and the result was the famous history of "Evelina."

The Smallest Woman in the World.

Lucia Zarate, the smallest woman in the world was born in Mexico. Her parents were peous-that is to say, halfbreeds. When born she was the size of a rat. It was supposed that she was dead, and she was put in a little box that happened to be in the room. Soon, however, she began to scream. She was taken out of her box, and except that she was wondrously small, she soon played and ran about like any other child.

NOTWITHSTANDING the cool, backward weather, the crop reports from all parts of the country are most favorable. That is the case in this vicinity for all fall sown crops, but the outlook for corn is not the most encouraging.

> TURTLE SHOOTING .- To-day noon some boys at the farm of John C. Marble, in Warren township, Ind., about seven miles south of this place, were shooting turtles in a small pond near the barn, with a rifle, and Joane Hurley, a young man about 25 years of age, who was on the opposite side of the pond from the gun, was shot, the ball taking effect in his eve. He was alive at last word from there.

THE case against S.E. Cadwell, for as- Niles City, 1,320 sault and battery on Miss Minnie Cadwell, a mute, mentioned last week, was tried before Justice Dick, Tuesday, and decision given last evening, finding Cadwell guilty, and fining him $15 without cost. By this arrangement the township pockets the fine and the county foots the bill. The case has created more excitement about town than any other in a number of years.

ABOUT seventy persons, including the Buchanan band, went on the excursion to St. Joseph on the May Graham, last Sunday, and returned by the St. Joseph Valley railroad, reaching home at about ten o'clock at night. Such excursions pay better some other day in the week, as a usual thing. We learn that a company of St. Josephites will come here next Sunday on a similar frolic.

THE case of assault by the ten or a dozen Benton Harborites, including some of the business men, upon the daughter of Charles Rouse, of that place, a few weeks since, comes to naught because the girl, the chief witness of the prosecution, is nowhere to be found. She was here since the assault, looking for some place to stay. Thus justice is cheated out of her dues in another aggravated case.

A VERY natural looking greenback apostle spoke on the street corner in this place Thursday evening, instructing the crowd on how the country was being robbed, and other branches of his favorite theme. His appearance did not indicate that he is as well fed as was Sam Carey when he came to enlighten the ignorant of Michigan. This man pretended to be an ex-Methodist minister, but could not tell what conference he belonged to.

WE wish to say to the public through the columns of your excellent paper, that on May 2, in a very pleasant and agreeable manner, we were remembered by the brethren, sisters and friends of the U.B. church of Buchanan, with a donation of nearly all cash, amounting to over twenty dollars. as the train coming from Bernen Springs with the excursionists who went to St. Joseph was coming around the sharp curve just this side of the high Wilson bridge, the engineer discovered one of the trucks of the larie car on the track, that had been placed there by some miscreant since the train went down to Berrien Springs, and but for the care on the part of the engineer, the train would probably have gone down the high enbankment at that place, with its load of eighty passengers. The engineer informs the RECORD that he has been used to finding obstructions, such as hand spikes, piles of dirt, and other things placed along the track at intervals of a few rods, nearly all winter. ITEMS FROM NILES.

May 24, 1882. On the morning of the 19th Fred Merrett, a workman in the Wood Pulp Mill in this city, was caught by a belt and drawn upon a shaft revolving at a rate of 150 revolutions per minute. He was cut, mashed and bruised from his head to his feet. Drs. Simpson, Bonine and Belknap were on the spot in a few minutes, but all their efforts to save his life failed. He died at 1 p. m. the same day and was buried Sunday at 2 p. m.

The score of the match game of base ball, played on the island in this city Saturday afternoon between the Galien and Niles clubs, stood, at the close of the game, 85 to 12 in favor of the Niles club. The only home runs made during the game were by H. L. Pike and Fred. Bonine of Niles. But we do not see why this should lead to the members of the Galien club getting drunk and disturbing our doctors at two o'clock in the morning to come and sew up wounded lips, etc.

"Eve was blamed in the beginning, and her daughters will be blamed till the end for every misstep, and criticised for every fault by both her own and the op-posite sex. Woman criticises woman severely, and for no other reason but to win favor in the eyes of the wretch who made her sister a subject of comment and to show her strength of mind. Had Adam been a man, as the Lord intended, and not a contemptible scoundrel, women's position in this world would have been different; she would not always be taking a back seat in the theatre of life, and dancing while somebody as a leper and hissed at as a counterfeit for the same sins man is guilty of, and cubicly forgiven by virtuous, but nar-ow mind d women, and lauded by men, who are so imbued with the faults of their ancestor that they forgot what they owe to women—for their nother's sake. The Weapons of the World. The earth, the lake and the streams have discorred the swallowed specimens; the sepalchre and the temple have given back their offerings; the buried city has unclutched its relics; the battle-field has rendered up its vestiges. And from all these subterranean pilla ings the muse-ums have grown full. There is the Greek sword, so curt that it is little more than a large knife, pre-eminently fit for scrambling, hacking, strenuous stabbing in unflinching close quarters. There is the Roman sword, of differing lengths almost as various, indeed, as the countries it onquered. There is the Gallie sword, of such soft, pliant metal that its users had to stop in fight, after each hard blow, in order to straighten it under their feet, thereby enabling the enemy to knock them over uncontestedly. There are the hooked scinitars of the Turks, with an inside edge, and the carved Arab yataghans, with the edge outside. There is the cross-handled sword of the Crusader, with which he prayed and slew alternately. There is the weapon whose pommel served for a seal, like that of Charlemagne, who said, when he used it to put his stamp on treaties, "I sign them with this end, and with the other I will take care that they are kept." There are Dutch, Russian, Portuguese, and Moorish swords, each one of them with a big type or detail proper to itself. There are the glaives of red-clothed headsmen of the Middle Ages; there are the Malay krisses and the notabed the Malay krisses, and the notched blades of Zanzibar, and old sabers (the parents of our contemporaneous tribe) from India, Armenia and Khorassan There is the espada of the Spanish matador, the Schiavona of Venice, the Albanian cutlass, the Kabyle flisse, the Turkish kandjar, the court sword of a century ago, the claymore of Scotland. There are all the incalculable assortments of German, Spanish and Italian be found in the collections, with their capricious varyings of blade and handle, of pommel, spindle and hilt, of inlaying and engraving, of complicated basket guards, of every sort of ornament and complement and supplement that can be added to an invalor and the complement and complement and supplement that can be added to an implement. Damaskeening, particularly (which is the incrusting of gold and silver into iron and steel, and which, though said by Herodotus to have been invented by Glancus of Chio. and though cultivated by the Romans, was not seriously practiced in modern Europe till the fifteenth century) gives a remarkable beauty and artistic value to many swords; it is perhaps, indeed, the most distinctive and the most graceful of all the adornments lavished upon them. And the scabbards! Why, they fopm a special race: if they were not, by the essence and condition of their being, a mere adjunct to something efse, they would occupy a place of their own in the world. Their sorts and shapes are so many that they are beyond arithmetic.

The Beer Problem.

"Boy, do you know what that contains?" said a tramp to a lad who was hurrying along with a tin pail full of lager.
"Beer," responded the stripling, very promptly.

"Exactly, that is beer," continued the tramp, "and that beer contains glucose, occulus indicus, cornstarch, rice meal and raw grape sugar, all deadly poisons, and enough to kil' any man. The lad set the pail down and moved off a little from it, whereupon the tramp picked it up and was raising it to his lips when the boy interrupted him to "Ain't you afraid of it?" Yes; it is dreadful to die this way, but I don't care to live," and draining it empty, handed it back. "He's a goner," muttered the boy, as he walked thoughtfully off. "Lord, what a narrow escape dad had!"

Practical Arithmetic. "You can't add different things together," said an Austin school teacher. If you add a sheep and a cow together, it does not make too sheep or two cows. A little boy, the son of an Austin avenue milkman, held up his hand, and "That may do with sheep and cows, but if you add a quart of milk and a quart of water, it makes two quarts of milk. I've seen it tried."

The Blood Atonement. A Salt Lake City correspondent in the St. Louis Republican tells a horrible story of the suffering endured by Mor-mon wives. After narrating at great length the brutal treatment of the wife of William Hunt, a Mormon, he adds the following: With regard to blood atonement, I am assured that it is practiced to-day as frequently as it was twenty-five years ago, though not so openly. There are no coroners in Utah, and when a body is in with her husband in 1869. Two years afterward her husband took another wife, and one year subsequently he was sealed to a third. Mrs. Maxwell had two sons, aged respectively fourteen and sixteen years. Their father urged them to go through the Endownment House and become Mormons, bound by all the oaths of the church. Mrs. Maxwell, having led a life like that of Mrs. Hunt, objected, and in order to prevail over her sons she told them the secrets of the En-downment House. The penalty for revealing these secrets is dismemberment of the body, the throat cut, and tongue torn out. Mr. Maxwell overheard his wife, being in an adjoining room, and forthwith he informed the Elders who sent for the unfortunate woman and her two sons. They were taken into what is called the "dark pit," a blood atoning room under Brigham Young's house.

The woman was then stripped of her clothing, and then tied on her back to a large table. Six members of the priesthood then performed their damnable crime: they first cut off their victim's tongue, they then cut her throat, after which her legs and arms were severed.

The sons were compelled to stand by and witness this dreadful slaughter of their mother. They were then released and given twenty-four hours to get out of the Territory, which was then an impossibility. The sons went directly to the house of a friend, to whom they related the butchery of their mother, and obtaining a package of provisions they started; but on the following morning they were both dead-they had met the

Why He Ate Beans for Dinner.

Pulverizing Harrow, Clod Crusher and Leveler.

The "ACME" cuts over the entire ground and leaves no Ridges. Harrows had on Trial, and returned if not found as represented.

The "ACME" subjects the soil to the action of a CRUSHER AND LEVELER, and at the same time to the Cutting, Lifting, Turning process of double rows of STEEL COULTERS, the peculiar shape and arrangement of which give immense cutting power. It is especially adapted to inverted sod, hard clay, and "slough land," where other Harrows utterly fail, and it also works perfectly on light soil.

Ar a banquet the late John Brongham was seated next to Coroner Croker. A toast was proposed, and Brougham asked the coroner what he should drink it in. "Claret," said the coroner. "Claret!" was the reply; "that's no drink for a coroner. There's no body in A VICTORIA (Vancouver island) Chi-

"OH, mash me!" mash me!" a tater cried,
While a beet bushed through and through,
As it felt its being incorp rate
With the soul of an Irisa stew.
But the scul.ion fiercely scrubbed his pot,
And the dish-washer moodily wa-hed.
And naught was heard by the kitchen-fire flash
Save the curse of the corned-beef hash.

THE superiority of electricity over sterm convincingly demonstrated: "Yes, sir; we have entered upon an era of elec-tricity, and steam will be done away with forever—replaced everywhere by the electrical machine." "How are they run-those electrical machines? I don't remember ever seeing one." "By steam

A LITTLE boy in a Sunday-school put a poser to his teacher. The lady was telling her class how God punished the Egyptians by causing the first born of each household to be slain. The little boy listened attentively. At the proper interval he midly inquired: "What would God have done had there been twins?" SARAH P., Thorp Springs: "Where should I wear an engagement ring?" Wear it on the second finger of the left hand, if everything is open and above-board; but if you do not want the old people to know of the engagement we would advise you to wear it in the right-hand corner of an old striped stocking at the bottom of the bureau drawer. "YES," whispered the boy to Mr. Barnum, "I'm ready to pay for my ticket, but I want the privilege of going in by crawling under the tent." And Mr. Barnum agreed, and ordered the guards not to interfere with the lad: and after the boy had performed the feat Mr. Barnum went inside and asked his reasons for it, and the lad explained that he had got over $7 bet with the boys who had tried the crawl and failed that he would succeed in it.

"Well, sir; I suppose you'll go back "Well, sir; I suppose you'll go back to school rested by your holiday," said a New Haven father to his "cubbiest" boy. "Yes, sir," replied the boy, with a brightened expression, "and I'm going to ring the bell." "Is that so? I thought Sammy Goodboy rang the bell." "Well, he used to; but I'm ringing it in his place, now, don't you see?" "And what does Sammy do?" "Sammy? Why he's nothing but a 'Sammy? Why, he's nothing but a scholar!

DIALOGUE between customer and Paris wine merchant: Customer-"Ye-es, I dare say it is a good wine, but I have some in my cellar that I think is more desirable, both as to quality and price. Here, let me give you some of it." Wine merchant (tasting)—"Let me see!" (spitting it out). "Pah, why that's dye-stuff. It's a nameless mixture, with everything in it but wine! My dear sir, you've been atrociously swindled! What Borgia did you buy that from?" Customer (displaying label on bottle)—"From you!"

The Fuel of the Future.

The National Gazette makes the following announcement in regard to the use of petroleum as fuel: "We shall soon be able to announce a wonderful stride in the mechanical appliances for using liquid fuel for generating steam in both marine and land boilers. The matter is in the hands of practical men, who will soon demonstrate they can make from twenty-eight to thirty gallons of crude petroleum, costing from eighty-five to ninety cents, do the work of a ton of coal, costing from $4 to $4.25, without dirt or smoke, and when, as in the case of a large steamer carrying from forty to forty-five men in the fire-room, one man in each will be abundautly able to keep up a uniform pressure of steam at all times. Liquid fuel is the intervening step between coal and electricity, which will in due season furnish motion for the world."

Vulgarities of "Good Society."

Asking questions, private and personal, is one vulgar habit, and telling your own business, which no one wants to hear, is another. Asking the cost of present that has been made to you; "pumping" a servant to hear what has been given by way of a parting vail; loud talking in public; hard staring at table; insolent disrespect to husband, wife, sister, or brother; showing temper in trifles and making scenes in public; showing an embarrassing amount of fondness and making love in public; covert sneers, of which people can see the animus if they do not always understand the drift; persistent egotism, which talks forever of itself, itself, itself, only of itself, and can not even feign the most passing interest in another; detraction of friends, it may be of relatives—a husband telling of his wife's unpleasantness, a wife complaining of her husband's faults; the bold assumption of superiority, and the servile confession of infinite unworthiness; all these are signs and evidences of vulgarity—vulgarity of a far worse type than that which eats its fish with a steel knife, and says "you was" and "each of the man ware" the men were."
