VOLUME XVI.

WHAT IS LIFE?

What is life but constant sorrow,

Breaking in with floods of tears, While the joys that once were ours

Vanish with the passing years.

What is life but constant toiling

Wealth and honor, fame and glory,

For the goal ambition craves?

Light as foam on ocean waves.

What is life but constant fretting

Like the dew-drop in the morning.

When the sun shines it away?

What is life but constant hoping

That our sorrow soon will be

That will gust forth melody?

What is life but constant striving

With the rich as well as poor?

The wolf stands at another's door.

What is life? Just what we make it,

One is grasping for his millions.

Is what some of you will say;

Ere its beauty fades away.

Then I'd seek for joy and sunshine.

ROCKDALE'S MISTRESS,

J. M. WILSON

When Mr. Ramsey, on the following evening, introduced the stranger as Mr. Kingsford, she started and turned pale; that was the name of her mother's benefactor; but then this young man could not be related to the cruel owner of Rockdale; it was a strange coincidence only. She hated the name that caused her so much trouble, but at the close of the evening, try as she would, she could not hate Roy Kings-Days passed into weeks until three months had passed since Mrs. Ashwood's death. Mr. Kingsford had become a daily visitor at the cottage. Callie tried to still the wild throbbing of her heart and keep the beautiful blush from her pale cheeks at his approach. She knew she loved him; yet she must banish him from her secret thoughts, she must crush her love from her life, "brand it out though the burning knife should hiss in her heart's hot tears." The pale dead face of her mother and her promise between her and happiness. The aim of her life was to forget Roy Kingsford, and flee from the owner of

'Rockdale." One day, pacing to and fro under the shady elms, and trying to think and forbid the dark eyes that destroyed her peace to enter her thoughts, she lived her life over again—her innocent childhood, her happy joyous childhood; but with passionate longing she could not help recalling her lost love and the dire fate awaiting her. Throwing herself on the green grass under her favorite tree she burst into wild sobs, which, in their agony recalled the death-bed of her mother.

"Callie, darling, what is it? For Heaven's sake tell me what ails you!"

Looking up, she saw Roy Kingsford bending over her with the great love of his honest heart shining from his "Tell me, dear one." Lifting her though she were a little child, he clasped her close to him and told her of his love; how his heart yearned for her since the first day he "Little one, say that you love me! uk! Let me share your sorrow, heart is bursting. Feel how it turobs for you, Callie! If you love me, past rose before her; her dead mother's face crushed back the loving words; he shrang from him, and with face ouried in her hands swayed to and foe like a reed. "Speak, Callie! What is it? This agony is unbearable!" "I cannot—I cannot!" sobbed the Then lifting her pale face, she "Mr. Kingsford, listen! You shall hear the story of my life; you shall see why I must not love you." And in low, fluttering tones she told him what the reader already knows.

"Leave me now—forget me!" she concluded. "Two weeks from to-day I shall be nineteen. Leave me, and do not make my sorrow greater than I

She turned to go, but he detained her; his face was pale; even the lips trol over the estate until her death, on had lost their color, and the tight drawn lines around the mouth showed the strong control of a master will. He spoke in a hoarse whisper.
"Callie, you can never know how your story has made me suffer. I have endured a thousand deaths during its recital. Child, my father owns Rockdale! God forgive him! I knew the estate was in Virginia, but not that it was your home until you told your story. Even the former owner's name had passed from my recollection. My father desired me last winter, to travel all through the South, and among other letters of introduction he gave me one to your mother, not dreaming of her death, Callie," he exclaimed passionately. "My father is a noble man; he cannot mean to chain your fresh young life to his aged one. Come to me and we will fly away; together we go and brave his anger and ask his release her, and if he did not—the thought was terrible. The door opened, and Mr. Kingsford ice, her lips parted to give utterance, but failed. He came forward and took "My poor child! How you have suffered! Will you ever forgive me? I've to be kept in ignorance until you were nineteen; in the meantime I intended fine tableau. I did not dream of your mother's death. Can you forgive an old man who loves you as his own?"

"Father!" "God bless you, my child!" Taking the fair face between his aged hands he kissed the beautiful mouth, and added playfully,-

"Roy will be jealous if I steal too many. But where is the scamp? I left him in the yard. Ah! I see him out there walking about like a caged lion. Roy, you rascal, come here!"
"Callie—my darling!" And with a glad cry she sprang into Roy Kings-der whisper. Then the beautiful head nestled against his breast, and a silence fell upon the three, broken only by Callie's faint sobs of joy. "Well," said old Mr. Kingsford, "I guess we will have the tableau after

If a child less than twelve months old be brought into a celler he becomes fearful for life. When children play soldier on the hillside it forebodes the approach of war. A child grows proud if suffered to look into a mirror while less than 12 months old. He who proposes moving into a new house must send in beforehand bread and a new broom. Whoever sneezes at an early hour either hears some news or receives some presents the same day. The first tooth cast by the child should be swallowed by the mother to insure a new growth of teeth. FOR THE FARMERS. There is always a demand for superior animals of every kind. There should be an inveterate war waged against the growth of weeds Farmers should look well to the question of salt for stock. Much carelessness is practiced in this regard.

A gentleman who has traveled extensively through the Western States says that the best corn is in Indiana. Patience and good treatment are the only means by which both horses and cattle can be trained to satisfactorily do the work allotted to them. It is said that 14,000,000 bushels of sweet potatoes will be raised in Georgia this season, and how to dispose of the crop is a problem.

and strengthened by giving him a quart of oat meal stirred in a pail of water. This fits its stomach for strong-er food, slakes its thirst and it is infinitely better than pure water. Stir the soil in the garden often. Nothing does the cabbage so much good as to have the soil stirred every few days, no matter whether weeds show themselves or not. Too great care can not be taken to prevent earth or small stones getting into the heart of the cabbage, as it often does great injury. Every pasture should be provided with shade trees, or at least some protection against a summer's sun. A few boards on a light temporary frame will always secure the last. Excessive heat, by exhausting and sometimes sickening the animal, materially diminishes the effects of food in promoting the secretion of milk and the growth of wool and flesh.

An Indiania farmer has forwarded to the editor of the Farmer of that State, a specimen of a plant found growing in his wheat field which the analysis proves to be Lolium temulentum, or poisonous darnel, a common pest in the wheat fields of England, and becoming more frequent in the Eastern States. It is identical with the tares of Scripture, and the editor of the Farmer wisely advises its immediate extermination.

August is the most trying month of the entire year for dairy cows. Insects are numerous and very troublesome. The supply of water is liable to be short, and the quality of that afforded poor. That in small lakes and streams will be warm and often contaminated by decaying vegetable matter. The feed in pastures is generally short and its quality inferior. Many of the grasses will be producing seed, and the stalks will be hard and tough. Cows often suffer from neglect during this month, for the reason that their owners are busy in securing the grain and grass crop. They should, however, receive the best attention. Pains should be taken to render them as comfortable as possible.

Wesley's Tact. The following anecdote of the founder of Methodism, has, we believe, never oeen published. It reaches us from a trustworthy source, and it illustrates in a remarkable manner the mingled tact and piety of that eminent man. Although Wesley, like the apostles, found that his preaching did not greatly affect the mighty or the noble, still he numbered some families of good po sition among his followers. It was at the house of one of these that the incident here recorded took place. Wesley had been preaching; a daughter of neighboring gentleman, a girl remarkable for her beauty, had been profoundly impressed by his exhortations. After the sermon Wesley was invited to this gentleman's house to luncheon, and with himself one of his preachers was entertained. This preacher, like many of the class at that time, was a man of plain manners, and not conscious of the restraints of good society. The fair young Methodist sat beside him at the table, and he noticed that she wore a number of rings. During a pause in the meal the preacher took hold of the young lady's hand, and raising it in the air, called Wesley's attention to the sparkling jewels. "What do you think of this, said, "for a Methodist's hand?" The girl turned crimson. For Wesley, with his known and expressed aversion to finery, the question was a peculiarly awkward one. But the aged evangel ist showed a tact which Chesterfield might have envied. He looked up with a quiet, benevolent smile and simply "The hand is very beautiful." The blushing beauty had expected something far different from a reproof wrapped up with such felicity in a compliment. She had the good sense to say nothing; but when, a few hours ater, she again appeared in Wesley's presence, the beautiful hand was stripped of every ornament except those which nature had given.—London So-

Afterward in my travels I frequently received similar change. Many of the cakes showed signs of having been in the wash-tub, but that, I discovered, was not at all uncommon. Provided the stamp was not obliterated, the soap did not lose any value as currency. Occanot lose any value as currency. A Sound Sleeper.

A darkey went to sleep while tishing, and tumbled off into deep water. He sank and rose a couple of times, when his companion, old Uncle Dick Lewis, seeing that he made no effort to save himself, got hold of him and drew him to the label. It was then discovered to the bank. It was then discovered that the negro was still asleep, his cold bath having no effect on him whatever. Uncle Dick managed to awaken him by rolling him in the mud and wearing out two or three lightwood knots over his head. The cold water cure for bog spavin, says an exchange, is applied in the following manner: Take a piece of cotton cloth one yard long, tear it into strips three inches wide, and sew the strips together at the ends. Make the cloth into a roll, then take the roll in the hand and wind the cloth around the affected part of the leg. After a few turns place a piece of cork a quarter of an inch thick upon the cloth and over the spavin, and then again wind the cloth. If the cloth is apt to slip wind it round the hock joint, or put some tar upon the leg above and below the spavin, to which the cloth will adhere. The pressure exerted by the cloth and the coolness produced by the water, in which the bandage is kept soaked, reduce the circulation and also the heat of the parts. The

THE Journal very appropriately asks the committee in charge of the picnic to be held in Benton Harbor to hold their meeting upon some other day people's picnic association at Berrien Springs, as was done by St. Joseph and Niles the past two years. There is no good reason why there may not be two first-class picnics held in the county during the month of August, and without conflicting in dates.

THERE appears to be born into some people a desire to injure the property of others, when the injury can do them no possible good. The new black walks along the north side of Front street, west of the post office, are hard enough to drive a horse over, yet hardly a day passes without some one goes that way whose mind is too small to allow him to pass that pavement without kicking a hole into it.

THE case against Wm. Daufen, whose arrest was mentioned last week for selling liquor to a minor, was tried before Justice Dick Saturday. Daufen was found guilty and fined $25 and sent to jail ten days. He has appealed to the next higher court, where he will probably get the second or third higher fine. The case was managed by Mr. A. C. Roe for the people, and E. M. Plimpton for the defence.

THE committee for the soldiers' and sailors' reunion went to Detroit for their posters. It would seem that some of the offices located in the district covered by the association would be entitled to that work. It is from them that the association gets its cheap "blowing," in a quarter column advertisement three or four weeks, for which

LAST Saturday we happened to be in Jesse Roe's jewelry store, when he opened the back door, and the north wind came in from the alley, bearing the rich odor of dead rats, rotten meat scraps, slops from the rooms in the upper stories in the old Tremont building, and other things that inhabit that portion of town, thick enough to carve with a meat ax. Such health giving fumes cannot be enjoyed by all of the citizens of this place, and Mr. Roe is to be congratulated upon his good fortune in securing a location so rich in

Delegates were also chosen to attend the county convention to nominate county officers, when called, and also delegates to the district convention. The caucus expressed itself very decidedly in favor of W. I. Himes for county clerk, and as decidedly against Jas. R. Clarke for sheriff. Mr. Van Camp was a favorite as candidate for treasurer. A resolution passed unanimously against the nomination of any man for representative, who will not respect the right of petition, by working for the submission of a constitutional prohibition amendment, as did also a resolution not to vote for L. M. Ward for that office under any circumstances. The caucus recommended James F.

At a concert, going early with her father, a little girl espied Mr. Long-fellow sitting alone, and begged that she might go and speak to him. Her father, himself a stranger, took the liberty of introducing his little daughter Edith to the poet.

"Edith?" said Mr. Longfellow, ten derly, "Ah! I have an Edith, too; but my Edith is 20 years old." And he seated the child beside him, taking her hand in his, and making her promise to come and see him at his house in-Cambridge.

"What is the name of your sled, my boy?" he said to a small lad, who came tugging one up the road toward him, on "It's 'Evangeline.' Mr. Longfellow wrote 'Evangeline.' Did you ever see Mr. Longfellow?" answered the little fellow, as he ran by, doubtless wondering at the smile on the face of the pleasant gray-haired gentleman. Prof. Monti, who witnessed the pretty scene, tells the story of a little girl who last Christmas inquired the way to the poet's house, and asked if she could just step inside the yard; and he relates how Mr. Longfellow, being toldshe was there, went to the door and called her in, and showed her the "old cloc" at the stairs," and many other interest:

the house, leaving his beautiful memories of that caristmas day to carry all through her life. This was characteristic of the poet's hospitality, delicate and courteous and thoughtful to all who crossed his threshold. It is often said, and with reason, that we Americans do not think enough of manners—that politeness of behavior which comes from genuir a sympathy and a delicate perception of thers' feelings. Certainly our young gt.t look to Mr. Longfellow as a mount in this respect. He was a perfect gentlemen in the best sense of that term, always considerate, and quick to see where he might do a kindness, or say a pleasant word.

A visitor one day told him in conversation of a young lady relative, or friend, who had sent to Mr. Longfellow the message that he was the one man in the world she wanted to see. "Tell her," said the poet, instantly, "that she is the one young lady in the world whom I want to see." Some young girls, from a distant part of the country, having been about Oambridge sight-seeing, walked to Mr. Longfellow's house, and, venturing within the gate, sat down upon the grass. He passed them there, and, turning back, said:

"Young ladies, you are uncomforta-bly seated. Won't you come into the house?"

They were overjoyed at the invitation, and, on entering, Mr. Longfellow insisted upon their taking lunch with him. They saw that the table was set for they saw that the table was set for four, and were beginning to be mortified at finding themselves possible intruders upon other guests. They so expressed themselves to their host, who put them at ease at once, saying that it was only his regular lunch with his children. his children, and that they would be happy to wait.

One of a group of school-girls whom he had welcomed to his house sent him, as a token of her gratitude, an iron pen made from a fetter of the Prisoner of Chillon, and a bit of wood from the frigate Constitution, ornamented with precious stones from three continents. He wrote his thanks in a poem which must be very precious to the giver—"Beautiful Helen of Maine" to whom he says of her gift that it is Watering Horses.

One thing in the treatment of working horses in hot weather we are disposed to deprecate, viz.: The custom of watering them three times a day, and no more. It is simply cruelty on the part of man toward his beast to compel the team to plow or mow from early morning until noon, or from noon until night, without allowing it the privilege of a refreshing draught. It is inconvenient, many times, to water the team during the forenoon or afternoon, and we are apt to think the time thus taken lost, but when the farmers' millennium ones there will probably be water in every field, supplied from some elevated spring, or from a running stream. In the meanwhile, time "lost" in doing good, even though it may be in behalf of the dumb animals, is well "lost"-it may be regained. Could they speak, it might be to say that they would like to be treated in the matters of times for food and drink somewhat as we—their wise masters—are accustomed to treat ourselves. - Indiana

The Boy Violinist in Sontag's Dress-

At Sontag's first concerts here, the wonderful young violinist, Paul Jullien, appeared with her. He was then a mere boy, hardly more than a child, for he was but ten years old; but his performance was already that of a virtuoso, and his tone and style were nearly those of a great master of the instrument. One evening, after Madame Sontag had been here about a month, I went, at one of her concerts, to her private room, where she had been kind enough to receive me before, for she was one of the very few prima-donnas with whom I was on familiar terms. "Entrez!" said a male voice when I knocked at the half-open door. I entered, and what should I see but Count Rossi and Paul Jullien sitting together over a basin of water, which was between them on the sofa. Count Rossi looked up and smiled as he held out his hand without rising, and then blew into the bowl. He was engaged with Paul (who a few minutes before had astonished a delighted and cultivated audience) in sailing paper-boats, which the little fellow had begged the Count to make for him from concert programmes. The basin from Madame Sontag's washstand furnished the sea on which the fragile fleet was launched. The boy continued his amusement until Madame Sontag entered, and then hastily drying his hands upon another concert bill, took up his violin, and while I was yet musing in wonder at the strangeness of the scene, my rumination was disturbed by the outburst of applause which greeted the entrance of the little boatsailer upon the stage.—Richard Grant White.

- A Frenchman's Notion of It. A French gentleman recently from Paris was invited by one of our popular citizens to indulge in the "American custom" at the Exchange, Richmond. Not knowing our "colloquial American" well enough to call for a mixed drink, it was suggested that he take a "brandy punch," which he did. The next morning he called alone at the bar, and being asked by the polite young man who con-cocts cocktails what he would have, and having forgotten the name of the drink of yesterday, he replied: "I vill take one grand contra-diccion, what you call it? wis very much lemon for make him sour, very much soogare for make him sweet, plenty of brandy for make him strong, and a great deal of wasser for make him weak." "Oh; yes; I know," returned the barkeeper; "you want a punch?" "Yeez, sat ees eet; von punch."—Richmond State.

The following clause was found in the will of a Yorkshire rector: "Seeing that my daughter Anne has not availed herself of my advice touching the objectionable practice of going about with her arms bare up to the elbows, my will should she continue after m death in this violation of the modesty of her sex, all the goods, chattels, money, lands, and all other things that I have devised to her for the maintenance of her future life shall pass to the eldest son of my sister Caroline. IMMORAL STORIES.

That is To Say, Stories Without Morals

There could be no question but that John could make a better shoe than James. A shoe made by John would outlast two made by James; but James had a happy way of knocking leather together which produced work fair to look upon. A customer buying a pair of John's shoes came not again for a year or more, because of the durability of the shoes; but he who purchased a pair made by James came again quickly. The employer of the two men, perceiving this, sent John about his business and rewarded James with increased wages. John had a genius for making shoes, but James possessed tact. This was the difference between the two men.

Henry was walking along the street one day, when he was accosted by a gen-tleman who had lost his pocketbook. Inasmuch as Henry had been seen by the gentleman twice before that day, and because Henry's clothing was inelegant, the gentleman accused Henry of the theft. Henry was arrested, and upon being brought into court, where the gentleman repeated his charge, Henry was sentenced to the State Prison. During the five years of his confinement, Henry was happy, not only in the thought that he was innocent, but also in the blessed reflection that he did not so far forget himself, either at the time of his arrest or during his trial, as to contradict. Henry had always been told not to contradict, and he never did.

Charles spent all his time reading, so that in time he came to know more than frat in time he came to know more than I can begin to tell you; James, on the contrary, read little or nothing. But Iames liad the gift of gab. To be sure, he had nothing to say, and although he continually kept saying it, nobody was obliged to listen. Charles, notwithstanding his comprehensive knowledge, seldom ng his comprehensive knowlege, seldom poke. If Charles had been endowed with loquaciousness, his friends would have been obliged to listen, which would have awakened interest among the peoole who are more proficient with their mouths than their cars. Charles is in eccipt of $10,000 per year; James' wealth is of a mental rather than a peruniary variety. His wealth will be buried with him. James' wealth will go to his heirs, if there be any when he Adolphus is a good boy. He never quarrels. Rather than fight, he would permit any indignity to be heaped upon him. But Richard was of a pagnacious disposition. This propensity has become so intense that when he plays at marbles the other boys allow him to beat them. They would rather be beaten in the game than in another way. Adolphus, how-ever, is so peaceable that the boys theat him right along; they knock off his hat, and play all sorts of practical jokes upon him. Adolphus is a good boy, and is the cause of much pleasure to his mates; while Richard gives them small opportunity for enjoyment.

The Color of Water.

Two theories are advanced to explain the blue color of water when seen in large masses, one, held by Prof. Tyndall, being that small solid particles suspended in the water do not reflect the lower or red rays of the spectrum. According to the other theory, the color is due to the absorbent action of the water itself on the white light before and after reflection by these particles. The results of experiments made by Mr. John Ait-kin, and presented to the Royal Society, England, show that the latter theory is probably the more correct one. The greater the number of white reflecting particles the greener the water appears to be, and hence the gradual deepening of the green to blue as the shore is left. The waters of Lake Como owe their darkness to the absence of reflecting particles, as Mr. Aitken ingeniously proved by scattering finely-divided chalk in the center of that lake, thereby producing a very brilliant blue. The brilliancy depends on the color of the particles, and is greatest with white particles. Among coral reefs, which are generally strewn with white sand, the water also takes a very brilliant blue or green. The dull tinge of English river waters is due to the dingy character of the suspended silt; but springs have often a bright color, owing to the whiteness of the chalk suspended in them.

"And that ra Iroad-extension has come to a halt." "Well, I swan!"

"And that the volume of securities is substantially without a market." "Great sakes! Well, I never! And do they say anything about a feller stopping to lean on his hoe to talk when he might just as well talk and hoe too?" Reuben spit on his hands and resumed.

A FRENCH lady died at the advanced age of 90. Her will contained this provision: "I leave my physician, whose enlightened care and wise prescriptions have made me live so long, all that is contained in the oaken chest in my boudoir. The key of the chest will be found under the mattress of my bed." The heirs were much disturbed, for they foresaw a material diminution of their share of the property. The fortunate and expectant physician at length arrived. The notary delivered to him the key of the chest. It was opened, and found to contain solely all the drugs and potions, still intact, which the worthy physician had given his patient for twenty years back. ty years back.

A young man named Dan. Kileneane, in Sumter county, Ga., dreamed a few nights ago that he was having a good time swimming, and he jumped from his bed headforemost through the window out into the yard. He was so badly cut by the broken glass that the physician pronounced it serious but not fatal.

Is strictly first-class in all respects; perfect ly automatic in its action during storms. Has the best regulating device ever used. Material and workmanship unexcelled. Our new method of fastening the sails in the wheel is decidedly superior to the old way, as they cannot be blown out, nor will they decay where they contact with the rims. By this method the complete circle is filled, which adds to the power as well as to the beauty of the mill. Our mill is sold entirely upon its merits, and the purchaser assumes no risk whatever, as we guarantee satisfaction or no sale. We are prepared to meet all competition, and will not be undersold. Years from Stone in the Bladder.

Great age and painful disease are a sad combination. Yet Mr. William Westfall, formerly of Rock City, Duchess Co., N. Y., now of Washingtou Hollow, in the same county came to the office of Dr. David Kennedy, the eminent Physician and Surgeon of Rondout, N. Y., some time since, in a condition to excite the sympathy of the most cold-blooded, hardhearted person in the world. We say he came—he was, rather, carried to the Doctor's office, for he was totally helpless, and bore the weight of years beside. He had suffered long from Retention of Orine, had all the symptoms of an aggravated case of calculus formations in the bladder. The usual instrumental examination revealed the presence in the bladder of a urinary calculus of uncommon size. Dr. Kennedy frankly told Mr. Westfall that, owing to his age and debility, and operation was out of the question, but that he coald by the prescription of "Kenedy's Favorite Remedy," together with local treatment, make him comfortable and leave him to live out all his days. THE use of the name Puritan began

THE Coliseum at Rome is said to have

THERE were three ancient cities of the name of Philadelphia, one in Lydia (from which Philadelphia, Pa., is named), named from its founder, Attalus Philadelphus, so surnamed from the love he displayed toward his brother, Eumenes; a second, the capital city of the Ammonites, situated among the mountains of Gilead, received the name from Ptolemy Philadelphus, who dis-played great affection for his sister; the third is a city of Celicia Thracia.

THE phrase "Ultima Thule" is common ly applied to the extreme limit of any journey or pursuit. The name was given by the Latin poets, on account of its distance from Rome to the Island of Thule, the situation and existence of which are involved in obscurity. The first mention of the island is by a traveler. Massilia, in the fourth century. He claims to have arrived at a spot, some six days' journey from Britain, where nature had put a bar to all further prog-ress. According to Pliny, this island reached to the Polar circle within a days' journey of an ever-frozen sea. Many articles have been written upon the island. The southwest coast of Norway has been fixed-upon by some writers as its probable location. the majority give the preference to the Shetland isles.

The Crime of Loafing. Many persons who would scorn the idea of telling a lie will yet be guilty of acting a lie all their lives. They will perhaps be engaged to work for another permaps be engaged to work for another a certain number of hours, yet will shirk or half do their work, making their life a lie. It is as much a crime to act falsely as to speak falsely. It is an un-satisfactory and unprofitable thing to be a loafer. Once fully embarked on the sea of loaferdom, and you bid farewell to every friendly sail that sails under an honest and legitimate flag. Your consorts will only be buccaneers of society. It costs money, for, though the loafer may not earn a cent or have a cent for months, the time lost might have procured him much money, if devoted to industry instead of sloth. It pleasure of living, honor, dignity, selfrespect and the respect of the world when living, and finally all right of con-sideration when dead. Be a gentleman, then, it is far cheaper.

It is very difficult for one to see the virtues of others unless he has some virtue in himself. The bad man always suspects others of falsehood, and so overreaches himself; while the good man is apt to trust everybody, and so gets cheated. It is a funny world to live in, and yet we are all anxious to stay.

"You was never hitched into harness with a balky mule, was ye?" said the farmer to a young man who had come to ask his daughter's hand. "No," responded the candidate doubtfully. "Well, then, don't act jest as if ye was spilin' for a chance," was all the satisfaction he got. An Augusta (Ga) dog, after howling with pain more than a week, made his master understand what was the matter, and a whole row of decayed teeth were extracted from the dog's mouth. The animal endured the operation with entire serenity. Sixty per cent. of the mechanical energy converted into electricity and applied to a Faure storage battery has been reconverted into work on discharging the battery. THAT HIRED MAN.

"He'd Been a Good One if He Had Stayed."

A good old Wethersfield farmer, pes tered by the lack of help, told his son to slip down to New York and hire a man. But before he started he cautioned him to look out and not get loaded down with a dead beat, adding: "There are sharpers there who will beat you if you give em half a chance. You can tell one of them air beats as far as you can see him. Hire some good, lusty young fellow—a greenhorn, if you can—any one but a dead beat." In a couple of days the new man was at work on the farm, and with a little practice would have broken in all right, but the old farmer, who was fretful and impatient, disliked his ways, and so he shipped him. The young man went to a neighboring place and hired out, and the old farmer started for Gotham himself to get the rightkind of a hired man. He came back with one, stopping in Hartford to buy him some new clothes, the price of which was to be deducted from his wages. The new help wanted some pretty good clothes, and quieted the old farmer by telling him he could take the price out of the earliest earnings. He set him towork in the garden in the rear of the barn. In about an hour the old farmer went out to see how he was getting along. He found him lying on some hay on the barn floor. "What is the matter?"

said the farmer.
"I'm feeling bad—don't know what ails me." "Do you ever drink?" asked the

"Why didn't you let me know it?" said the other, "and I would have fixed you up sunthin'. I'm a temp'rance man, though I always have a drop in the house for medicine. The old farmer went in and made a rum punch and gave it to the fellow. This had an inspiring effect, and the hired man said he felt better and started for the house. In a few minutes he came out dressed up in the new suit and started down the road toward Middletown, much to the old man's surprise. "Where you going?"
