THE OLD PATHWAY. BY CLARENCE N. ROULELLE.

The pathway led from the farm-yard gate, Down by the brookside, through the wood; The night wind murmured, "The hour is late," What time we two in the moonlight stood. Late! But we heeded not night nor day-Nor heeded the length of the road we went: For his loving words in my glad heart: Loving was living-and life, content.

Down the roadpath my soldier went,

By the brook, through the wood, neath waning moon; And to keep the tears in his fond heart pent He cheerfully whistled an old love tune. One of the many who went so brave, (I watched him over the dim, long track), To find for ambition a southern grave. "Missing," they said; but he never came

Snow and only the stars give light; The river is frezen—the wood is bare; Away on the hill gleam the headstones white; I wonder if all is peace out there? once together with love's foud talk; Once alone 'neath the waning moon; alone in my lonely walk;

Love That Liveth Not On Looks.

God grant an end to my journey soon!

BY A. G.

"Do you really admire that little brown girl. Basil?"
- "Indeed I do; think she is the most cosy little creature I have seen. True, she has not her cousin's dash and style, neither can she be called a beauty, but she is quaint and good and womanlythe sort of girl to rest a man after he leaves the workaday world for the sweet repose of domestic quiet." Basil Holman's earnest, handsome face brightened as he spoke. He and his friend Bob Drury were watching a game of lawn tennis. The girl in ques-tion had pushed her velvet jockey-cap off her low, square forehead. Truly she was not a beauty, yet there was that which is better than beauty in her face—"soul." She had a pretty, trim figure, tiny feet, close curling brown hair, uneven features, a brown skin, white teeth, and great steel-gray eyes that contrasted strangely with her dark complexion. Every one voted Violet Dering a jolly, good-natured little soul; and some there were who read below the surface and saw in her the true nobility of white-souled womanhood. A pleasant party were gathered to-gether at Darlingford Vicarage to celebrate Vi's coming of age. She was an ing to the country folks; she had electrified them by her stylish costume and quiet airs. Vi looked upon her as a perfection. After a splendid game the guests took tea in the grassy orchard, that ran around the back of the vicarage. It was a wonderful old place, full of wellladen trees, that made scented shade for the young folks, who were very merry pelting one another with cher-Vi was busy attending to the comforts of others, but Lottie held a and abroad. Vi's cousin Lottie, a splen-did blonde, was fresh from her first season. She seemed quite awe-inspirlittle court of adorers under a big pear When tea had been removed, the young folks divided into groups and discussed the evening's entertainment. There was music, dancing under a great white tent, boating on a smooth, broad lake, or cards in the cool oldfashioned parlor. Most of the party swarmed to the tent, and just when the moon whitened all it touched with the light of heaven, the band struck up "Sweethearts," and soon the flying feet of light-footed youth beat time to the dreamy measure of the music. Basil Holman danced with Vi, and looked into the clear depth of her bright Lottie, seeing her cousin dancing with the only man in the room whom wealth and position made it worth while winning, inwardly determined to nip the flirtation in the bud. It did not seem credible that the best party of the season should be seriously enamored of a plain little country girl. She was engaged to dance the next with him, and made up her mind to discover how far interested his affections were. Basil, with a whisper that brought the love-light to Vi's eyes, and the vivid blush to her cheeks, left her to claim Lottie, who greeted him with all the well-trained "army" of her eyes. "I had no idea my little cousin could waltz so well, Mr. Holman. I am sure you must have enjoyed your dance with her." "Indeed I did; she is such a jolly little girl, so unobtrusively clever and in-teresting; you ought to be very proud of her, Miss Dering."

"Yes, I am fond of Vi; she is such a docile, childish girl, one would be hardhearted to resist her affection. Do you think her good looking?" "Yes, in the best sense of the term, for she is pretty and looks good. Our set is forming; let me lead you to the other end of the tent We shall have your cousin vis-a-vis." Lottie bit her lip, but raised no objection to his arrangement. During the dance she managed very cleverly to make it seem that Basil was paying her a great deal of attention. Vi felt her heart sink, and only a moment before she had been so happy. That night Lottie, who shared her room, said, with an affectionate kiss: 'Vi, you must not let Basil Holman interest you too much. He is an audacious flirt, and is only trifling with your heart, as he has done with others, to cast it aside and laugh at you." The barbed arrow struck home, and long after Lottie slept, Vi lay, wide awake, with hot, despairing eyes and a heartache that seemed to choke her. She fought a fierce battle with herself that night, and arose changed from happy, thoughtless girlhood to a self-contained and suffering woman. Lot-tie looked at her keenly and then kiss-ed her approvingly. There was something in her cousin's looks that promised her plans success.

After this Basil wondered at the change in his girl-love. She no longer looked into his eyes with answering love, and seemed glad when he sought her society. "Contrary wise," she seemed to shun him.

In vain Lottie, a finished coquette and a splendidly beautiful woman, tried to cast her "glamor" about him. He shook off her witcheries as the wind does the dewdrops, and yearned the more for his sweet Violet. One calm Sabbath day he determined to try his fate. It was a sultry summer noontide, and Vi, believing herself alone in the church where she was organist, sat on long after the service. playing divine melodies that seemed to give her heart ease. Basil, sitting in the sunshine, felt from his heart spring up a little prayer that flew to heaven swiftly as the bird: "God give me my pure sweetheart," and, as if to answer his prayer, the music ceased, and Vi came down from the organ-loft with a whole life would be embittered, light in her face that spoke of peace- for he felt that her image could never ful thoughts. She started when she be effaced from his heart. came face to face with her heart's lord, and a painful flush blotted out the brightness of her looks as she said: "I had no idea you had gone home wife. Give me my answer here. I cannot wait, my heart is all athirst. Be kind to me, Violet."

He had taken her trembling hands, and looked with heart-yearning into the pure heaven of her eyes; and she, true heart, told her answer by her looks, and he, with almost reverent love, laid his first kiss upon her lips.

"You love me, darling; I can see it in those dear eyes. Say you will give yourself to me."

"I will be your wife if you really wish it, and are sure it will be for your happiness, for I love you with the one love of my life." "Vi, you have made me intensely happy. If the whole devotion of a life can reward you for the blessed gift of your good love, I will repay you. Come out into the sunshine, sweet; I feel as if the whole world were not wide enough to contain my happiness." Together they went through the cornfields and talked of their future—such a wonderful future it was to be, as pictured by a love which all the frosts of life could not chill, or the fires of life destroy. Lottie, seeing their confident and gluddened looks, felt her heart sink with a strange sensation of defeat.

Jealousy roused all the worst of her nature into hot rebellion. The lovers had one happy day together, and Basil was closeted with the vicar next morning, then he left for town with bright spirits, promising to return in a few days. Lottie heard of the engagement with hidden anger, then went away to walk to the village to match some silks she wanted for embroidery. Coming to the village she was met by the doctor, a clever, hard working fellow, who had a worshipful admiration for the London belle. He shook hands, saying:

"Miss Dering, I am glad I met you, for my time is precious. I was just coming up to the vicarage to warn Miss Violet against coming as usual to the alms house to read to-day; small pox has broken out in its worst form, and I fear infection for her. You will hasten back, I am sure, to warn her, won't you?" "Of course. Dear me, how awful! I have a dread of the terrible scourge myself, so will turn back now."

She turned back, as she said she would, but instead of going by the highway and across the meadows-a short cut-she took the long, pleasant path through the woods, and arrived at the vicarage at luncheon time, looking very haggard and white. Her uncle said, at sight of her:

"Why, Lottie, what is the matter? You look as if you had met a ghost." "I have met something more danger ous than that, uncle. I have met Dr Hastings, fresh from attending a small-pox patient. That dreadful disease has broken out in the parish. Where is Vi? She must not go to her poor people to-day."

Mr. Dering turned pale, then said:
"God will guard her. She started soon after you, hoping to catch you up, she said. It is too late now to prevent her paying her usual visits. I will go after her. When Vi's father met her coming wearily through the meadows, she started away from him, saying: "Papa, dear, don't touch me till I have bathed and changed my clothes I have been where there is small-pox I am not afraid for myself-I am young and strong—but I am afraid for you."

A fortnight later Vi fell ill. Basil was back, and had spent a pleasant week with her. On hearing his darling was ill, he resolutely took up his abode in the house, half heart-broken by his little girl's danger.

Lottie had gone back to town directly she found her cousin was likely to take the complaint. Poor little Vi went near to dying. When she was past the crisis she wrote a line to her lover, releasing him from his engagement, because, she said, she had grown so awful to look upon, and he, for answer, walked straight into the room she occupied, and said: "Darling, do you not know that my love does not live on looks? You have a beauty of heart and mind that cannot die; that is what feeds my love. I come to tell you that I shall claim my wife directly Lottie heard the news of her cousin's

Three months later she, scarred beyond all beauty, went down to the dear old vicarage to get strong again, a repentant and almost heart-broken woman, poor, and without beauty. What was she to make of her life. Her uncle welcomed her kindly, and tried to make her contented by leading her thoughts above herself; but as the soul awakened so her sorrow increased. She was morbidly sensitive about her disfigurement, said it was a judgment upon her, and grew so fragile that her uncle called in medical help. Dr. Hastings' heart ached at the change in his idol, but his presence did her good, for she unburdened all the remorseful bitterness of her weak heart to him, and gained comfort by his grave assurance of forgiveness from Heaven. He was shocked by her confession, but his love grew stronger now he knew her need of it, and when the winter snow whitened the world about them he took her to him, a humbled and better woman than she had ever been had beauty been left her to destroy the gentler part of her. A year later she met her cousin at a flower show. Vi had quite got back her looks, and was tenderly compassionate of Lottie, because she imagined herself in part to blame for her cousin's disfigurement. Every kind word of hers struck to Lottie's soul, and in a repentant mood she told her of the cruel delay on her part that led to Vi's illness. "I could have saved you, dear, but did not because of my cruel jealousy; can you forgive me?" "I can, dear, and be grateful to you for through my illness I knew that my husband's love did not live on looks. You should be grateful too, dear, for misfortune found a true heart for you. Here come our husbands; such love as theirs lives unstained by all the scars of life. That thought should be our happiness."

One Slight Boon Asked.

He had never told his love; their acquaintance had been a very short one, and when suddenly he had placed her arms around his neck and imprinted a kiss upon her rosebud mouth she was naturally startled. "Sir," said she, "this is insufferable."

"Forgive me," he cried. "I was mad to act thus. I-beseech you, pardon me." 'No. I can never forgive you, never. You have forfeited my friendship. You must leave me at once and for-Vainly he plead; she was obdurate. So glaring an offense could not be condoned. And so he said he would go. His

"What is it?" she asked gently, "Won't you please take your arm

Origin of the Song "John Brown's Body."

"John Brown's soul is marching on." M. Foster Sweetser, in his late book on "Boston Harbor and Fort Warren," relates the origin of the song of freedom: It happened, therefore, that from this happy garrison (Fort Warren, Boston Harbor) proceeded one of the most powerful influences which made themselves felt in the national armies during that long and weary war. The famous song of the national armies, "John Brown's body lies mouldering in the grave," was composed and first sung at Fort Warren by the glee club of the Second Bartalion of Light Infantry in the spring of 1862. It was adapted to an old Methodist camp-meeting tune, somewhat altered in form, and the brigade band at the fort was the first that played it. The singers entered the Twelfth Regiment, which marched through Boston, New York, and Baltimore, to this grand chorus, from 1,000 throats, and the music ran through the Army of the Potomac, nor ceased until grim powder-blackened choirs had chanted it in Texas and Alabama, and down the great Mississippi, and on all the flowery coasts of the Gulf, and through the Carolinas, and along the streets of conquered Richmond. From Fort Warren came the Marseillaise of our emancipating revolution. As Admiral Preble says: "Few

The Rev. Mr. - was one of the most bashful men in the profession, and was constantly getting into scrapes through his nervous mistakes. At one time he rose in his pulpit to give out the hymn, "This world is all a fleeting show," and after clearing his throat he struck a high pitch of voice and began solemnly:

"This world is all a floating shoe." Everybody smiled except the deacons, and the minister was covered with confusion as he began again:
"This world is all a shouting flow." This only made matters worse, and the unhappy man cleared his throat with tremendous force and began once again: "This world is all a floating she." Then he slammed the hymn book down, and wiping his clammy brow,

"Just as I am without one flea." Origin of the Term "Hoosier."

Dr. Aaron Wood, the oldest Methodist divine in Indiana, recently gave the Dispatch a pleasant call. In the course of his conversation he remark ed that an error prevailed in regard to the term "Hoosier." According to one authority wildly credited, a stranger called at the cabin and broke the still ness by crying, "Who's here?" But according to the doctor it was given birth by the following incident: A learned foreigner by the name of Leminouski, formerly a soldier under Napoleon, during the years intervening between 1823 and 1830, lectured extensively on the wars of Europe to the pioneers of this State. In his discourses the valor of the huzzars was conspicuous but his accent was not English, and he pronounced that body Hoosiers. During the excavation of the canal at the falls of the Ohio through Kentucky, a young man from Washington county, Indiana, on the grounds one day, fought and whipped three Kentuckians. Highly elated at the conclusion, amid a torrent of backwoods profanity, he exclaimed, "I'm a Hoosier. From that day to the present the term has been applied to all citizens of Indiana. — Michigan City Dispatch.

There, and in fact in every country where Islamism prevails, he is complete outcast, and everything he touches becomes impure. On the contrary, the cat, the most ungrateful and least susceptible of attachment of all the do-mestic animals, is the daily companion alike of the bearded warrior and the faar inmate of the harem. The reason of this is found in the fact that a cat was the favorite pet of Mahomet, who often carried kittens in the bosom of his ample robe. Few men ever give a thought to the aggregate amount of food consumed by an individual in a life-time, and hence when a calculation is made the result appears astounding if not incredible. A man eats on an average eight and a half ounces of meat per diem. Now, take a life of sixty-five years as an example. Allow eight and a half ounces a day for fifty years, two-thirds of that quantity for ten years, and three ounces a day for three years of childhood, and the total animal food devoured by a single person will be found to equal in bulk 350 dressed sheep. In addition, a man consumes in the course of his existence five tons of potatoes, about five tons of turnips and other vegetables, nine tons weight of water, and six tons weight of wine and other beverages, this calculation being made on the basis of moderation and sobriety. Thus for dinner alone about thirty tons weight of solids and liquids will pass through an individual's stomach in the period of sixty-five years. An Omaha Larceny.

REGISTRATION.

There having been some doubt expressed regarding the requirements of the registration law of 1881, which requires a complete new registration before the next general election, and each ten years thereafter, by request of Governor Jerome, the following opinion has been given by Attorney General Van Riper:

STATE OF MICHIGAN, ATTORNEY GENERAL'S OFFICE, LANSING, Sept. 7, 1882.

His Excellency, Gov. David H. Jerome, DEAR SIR:—Yours received, with letter of Hon. J. K. Boies, relative to the construction of the law of 1881, Act. 142, requiring a new registration of all the electors of the State prior to the next general election, and every ten years thereafter, and requesting my opinion as to the proper construc tion of the time within which such registration should take place, many construing the law to require such registration to take place at the meeting of the board of registration and at no other time, which would in many of the larger townships be an impossi bility. I therefore beg to give you the following as my construction of the

SEC. 176, C. L. 1871, as amended in Act 142, laws of 1881, provides that at the sessions of the several boards of registration, next proceeding the general election to be held in this State in the year 1882, and at said sessions next preceeding the general election every ten years thereafter, there shall be had and made an entirely new registration of the qualified electors of each organized township and city in this State, excepting the county of Wayne, etc.

This would seem to contemplate the making of this new registration at the sessions of the boards, at the time fixed by law for their meetings, and if the above provision stood alone doubts might arise as to the proper time for 'handing in names" for registration; but by reading further on in this act o 1881, the question will be found fully settled, for, after setting forth as above, that a new registration shall be had every ten years at the sessions of the boards, and excepting in Wayne county and in certain cities, it says: 'the same [that is, the registration of every ten years] to be made in the manner hereinfore specified for registration of qualified electors in townships after the year 1859."

The registration to be made this fall.

and that of ten years thereafter, is therefore to be made as provided for registration since 1859, which may be found in Sec. 169, C. L. 1871, wherein it provides "that after the year 1859 it shall be the right of any such qualified elector residing in the township, and entitled to the vote at the next election therein, and whose name has not been registered, on any day, except Sunday, the days of the session of the board of registration, and the days intervening between them and the next approaching election, to apply to the township elerk, in person, for the registration of his name, and if, upon such examination as is required by the next session of this act [Sec. 170, C L. 1871], the clerk-shall be satisfied that such applicant is a resident of the township, and otherwise qualified and entitled to vote in such township at the then next election to be held there in, the name of such applicant shall be writen by himself or by the clerk upon a separate paper, to be kept by the clerk, his residence described, and the date of the entry noted," etc., "which paper shall be laid before the board of registration of each township, at its next meeting, for examination and review, and the names of such persons appearing thereon as the board shall be of opinion are qualified electors at the then next election, and entitled to vote thereat, may by some member of the board, and under their direction, be entered in the proper register in the manner above set forth," etc. It will thus be seen that electors need not wait for the meetings of the registration boards; but may, as above stated, call in person upon the town-ship clerk, leave their names with him, and thus secure their registration. I am therefore of the opinion that the registration of names as above provided, and as registered since 1859, will be valid, and in accordance with the existing registration laws, as amended

William J. Coughlin, of Somerville, Mass. says: "In the fall of 1876 I was taken with a violent bleeding of the lungs, followed by a severe cough. I was so weak at one time that I could not leave my bed. In the summer of 1877 I was admitted to the City Hospital. Hall's Balsam for the lungs. I got a bottle, when to my surprise and gratification, I commenced to feel better, and to-day I feel in better spirits than I have in the past three years. "I write this hoping every one afflicted with Diseased Lungs will be induced to take Dr. Wm. Hall's Balsam for the lungs, and be

MR. JOHN REAMER, who is running steam thresher in this vicinity, informs the RECORD that where his machine has been at work thus far the yield has been from sixteen to thirtytwo and one-half bushels per acre, which makes a pretty good average for failure.

THERE is nothing small about Niles people but some of their tricks. The latest is to refuse to pay the farmers living in the bend of the river, market you the particulars.

Mr. H. J. Howe, on the Shaker farm, has fifteen persons from Chicago spending the summer at his home. A pleasant place to rusticate, and while Mrs. H. has charge of the culinary department they will be most excellently served, as two years of experience has taught ye editor.

MASTER GUY OSBORN, who went last week to enter the State Agricultural College at Lansing, writes home that he passed muster, standing 9 in all studies excepting mathematics, in which he expected to fail, and in this he was rated 914. MR. J. BRENNER, of Berrien Centre, believing in the future greatness of that village, and being of a liberal nature, has laid in village lots seventeen acres of land lying between the new railroad and the business part of town, and proposes to donate each alternate lot to any one who will improve them by building on them. That is one of the correct ways of building up Four negroes came over from Niles last night, filled with Niles. whisky, and commenced raising a disturbance among the colored population, flourishing knives and revolvers and loud words, until the officers were called upon, when the darkies put out for home, but were overtaken and captured just as they were going into Niles. Justice Dick issued a warrant for their arrest this morning, and two of them were brought back here for examination. They made a pretty wild show.

An enterprising financeer, living not far from this place, and whose lease of life is short, made a proposition to the undertaker that none but a sage would have thought of. He wanted the undertaker to let him have $25, with an agreement that the undertaker might have his body after burial, to send to Ann Arbor, thus making double profit on the job of buying him, by having the coffin left to sell to some other person, and what he could get over $25 for the carcass. He didn't get the cash.

This is the way the Ovid Union talks about us:

"We get the Berrien County RECORD every week, published John G. Holmes, at Buchanan. This is a large eight column folio, all home print, and is just what it claims to be, a first-class family newspaper. It is always cleanly printed, contains a well written and neatly arranged local page, and is outspoken in defense of Republicanism; hailing from a town that has more good looking woman than some whole States, must be one reason why the RECORD has so much to record that is TRAVELERS who patronize the Michigan Central Railroad Company conclude that the company must be getting close run for cash, that necessitates charging storage on baggage that arrives at a station at ten o'clock Saturday night, and on account of there being no train cannot be taken away until Monday morning. In cases of this kind the company collects twentyfive cents on each package. In another case the baggage arrives at six o'clock. The baggage master puts it in the room and it is locked up until Monday morning, when baggage man comes on duty again. Charges the same as before.

FATAL ACCIDENT.-Monday afternoon, James Kenniston, of Dayton, was drawing logs from about four miles north of Dayton to the saw mill in that place, and as he was driving over a sidling place in the road, with two logs on his trucks, the load turned bottom upwards, with one of the logs lengthwise on top of him. John Freeland was with him, but does not know whether Kenniston was on the load or walking at the side of the wagon, before the accident. The load was in on each Saturday, examination days such a shape that Freeland could do nothing to help Kenniston, and so left him there and went to Dayton for assistance. Kenniston died Tuesday

The only probable reason that the packers are not prosecuted is the petty smallness of the crime, but it calls for prosecution the same as any other crime. AMBOY, Ill., Sept. 12, 1882. Mr. Editor:—The National Advent Christian Campmeeting has been in progress on the fair grounds, the authorities kindly granting the free use of their beautiful park, within the limits of this pleesant little city.

There are ninety ministers in attendance, representing eighteen States, extending from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and from the Gulf of Mexico to Minnesota. Up to this point nine have been baptised. The best order was observed last Sabbath by the large concourse of people assembled. I have seen no place in my trip here would prefer for a home to our beautiful little city, nestling among the hills of Western Michigan. Yours respectfully,

STATIONERY,

Peterson's Magazine for October is unusually brilliant, if we can say that of a magazine that is always exceptionally good. It has two colored patterns, a specialty with it, no other lady's book giving them at all: a very fine steel-engraving, "The Woodland Bath;" a beautifully colored steel fashion-plate with the latest styles, among others, of wedding dresses. There are, besides, some fifty wood-engravings of fashions, patterns in embroidery, etc., etc. The stories, as always in "Peterson," are all original and all first-rate. But the article of the number, because so appropriate just now, when everybody is talking of Egypt, is one on "Cairo and the Khedive's Harem," illustrated with numerous spirited engravings. The low price of this monthly is another thing to consider. It is but two dollars a year, much less than is asked for any other of equal merit. To clubs the terms are still lower. Now is the time to begin getting up clubs for 1883. Specimens are sent, gratis, for this

ACCORDING to Dr. Foote's Health Monthly, charcoal, because of its great power of absorption, may be rendered useful as a disinfectant in foul places or to purify water by filtration. One cubic inch of charcoal will absorb nearly 100 men of charcoal will absorb hearry 100 cubic inches of gaseous ammonia, and will do proportionately well in the sequestering of foul gases, but it has limits to its capacity for doing away with impurities and should be disposed of when its duty is done. Water filters should have their charcoal contents frequently changed, least they become concentrated sources of impurity.

NERVOUS AND NEURALGIC HEADACHE. —Bromide of potassium is pronounced by high medical authority a valuable remedy for this ailment—many a head-ache, it is declared, being kept in check and the seizure cut short if a stull dose be taken as discomfort is felt, particutarly if the patient can go to bed and obtain sleep. Again, if compelled to be about, twenty grains taken in a little sal volatile and water will Iuli the nervous centers, and so caim the cerebral circulation; or ten-grain doses, with carbonate of ammonia in effervescence with citric acid, will sometimes have an equally good effect. No ill effects are ever known to ensue from the bromide, even when administered in considerable HEART AILMENTS INDUCED BY SMOKna.—Out of eighty-one great smokers examined in France by a medical expert, twenty-three are reported as exhibiting an intermittent pulse, independent of any cardiac lesion; and this intermittent pulse, the employee help the control of the contro tency disappeared on the smoking habit being abandoned. The effect of smok-ing on children from 9 to 15 years of age sliows not only palpitation and intermit-tent pulse, but chloroanemia. The re-sults of observations in this line in respect to women smokers—some forty to fifty eases—show that most of them suffered from disturbances of menstruation and digestion, and about one-fifth of the number presented very marked intermit-tency of the pulse without any lesion of the heart; these latter defied all methods of treatment, however skillful, frequent or prolonged, the difficulty yielding only with the suppression of the habit.

CARE OF THE HEALTH.—Prof. F. W. Newman, an old man, who all his life has been a student, and for many years a hard-working professor, gives some valuable hints to students as to the care of their health. He says: If I may adof their health. He says: If I may advise any one, it is to eat the very least in quantity which will keep him in health. Any superfluous food must either derange health, or use up (in chemical process to get rid of the superfluity) force which else would be at his voluntary disposal. Sedentary, I suppose I must be called; yet I have from youth been an active walker, and still, at 72, walk years sleavely though seldom long been an active walker, and still, at 72, walk very sharply, though seldom long distances. Above all, I covet sleep. The more sleep the better I am. No student should grudge himself sleep. I count seven hours normal; and six too little; if I can get now and then eight, my brain is stronger for it, and I can work more hours after it. Perhaps I ought not to conceal that I am sadly out of harmony with the prevalent doctrine of harmony with the prevalent doctrine of the day concerning hardihood. When I was a young man I had my own theories about bracing and hardening my body.

I slept on n hard, straw mattress, I generally scorned a great coat, at least a warm one. In Asiatic travel I had plenty of necessary hardships. I slept with open window in most seasons, but trial brought me around to an opposite conviction. At University College, London, I found that the young men with open necks had no such immunity from cold and cough as I conjuged through cold and cough as I enjoyed through my wraps. Let me add that I hold to Cicero's advice (given to a student): "Take exercise, so much as is needful for the health, but not so much as will conduce to the greatest bodily strength. I have no doubt that hard muscular work stupefies the brain. But of course in lifting weights, etc., I could not be called anything but a weak man. What does it matter? Each man has his own specialty. With no padding of fat I am specialty of good thick elethings or in hed glad of good thick clothing; or in bed, of soft underclothing or feather bed. I shun linen sheets and everything glossy, preferring rough cotton. In short, I try to nourish my skin, and find it succeeds. Dry rubbing suits me far better than cold baths.

A Remarkable Plant.

Anise grows wild in Egypt, in Syria, Palestine and all parts of the Levant, but the Romans considered the Egyptian and Cretan anise to be the best, especially for medicinal purposes. The product of Southern Enrope is now looked upon with favor. Among the ancients anise seems to have been a common potherb in every garden. Although it is less used in medicine by the moderns than by the ancients it still retains its than by the ancients, it still retains its former reputation as an excellent stomachic, particularly for delicate women and young children. The Romans chewed it in order to keep up an agree-able moisture in the mouth, and to sweeten the breath, while some Orientals still do the same. Some of the Persian poets have sung the agreeable qualities of the anise, and a modern sweet ballad of Rome compares the slender. grace of a young girl to the anise.

Arise is an annual plant growing to the height of one foot, carries a white flower, and blooms from June till August. The seeds are imported and used in large quantities on account of their aromatic and carminative properties. The distilled plant, when used in blossom, yields a sweeter and more gratful tincture than can be obtained from the seeds. Anise is extensively employed by the confectioner for the purpose of flavoring comfits and cordials. The anise seed cordial of the shops is a compound of alcohol, anise seed and angelica. The oil is obtained by distillation from the seeds, and though habitually mixed with a great many cattle medicines, and re-garded by the farmers of former generations as one of the most potent drugs, it performs scarcely any other office than the communicating of an agreeable fragrance. The Chinese cultivate it for the seasoning of dishes; and the Japanese employ bundles and garlands of it in the ceremonies of their heathenish supersti-tion. Its appearance, when out of flower, as well as when in bloom, is decidedly

The Death Penalty. Any man who kills another by accidents without intention to harm him, must be killed. No matter what be the extenuating circumstances of any killing, no man or government is authorized to pardon, but the strict law must be fulfilled in every case, and in all circumstances; the soldier who kills another in war must die; the insane man who sheds (blood; and the man who in self-defense kill his assailant, forfeit their lives, etc., etc. Do you object and "Oh, no; we must construe the command, not as it was construed then, but as the circumstances of our day and our light demand?" Exactly; well, we will meet you on that ground, and cheerfully give the supposed command all the weight in present legislation which we think it ought to have. Do you remind think it ought to have. Do you remin us that Moses allowed one who had shed blood accidently, or without malice, to flee to a city of refuge—and as long as he stayed there the "avenger" could from harmonim? Very true. Moses then felt justified in making exceptions to this command, if it were such, after the lapse of a thousand years, and when change of condition and established government, and improved civilization, allowed it. Moses set its a good example and now, after 3,500 more years of that. Nobody with a heart would treat a man like you have me. Don't leave, a ranger; I'll tell you all. Diary of a First Baby.

'The first day or two after the birth of our child is more or less indistinct in our memory. It doesn't seem to be very definite or fixed. Floating through our wild waste of brain there is a chaotic panorama, and there seems to be nothing but a mixture of events. We see in our mind's eye an excited young man pranc-ing wildly through the moonlight down town. The solemn hush of midnight seems to pervade every thing. The young man seems to have dressed himself in a hurry, and one suspender is hanging down by his side. He rings a door hell and a physician comes to the door-bell and a physician comes to the door.

There is a hurried conversation and then all is still. Pretty soon two men pass up the street. * * * It is to-morrow! A beautiful parboiled child is nestling in a roll of snowy blanket. The father gets a magnifying glass and looks at the features. The nurse tells the father that the child is the living picture of him, and the enraged parent brains the nurse with

The father goes down town at 2 o'clock a. m. for a soothing potion for the child. Gets one for himself at the same time.

Third Day—Respiration normal, pulse regular, amount of laudable howl materially increased.

Tenth Day—The mind begins to develop, and the father notices that his child has no teeth, and will have to be fed on ground feed and bran mush for some time.

A Clever Rascal. One fine day a man, meanly clad and apparently poorly fed, presented himself before Jules Sandeau. "Sir," said he, "vou behold before you a great sinner. one who has been severely punished. I am a priest. One day I chanced to glance at a book. It was one of your novels, 'Marienne.'" "Continue, my good man," said Sandeau, kindly, not without some of the pardonable vanity of the author. "To make a long story short, I fell. The Bishop suspended me for neglecting the duties of my profession to immerse myself in the fascina -but enough. I do not know a soul to whom to come for monetary aid but yourself." "Here is a louis, my good fellow," said Sandeau, much moved.

"Come and see me again, and I will see what I can do for you."

Next day, as Saudeau was lounging along the boulevard, he met Mery, looking pensive, not to say gloomy. "What's wrong with you?" "My dear boy," replied Mery in a hollow tone, "do you know that we authors do much love in this word without being on the world with the world without being on the world without being on the harm in this world without being conscious of the fact? Now, last night, as I was sitting down to dinner, there came—" At this moment they espied Theophile Gautier bearing down upon them, his visage wrapped in a melancholy not wholly devoid of satisfaction. "I say, fellows," he cried to them from afar, "you know there are some idiots who pretend that literature is without any influence upon men, either for good any influence upon men, either for good or evil. Now, one of my books has ruined the career of a man I never saw in my life, and whose profession you couldn't guess if you tried a hundred times." "It was a priest, the villain!" cried Sandeau and Mery together. "Who told you?" demanded Gautier. Then, as a sense of the situation dawned woon him he added "Oh! I see Well

"Oh, sir," said the editor, visibly agitated, "I don't recall the past; don't bring up the memories of the tomb; I know I've led a hard life—I don't deny it." I killed Shorty Barnes, the Bowery boy of New York—hacked him all to pieces with a knife. I have atoned for that a thousand times. I blew a man's head off at a log-roll in Kentucky, and bitterly have I repented of my folly. I slew a lot of inoffensive citizens of Omaha over a paltry $4 pot, simply because I got excited. Ohe could I but cheat the tomb of the men I have placed in its may I would be happy. But it was all owing to my high temper and lack of early training. I know that I have been wayward, wicked, and you have a right to come here and recall those unhappy memories; but it's mean for all that. Nobody with a heart would treat Frightened.

The well-known safeguard against small-pox, the honor of the discovery of which is linked with the name of Dr. Edward Jenuer, has proved its value by constant use through the greater part of constant use through the greater part of a century. The enterprising doctor was the first to prove and establish vaccination as a "prophylactic" of such wonderful benefit, but it was a far more ignorant man who first applied it, and furnished the hint on which the tearn d physician acted. A medical writer in the Boston Herald says:

"It is generally supposed that Dr. Jenner was the first parson who aftempted to perform the operation of va cination, and it is true that he investigated the matter and brought it before the public. Vaccination wa, however, per-formed by a farmer in England some fif-teen years before Dr. Jenner attempted it. This man—who had the tomerity to vaccinate his children with virus taken directly from the cow-is stated to have been an able and discreet person ordi-narily, but this rashness of his came very near costing him his life. The pop-ular feeling was so strong against him that he was obliged to leave the section of the country in which he lived, and his children were carefully guarded, as it was expected they would exhibit some of the characteristics of the animals from which they had been vaccinated. It was expected that horns would appear upon their heads and hair upon their bodies, but, of course, nothing happened to the children, and they received no in-jury from the vaccination. It was this fact which probably first called the attention of Jenner to the subject of vaccination."-Youth's Commanion.

Malaria is an almost indescribable malady which not even the most talented physicians are able to fathom. Its cause is most frequently ascribed to local surroundings, and there is very little question, but this opinion is substantiated by facts. Malaria does not necessarily mean chills and fever while these troubles usually accompany it. It often affects the sufferer with general lassitude, accompanied by loss of appetite, sleeplessness, a tired feeling and a high fever, the per-son afflicted growing weaker and weaker, loses flesh day after day, until he becomes a mere skeleton, a shadow of his former self.

Malaria once having laid its hold upon the human frame, the door of the system is thrown open to nervous diseases. The body weak and enfeebled absorbs no nourishment, but subsisting upon itself, the digestive organs no longer perform their functions; the liver becomes torpid, and other organs failing to do their routine work, speedily become disordered, and dissolution and death are apt to ensue.

In addition to being a certain cure for malaria and chills and fever, BROWN'S IRON BITTERS is highly recommended for all diseases requiring a certain and efficient tonic; especially indigestion, dyspepsia, intermittent fevers, want of appetite, loss of strength, lack of energy, etc. Enriches the blood, strengthens the muscles, and gives new life to the nerves. Acts like a charm on the digestive organs. If is for sale by all respectable dealers in medicines,

Of Duchess Co., N. Y., 80 Years of Age, Suffered Continually for Many Bladder.

Great age and painful disease are a sad combination. Yet Mr. William Westfall, formerly of Rock City, Duchess Co., N. Y., now of Washingtou Hollow, in the same county came to the office of Dr. David Kennedy, the eminent Physician and Surgeon of Rondout, N. Y., some time since, in a condition to excite the sympathy of the most cold-blooded, hardhearted person in the world. We say he came—he was, rather, carried to the Doctor's office, for he was totally helpless, and bore the weight of years beside. He had suffered long from Retention of Urine, had all the symptoms of an aggravated case of calculus formations in the bladder. The usual instrumental examination revealed the presence in the bladder of a urinary calculus of uncommon size. Dr. Kennedy trankly told Mr. Westfall that, owing to his age and debility, and operation was out of the question, but that he could by the prescription of "Kenedy's Favorite Remedy," together with local treatment, make him comfortable and leave him to live out all his days. The outcome of this was that the patient enjoys good health to this day.

From the foregoing table it will be seen that the only considerable increase in the number of small farms between 1870 and 1880 was in the States of Ohio and Pennsylvania in the North and Alabama, Maryland, North Carolina and Virginia in the South. There was a falling off of over 16,000 in the number of small farms (twenty acres and under) in Missouri and of 12,748 in Michigan. The greatest falling off was in these two The greatest falling off was in these two States. Wisconsin, Indiana and Kansas follow in order.

The census report is incomplete in this, that it does not indicate clearly whether this is the result of extending clearings or absorption of small holdings. There is in all new counties a first tendency to increase the acreage of each farm, after that follows division and cutting up into smaller holding. Apparently both processes are now going on simultaneously, but the increased number of land owners in the country indicates the disappearance of small farms in some States is not caused by freezing out the small holders.

Farm Growth.

The Census Bureau furnishes the number of farms in nineteen Northern and fourteen Southern States in the year 1880, which we herewith publish, together with carefully-calculated tables, showing the increase in the number of farms-in the several decades since 1850, as follows:

sas heads the list of increased farm acreage since 1870, followed in order by Georgia, Missouri and Iowa. The most active growth of Illinois was between 1850 and 1860. The same is true of Wisconsin, Indiana and California. In all the Southern States the past decade was one of unexampled growth. In that period Alabama, Florida and Georgia more than doubled their farm acreage.

Two care were placed in a wet bag and kept out of water for over forty hours, and then, on being turned loose in Prospect Park lake, they wagged their tails about as if nothing had happened! Carp at this if you will; but it is a true fish story related at a late meeting of the Fish Culture Association.

Love and Money.

The charge made against money by the apostle, the preacher said, was an accident of the recklessness of the times. Pursuit of property was even more unscrupulous than at the present time. Wars were carried on for pillage, and the most conspicuous civil administrators made forcible levies of money on their provinces. The expression that love of money is a bad passion is full of meaning, and whoever will study deeply the habits of the period must conclude that the "accursed hunger" was the cause of unmeasured wrong as done by nations and individuals. While pondering on the intense utterance of St. Paul, along comes One broader and loftier, who says, "Son, go work in My vineyard;" but, as work involves pay or property, it must be that there is a love of money that is not the root of evil, but is the root of all good, and that it may be the root of all good, and that it may be the root of all evil or of all good. In the struggle for existence, which is the basis of labor, man wins more than existence, for he gradually ennobles his being. Money is one of the earliest and most universal and most powerful motives. Money is a general name for wants. It is thus the earliest motive of action, for man coming into this world wants a dinner before he wants a literature or a religion. He longs for clothes and shelter before he has any aspiration for music or pictures. The money which will purchase the food and clothing and shelter is thus the earliest and most universal of motives, and thus becomes a pioneer to lead men out of barbarism into the light of learn-out of barbarism into the light of learning and refinement. Before man was noble enough to be moved by patriotism, or by a thirst for knowledge, or by piety, or by a taste for the beautiful, he began to be affected by money, and to be waked out of his sleep by a consideration of the things it would buy. The rapid occupation and civilization of this continent are due, as much to the love continent are due as much to the love continent are due as much to the love of money as to any other single passion of the heart. The Daniel Boones of American history should be granted only a page of honor, for in some sense they were pioneers of religion and culture, but a man whose love of property was quite well satisfied with a coat and cap made of skips and with a trusty rifle cannot of skins and with a trusty rifle cannot make a wilderness glad or bloom. The passion for gold, which founded a Lead-ville or a Denver, or a San Francisco, or a Chicago, is ten thousand times more powerful for good than are the rifles of the Boones in the depths of the forest. Would that we could now measure this impulse and learn how long it should influence the individual career! The trade winds of the sea blow according to fixed laws, and the mariner in the Southern oceans knows what months of the year will bring him favorable or reverse gales; but we know not definitely how long this breeze of gain should waft upon the sea that mysterious wanderer, the human heart. All is obscure and indefinite. This is most certain, that the love of accumulating property fol-lows many too long, and offers ruin instead of salvation. As the ambition which is implanted in the mind to urge it onward along lawful paths may pass beyond its bounds and make an invader of peaceful states a devastating General. so this passion for material things may take possession of the whole soul and life of a man, and crush him as the serpents crushed the Laccoon, the priest of Latin fable.—Rev. David Swing.
