The noted McLean-Scripps libel suit was ended Tuesday evening, by the jury finding for the plaintiff, Dr, Mc-Lean of the State University, in all the points, and placing the damages at $20,000. This is another of the cases that go to prove that it is impossible to predict just what will be done by an American jury in a case, no matte what the evidence. This case was one where the Evening News copied an article that had been going the rounds of the Canadian papers, even in so prominent one as the Toronto Globe, for weeks before, accusing a certain Surgeon of improper infimacy with one of his lady patients. The News copied the article, and in an editorial referring to it, spoke of it as a case demanding investigation by the Board of Regents. Dr. McLean immediately called upon Mr. Scripps and demanded the publication of a statement for him, which he dictated, pronounced satis-.factory, and it was published. AFTER KILLING A MAN.

How Engineers Feel Over the Dead-ly Work of the Locomotives. Philadelphia Press.

The other night when the Western express arrived at the Broad street station from New York, Engineer Vandegrift discovered blood trickling down the spokes of the cow-catcher. He knew that some deadly work had been done, but was at a loss to tell when and where it had occurred. He told Harry Feaster, the conductor of the train, what he had discovered, and immediately word was telegraphed all along the line to make a search for any one who might have been struck by a train. Shortly after midnight the dead body of a man was found near Bridesburg Station with the head crushed in. In the meantime the conductor and the engineer had gone to their homes. Conductor Harry Feaster told a fellow-conductor the next day that he had passed a sleepless night, and the engincer reported a similar experience. An old engineer said to a Press reporter the other day: "The public, taking them collectively, think that an engineer is a hard-hearted wretch, and that he thinks no more of of runuing over a human being than he does of kill-ing a cow or a hog. I've heard people say that we become hardened to it and don't mind that we become hardened to it and don't mind it a bit; but that's a mistake, and a very grave one. I remember killing a man some five years ago, and I know that I couldn't sleep for a month, except by fits and starts. I used to have the most horrible nightmares that ever worried mortal man. "One night," continued the old engineer, as he shifted his quid of tobacco, "I had a hor-rible dream. That was an awful night. My wife woke me up. I had my hand on the foot-rail of the bed, just as if I had hold of the throttle, and the beads of perspiration were standing out all over my face. My wife told me how I had yelled, "For God's sake, jump!" and how it had wakened her; and then she sprang out of bed shaking with fear, and when shock me and I saw where I was, I told her of my dream. It's a mean thing to accuse us of not minding killing people," said the engineer, as he took his oil can and started to oil his engine.

as he took his oil can and started to oil his engine. Not long ago, Engineer Edward Knowles stood examining his engine in the Broad street station; he had just brought the "owl"-train from Jersey City. There was a busy scene all about him; two southern expresses and two western trains were standing in the station. It was just four o'clock in the morning, and a very sharp, biting, chilly dawn; baggage por-ters and men laden with great bundles of Phil-adelphia morning papers, fresh from the press, were hurrying to the trains. The electric light was spitting and hissing, and casting wierd, fantastical shapes and shadows about the en-gineer, who stood apparendly gazing at nothing. A Press reporter opened conversation with En-gineer Knowles, and after a good deal of talk he said, as he leaned with one foot resting on the hub of a driving-wheel: "Twe been running for ten years, and never met with a mishap until a short time ago, and then everything seemed to come all at once. I killed an oid peddler at Princeton Junction one day. He was crossing the track by the station in his old wagon. I think he must have been asleep, for he paid no attention to the whistlo when I blew, and of course he was killed ont-right. The old fellow was well-known in Tren-ton. Then I struck a man over in the mead-ows, and right on top of that I killed a man at Newark. Another engineer out in the West Philiadel-phia vard told a reporter he know of a few in-

Newark. Another engineer out in the West Philiadel-phia yard told a reporter he know of a few in-stances where engineers had gone crazy from killing people with their engines. "I knew a poor follow," said the engineer, "who was on the New Jersey Central. He killed a woman up by Clinton one night, and that night I heard him tell the train-master, Billy Smith, at Eliz-abeth, all about it. He seemed to grow insano right there, and had a queer look in his eye. A week after that he was put in a strait-jacket, and he's in an insane asylum to-day, nothing short of a maniac, and that happened nearly fifteen years ago."

"Two seats—two," and the Englishman held up two fingers and added, "in a warm place in hell—low down—" "I don't understand you," said Mr. Moss, looking through the window in bewilderment; "do I understand you to say—" "Yes, exactly—two seats in hell, and I'm in a hurry." YANKEE LAND.

Its Phenomenal Growth in Manufactures, Mechanism and Culture.

A Land Where Every Stranger With a New Idea Finds Audience,

And the Beautiful and Ornameutal Are Combined With the Useful.

George Alfred Townsend.

The United States is rapidly assuming new business conditions, and the extent of our manufactures, and the failure in some respects of the internal resources of the country, will soon compel attention to the foreign markets. The surglus of food and produce for export is not increasing relative to the population. The growth of wheat, and even corn, in the eastern and several western states has passed its prime, and the manufacturing towns are consumers of the food supplies very far to the west, while the butcheries in Chicago and farther on find that they must have holiday seasons. The export of beef to Europe is said to be less than it was a year or two ago.

The tendency of tariff protection is toward the consumption of the home supply. It is true that our gross exports, especially of grain, are still formidable; but nothing increases in the country like population-not only from the loins of the native people, but from an immigration such as no land over had. The tendency to move to America exists farther east than Europe itself. Not only are we draw. ing from Hungary, Russia and the Slavonian provinces of Turkey, from Portugal and Canada, from Cuba and the tropical states, but to some extent from the Mohammedan countries. The effect of shutting out the Chinese and not the Hindoos begins to be seen in small arrivals here of eastern merchants with rugs, and even eastern tramps, including a considerable num ber of gypsies. Our manufacturers already gorge our markets periodically. A few years ago no other than ingrain carnets were made here, and al ready the supplies of tapestry and fine carpet glut the markets, as is shown by the prices Carpets are frequently seen as low as forty cents a yard, even on Broadway, which formerly commanded $2 to $3 a yard here. Laborsaving machinery, of which the Americans have great acuteness, immediately attends the introduction of any manufacture. It was but introduction of any manufacture. It was but a faw years ago that silk was first woven in Patterson, N. J., and I am told that the in-crease of improvements in the wearing ma-chinery far surpasses the increase of the man-ufacture itself, so that the machmery is rap-ially thrown out and new devices adopted. The attention of a large part of the world is given to inventions. Inventors are far more common here than in any other country of the world at any period, and it has become a large business among men of capital to stimulate patent rights.

business among men of capital to stimulate patent rights. I made a trip recently through a very small, street in the money portion of the city, and found three buildings crammed with pattern makers, most of them working for men with offices in the vicinity of Wall street. The lat-est agony in patents is the storing of electricity in small piles of metal, covered, it is said, with a red oxide of lead. In this way electricity is collected, just as gas for burning purposes is stored in the gasometer; and thus terrific power, either for lighting or heating or me-chanics, is contained in these small ware-houses.

chanics, is contained in these small ware-houses. The sources of the mechanical talent of this conniry are not only native, but foreign. In-ventors like a society which adopts new sug-gestions and articles readily, and the tendency of democratic institutions here is to open every man's office to a stranger with a new idea. The very necessaries of life are with difficulty forced upon old communities. I have seen men in Laverpool who were two or three years introducing American starch, farina, and the products of corn, because trade does not relax, nor do the people yearn for novelties in old settled societies, where economy must be the law of life. Here novelties are rather pre-ferred to old standards, and consequently the mechanical talent of all countries, France per-haps excepted, looks toward America. The everage German mechanic, who never opened his mouth in the old world, gets an audience with a new idea here. with a new idea here.

The effort of our manufacturors under the

tro Narditti's child, was lading away; no lears no prayers could avail, not even Carissima's lovely voice. Carrissima's voice was hushed now; th maestro had no heart to take up his dearlyloved violin and to soothe his sorrow, as he had done many years ago, when his wife died and left this little one behind. Heaven had given him the divine gift of genius and had bidden him call aloud to the world, So Carissima and he had played together through sickness and sorrow and success, and through all the changing scenes of life they had been faithful friends.

life they had been faithful friends. They had just come back from the crowded hall; the people said that never before had the maestro played so beautifully, and that never before had the violn's voice sounded so mouraful and pathetic. Well, you see, they did not know the reason; but we do, for both were thinking of the little dying girl, and how could their thoughts be anything but sorrowful, or the outward ex-pression of those thoughts be anything but mouraful?

mourful? The father was weeping by his child's bed-side. But she said: "Do not weep; sing to me-sing me to sleep. for I am so weary, dear father, and the evening has been so long withnather, and the evening has been so fold with-out the." Then he roso and played to her; she closed her eyes and listened happily to Christina's voice. It sang a song without words — the music alone told the tale—of a pure young life, too pure for earth and therefore to be good and pure and true dwell. Yet it was hard to leave the dear ones behind, and to know that they would be desolate; and here the violin's voice sobbed and trembled as if from sorrow and the melody became sadder and softer, as if describing the very parting which was soon to take place; then the lingering notes died sway, and the maestro's hand was still. "Is that all?" murmured the child; "oh, play again!" out the again !" Onco more he raised his bow on high, and the air resounded with a psalm of triumph-the same melody, but no longer soft or sad, for the gates of that fair land were opened wide, and amid this jubilant strain the child had passed away with the Angel of Death.

GEN. CHEATHAM. His Story of the Bloody Battle of Franklin, Tenn.

The Most Desperate Hand to Hand Contest of the War.

A correspondent of The Cincinnati Enquirer recently visited the battle field of Franklin, Tennessee, in company with Gen. Chestham who commanded a Confederate corps in the action of the 30th of November, 1864. Gen.

Cheatham said: "I had the largest corps in that army-some thing less than nine thousand men. Hood's lisposition of his forces for that light was: The corps I was directing on the left and center, Stewart's corps on my right, and Stephen D. Lee's corps in reserve. My dis-position was: Gen. Bate on the extreme left, Gen. John C. Brown with my old division on The Value of Willow Wood. the left of the Columbia pike, with his right Popular Science Monthly. On account of its comparative incombustiresting on that road, Cleburne on the right of the same pike, with his left resting on it. As Gen. Bate had a long road around to the left,I waited some time after he started before giving the order to advance. Finally the line moved forward. Brown and Cleburne were to stop as they reached the open fields at the foot of Wiustead's hill. I rode forward to its summit as they moved, and established my headquarters there, and waited for the troops to ass over."

feet in circumference, and extends its branches fifty feet in every direction. Tradition says it was brought from Connecticnt in 1807 by a traveler, who used it as a riding switch. The Hon, Jesse W. Fell, in giving an account of ex-periments in tree planting on an extensive scale in Illinois, says: "Were I called upon to designate one tree which, more than all others, I would recommend for general planting, I would say, unbesitatingly, it should be the white willow." Prof. Brewster says: "In England, where if is often fifty or sixty feet high in twenty years, there is no wood in greater demand than good willow. It is light, very tough, soft, takes a good finish, will bear more pounding and knocks than any other wood grown there, and is used for cricket bats, for floats to paddl-wheels of steamers, and brake blocks on car. It used extensively for turning, planking, coasting vessels' furniture, or. yokes, wooden logs, shoe lasts," etc. Fuller says: "It grow-eth incredibly fast, it being a by-word that the profit by willows will buy the ownier a horse before that by other trees will pay for a sad-dle." The basket willow, well cultivated, will yield a net income of $150 a year to the acre. "It was the grandest sight I over saw when our army marched over the hill and reached the open field at its base. Each division unfolded itself into a single line of battle with as much steadiness as if forming for dress parade," said ex-Governor Porter, who was in those days General Cheatham's chief of staff. He was looking over the hill from Winstead's Hill as he spoke, and seemed to recall the events of the day, and again pass them in re-view before his mind's eye. "As I look over this field to-day," he continued, "it seems as though I can almost witness the pageant over The Haskins Engine. again. The men were tired, hungry, footsore, ragged, and many of them barefooted, bu Gardner Governor. their spirit was admirable. Bear in mind that it was the first time the two divisions of Cheat. yield a net income of $150 s.year to the acre. On the whole, therefore, it would seem that the various kinds of willow, the economic value of which has been hitherto entirely overham's corps-Cleburne's and Brown's-had Utica Steam Gauge. met side by side in full view of each other in an open field, with the advantages for desper-ate work equally balanced between them. "Before moving our troops from Winsteal's III I had arranged with both Cleburne and brown, the two divisions under my eye, to rive them the word with a flag when to nove. When their lines swung into position they cor-rected their alignment and them faced toward me, waiting for the signal to advance. A moment of suspense to see that every thing was ready, then the flag dropped, and the line noved forward as steady as a clock. It was two miles and a quarter from the starting point o the main Federal line, and our advancing yolumn was in full view from Gen. Scholid's position and from the infranched line of the line troops at the Carter house nearly every foot of the way. The Federals could not fire upon it until it was within very close range. "Do they get along well together?" asked an-other bystander. "Yes-very well," said the keeper. "They are about the only pair in the garden that don't squabble together, more or less: in fact, the only pair at all, so far as I know, for even the turtle doves over in the bird-house occasionally pock at each other as fiercely as a couple of game cocks. Still, I'm sorry to say, that Mr. Rooney ain't as polite to his wife as he might be, and if she wasn't blessed with the temper of an angel—if there are any monkey angels—why, sometimes there 'would be war even in this cage." He then proceeded to give the chimpanzees their dinner, which consisted of soft boiled rice and sweet potatoes. Mr. Rooney politely waited until his wife was helped ("it took a good while to teach him that," said the keeper, afterward), and then took his own sitare, which he bolted in the most gluttonous fash-ion, and then calmly scoped in what was left of his wife's portion. This act of robbery the lady only repaid by a reproving look, and then elimbed to a high perch with hor hand-kerchief, and blew her nose violently, after which she laid down and went to sleep. "It would be impossible to describe this bat-tile, for it was fought in such close quarters, and the work was so exacting. upon both ar-mics, that there was not a second for hesita-tion and thought. From the moment Wagner's two brigades got behind the main line, so that they could shoot without killing their own men, the Union troops poured a most destruc-tive fire into our ranks. Gen. Brown, on the left of the pike, from the direction in which we were advancing, carried a portion of the first line of earthworks in the first charge, and held his advantage to the last. He also pushed the whole of his line right up against the Federal works, and so intrenched him-self that the fighting men were so close together that they could reach across from one line to the other. Brown's division suffered termibly. He gained position and held it under the most trying circumstances." Cor's position was naturally a strong one, and he added to its strengt by taking advan-tage of every point in building his earthworks. The line which Brown struck sloped quite sharply to the left from the dotto gin around beyond the Carter house. The earthworks on the right-hand side of the pike, as he ap-proached, were so built that the force in it could enflade his whole line as it reached the Federal position on the left of the pike. As Brown charged it a terrible enflading fire from these works was poured into his mon. This is the first time I have visited this battle-field since the fight took place, and I have talked more of the events of the war to-day than during all the past fifteen years. I have never read a true story this battle. It will be hard to write one. I should have added, to what I said about a visit to the field next morning at daybreak that we buried the dead, cared for the wounded men of both sides as best we could, and then moved on to the battle at Nashville."

The Continent.

The following report of a trial in a North Oarolina court is condensed from a somewhat lengthy account published in local papers: In the mountain region of the state a man named John Foster was recently tried for assault and battery upon the person of William Truitt. The first witness was a one-eyed, rough-bearded man. He was lame. He lost his missing eye in a fight. This was his first appearance in a court-house, although he ooked to be some sixty years of age. There seems to have been an irreverent admixture of of the sacred and profane in the make-up of his name, which was Jeremiah Buster. As he stood amid the crowd a close observer might have soon have discovered that the whole scene was new to him. When the prosecuting attorney called him to the witnessstand he limped around the railing of the bar and took his seat on the stand. He gazed around him with a bewildered air, yet there was that in his demeanor which showed that he had not parted altogether with the self-assertion and independence characteristic of the dwellers in the mountains. He took in as much of the situation, perhaps, as a one-eyed man could be reasonably expected to do on his man could be reasonably expected to do on his first appearance on the scene. Prosecating Attorney.—"What is your name?" Witness (ejecting a stream of tobacco juice on the floor).—"Jeremiah Buster, 'squire. They ginerally call me Jerry, for short." Prosecating Attorney.—"Well, Mr. Buster.—" Witness.—"Now, 'squire don't call me Mr. Buster, ef you please. He hoped the court would not send witness to jail, at least at that time, as he was the only person by whom the state could prove the offense charged against the defendant in the indict-ment, and the trial would, therefore be sus-pended. The court replied; "If the witness knew no better it was time he was learning, and he could not be broken too soon of a bad habit, if it had obtained such control over him as to cause him to violate all propriety. District Attorney—"That is all true, your honor, but if the witness is sent to jail now I shall be compelled to enter a nolle prosequi in the case and the trial must be suspended as this is my only witness." double stimulation of the tartif and machinery must be toward a re-opening of our foreign commerce. Large interests in the interior of the country have ceased to be reliable. The mines in Nevada, for instance, poured out for twenty years or more a supply of gold and sil-ver that had no parallel; but every effort made to discover similar deposits has been unsue ceaseful. The lumber interests in this country, though still large, begins to be a source of an noyance to us from its decline: and the time is close at hand when manufacturers must re-ad as house-building material. The element that once had no position and was not a consumer of any versatilities now in the consuming class. The growth taste has extended with wages to the furth, isles and provinces, and the Americans have great advantage in such markets by their th. oughly democratic education. The designs calleos, for instance, introduced here throu-the various small schools of design in t-country, were found in India to be immediat ly acceptable to the improved grade of lat while the old standards of design, unchan from year to year in England, were rejected. When the foremost speculat-in the country goes around the world, it may be inferred that he is looking for other worlds be interved that he is looking for other worlds to conquer. The jealousy of the mechanical class in this country of foreign competition on our soil is another proof that these frequent gluis in the manufacturing business are seek-ing outlet and correction. Europe, as a thing to look at, is antiquated with a large portion of our traveling public, who are now directing their attention to other countries—as India Africa and Asia. Africa and Asia

Distance is in itself a great protection in America, and this is why Ohio and Indians are, able to compete with New England, having food supplies on the spot and distance in their favor.

England, having food supplies on the spot and distance in their favor. Necessity is only one part of the manufac-tures. Improvement and tasts are enormous stimulators. Through public information, reading and social intercourse the northern belt of the United states has been transformed within the past ten years, and the simple square parlors of old times, with a few stiff portraits will no longer do. The cultivation of home has become general, and design is in re-quest even more than literature. A booksel-ler lately told me that what is called Americana --or old books on American subjects-had been a drug in the market for several years; and, now said he, it is the dearest thing in the country. Men aspire to own something in-dicative of taste, and go into specialties for recreation and self-dignity; while the women, who have more and better homes in this country than elsewhere, have learned to orna-ment them and this tase for ornamentation has gone into the clubs, and even into the bar-rooms. The Sum Total.

"E. A." in Cincinnati Commercial Gazette. Soon after the war, it is said, there was a reconstruction meeting down south. All were in favor of beginning over again. A Union sol-dier a Confederate soldier and an ex-slave were appointed a committee to draft resolutions. They retired to a group of trees, debated sev-oral hours, and then brought in the following as the sum total of their labors: "Resolved, That everybody shall have a fair

Richard Wagner was undoubtedly the great est composer of modern times. He was probably the most original genius who ever married music to words. According to Wagner, the composer should also write the libretto. No composer should also write the libretto. No mere playwriter, he said, could interpret the inspiration of the musician, while the latter, of course, could not degrade himself by giving musical forms to the inventions of the opera. He preferred harmony to melody. Indeed in his latter works there is very little that suggests tune. There is a world of weird and wonder-ful sounds by which he interpreted emotion, but mere melody was absent. Wagner is greatly indebted to the half mad King of Ba-varia, whose purse has been at the disposal of the great composer. The latter has been able to produce his operas without regard to cost, and the musical world has been the gainer by this marriage of madness and music.

Adaptation. Phrenological Journal.

We are told often enough by a certain class of practical observers, that success depends chiefly upon industry and perseverance, and we are ready to admit that these qualities are prime factors in the equation of individual prosperity, but precedent in importance, and the key to the final result, is adaptation. the key to the final result, is adaptation. Seven out of every ten men whose industry and fidelity in their calling as mechanics, store-keepers, lawyers, literaly men, etc., etc., can-not be questioned, and who are dependent en-tirely upon their own efforts for support, are to be rated as unsuccessful, and though the practical observer above mentioned may be ready with a hypothesis to account for their failure, what they may allege can be summed up in the one bhrase, gud of place. up in the one phrase, out of place.
