A Romance of the Rail.

BY A. T. S.

CHAPTER I.

It was at Toulon Railway Station Why I was there, or where I was going I don't exactly remember, so much having happened since, and I, at the time, having no reason to go one place more than to another. The express train from Paris had just come in. She was standing a little aside, just out of the crowd and bustle, looking on, scanning every face as it passed and repassed, mine among others, and, as I fancied, with more interest than others. Her face was very pale, and her eyes were anxious, she looked calm and self-possessed. By-and-by, I saw her speak to an elderly woman, who stood near. She received I fancied, a hurried, not over-courteous answer, for I saw a flush rise to her face as she turned away. By this time the platform was almost clear. Such passengers as were going on had departed to refresh themselves; others had gone to their resting places. The railway officials began to regard this solitary figure curiously.

Raising my hat, speaking to her in French. I ventured to ask if could be in any way of any service to her. A shade of perplexity or disappointment crossed her face when I thus addressed her. She answered, in better French than mine: - "I was to have been met here, but I see nobody. I am disappointed. I

I must wait here." Again lifting my hat, left her, but only to pace the platform and think about her. As the minutes passed by I thought she looked paler and paler. At last, as I approached her nearer than in my other turns, she came a few steps towards me. "Will you be so kind-" she began in English; than correcting herself, she spoke French. I smiled. "I am English, as you are." "Oh, I am so glad!" she said, quite childishly. Then she added, "Will you tell me what to do? I am come direct from London. I am going to my brother, who is ill in Rome. Some one was to have met me at Toulin, and know nothing about the route beyond this."

'Were you to go by land?' "Yes; my brother forbade me to travel by water. Sea traveling halfkilled him, and he won't let me try it." "Well, if you wanted to go by land, and quickly, you ought to have gone by Chambery across Mont Cenis by Susa, Turin, Milan—"

She turned so pale that I paused. she looked about for a resting place. I gave her my arm, led her to the waiting-room, got her a glass of water and cup of coffee, begging her to drink the latter. She obeyed me, and as soon

She kept her hand, and her handerchief in it, and face turned toward the window as much as possible. I began to hope she would fall asleep. I believe I myself did fall asleep for a few moments. By-and-by I was aroused by the falling of a book from my hand.

When I opened my eyes I found my opposite neighbor's fixed upon me with a look of waiting for the opportunity of addressing me. She had left off crying then, but she was looking very wan and ill. She had her purse open in her hand. "Shall I have money enough?" she asked me, holding it towards me, when I gave signs of being fully awake. I took the little poorly-furnished in my was confident that her lips formed the werds: "Thank God."

Somehow, I was more touched than I could have told reason for by this. Two old ladies and one old gentleman were nodding in another compartment of the carriage. For a long time I did not stir hand or foot or look at my neighbor, hoping that, her mind more at ease, she might catch the infection of her drowsiness. She did. When I did venture to look at her she was leant back in the angle of the cushions. The light of the carriage-lamp—it had grown dusky now-slanted down from the bright hair, threw a shadow of long lashes on the pale cheek, fell on the pretty round white throat; but it did not look easeful sleep - the mouth retained lines of anxiety and depression.

Contemplating the graceful little figure before me, I fell into musing as to who she was. From a ticket affix ed to her little bag, I discovered that her name was not unfamiliar to me, and yet the familiarity of it carried me thinking about the matter, it all came to me. Hawtree was the name of an old drawing-master of mine: Hawtree was a name that for two or three years I had seen in the Royal Academy's catalogue as the painter of pictures which had struck my fancy-mostly scenes in the country around Rome, cartle and peasants of the campagna. For the sake of the name as much as for the pictures themselves, I had purchased some two or three, wondering if that young artist, Hawtree, was my young school-fellow, Hawtree. now determined that the two should certainly be one, and that one the brother of my little companion, who must as certainly be the "Sister Ruth" of whom he had often talked-a baby girl then, and the object of his almost idotatrous affection.

While she slept, I furbished up my memory as to all matters regarding the two Hawtrees, father and son; and at length I was anxious the tired little sleeper should awake, quite resolved that Frank Hawtree, her brother, was

"You needn't be afraid—it's not too strong; it will do you good. I'm a sort of a doctor. She took it with a grateful, confiding look and drank it. "You are better now?" I said, as I jumped into the carriage.

"Oh, yes, thank you! I had been dreaming painfully of Frank, my broth-"I have made a very painful discovery while you were asleep, Miss Hawmired, is called Frank Hawtree. Now. don't tell me you are not the 'little sister Ruth' he used to talk so much about."

"I am only too glad and proud to tell you that I am." "You don't ask who I am, or seen surprised at my discovery.' "No," she answered, slightly smiling; I knew before." "Knew me?"

"Frank used to talk to me about you nough to make me remember the name very well; and while you were walking up and down the platform at Toulon I read your name upon your luggage."
"But how did you come to associate

The mistress of one of the Nice hotels was well and favorbly known to me. I committed Miss Hawtree to her care, explaining in a few words, the object of her journey. Then I or-dered—and I remember I took great pains with its selection—a little din-ner for one, of soup, gaine, cutlets, sweets, choice fruit, and coffee, to be served as soon as possible to No. 99; and after I had done that I went about

I dined at a hotel close to the diligence office, looking towards the windows of the house where I had left Miss Hawtree and wondered dreamily what would come of this strange adventure of mine. I was sorry she had seen my name, otherwise I could have laid the fluttering unction to my soul that it was my face which had inspired her with confidence. But what on earth could she have done had I not been

I was at tle her account before she should be fast to be taken to her in her room, and sent a pencilled message to her, I had arranged everything.
I shall not easily forget the earnest-

As he was about starting for home, having duly authorized the two hearts to heat as one, a coin was placed in his hand. He dropped it into his pocket and rode away. When he got home he looked at it, and lol it was an old-fashioned copper cent. The Howell compilation job has been passed by both branches of the legislature, and it remains to be seen whether Gov. Begole will have backbone enough to put his veto to it.

The New York Legislature proposes to inaugurate the system of pauper labor in that State. This plan well established and there will be a perceptible falling off in the crop of paupers.

After the first day of this month the tax on tobacco is eight cents a pound instead of sixteen, as heretofore. Ten cent plugs should cost less now, but probably will not.

- All but four of the Democratic members of the Legislature joined in the clamor to induce the Governor to undo the work of approving the local option law. The act is now in the hands of the Secretary of State, and is a full fledged law.

A Democratic delegation, headed by O. M. Barnes and Wm. P. Wells, called upon Gov. Begole to induce him to erase his signature from the local option law, but he had just stamina to

The Connecticut legislature has taken the pardoning power out of the Governor's hands, by forming a pardoning committee, consisting of the Governor, one Judge of the Supreme Court, and four members of the Legis-

There still continues considerable objection to the local option law, unwittingly passed by the legislature. The only good reason for this, how ever, is that the law applies only to a few villages that are incorporated under the general incorporation act, and not to villages and cities incorporated under special charter, where the need of such an act is most felt. If the form of our liquor law is to be that of local option, it should be such as will be universal in its application.

The New York and Brooklyn bridge which has been in course of construc tion for sixteen years, at an expense of $15,000,000, will be opened to the public, May 25. This enormous structure is 1,595 feet long between the towers, 3.500 feet between the anchorages, and 5,989 feet from one end to the other. The two towers are each 274 feet high, which leaves a clearance of 135 feet under the bridge at the center, and the width of the structure is 85 feet; the outsides are used for carriage ways, in the center are two tracks for streetcars, over which is the walk for foot passengers.

Indiana is blessed with more economical laws than Michigan. In Michigan, if any man commits a punishable crime, the State pays the officer well for pursuing the culprit until he is caught and brought to justice, and the consequence is, when a Michigan officer gets after one of "the boys" he brings him in, but such work is expensive: In Indiana, in cases where the criminal leaves the county or State, the officer who follows him does so at his own expense, unless the injured party foots the bill. Besides being much cheaper, it is not so bad on the rough as the Michigan way.

The bill to submit to the people the prohibitory amendment has been killed in the House, and will not come before the people during the life of the present legislature. The vote stood, yeas, 42 Republicans, 14 Democrats; nays, 14 Republicans, 22 Democrats. There is no good excuse for the 14 Republicans who voted against this bill to go before their constituents with. The people have asked for an opportunity to vote on this question; by the strongest petition ever laid before a legislature, and the Republicans have by every platform expressed a desire for the submission of that question, publican members to do. As is usual in such cases, the vacancy caused by the resignation of Commissioner Raum finds numerous aspirants. A number of them are among the subordinates of the department, and in accordance with the new civil service ideas the new commissioner should come from their number. If the civil service rule is not followed it is quite uncertain where the plum will

The decrease of the national debt during the month of April was $2,205,-615. This is the smallest decrease made in the debt for any single month for a number of years. The receipts of the government from all sources, for April 1883 was $$,804,070 less than for April 1882. These are of the immediate effects of the work of Congress in tinkering with the tariff laws at the last session, due in part to the unsettled state of business, caused by the uncertainty of the final action of con gress and in part to the reductions made in the percentage of collection on numerous articles. During the present month there are to be paid pension claim to the amount of $15,000,000 and overdue bonds amounting to nearly ten millions of dollars. > Modest, retiring, and blushing Lansing is reaching for a legislative appropriation of $1,500 for its fire department, on the ground that the department may be called out to squeich a fire in some of the state property. The House of Representatives have already passed the bill. It will now be in order for Kalamazoo, Coldwater, Jackson, Ionia, Adrian, Flint, Pontiac and Traverse City, which also are so unfortunate as to have state institutions located within their borders, to send in their appropriation bills. If the state will insist on forcing its public buildings upon an unwilling city, it certainly ought to make heavy appropriations for extinguishing any contingent fire.
> —St. Johns Republican.

Of the members of the present Legislature 76 per cent. of the Republicans, and 75 per cent. of the Greenbackers were in favor of giving the people an opportunity to vote on the question of prohibition; but 83 per cent. of the Democrats said the people cannot be trusted. The democracy is the recognized mouth-piece of the whisky alliance.—Lansing Republican.

Future Life.

The future life of travelers on this terrestrial sphere is destined to be a nappy one when their paths lie between Buchanan and the Eastern cities, if elegance and luxury in the appointments of the principal highway will aid toward that end.

The Michigan Central Railroad has always held a foremost place amongst the lines between the west and the Atlantic seaboard, and the latest addition to their accommodations in the shape of four new Dining Cars will greatly strengthen its position.

These new cars are incomparable for beauty of design and selectness of adornments, all the elegancies of art having been exhausted to produce the most desirable effect. That the end has been gained, goes without saying, and they stand to-day as far in advance of other Dining Cars as the first Dining Cars were in advance of the lunch counters at wayside stations. The cuisine is quite on a par with the finish of the cars, and all that may minister to the nourishment of the body, or tickle the palate of the most discriminating epicures, will be found therein.

They are certainly a great attraction to the Michigan Central line, and doubtless the Company will reap the hoped for harvest of increased patronage from the traveling public.

Messrs. Wood & Samson:

for it saves all the grain,

I am perfectly satisfied with the Minneapolis Harvester and Twine Binder I purchased of you last season. After I got it learned I had no trouble in managing it, although it is the first one I ever run. I think it is a light draft machine as my team had no trouble in handling it, and I cut with it where I thought it impossible for a Binder to run on account of hills, and I think it is a durable JOEL HARTLINE.

MESSRS. WOOD & SAMSON: The Minneapolis Twine Binder I bought of you works like a daisy. I harvested 130 acres of wheat and 30 acres of oats without trouble or delay. I believe it to be the "bull of the woods."

I cut 153 acres of grain, averaging about 20 acres a day. I am familiar with the working of a number of different Binders, and I have no hesitation in giving the Minneapolis a decided preference over all

MESSRS. WOOD & SAMSON: GENTS: Being in want of a Harvester, and after careful examination of the various Twine Binders used in this section of the country, concluded to try a Minneapolis, and after due trial find my selection was well made, as the Machine fills the bill in every respect. It runs light, binds well, making uniform bundles that do not untie in stacking. It is the only machine that has the packer trip which prevents the Binder from clogging whatever the condition of the grain. I cut my harvest of 80 acres in five days, with the ease never before accomplished. cannot say too much for the Machine, and would recommend all farmers in need of a Binder to get a Minneapolis.

MESSRS. WOOD & SAMSON: GENTLEMEN: I did all my harvesting with the help of a boy. Cut 43 acres and did not have a bundle come untied. Have cut all day and did not miss a bundle. I would not take $500 for my Binder if I could not get another like it. Would say to farmers in need of a Binder, get a Minneapolis and save labor, time and money.

Messrs. Wood & Samson: The Minneapolis Twine Binder bought of you last year met my expectations fully. Indeed I was delighted with it. It proved to be of much lighter draft than I thought any machine could be that did so much work, cutting nearly 7 feet, elevating and binding in the most perfect manner. Cut my level fields with two horses and my sandy and hilly fields with three horses with ease. The women folks were also loud in its praise, not having any more folks to cook for through harvest than any other season of the year. An Explanation.

BERRIEN SPRINGS, April 27, 1883. ED. RECORD, Sir:-I see by your selection of the article from a Cleveland paper, or one of them, it gave the impression that Mr. Rogan died an object of charity, which was not the case, as they were to pay $15 per week for his being there. Either of the others would have explained itself. They were preparing to move when he was taken sick, two weeks before his death. He was taken violently sick with inflammatory rheumatism, heart and stomach both threatened when first attacked, but had so far recovered that the doctor thought he would be out in three or four days; but if they wanted to move it would not hurt him to go over to the hospital for a few days, until his rooms were settled. His wife not satisfied with the counsel of their own physician alone, called in another one, and they both agreed there was no danger that the change would not hurt him; and as he was very anxious to get well as fast as possible, was anxious to go. They procured an ambulance, put his own bed into it, and his physician sat with bis hand on his pulse all theway (only a little distance) and said there was no change. This was at 2 P.M. He said he felt very comfortable-had not felt so well in two weeks. He took his beef tea and milk as usual, until five o'clock, he was a little restless. His nurse called in the hospital physician to see if she should give a powder, but he said no, as his own physician would be in at six, but she might bathe his face and hands, which she did, and he said he felt better, until near six o'clock, when usual, which only lasted a few minor family, and only four hours stay in the hospital. It was a terrible blow to the community as well as his family, for he was very popular, as the Cleveland Herald says, and most esteemed by those who knew him best, and by none more than railroad men with whom he came in contact.

Respectfully, MRS. H. J. HOWE.

Obituary. Died, in this village April 21, 1883, Mrs. Carrie Pardee Hall, aged 28 years, 9 months and 25 days.

The subject of this notice was married to Mr. Le VantO. Hall, of this place, the 28th of September, 1882, a little over six months ago. Thus quickly has death dore his work; separating husband and wife, mother and daughter, brothers and sisters from a sister beloved. This one, after a few months of struggle with pain and disease, at times hoping to recover her health, but always hoping against hope, finally, worn, weary and listlessly passes thence to that land from whose bourne no traveler retums; leaving a large circle of mourning relatives and friends, whose lot it is to brave, for a brief period, the evils of this present life, until they, like her who has gone before, shall have done with the trials and conflicts of this incorstant world. May the blessing of Hin who is the source of all good, the Pather of all mercies, the God of love, overshadow all of the friends of the deceased, and finally give them of that full fruition in His everlasting Kingdon.

Work is again commenced on the Baptist church, under the charge of Jacob Myers.

| Niles Mirror.] A narrow escape from a terrible death accured last Saturday evening. Miss A. G. Hunter, of this city, accompanied by Mrs. Ella C. Cook, of Marshall, went to the residence of John Palmer, north of the Central railroad track, to see the remains of Wm. Bab cock. On their return, about 8:30, a train was backing up to drop off a car and they attempted to cross before it reached them. Mrs. Cook crossed, but Miss Hunter caught the heel of her shoe in a frog and fell directly across the track. A brakeman saw her and with all of his powers called to her to "get out of the way, off the track!" It was life or death in a moment. She saw the car was about to crush her to atoms and mustering all her strength she threw her hady on the north side of the track just in time to save her tricate herself. Soon a number of yard men gathered around her, released her foot, which she believed was crushed: the foot had escaped the truck intirely. but was severely wrenched, but apparently no broken bones. It will be weeks before she can use it. .

The Ypsilanti Sentinel asks the following pointed question: In the ovation to Professor Maclean, why was Mrs. Wardle forgotten? Dramatic justice should have placed her in the carriage with him. She had "suffered," she also was "vindicated," if he was. She ought at least to have honorable mention." But in every tragedy some victim must fall that the hero may triumph, and Mrs. Wardle can go and mourn with Elizabeth Tilton.

ONE HUNDRED TOWN LOTS FOR SALE CHEAP!

In Thresher's Addition to the Rapidly Growing Village of Benton Harbor, Michigan;

A village where there are better stores, large stock of goods and more business than in any other town in the Southwestern portion of the State, and while in 1870 there were but 652 inhabitants, and the disaster to the Peach trees was closely followed by the money panic of '73, there has been a steady and healthful growth every year, 'til we now have over 2,000 people in the corporation, and more than 6,000 in the township; and in the village the cost of the newlresidences and business blocks last season was over $300,00, which promises to be exceeded this year. The population will double the present number in a few years. The title to these lots is absolutely perfect. Every lot has an alley, or side street. The lots are large, and the streets are the broadest of any in town, and many of them command a fine view of Lake Michigan, the two rivers, the shipping, railway stations, St. Joseph, and the business portion of the town.

Lots Sold on Monthly Payments or on Long Time.

SPECIAL NOTICE!! After July 1st the prices will be advanced ten per cent. If you want a beautiful home, in a thriving city, convenient to the best schools, steamboat docks, the depots of the Chicago and West Michigan railway, and the Cincinnati, Wabash and Michigan road which terminates here; or if you wish to make A PERFECUL SAFE INVESTMENT, SURE TO RAPPOLY INCREASE IN VALUE, COME TO BENTON HARBOR, examine this property and BUY THESE LOTS!

REMEMBER THIS INPOSTANT FACT, namely: Contrary to what is true of nearly every other town there are but two ways for the expansion from the business portion of this promising young city, of the residence portion convenient to the business of the place, because the St. Joseph and Faw Paw rivers and the lake occupy the territory. In one direction the desirable lots, within convenient distances of business, are nearly all taken. In the remaining direction is embraced these lots now, for the first time, offered for sale. The day is close at hand when no desirable lots can be had except at inconvenient distances from the business center.

DON'T FORGET, that the nineteen Medicinal Springs at Col. Eastman's Park, and that are the wonder of the thousands who visit them, are within pleasant walking distance of these lots.

REFLECT UPON THE FACTS, That the healthful and mild climate of this lucious fruit-producing region, bordering the great lake, the deep waters of which so beautifully modify the climate here, both summer and winter; the certainty of large crops annually; the exceptional cheapness of fuel, timber and lumber; the immense water power here only awaiting capital to develope it; the unsurpassed transportation facilities—Lake Michigan don't consolidate or pool its earnings with any competitor—insure the development and growth of new manufactories, and the success of the important industries already established, far in advance of those in less favored sections of the country; and that being, as Benton Rarbor is, within a few hours of Chicago, which is reached with no loss of business hours, at a cost of only $1.00, and while passengers are enjoying a refreshing sleep, is an advantage to business men and manufacturers of the highest importance.

The Professor's Story

J. M. Whitman in Springfield Republican. Taking tea the other evening with an old acquaintance, now professor in a New England college, the conversation recalled some of the friends of our younger days, and he surprised me with this remark: "A woman's sympathies lie nearer heart than her love, unless her love is born of them." But he surprised me more by the story he told to prove it.

I guess it was seven years, he said, that our chair of astronomy remained vacant. You knew of Dr. Merdon. It was justly that the world finally gave him fame. Well, after his death the trustees were at less to fill his place. A weak man would have been insufferable

Do you remember his family? Charming wife and daughter. They spent several years abroad after his death, and when they returned, notwithstanding that the widow still wore mourning, the number of our little social events was doubled. The daughter had a string of young millionsires after her con stantly. Female society, perhaps you know wasn't unlimited, and it was with a foundation of truth that the fellows grimly joked about calling on the girls their fathers had courted before them. Charlotte Mordon was as fascinating a girl as her mother had been, so said the old folks, and it was to her that young Prof. Lutz quoted from Horace, "Oh daughter, more beautiful than thy beautiful mother!" when he brought down on himself the ridicule of the mountain-day party. Yes, she could have had her pick from a dozen very rich boys, and I think she would have taken it, too, if she hadn't discovered that her mother was trying to influence her in their favor. At the senior party that year, Charlotte held her court, as she did everywhere. She was surrounded, I remomber, by the rich fellows of Charlie Elliott's set. Elliott was happy that night. Charlotte had been unusually gracious and her mother had made her favor clearer

Over near the door sat the last man to be expected at a president's party, Brent Seymour. He was senior the year before, and taking postgraduate study at the observatory Merdon had built shortly before his death-a town boy, who supported his mother and worked his way ough college, not often seen in society, and his ill-fitting clothes and embarrassed manner attested it. Elliott, looking around the room for a subject for his next brilliant remark to Miss Merdon, caught sight of him.

"Ed," said he, turning to his chum, "I tell you what will be great sport. Bring Seymour up and formally present him to Miss Merdon. It will confuse him. Helwon't know what to do, and thera'll be a dence of a scene." The chum complied and in a moment had the reluctant Seymour by the arm. The scene that followed must have been all that Elliott desired. For a moment the poor student stood before the belle. It was not unlike the tableau of the beggar and the princess. Her easy attitude constrasted strangely with his painful awkwardness. Elliott had not miscale 'ated. The effect was immediate. All eyes were turned toward the couple and a smile went turned toward the couple and a smile went around.

Charlotte Merdon saw it, and her cheeks flamed. She had divined the heartless joke. To the surprise of those about her she begged Seymour to be seated—insisted that he should be seated. Then she tried to draw him into the conversation. But it was impossible. Embarrassment seemed to have driven his wits away. Only one remark he ventured. Glancing at a portrait on the wall, he stammered out, "That's a good picture of the president." The portrait was one taken thirty years before and was anything but a good likeness of the president as he then he appeared. The unfortunate remark caused another smile. Elliott was delighted. His joke was a splendid success. Poor Seymour twisted about in his chair and hung his head. His discomfiture was complete.

Miss Merdon took a deliberate look at the miss mercon took a demorate look at the picture, and did not smile. "Yes," she said, "it is called a very good likeness of him just after graduation. Have you seen he president's flowers, Mr. Seymour? Let me show them to no." them to you."
Rising, and excusing herself, she led the Rising, and excusing herself, she led the young man into the greenhouse, adjoining the parlor.

"The devil!" said Elliott. "I didn't look for anything like tnat."

Seymour, rescued in this way from his trying ordeal, hardly knew what to say, or do. He felt as if a millstone had been't taken' from his neck. The pain and the manner of relief worked strangely on his sensitive nature. He felt that he was in great debt to his companion. He wanted to kiss the hem of her garment. He wanted to cry. He knew he was feeling and acting like a fool. He expected that he should make a greater fool of himself than in the parlor. But some way he didn't care. He had lost all fear of the beautiful girl. Her act of mercy had brought her nearer than years of acquaintance could. He talked rapidly of the flowers, for he knew of them, and Charlotte listened—listened wondering why she cared to listen, little thinking that her sympathy had brought the awkward student nearer than he would have been had she known him half her life-time and never seen him in pain. So when he pointed out to her the observatory where he worked, the queerly shaped building that the campus on the hill, she wondered what it was that prompted her to beg him to take her there, to exact a promise from him that, on the very next evening, he would conduct her through the building, that had been built after her father's orders. She persuaded herself that it was a desire to see some manucripts of her father's which Seymour told her had been left there. Perhaps it was.

Notwithstanding her mother's mild remonstrance, the next evening found her with Brent Seymour in the telescope room of the observatory. The roof had been let down and she was watching the stars.

"I wonder if father often studied them from this room," she said.

"I wonder if father often studied them from this room," she said.

"Whenever the sky was clear."
"I wonder if he can see them now."
"No, I think that through some one of them he is looking at us." he is looking at us."

Far from science and astronomy, far, very far, from his scholarly stand-point, the man's childish reply had taken him, but it had carried him nearer the heart of the girl than he dreamed.

Mrs. Merdon's disapproval of her daughter's visit to the observatory with Seymour broadened into anger as his calls were repeated, and repeated often. An intimacy grew between the young people that even to themselves, they did not undertake to explain. The girl's friendship had opened a new world to the hard-worked student. Had he known more of life, he would have known that he was falling in love. Over the other a secret was steading as steadily as comes over us the morning. A month had passed since the senior party. The two sat again in the telescope room. She seemed to be studying the stars.

"And do you remember," she was asking, "that, that evening, you thought through some one of them father was looking at us?"

"Yes."

"Do you supposs he can see us now?"

"Yes."
"Do you suppose he can see us now?"
"Yes" (in a surprised way.)
"Then" (hesitatingly) "do you think he is glad—is glad to see us together?"
"Won't you" (the voice was very husky)—"won't you answer for me?"
"Yes," she said, in a voice clear as a harp chord, "I know he is."
Seymour wondered if his senses were giving way. He hardly knew what followed. He meant to ask—he tried to ask if she didn't think her father would be glad to see them always together. Somehow that seemed long and heavy and he couldn't make the words come. He had a choking sensation in his throat hid his eyes were blinded with tears. He felt just as he had in the greenhouse the night of the senior party. He wanted to kiss the hem of her garment. He felt that he was in debt' her and falling deeper in debt every moment. He knew he was making a fool of himself, but he didn't care. He was the hap-in debt's her and falling deeper in debt every moment. He knew he was making a fool of himself, but he didn't care. He was the happiest fool that moment in God's happy world, "You are just as much mine," she said at last, her hands resting upon his head, which some way or other had found a place in her lap—"you are just as much mine as if I had not done all the wooling myself."

The Merdon mansion had never seen such a storm as followed Charlotte's avowal of her betrothal. Her mother insisted that she would never consent, never in the world, and the girl who had always honored her wishes above everything else was in distress.

"But you did not marry a rich man yourself, mother; why should you want me to?" she niged.

"I married a man who was great—whom everybody knew; why, if you were to marry the man, whoever he is, who will fill his chair, I should be happy forever, but this fellow,"—and her indignation almost overpowering her ashe left the room.

It was late in the evening when Charlotte stole upstairs. Passing her mother's room she saw that the door was partly open. She knew what it meant. Women, even among themselves, make their reconciliations gracefully, gradually. She pushed the door wide open, as her mother had intended she should, and wont in. The lady sat by her writing-table; her head rested on her hand, and she was evidently sleeping. A little pile of letters lay before her, a picture beside them. Tears had dropped upon the letters and the picture showed the stains of tears. Charlotte looked at the picture closely. The face was familiar. Surely she had seen it before. But where? She could not place it among her acquantances. Whose fixe was it? She started. A broken, uncertain voice seemed to asy, "That's a good picture of the president." Her lover's awkward remark at the party, the portrait on the wall, the picture that her mother cried over. It was labely dear and all dear to the wall of the president." ture of the president." Her lover's awkward remark at the party, the portrait on the wall, the picture that her mother cried over. It was all clear, very clear, and she didn't care to read the open letter by the picture.

"My poor, dear mother!" she thought, as, without awakening her, she glided to her own room, carrying the greatest secret of her lifetime, says one.

It was after midnight when Mrs. Merdon awate. She had hoped her daughter would come in. She wanted to tell her that she was no longer angry. She had been carried back over parts of her own life and she wanted to tell Charlotte that after all she must follow the voice of her heart, that her own experience had taught her so. She was almost ready to confess to her that although she had married a man who was great, whom everybody knew, she no no no she could not tell her daughter that—she could not tell lier that. Very slowly she put away the letters and the picture, say-ing, "Yes, I loved him then, and, God forgive ing, "Yes, I loved him then, and God forgive me, I have loved him ever since."

At noon the next day a servant brought a note to the president's study: "Charlotte E. Merdon requests the pleasure of a few moments' private conversation."

"I wonder what Addio Mather's daughter wants of me," thought the old bachelor as he passed down into the reception room. "How the girl brings her to my mind!"

In a diguified way that even surprised herself Charlotte began: "I understand that the trustees have given you appointing power regarding the professorship which my father's death made vacant."

"Yes."

"Yes."
"Have you made any provision yet?" "I have a candidate to present."

"I have a candidate! Who is it?"

"Brent Seymour."

"Brent Seymour, "

Charlotte's intimacy with Seymour was not inknown to the president, but this distounded him.

"It is impossible," he said; "I do not see how you can ask it, how you can think it."
"Would you not do much to bring to you one you loved?" she asked boldly.
A peculiar light came into the gray eyes behind the steel bowed spectacles.
"Yes."

"Yes."
"How much?"
"Anything."
"Would you give a professorship?"
The peculiar light increased. It was almost

"Yes".

"Will you give me this professorship, if I bring to you one you love?"

The gray eyes were now fairly a flame. She was understood. He sprang to his feet. Age seemed to fall from him like a scale.

"Girl, what do you mean?", he shouted.

"That she loves you all the time."

There was a base ball match on the college grounds, but it was not the topic of the afternoon. A report that Brent Seymour had been appointed to the chair of astronomy had sent half the college to his house to congratulate him. They could not begin to get inside, so he stood out in the yard and shook hands with them one by one.

so he stood out in the yard and shook hands with them one by one.

In the early evening a passing student saw an unusual visitor go up the path to the Merdon mansion. It was the gray-haired president Mrs. Merdon opened the door herself, and the student couldn't help seeing the look of astonishment on her face, and that she tottered as she stepped back into the hall; couldn't help hearing, in tones that he will never forget, two exclamations, "Addie!" "Frank?" and the door closed.

clamations, "Addie!" "Frank?" and the door closed.

When Seymour and Charlotte came in from their evening walk they heard voices in the sitting room, and Seymour was speechless with astonishment as he recognized the president's voice: "I am glad that you rejected me once, for my joy is made wonderful by years of darkness."

Catching her lover's hand Charlotte stepped with him into the room.

"Mother," she said, "if you haven't got too much happiness already,"—looking at the venerable man who did not release the hand he was holding—"remember you promised to be happy forever if I should marry the man who will fill my father's chair. Let me present him."

My host ceased. His story was evidently done, and as he drew back from the table he said: "The only thing fictitious about it is the name I have given the poor student." "But," I asked, "did Charlotte ever tell her mother of the visit she made to her chamber when she was asleep at her writing-desk?" "You may ask her," he said, smiling. "She sits at the head of the table." Absorbed in the story, I had not noticed that my hostess was concealing her blushes behind the tea urn.

POWER FROM THE SUN.

An Attempt in California to Use Solar Engines on a Large Scale. San Francisco Evening Bulletin.

From time immemorial attempts have been made to utilize the direct rays of the sun as a motor for industrial purposes. During the last ten years considerable progress has been made by M. Muchot, a professor in the lyceum of Tours, France, which has arrested the attention of the French and Algerian governments and scientific societies, and Muchot has received from these high authorities golden medals, the decoration of the Legion of Honor, and subscriptions aggregating nearly 100,000 francs.

A company with a larger capital has just been formed in Paris for the purpose of manufacturing the solar machines invented by Prof. Muchot, and over 100 of the various applications are in actual use in different parts of the world, pumping water, cooking food, running small agricultural machines, &c. The apparoins consists of a conical reflector diameter, from which the solar rays are reflected upon a boiler three feet long and sixteen inches in diameter outside, enclosed in a glass cover, and placed vertically in the axis of the reflector. A battery of four such machines, it is claimed, gives three-horse power, the price of which is, at the shop in Paris, 10,000 francs, or $3,000.

francs, or $2,00.

Since our attention was called to the machines in France the information comes that a company composed of the best mechanics and engineers of California has been incorporated for the purpose of purchasing American patents for utilizing solar heat for industrial purposes, such as pumping water for irrigating and reclaiming lands, propelling all kinds all machinery, furnishing steam and hot water for canneries, cooking food, the manufacture of borax, distilling alcohol, drying fruit, the sublimation of sulphur, and the roasting of ores.

An examination of the American patents and An examination of the American patents and of the plans of the California company shows that the old sivis of conical reflectors and vertical boilers has been abundoned, and that the new apparatus, which the company has already commenced to construct, consists essentially in a reflector, cylindrical in form, having a parabolic cross-section, and being straight in longitudinal direction, in combination with a cylindrical heat receiver, or boiler, mounted on the axis of and parallel to the reflector, both reflector and boiler being placed horizontally or nearly so, and provided with suitable devices for setting machine in the proper position and causing it to follow the sun's apparent movement.

contally or nearly so, and provided with suitable devices for setting machine in the proper position and causing it to follow the sun's apparent movement.

It is confidently expected that fully five-horse power will be realized from 7a m. to 5p. m. It has been found that occasional passing clouds have no perceptible effect on the apparatus. All know that the sun generates immense quantities of heat. It has been demonstrated by Ericsson, Muchot, and other scientists that the heat of the sun, after absorption by our atmosphere, represents rather over one-horse power per square yard, and that we get more heat (other things being equal) on a day in winter than in summor, for the sun is nearest to us in our northern winter by soveral millions of miles.

There are millions of acres of the finest land in the world in the San Joaquin and other valleys of California and Arizona, which land needs to be "fickled with water to make it laugh with the harvest." Only a small part of this land can be irrigated by the usual methods, but water can exist in inexhaustible quantities in most localities at from ten to 100 feet from the surface. By driving a number of tube wells, say fifteen feet apart, and coupling them together at the tops and applying a sun engine, a supply of water can be obtained for irrigation and for cattle which would raise the value of the land from $2 to $5, its present price, to $30 and $60 per acre, and fill these valleys with a prosperous and happy population. This is a phase of the solar engine business which should commend itself to the owners of the large ranches in the interior valleys, where the conditions are most favorable for the development of this enterprise. We are not unmindful of the objection that the solar rays are sometimes interrupted by clouds, and that at best such an engine would be available only in the daytime, but we answer that in the summer time, during our rainless season, when their need would be greatest, the sky is seldom obscured by clouds, and the power of the engine contin Constitution of the Sun. In a paper presented to the French academy Comptes Rendus, xcvi., 136) Faye gives his reasons for believing that our sun and the other large self-luminous heavenly bodies have not yet arrived at either a solid or a liquid state, but are gaseous all the way to the centers. Otherwise, he says, the heat radiated from them would not be so quickly replaced by heat from within, and the surface, consequently, would soon abecome covered with a solid, non-luminous crust.

Cagniard-Latour has, however, proved by means of some very remarkable experiments that a gaseous mass can acquire the density of a liquid without changing its state of aggregation, provided both temperature and pressure are high enough at one time. If, then, the external strate of the solar atmosphere, where all matter is in an elementary or dissociated state, should cool sufficiently for the elements to enter into chemical combination, if the vapors of metallic calcium, magnesium, and silicium, mixed with oxygen there, on cooling should form clouds of lime, magnesiar and silicium, to the interior, where they would again be dissociated, while at the same time they would drive the hotter particles upward, so that an approximately uniform temperature would be maintained until the whole mass had gradually cooled to such an extent as to assume the liquid and afterward the solid state.

Exye bases his hypothesis on the spectroscopic observations of many years, and on Carrington's etudy of sun spots, which show that the currents are all on zones parallel to the equator, while there are none from the means of some very remarkable experiments that the currents are all on zones parales to the equator, while there are none from the equator toward the poie. Besides this, the flattening of the sun and the slow motion of sun spots near the poles are more easily ex-plained on this hypothesis of Faye's than on home hithorics. those hitherto in vogue.

AYER'S Cherry Pectoral.

No other complaints are so insidious in their attack as those affecting the throat and lungs; none so trifled with by the majority of sufferers. The ordinary cough or cold, resulting perhaps from a trilling or unconscious exposure, is often but the beginning of a fatal sickness. AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL has well proven its efficacy in a forty years' fight with throat and lung diseases, and should be taken in all cases without delay.

A Terrible Cough Cured. A Terrible Cough Cured.

"In 1837 I took a severe cold, which affected my lungs. I had a terrible cough, and passed night after night without sleep. The doctors gave me up. I tried AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, which relieved my lungs, induced sleep, and afforded me the rest necessary for the recovery of my strength. By the continued use of the PECTORAL a permanent cure was effected. I am now £2 years old, hale and hearty, and am satisfied your CHERRY PECTORAL saved me.

"While in the country last winter my little boy, three years old, was taken ill with croup; it seemed as if he would die from strangulation. One of the family suggested the use of Ayen's Cherry Pectoral, a bottle of which was always kept in the house. This was tried in small and frequent doses, and to our delight in less than half an hour the little patient was breathing easily. The doctor said that the Cherry Pectoral had saved my darling's life. Can you wonder at our gratitude? Sincerely yours,

Mr. Stekete:

Dear Sir—I have thoroughly tried your "Worm Destroyer," and think it the best remedy for Worms known. I have tried numberless other remedies

She was failing so fast her condition became alarming. Having noticed your advertisement, I immediately purchased a bottle of your "Worm Destroyer." A lew doses improved her health, and a few more restored her to her naturally healthy condition. All symptoms of spasms have completely disappeared. I should feel unsaie without the NORTHERN TEXAS.

The Immense Profits in Live Stock-

Growing. .. Rapid Development of the Agricultural and Manufacturing Inter- .

ests of the Country---Rich

Soil and a Favored Land.

Correspondence New York Tribune.

From the moment of crossing Red river, passing from the Indian territory into the state of Texas, evidences of wealth and prosperity greet the eye. Denison, containing about 9,000 inhabitants, is a distributing point for northwestern Texas, and does a good jobbing trade. The country about it is rapidly filling up with a good class of farmers from the older states, who turn their attention principally to growing cereals and raising fine stock. The acreage of winter wheat, oats and barley has been increased onethird since last year, and of cotton land about one-fourth. Going south from Denison, numerous small but prosperous towns are passed. The country is well settled, and the farms present a thrifty, well-to-do air. Winter wheat, oats, and barley look finely. Peach trees are in blossom, and nearly every farm-house is surrounded by an orchard. Ninety-six miles south of Denison is Fort Worth, a city of 15,750 inhabitants and an important railroad junction. Six years ago Fort Worth contained 1,800 inhabitants and was an outpost of civilization. Now it has railroads, street-cars, gas works,

Six years ago Fort Worth contained 1,500 inhabitants, and was an outpost of civilization. Now it has railroads, street-cars, gas works, water-works, cotton compress, flouring, pork packing, and planing mills, a foundry, and other business enterprises, which mark it as one of the foremost towns in Texas. I can best convey an idea of the business of the place by stating that the different railroads have twenty-seven miles of side tracks in their yards here, and the tracks are covered with cars containing merchandise of every discription. Live stock men from all quarters hold their conventions here and transact their business, and money changing hands for stock alone amounts to $18,000,000 annually. There is a great deal of cotton in the tributary regions, and it is being received and shipped daily.

One 18 struck by the enormous increase in farms and population. Towns have been built up and are becoming populous, thriving places, where twelve monthe ago there was not a house in sight from Fort Worth to Wichita Falls. Rome, Decatur, Alvord, Bowie, Henrietta and Witchita Falls have sprung into existence; only two of these, Decatur and Henrieta, had been located before the Fort Worth & Denver City railroad was built. Decatur bids fair to be a place of some note, as coal has been discovered a short distance from there and the Wise County Coal company are developing a thirty-inch vein. This coal will supply a long felt want of Northwestern Texas. The land throughout this section of country is very fertile, fairly wooded, and well watered. What are known as the input of the finest staple of cotton Texas from northeast to southway the from a railroad station for $2 to the properties of the properties of the properties. The soil is a chocolate colored login, and the finest staple of cotton Texas groothese is grown throughout this section. Wild land is worth from $1.50 to $10 per acre, prices varying with the quality and situation. A very fine body of land can be got from four or five miles from a railroad station for $2

the breeding grounds of the southwest to the grazing grounds of southern Colorado, northern Têxas and New Mexico, a distance of from 500,55 700 miles. The cattle are held on these grazing lands until they attain their growth and are ready for market, the theory held by stock men being that cattle breed better and are safer and more prolific, in the warm climate of southern Texas, and fatten quicker and grow larger in the northern grazing lands. It is estimated that between 200,000 and 300,000 beautiful the moved.

and grow larger in the northern grazing lands. It is estimated that between 200,000 and 300,000 head of these young cattle will be moved this year.

The number and wealth of the stock men in Texes are something wonderful, Some five or six years ago "Old Dan" Waggoner made a sale of his ranch and brand of cattle for $25,000 to a man who afterward backed out of his bargain. "Old Dan" was about to sue to compel him to keep it, but was dissuaded therefrom, and to-day he has good reason to congratulate himself that the sale was not effected, as he is now offered for the same ranch and brand $4.500,000.

The counties of Grayson, Tarrant, Denton, Wise, Montague, Cooke and those counties immediately adjoining are known as the Delaware of Texas. Apples, peaches, pears and plums are grown successfully and remuneratively. There are numbers of small tracts of and devoted entirely to fruit, which pay their owners handsomely; one fruit-grower in the neighborhood of Denison clearing $10,000 profit on eighty acres of land planted principally in apples and peaches. The climate and soil seem to be finely adapted to fruit and grape culture.

A Novel Way of Breaking Metal.

St. Louis Republican.

An effectual method of breaking up considerable pieces of iron and steel has come into use as a substitute for the process of melting them by means of colossal air furnacesnamely, the application of the force which confined water exerts in every direction upon the material in which it is enclosed. A round hole, two or three inches in diameter and ten or twelve inches deep, is bored into the mass to be split, the hole being then filled with water and closed—by a tight-fitting steel cylinder, upon which the weight is allowed to fall from the usual height. In this way a plate roll some thirty inches in diameter has been split into four or five parts, the pieces flying twenty or thirty feet. A single blow of an ordinary drop weight suffices to split off pieces of thirty to thirty-six inches in diameter. It being essential that the hole be hermetically closed, this is accomplished by hollowing out the base of the steel cylinder into a cup-shaped form, the edges of which are driven against the walls of the hole by the water in its endeavor to get past. A pin of good steel can be used several times in this operation. hole, two or three inches in diameter and ten

An Apology to the James Gang. Parties connected with the James gang, by marriage and association, have decided to commence libel proceedings against papers that have spoken disrespectfully of members of the gang. A suit against The Louisville Courier-Journal is now in progress, a Mr. Hite, uncle of the James boys, and father of the Hite of the James boys, and father of the life boys, being the complainant. It will be remembered that all along, whatever others may have said against the Jameses, The Sun has said that those people were honest and virtuous, and kind-hearted, however many indictments there may have been against them for murder and highway robbery, and train wrecking. The boys may have been bad, but they were real good. That ought to let us out of all libel suits.

The Fight of the Braidwood Coroners An interesting thing about the Braidwood mine horror, where the seventy bodies are be-ing taken out, is the quarrel between two rival coroners. The mine opening is in Will county, but the mine where the men died runs unty, but the mine where the men died runs under the ground of Grundy county, and the Will county coroner is holding the inquest; though the Grundy coroner says he will put in a bill for the fees and contest the matter. This is too disgusting to talk about, but it would not be strange if the surviving miners should throw some coroner down the hole. Is it possible that if the Newhall house had been on the county line we should have had a quarrel here between rival coroners?

Arizona's Mineral Wealth.

Scientific American. It is but a few years ago that Arizona was looked upon as simply a worthless desert waste, useless alike for farming and stockraising, while the owners of a few small mines which were known and worked labored under the great disadvantage of having to rely upon-the slow ox and mule teams for the transporta-tion of their supplies and products. Commu-nication with the outside world was not only difficult, but the pioneer miners were in such constant dread of Indian raids upon them that it was impossible o develop Arizona territory with much success or profit. But a great change has taken place since the completion of the Southern Pacific railroad across the territory, and although the railroad does not extend directly to any of the mining camps, the increased facilities for transportation, and the opening up of the territary in consequence of it, have increased its population and developed its mining, interests within the past two or three years wonderfully, and specially during the year 1882 the territory has made great advances in its resources.

From statistics recently published it appears that Arizona ranks third among the states and territories in the production of gold, silver, copper, and lead, the total production of these metals aggregating in value for 1882—$11,702,-286.
