OUR WESTERN TRIP.

NO. 4.

The ride from Leadville to Pueblo on the return trip was an exciting one to some of the passengers in the rear car of the train. Leaving Leadville at about two P. M., we were in Pueblo for supper at six, distance 118 miles. In going down the grade and around the curves some of the more nervous were afraid of going into the river, and finally referred the matter of safety to Capt. Tibbets, our conductor, and his reply was, "Our engineers know how to handle the automatic brake, and with that set it is impossible for the train to leave the track." At Pueblo we were all pleased to find our comfortable Pullman sleepers once more. and being well tired, "turned in" pretty early. Awoke next morning in Colorado Springs, a place of about 6,-000 inhabitants, and pronounced by those who went "down town" to be the prettiest town they had ever seen. Broad streets and fine stone buildings. We couldn't get any liquor here without a prescription from a physician, but as we had a number of the profession with the party we experienced no inconvenience in this way. No saloons allowed in Colorado Springs. Here we found the ground covered with about an inch of snow. Our next ride was five miles over the branch of the Rio Grande to Manitou, where we arrived for breakfast at the Manitou House. This is a place of about 500 inhabitants, and one of the most famous summer resorts in the west. The property here is mostly owned by English people, and the hotels are frequented by people who come from that country to spend the summer months. Here are located some of the most famous mineral springs in the world. The water from one of them tastes like that drawn from a freshly charged soda fountain, without the syrup mixture, and flows in a very large, strong stream. Another we visited was equally strongly impregnated with iron. Breakfast over, and all took to carriages for a ride. Five persons could secure a three-seated rig, with driver and guide, three hours, for $5. The first point visited was the famous Garden of the Gods, within a few minutes' ride of the hotel. The Garden is a large park, with a gently undulating ing the remarks of two of the citizens surface, sodded with Buffalo grass and standing by the roadside. One asked, with here and there a clump of scrub oak, and every few rods a huge rock of red sand stone standing up in all shapes, sizes and heights up to 330 feet, the height of the slab that stands at the left of the gateway. This rock is perhaps 400 feet long by about 40 or 50 feet thick at the base, like a great flat chip that had been dropped from above with force to make it stand upon its edge. Others of the same style are numerous but of less size. We rode through the Garden to Glen Erie, where is the home of the president of the D. & R. G. road, a pallatial stone mansion built in this little valley in the mountains, which arise to a dizzy height at either side. Returning to the hotel, we next visit Ute Pass, a road cut alongside the mountains, used by teamsters in hauling lumber from further up the mountains. The day before our arrival one of the teamsters was coming down this road, and when just below Rainbow Falls his brake gave way, and the best that he could do was to save himself by jumping from the load. The load and team went down the cliff about 150 feet, the wagon a wreck, one mule dead, and the other near enough dead to not be worth taking out of the ravine. To the falls was as far as we went up this road. Here a stream of water that could easily run through an 18-inch tile dropped over a ledge about 50 feet, presenting a very picturesque appearance. After dinner a portion of the party, the writer among the number, walked up Williams Canon to the Cave of the Winds, about two miles, and into the cave, whicl. is at the side of what is known as the amphitheater, where the rocks extend 300 feet high on one side and 280 on the other. But few visited the cave, as to reach its mouth meant to climb a winding path and stair to within about twenty-five feet of the top of the highest cliff, and as the bottom of the cave is nearly on the level with the bottom of the canon it required considerable climbing. This cave is pronounced by those who have visited both, to be a more wonderful cave than the mammoth, and is richer in alabaster formation than any known cave in the world. There are numerous stalactites as large and long as a man's arm, of pure almost transparent alabaster, and the finest coral crystalization of the same material. It was in the amphitheater that the writer, by stepping back into a crevice near the top of the cliff, suddenly disappeared from the party, and as they did not see him come out again they supposed they were leaving a dead editor in the mountains. All preparations were made for appropriate funeral ceremonies, to be held on the train. They were not held. At Manitou we secured a few plants of the mountain sage, a most beautiful silvery plant, growing in the red barren sand here in abundance. One of these specimens may be seen growing at Mrs. Alexander's flower garden. At three P. M. we return to Colorado Springs to our sleepers, to leave them no more until we reach Chicago. Next morning we spend a few hours in Denver, where we take breakfast at the the other officers and employes of the Union depot dining room. The side tables in this room we recognized as of Spencer & Barnes' manufacture. Breakfast over, and we are on our way home, well pleased with our visit to the geragent of the Denver and Rio Grande Rocky Mountains, and believing with the Teuton, that "any tam fool would have known enough to call dose de

We have been delighted with found free expression. At Atchison we stopped for breakfast, and had two hours to see the city. Here we met our visits to each of these growing Mr. Harwi, whose wife is well known in Buchanan as Miss Lizzie Whitehead. Mr. Harwi has a large two-story and basement hardware and agricultural implement store, and appeared to be doing a large and successful business. By his direction we found J. W. The noted case of Dr. Bathrick, of Battle Creek, against the Detroit Post & Tribune for libel, in which the doctor obtained verdict for damages, was appealed to the Supreme Court, which has reversed the decision of the lower court, and ordered a new trial. The decision contains some remarks not very complimentary to the learned doctor, and orders the admission of important testimony in the new trial that was not admitted before.

About one year ago the Evening News published some articles that pointed to Hugh S. Peoples as the murderer of Martha Whitla, the particulars of which are familiar to readers in this state. Peoples sued for libel and was defeated. He appealed to the Supreme Court, which has comfirmed the judgement of the lower court, with costs. The entire business has not been one with very great recommendations for Peoples.

Arrangements have been made by which, on September 1st, 1883, my extensive Clothing and Hat, Cap and Gentlemen Furnishing business will pass into the hands of Louis Brown and Max B. Rosenberg, who will after that date continue the business under the firm name of Brown & Rosenberg.

Under this arrangement my new entire stock must be reduced to a certain amount for delivery on that date, which will necessitate a reduction from its present enlarged condition of over onehalf value. To this end I have re-arranged and marked down my entire stock, and will commence on Wednesday, June 20th, my last grand sale, making this the capstone of a successful business in the city of Niles of over a quarter of a century and continue the same from day to day until Sept. 1, 1883.

From my record in the past I have no hesitancy in assuring the citizens of Buchanan and vicinity that this will be the golden opportunity for bargains. Over one-half of this great stock must be positively sold before delivery. This is not a matter of prices but of sales.

This being a new term to our Connecticut friend, an explanation was asked, which was, that they were native Missourians, whose chief beauty and ability lay in their long hair, which hangs about the shoulders in ringlets somewhat after the style of witch stirrups in a horse's mane, and is a perfect stranger to comb; who hold an abhorrence to anything that has the appearance of improvement, and are perfectly happy with their log cabin in the woods, a shot gun and a supply of old rye whisky. I could name at least a dozen men who spend from $5,000 to $50,000 a year--whose vessels are acquatic palaces, containing every luxury that money can buy. The best yachts-men-that is, those who are the most practical --will look rather to the sailing qualities of their vessels than to their elegance of appoint-ments. Among the representative yachtsmen are Travers, Auchincloss, F. W. J. Hurst, Peter Stewart, Dwight Olmstead, Washington Connor, Ted Clarke, Lloyd Phoenix, I. A. Fish, R. T. Bush, and a number of others who opend many thousand thousand dollars annu-ally on this amusement. With reference to social and club life the "young blood" is largely guided by the tastes of his "set." If he be "norsey" the Turf club is his general rendezvous; if aquatic, the Lotos; and if of an exclusively gossipy turn, the Union. At either of these resorts it costs him much money, but it is very rare to find that he combines a liking for them all. His suppers are upon a layish scale, and it is upon the authority of Myers, at the Brunswick, that a "small" supper party after the theatre for ten or fifteen persons will fre-quently cost as much as $15 a plate. Fred Gebhardt prior to Mrs. Langtry's arrival, once gave a supper for ten that cost $300. In brief, the expenditure of the young blood possessing, say, $25,000 a year may be ap-proximately itemized as follows: Club fees, $200; clothing, $1,500; horses, $5,000; traveling expenses, including hotel bills, $5,000; traveling

Pauperism in Russia.

Roskoschny's recent work on Russia claims that there are 300,000 professional beggars in seventy-one governments of that country, who thrive and make money in this trade. Many of them have farms and live nicely at home, but at the approach of warm weather abandon everything and set forth upon their wander-ings, enjoying the variety and vagabond life, and gathering a rich harvest as they hang around the church doors and market places. Bigoted, lazy, and fond of drink, the average Russian peasant finds such a life the height of antownet.

Bob Smith's Fag.

"Lioness, I want you." "Yes, yes, Bob; I'm coming!"

On the terrace of a suburban vills stood a boy. He was 13 years of age, perhaps, very chubby, with cheeks as red as apples, a square figure, and brown eyes. With a proud sense of appropriation, he again shouted "Lioness!" and from a French window of the house rushed a little girl, some four years younger than her playmate. She was curiously different in appearance, tall for her age, very thin and pale; her brown eyes were too large, and her eyebrows too marged, for beauty. An immense quantity of chestnut hair had gained for her the name-which Bob alone called her-of "Lioness." How she liked to hear him call her that! How proud and happy she felt when he told her that some day she would be his little wife, and how honored when he ordered her to fetch and carry for him, to bait his line, to field his balls! She ran now across the lawn to him, expecting the hearty embrace with which he always met her. But something was wrong this morning, for Bob's usually contented face looked uncommonly sulky. "I say, the mater has written to auntie, and I'm to go home."

"Oh!"---with a gasp. "When?" "To-morrow, first thing. "Isn't it a bore?" The little girl did not answer. She turned away, and forced back the rising tears and swallowed the lump in her throat, for Bob hated to see her cry.

"Well," said Bob, "any how, let's go off and fish, as it's the last day."

So off the children started down the hot, dusty road, across the field to the little brook. "Lioness" carried the rod and the worms. and walked at the pace which suited Maste. Bob, and was perfectly happy to do it for him. Her heart was very sore about the parting on the morrow; but, brave little soul, she put the thought away from her as she listened to all the fine, grand, and splendid things that Bob would do when he was a man and a soldier, "as all my people are. Soon the two children were sitting by the -side of the brook. Bob held the rod; to fish was his part of the work, to bait the hook and to take off the fish "Lioness'." No talking was allowed, as it disturbed the fish, and so an hour or two went by. Perfect silence reigned, broken only by an exclamation of joy when a fish was landed, or once of impatience on the part of Bob when "Lioness" did not do her work fast enough. At last, when siz or eight shining little fish were fastened together by a string cunningly inserted through their gills

"Lioness," she said: "Bob. we lunch early to-day, and uncle will be back; so I must not be late, or aunt will be cross. I think I'd better go. What time is it, please?" Bob looked at his watch, and reported.

"It's about time I went in too; so come along;" and, having wound up his rod, the two child.en started to walk home. Bob carry ing the results of his sport, with which to astonish any passer-by they might chance to meet, and "Loness" bearing the rod and tackle.

As they crossed the field Bob remarked: "Oh, I can't come this afternoon! Auntie said I was to go with her and some old wretch, so it's good-by now." "I wonder if we shall ever see each other again?" said "Lioness," somewhat sentiment-again<sup>2</sup><sup>28</sup> said "Lioness," somewhat sentiment-ally. "Oh, I dare say we shall!" "I don't know. You have never been here before. You never spent your holidays with your aunt till this summer. Then papa is coming brck soon, and I shall go home; and you have _____ been there in all your lifo-and I don't see how you ever should." "Well, when I'm grown up I'll come and find you; and, remember, you have promised never to marry any one but me, and I promise"-magnanimously-"that, if I don't see any one I like better, I'll marry you when I'm thirty." "But I shall be quite old-twenty-six-by that time."

his house on the following Saturday for lawn-

his house on the following Saturday for lawn-tennis, and persuaded Gracie's aunt to allow her niece to make the fourth. As Miss Markham drove her father home she was very silent. Just as they were leaving the Browns she heard Mr. Smythe address Mr. Smith as "Bob;" and somehow she was very sorry. Of course there might be two Bob Smiths in the world, and until this afternoon she would have been very glad Xo meet any one of that name, particularly if he were a soldier and about the right age. Then why was she not glad to have met this young man, who, besides fulfilling these conditions, was a perfect gentleman, looked very good natured, and, as she said to herself, altogether nice?" Yet somehow she was disappointed. In the meantime Mr. Smith' dog-cart was bowling along the straight dusty road towards the East Fort. Its occupants did not speak to each other for some time, but puffed away at their cigars in silence. At last Bob Smith, tak-ing his cigar from his mouth, said: Awfully nice girl, that, Victor?" "Very." Alice dropped her eyes, and looking at the grass, went on: "Well, we were allowed'to play together, and I-Tikked him very much; I don't know why-for I think he rather bullied mè-but I did; and one day"-she spoke low-somehow, even after all these years, to tell any one of her promise made her feel shy-"I promised that I would marry him and he promised"-she laughed a little hystorical laugh-"that when he was thirty, if he had not seen any one he liked better he would marry me; and though I don't know that it was Mr. Smith, I thought it might be, and it bothered me." A ringing happy laugh from her companion answered her.

answered her. "I knew you'd laugh," she said humbly. "And you did not quite like to break your promise-and you promised that? Why, Lioness, what a brute I was to make you!" "You! What?" Alice's eyes were full of a Lioness, what a brute 1 was to make you?" "You! What?" Alice's eyes were full of a very sweet surprise. "Tes, Lioness. You see I know the name that Bob Smith called you by, though you have not told it me. I remember it all now, though, being a man and not a faithful woman, I had forgotten all about it. My name is Victor Robert Smythe. My father thought the name 'Smith' common, and changed it for 'Smythe?' and at home I was always called 'Vic-tor,' to distinguish me from my father. But auntie would always call herself 'Smith,' and said it was a great affection on the dear old governor's part; and she, for the same reason, would call me 'Bob,' as my father and grand-father had been called before me. Well, Lion-ess, now," he whispered, taking her two little hands in his big ones, "your boy lover Bob has come, and he asks you to redeem your words. What does my Lioness say?" There was no need for words. Bob, alias Yiotor, got his answer without them, and was well satisfied. In the course of all the happy nonsense that was talked during the next hour. ''noor Bob''

"Only daughter of that rich old chap, Mark-ham." "Yes." "Lucky dog, you, to get her for a partner in-stead of the little school-girl." "The little school-girl." "The little school-girl, as you call her, is a very pretty little thing." "Yes; but Miss Markham is a very lovely girl. I wonder what her name is? Lily, Th bet!"

"Alice." "Heard her father call her by that name." Silence again fell upon the pair, and lasted until they were in sight of the East Forl when Mr. Smythe said: "You'll drive over in the dog-cart Saturday,

I suppose, Bob?" "Thanks, I will. I say, Victor, shall you fall in love with that young lady? I think I shall."

SCROFULA and all scrofulous diseases, Sores, Erysipelas, Eczema, Blotches, Ringworm, Tumors, Carbuncles, Boils, and Eruptions of the Skin, are the direct result of an impure state of the blood.

To cure these diseases the blood must be purified, and restored to a healthy and natural condition. AVER'S SARSAPARILLA has for over forty years been recognized by eminent medical authorities as the most pow-erful blood purifier in existence. It frees the system from all foul humors, enriches and strengthens the blood, removes all traces of mercurial treatment, and proves itself a complete master of all scrofulous diseases.

A Recent Cure of Scrofulous Sores. A Recent Cure of Scrofulous Sores. "Some months ago I was troubled with scrofulous sores (ulcers) on my legs. The limbs were badly swollen and inflamed, and the sores disclarged large quantities of offensive matter. Every remedy I tried failed, until I used AYER'S SARSATARILLA, of which I have now taken three bottles, with the result that the sores are healed, and my general health greatly improved. I feel very grateful for the good your medicine has done me. Yours respectfully, MRS. ANN O'BRIAN." 148 Sullivan St., New York, June 24, 1882.

Wilds of 78 East 54th Street, New York City, who will take pleasure in testifying to the wonderful efficacy of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, not only in the cure of this lady, but in his own case and many others within his knowledge.

The well-known writer on the Boston Herald, B. W. BALL, of Rochester, N.H., writes, June 7, 1882:

"And I really did 'fag' you," Victor said presently, "and make these hands bait my line? How I must have wanted kicking! Well, we'll have fair division of labor hence-forth. You fetched and carried then, and I'm to fetch and carry from this minute." "Put me down! Do, please-some one will see." "Having suffered severely for some years with Eczema, and having failed to find relief from other remedies, I have made use, during the past three months, of AVER'S SARSAPA-HILLA, which has effected a complete cure. I consider it a magnificent remedy for all blood diseases."

"Then will you promise-and I know you'll Ayer's Sarsaparilla keep a promise—witness the way you said 'Yes,' to me a few minutes ago, as you said you would years ago—will you promise to be very good and always do just what I like, and never to do anything for yourself?"

"Then here you are, and I won't put you down." But he did, for all that. A few minutes later Alice said, looking up gracefully into her lover's face: "What will papa say? Did you ask him?" "Oh, I'll make it all right with 'papa!" Aud all right he did make it; so "all right" that, three months later, Alice became Mrs. V. R. The advantages he claims for the new inven-tion is that it will effect a saving of 32 per cent in the amount paid for coal under the present system of steam locomotives. There would also be a slight saving in the matter of the wear and tear of the two different styles of en-gines or motors. Even the balmy air and orange groves of Florida fail to keep its people full of happiness and comfort. Art must help nature everywhere—in the tropics as among the pines of the North. "And, chief among the blessings which are adapted to all zones," writes Dr. J wer and tear of the two different styles of en-gines or motors. "For the present," continued Mr. Edison, "I do not think that electricity will be generally adopted for heavy freight trains, or for pas-senger trains over long distances, but for street cars, elevated railroads and other short lines it will be found invaluable. Already we have applications for the use of our patents from Coney Island, Long Branch, Fairmount Park, Saratoga, and from the elevated railroads in New York. In the case of the latter it will effect not only a saving of 38 per cent in the matter of coals, but it will also do away with one man on each engine, and further save the shower of sparks and the smell of sulphur which is so unobjectionable," The exact form the motor attached to a train would take he could not, he said, at present give, but he believed it would take one of the shapes of Mr. Field's patents. "But I shall be quite old-twenty-six-by that time." "Well, if I'm thirty you won't be too old for me, and if I do marry any one else before that, I'll tell you what, I'll let you know." By this time the children had walked down the road. Passing before a stile, Bob said: "This is my nearest way, over the fields; so good-by," and kissing his companion, the boy jumped over the stile and ran home whistling. And the girl? She stood, her two hands clasped together, until his whistling the stile, she flung herself upon the grass under the hedge, and, burying her face in the hair he admired, and which once, when it had caught fire from bending over the candle, he had put out with his hands, sobbed as if her heart would break. would break.

and the wild overgrown child of some ten-summers earlier. Her hair, then a mass of confusion, was now gathered low against the white neck, in what the society papers of the time called a Hebe knot. The brown eyes and marked, eyebrows, which had been too large for a child eight years old, lent a great charm to the bright complexion of a maiden of eighteen. Yes, Alice was lovely—not merely pretty-and, if her outward appearance was changed; there were other changes to be be noted also. Who would dare "fag" that stately maiden? Who would dare "fag" that stately maiden? Who would image these well-shaped whit-hands handling worms and fish? No; they might gather roses, but would scarcely bait a line. There had been times when she ha.] blushed at the remembrance of her childish promise; but her life had been somewhat monotonous one. That one summer still stood out in brilliant colors among her many quiet holidays. No; she might smile now a! the memory of her promise, but she ha.] neither forgotten that nor her boy lover-Bob Smith-and, while she told herself that it was very stilly, she knew that she would like to see again the hero of that summer at Murfields. Alice had hardly arranged her nosegay of roses, and was choosing one little bud for her father, when his voice from the drawing room window told her that it was time to be going; and in a few minutes later she was seated in a low pony-carriage, driving a pair of light chestnuts, while her father, a haal-some old man, sat by her side. "My dear, Ime Mr. Foster in town to-day, and he wishes to introduce us to two young officers quartered at East Fort, He has asked them over to-day, and he ard his wife find them very plessant young fellows. But, of course, Mr. and Mrs. Foster have not many amusements to offar young men." "Nor hare we, pape."

course, Mr. and Mrs. Foster have not many amusements to offer young men." "Nor have we, papa." "'Well, we might ask them to come out on Saturday and play tennis. Ask some girl to make the fourth." "Yes, papa; I'll ask Gracie Foster;" and Alice wondered what the two young officers wight be like Alice wondered what the two young officers might be like. Alice drew up at her destination; and, while she crossed the garden to meet Mrs. Foster, she scanned the crowd of girls and young men who were gathered round their hostess. From them her eyes wandered to the few who watched the three energetic games of tennis that were being played; but she did not make out clearly in her mind which were the two young officers. Then her attention was engrossed by many friends, to whom she gave a gracious bow or friendly nod, according to their sex or to her degree of intimacy with their sex or to her degree of intimacy with them. At last she was again at liberty to watch the assembled guests, and she found her attention caught by one of the lawn-tennis players. A net serve which his opponent failed to take at-tracted her, and she looked at the server. "Who is that very handsome young man, Gracie?" she asked of a girl standing by her. This young lady, who was two years younger er than Alice, devoutly believed that her friend was the most beautiful, the cleverest, and the noblest woman who had ever trodden the earth.

"T'll ask my aunt," she replied, and, hasten-ing to Mrs Foster, and asked the question and was back with the answer before she could be was back with the answer perore she could be prevented. "He is a Mr. Smythe, quartered at East Fort, and that other playing with him is Mr. Smith, another of them." "Mr. Smith! Can it be Bob?" thought Alice; and she turned her attention from the hand-some tennis-player to his brother officer. The latter was a well made though rather heavy man.

The latter was a well made though rather heavy man. "I am sure Bob's hair was not so red as that?" said Alice to herself. This was rather hard on Mr. Smith, as his hair was not really red, only inclined to that hue. His complexion was perhaps too ruddy for beauty, though his whole face was expres-sive of one quality—good nature. "Well," solloquized Alice, "Smith' is rather a common name, so why should it be Bob? Cartainly this man is just as unlike Bob as I am unlike now what I was then; but I dare say it is not h?." With this idea Alice contented herself, and turned to look at Mr. Smith's partner. What she could see of his face pleased her— Isrge brown eyes, well cut nose, firm mouth and chin. All this Alice saw and noted at a glance. In a few minutes more the game of tennis was broken up, and Mrs. Foster, ad-vancing, introduced the two young man to Miss Markbare, and, with her nigee Gracie to make

At the beginning of that week Bob had an interview with Mr. Markham; but he lægged that gentleman not to infinence his daughter, but allow him to plead his own cause. And Alice? That week taught her that, if Bob Smith was her boy-lover, she would not fulfill her childish promise. For the first three days, whenever she entered the hall after being out, she glanced at the table for the card with "Victor Smythe" upon it, but it was never tizet. not unsought! But where was he? Bob Smith had never mentioned his friend, and she could not ask. The week went by, and Alice, as she dressed on Tuesday morning, only knew that it was a week since Victor had been at Oakfield. She did not know what was before her on this day. Bob Smith had been there the day before; but though he had tried, somehow he had failed to pluck up his courage and tell her that he loved her. This morning, hiring a hansom, he drove out to the Markhams', and was shown into Alice's morning room, where she was sitting, endeavoring to read, but, oh, failing so utterly! Then and there, in a simple manly way, Bob told her of his love and asked her to be his wife. Astonished and horrified—and, oh, so very sorry!—poor Alice only murmured— "Oh, no—I can't?" Bob stood up. "Please don't cry;I am sorry I bothered you. It does not matter. If you are quite sure?" he asked so wistfully; then, as she managed to look up, he saw in her face something of the truth. "I think I know," he said, bending over her as she half-reclined on the sofa. "Don't be unhappy; it'll all come right. And he's the best chap in the world!" He raised her hand to his lips, pressed it, rushed out of the house, and, jumping into the hansom, buried his face in his hands, sobbing like a child. : Alice, springing from the sofa, flew into the garden, and, throwing herself upon a grassy bank, cried as if her heart would break. The week was up. Another hansom passed poor Bob some two minutes after he had left the house, but the occupant of each, buried as he was in his own thoughts, did not notice the other. As Victor Smythe drove up to the Mark-ham's, door, he saw a white form among the trees, which, with true lover's instinct, he knew to be his lady-love's. Dismissing his hansom, he walked softly toward her over the grass. Perhaps she was asleep or—horri-ble thought—hurt. Yes, for she was sobbing
