

sweetest little love story we have had from real life. Yesterday, as he was waiting at Parker, Dakota, for the train, a country lass came in with her fellow in the farm wagon, locked in each other's arms. The young man lived in Iowa, and was on the eve of starting home. The train was ready, and onto the platform went his carpet bag. Another embrace and the train pulled out. The lover swung on and the lassie waved him kisses. The train going down grade, gained rapid speed; the boy waved his handkerchief, but his heart was in his mouth. Off went the old sachel; off followed the lover with heels in the air. Over and over went he, and at last lit in a mud hole rolled like a ball against the soft clay bank, and finally got on his feet, and started back to see his dulciana. She at the same time was making for him. They met and embraced, regardless of clay or bruises. The fowa lover was heard to remark: "Ducky, I will never leave till you are my wife." The Justice of the Peace was sent for, and the twain returned to the farm as one-

Protective Ideas In France.

In an address before the Corps Legislatif, of France, June 22, 1870, the question of an inquiry into the operations of the commercial treaties being under discussion, M. Thiers, afterward President of the French Republic, said: May 25. "Every nation has three great affairs, which should be the object of its ardent and constant solicitude: liberty first, its greatness next, and finally its material prosperity. Liberty, which consists not merely in the right of the nation to criticise its government, but in the right of governing itself by its own hands, and conformably to its own ideas; greatness, which does not con-sist in subjecting its neighbors by brute force, but in exercising over them so much influence that no question shall be resolved in the world against its interests and security; prosperity, finally, which consists in drawing from its own soil, and from the genius of its inhabitants, the greatest possible amount of well-being. "And do not think that this anxiety for the prosperity of the country has anything in common with that passion for material interests which the highest minds despise. There is no work of higher morality than to diminish the sum of the evils which weigh upon man, even in the most civilized societies. To make man less unhappythat is, to make him better--it is to make him more just towards his gov-ernment, to his fellow-beings, towards Providence itself.

"We are told that we would have a hot-house industry. What, then, are the nations which have sought to de velop among themselves a national labor? They are the nations which are intelligent and free. When the foreigner brings them a product, after they have found it serviceable, they desire to imitate it. The nations which do not have this desire are the indolent nations of the East; intelligent and free nations seek to appropriate for themselves the products brought to them by foreign nations.

"It is urged that all the protections accorded to industry constitute monopolies, and that, to enrich a few monopolists, we burden the whole coun try. It is true there is a monopoly but it is not in France, it is abroad. desire to say that this little monopoly which you accord to French industry destroys the monopoly of foreign industry. "When the linen industry was destroyed in France by the English production by power, a kilogram of thread was worth seven francs. We protect ed the linen industry in France. This protection permitted competition; and the French product compelled the English manufacturers to lower their prices to three francs fifty centimes.

"If England were the only country to produce certain objects, could you have them at the same price? Certainly not. It is competition, sustained by a just protection, which destroys foreign monopoly.

A special treatment for years. He is not a boastful, ignorant pretender, but an educated physician, seeking to do good, by devoting his talent and energies to the treatment of a class of maladies that have been with him a long and patient study. To be able to treat successful-ly chronic diseases it requires that a physician should be a sound, thorough scholar in the art of science and medicine generally. He should give his entire time to their study, be thorough in his investigations and have a long and varied experience. Dr. Brewer claims to work no wonders or to do any more than any well educated physician can do who devotes his whole time to the study and treatment of chronic diseases exclusively and has had his many years of experience. For years Dr. Brewer has visited the places he now visits, and has obtained his reputation by being honest in his dealings, candid in his opinions and reasonable in his charges. Those who are afflicted are invited to call, investigate and decide for themselves. It will cost nothing to do so. Address all letters to F. B. BREWER, M. D., Lock Box 350, CHICAGO, LLL.

ILL. Dr. F. B. BREWEB will be at Niles, Bond House, on Saturday the 4th of August. At Laporte Myers House, Saturday, the 2d of June, and Saturday, the 21st of July.

A Famous Game.

Wheeling Register.

"The river, immediately before the war," the speaker continued, "was a great gambling house. The splendid steamers plying between New Orleans and the north were loaded with men whose interest was deep in games of chance. The planters were the most reckless gamesters. They seldom had any ready money, but would lose their live stock and niggers with equanimity. I went down on the Belle Key in 1850 from Memphis to New Orleans. At Natchez a great planter got aboard with fifty slaves. He chipped into a game with a northern judge, a New York merchant and an army officer. The stakes mounted up to fine proportions-something like $20,000 in one pot-when I saw the judge win. He held the best hands, and before we reached the Crescent city owned forty of the planter's niggers, valued at from $1,000 to $1,500 each.

"But by all odds the most interesting game I ever saw was played on the Belle Lamar in 1857. There were circum-stances connected with it which made it an all-absorbing event to the people who understood what it really meant. The players were two only. They are both dead, and probably all their de-scendants have followed them to the grave, so I mention their names and tell you about the train of events which led to that game and its attendant tragedy. In 1856 there lived in a small " "tuckya beautiful girl named on. She had a number of town in Alice (suitors, but only two seemed to meet with passing favor in her eyes. One was a rich young planter named Horace Ellison, and the other, a young lawyer, recently from the north, named Converse. Ellison had the advantage of his rival in looks and accomplishments. He had traveled extensively, was well read, and bore the reputation of being a dare-devil in affairs of gallantry, and was said to be not over upright and honorable in his affairs with women. He was the sort of a man to attract most girls. But Miss Crayton preferred Converse, a plain young fellow, and finally married him. Ellison, after swearing to be revenged, went abroad. In the course of a year Converse and his wife went to New Orleans to live. Two years after the marriage Converse, returning home on the Belle Lamar, after a business trip north, discovered his old rival, Ellison, among the passengers. All feelings of resentment had died out in his heart, and he greeted Ellison heartily, the latter returning his handshake with well simulated warmth. For a day the two men chatted together agreeably, to all appearances good friends. The next evening Ellison proposed a little draw to while away the monotony of the voyage. Converse readily assented, and they started the game in a large statement. a large stateroom. Four or five others were present, but they didn't join it. At first the ante was trifling. As Con-verse steadily lost, he insisted on rais-ing it with each deal, and began drinking, a rare thing for him to do. His ill-fortune continued, and after a seance of two hours he began to borrowmoney from his friends in the room, having lost all his own to Ellison. The latter was cool and firm as a rock. He seldom spoke, and then in cutting accents, which added to the fast growing enmity his opponent felt toward him. erhaps if Mr. Converse would finger the glass less and his cards more his game would be more interesting and less easy to beat,' Ellison remarked. "Mr. Converse can take care of himself under all circumstances,' Converse retorted.

prominent establishment in this city each one of them being lettered, the lettering running to the end of the alphabet and then duplicating, as AA,

BB, etc. Suits and garments, shawls, cottons, dress goods, millinery, woolens, gents' furnishing goods, hosiery, handkerchiefs, linings, gloves, lace, mourning goods, notions, cotton underwear, boys' clothing, ribbons, black prints, silks, colored silks, fancy silks and fancy velvets, plain velvets and satins, white goods, upholstery goods, boots and shoes, trimmings, worsteds, books and stationery, corsets, hamburgs, flannels and blankets, furs, sun shades, linens.

Here are thirty-four departments in one store, with a distinct and accurate record of all the transactions. All the goods delivered to a department are charged to it and all sales credited. Everything coming into the store is at once hoisted to the receiving room, where it is checked off in comparison with invoices, bills, etc. From there it goes to a room and is "blue numbered," that is, each article receives its "model" number, by which it is ever after dis-tinguished and its cost ascertained. The goods also pass through the "retail entry room," where the systematizing is still further perfected. All this starts the disposing of stock over the counters through regular and con-trolled channels. Every Saturday night a book is made up in each department, which involves "taking stock"—on pa-per. That is, the book in question con-tains the sales of the week, the goods received, the profits, and the amount of stock remaining in the department. Now, if the business has been conducted with accuracy and honesty, this book should, except in one particular, give an exact statement of the doings and condition of that department. As a matter of fact-a fact deeply impressed upon the minds and pockets of proprietors-the little book does no such thing-it is a little joker. The one particular in which it is excusable is in the matter of samples. No record can be made of the shrink age of stock consequent upon the modern and mammoth system of sending out samples. This has to be "guessed at," and is the one "regular irregu-larity" in the business. But this Saturday night return book utterly fails to whisper the secrets of mistakes and stealings. It comes back again to the inventory, and twice a year business must stop wholly or partially in order to "take stock." This is done in several non-contiguous departments at the same time. The goods are all "called down" from the shelves and then called back again by experts in the business, every piece of textile fabrics being ac-curately measured and the exact amount on hand being absolutely determined. Here, then, is the rock bottom of calculation, for from the balances resultant the health or sickliness of the business are ascertained. Most intensely interesting is the comparison between the stock as inventoried in the books and the stock as it actually measures out from the shelves. It is enough to say that in a great establishment the discrepancy is startling. There is an immense amount of stock entirely unaccounted for. It has been on the shelves, it has not been sold, but it is gone. Of course, a portion of the discrepancy is to be accounted for by attributing it to mistakes in the salesmen, but such are the checks upon blundering that mistakes are well-nigh reduced to the minimum. The great loss is from dishonesty on both sides of the counter. Goods enough are stolen every year from a first-class dry goods house in Boston to run a large suburban store and assure a handsome profit. In a wholesale store the work of taking stock is much

Philadelphia Times. "I have here," she said, in beginning her story, "several pictures taken at the mission. Our buildings are of adobe. The front is one plain wall, with a piazza before it. We have no windows on the outside and only one front door; it is safer so. The windows all open into an in-terior court. The buildings are all only one story high. An Indian house is not at all like the traditional wigwam. The Spaniards named the inhabitants of New Mexico and Arizona Pueblas because, unlike other Indians, they built regular villages of adobe. The Indian's house is somewhat like a round pyramid in shape, and has but one opening, and that in the roof. The same opening answers for door, window and chimney. During the daytime a ladder stands outside, but at night the last one to mount pulls the ladder up after him and down inside with him. A

They are delighted with white people's clothes and readily learn to readily learn to make all they wear. To put away their dolls for the night every girl at first drove a tack in the wall above her bed, tied a string around her doll's neck and hung it up. "The boys don't take quite so kindly to white people's clothes as the girls do. When we got a lot of boys in we had a great deal of trouble to induce them to put on trousers. And the first night of their arrival, when I went into the boy's dormitory, I found they had all gone to bed with their trousers on. "Indian children are, emphatically, good children, They have pleasant dispositions and seem perfectly inno-cent, knowing nothing of the naughty little tricks that sometimes spoil white ones. They are smart and learn very fast, and are quite as susceptible to moral influence as other children. It is a mistake to say that the Indian character is naturally silent and re-served. Indians enjoy fun as much as anybody. "An Apache in full war paint, stalked into our school one day. The children were immediately terrified, and tremblingly told us he was a 'bad Indian.' They said an uncle of one of our boys had killed his brother and they feared he had come for revenge. As it was dinner-time I saw nothing better to do than have the children marched into the dining room, as usual. We keep open house to Indians at all times and treat them as distinguished guests, so I motioned to our Apache to take a seat at the table. He sat down, terrible in his war paint, and laid two loaded revolvers on the table before him. The children began to tremble, Miss Verbeck, my assistant turned pale and a panic seemed inevitable. But I summoned all my courage and said: 'Put those revolvers on the window. The Apache never moved. The cook placed before him a cup of coffee and a bowl of soup. 'Take away that coffee and soup,' I commanded, with my heart in my mouth, adding, to the Indian: 'You shall not have them until you put those revolvers on the window.' Trembling for her life, the cook obeyed. When the Apache saw his dinner removed he deliberately arose, picked up his revolvers andshall I ever forget that terrible moment? --quietly laid them on the window. His dinner was restored to him; he ate it in silence, and then picked up his property and walked out without a word. I did not see him again for years.

But this last time, on my way home, as I was waiting in the train at Santa Fe, my terrible Apache, in all his feathers implified, as the bulks are larger and

Mr. Oscar Craigg was foreman in a cement quary at Rosendale, Ulster Co., N. Y. By an explosion one day in the quarry he lost an eye-lost it totally. Under the impression that the matter was less serious the local physician told Mr. Gragg that his eye was not lost wholly, but could be saved by treatment. The experiment was tried and failed. Worse re-mained behind, for he was in danger of losing the other also, through sympathetic inflama-tion. In Jhis strain he consulted Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. To New York the patient went, and one of the most eminent beculists if the country. having looked at the case, said: "You have one eye enirely; go back and do what you can to save the other." The result both surprised and delightedme My nerves were toned to concert pitch and, like Cae-ar's it men, I fell into the ranks of those who sleep o' nights. I should add that the Tonic speedily did away with the condition of general debility and dyspepsia occasioned by orevious sleeplessness, and gave me strength and perfect digestion. MAN in Memphis. "No, it never amounted to an acute pain, but continued to be a dull, weary ach. in thes mall of my back," writes Mr. James Thomas. of 59 Madison street, Memphis, Tenn. "This was an old experience, and life be-came dull music. I was tired all over, with the lower limbs. and a babit of lying awake of nights. Recently I tried one of BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTERS and was de-cidedly relieved within twenty-four hours. It may have been Providence that did the work, but I give the credit to Benson's Porous Plas-ter." Air. Thomas' reverential idea does him credit, but Providence works by agents, and among them Benson's plaster ranks first as an external remedy. A CURIOUS CASE.

DEVELOPMENT OF DOUBLE IDENTITY BY THE OPERATION OF TREPANNING. Medical Record.

C. W. ____, an American farmer, aged 23 years, was brought to me in March, 1881, for examination as to his mental condition, that I might testify before a jury, which his friends had re-quested, as they desired to send him to lunatic asylum. He was brought from the country in an open wagon by his wife and two friends, and from them was learned the following history: When 15 years of age, and while en-gaged as a "striker" in his father's blacksmith's shop, he was struck on the head with a pointed hammer and felled to the floor, was unconscious for several hours, gradually recovered, and after a few weeks, suffered no noticeable inconvenience from the injury, although a marked depression of the skull re-mained. This occurred in Allen county. Two or three years later he came to the community in which he now resides, was married when 19 years of age, purchased a farm shortly afterward, and all this time presented no mental peculiarity which was sufficiently marked to attract attention. Six months before he was brought to me he began to exhibit indications of mental derangement. At first he was morose and sullen, but later became maniacal and difficult to restrain, and for several weeks had had no lucid interval. He had eaten but little, his sleep had been much dis-turbed, and he had lost strength and flesh rapidly. At the time I saw him he was emaciated and cachetic in appearance, with furred tongue; pulse, 110; temperature, 98 degrees. He was very nervous and impatient of restraint, and presented all the symptoms of acute mania. There was a deep depression, about the size of a silver quarter, at the junction of the sagittal with the coronal suture, and the scalp in the vi-cinity of the depression was so sensitive that it was examined with great difficulty. The man was evidently in no condition to be sent to an asylum, and was returned to his home a short distance in the country. On the following day the operation of trepanning was performed in the presence of Drs. Porter, Murray, Neale and Meredith. At first a section of bone was removed with a large trephine, and as this did not include all the internal depression, a second section was taken out which slightly lapped into this; still a corner remained, which was removed with bone forceps. The membranes were not injured, and the dura matter appeared healthy. The wound was closed, except the posterior part, which was left open for drainage. The recovery was rapid, and the relief of the mental derangement was immediate and permanent. He gained strength and flesh rapidly, and in a few weeks appeared to be in perfect health. Immediately following the operation were developed those curious mental phenomena which gave special interest to the case. The man seemed to be im-pressed with the idea that he had just recovered from the effects of the blow on the head, and although he talked freely of his history up to the time of the accident, seemed to have no recollection of any event of his life from this time until he was relieved by the opera-tion. He said that he did not know his wife, or that he had a wife; his neighbors were strangers to him, and his business transactions in connection with the purchase of his farm could only be understood after an examination of the deeds and full explanation. He seemed to be entirely ignorant of his former surroundings, and had to learn the roads of his neighborhood like any other stranger. Some of his friends were skeptical in regard to those things, for looking after his own interests two years ago, when he won a great stake, but not by fair play.' "I saw Converse's face flush. He understood the allusion to the old rivalry between him and Ellison and its covert insinuation. He started as though to say something, but stopped. The game went on, and soon after Converse had lost every penny and his watch and diamond pin.

"Ellison laughed sneeringly. 'Mr. Converse should apply his methods of love-making to card playing,' he said. "'What do you mean, sir?"

"'What you please. Shall we continue the game?'

tinue the game? "Converse was white with fury. The gambling spirit, mingled with his hate and rage, was on him. As if in answer to his unbroken thoughts, Ellision said in his cold, exasperating tone: 'You lack a stake. I will hazard all my winnings argsingt the night-her of your house against the night-key of your house. We will play three hands in five for it.'

"This monstrous proposition struck us all dumb. Converse bounded from his chair and gasped. He was speech-less. In fact, the emotions of this great experience had deprived him of the power of words. Ellison alone was un-moved. He sat quietly tossing the pile of gold before him with his white fingers. recrossed the Mississippi river to find the Winnebagos and get hospitality, in fact he was after beans. He whipped the first band of whites he came to, and the fingers. "'Do you consent?' he asked.

"The loss Converse had sustained he oold not replace. Ruin was before him. On the other hand, the privilege he was invited to hazard meant, if he lost it, a dishonor worse than death. What thoughts passed through that man's mind in a few seconds will never be known. He grasped the back of his chair, stared wildly around, and hoarsely muttered 'yes.'

"You may imagine how breathlessly we bent over the players now. Ellison won the first two deals. The next Converse won. The fourth time, amid a silence in the room deep as the tomb, Ellison dealt and gave Converse two queens, a jack and two nine-spots. The latter drew one card and announced himself ready. Ellison glanced quickly at him and laid down four aces. I al-ways thought he had stacked his hand. "You have won the key' said Con-"You have won the key,' said Con-verse. He drew it off the ring, and then, quick as lightning, crowded it into the barrel of his revolver. Take it,' and pulled the trigger. Then he turned the weapon upon himself, and fell dead across the corpse of his antagonist, whose brains bespattered the cards which had destroyed their for-tunes and honor and lives."

TAKING STOCK.

HOW THE ACTUAL STANDING OF A DRY GOODS FIRM IS ASCERTAINED.

Boston Herald. There are three channels of stock deletion which books cannot record, i. e., sampling, mistakes and stealings. To ascertain this aggregate, an inven-tory is essential, and until this aggre-gate is recorded the profits or losses of the business cannot be known. The knowledge of the results of business is largely dependent upon the system of management and accounts employed in the establishment. It will be interesting to follow a bale of goods in its manipulation and records. In the desk of the head of the great business lay the consolidated results of the multitudinous buying and selling out of which the observer can evolve nothing better than confusion, with no possi-bility of method or a grasp of the en-tirety. The mammoth tangle is all straightened out on a few small slips of paper. Here are some pigeon holes labelled, "Workroom statement," "Weekly statement," "Monthly state-ment,""Bills,""Bills paid." It is all here. The complications of a colossal trade are as simple as an ancient barter of silver for silk. By the former methods the entire stock of a store was carried in a lump, All kinds of goods were in-ventoried together. The result was that losses could never be located to any extent and the inventory did not tell near-intact. Here are seven departments hosiery, silks and velvet, dress goods, fiannels and blankets. The pieces are counted and the work is done. There is no stealing here to be taken into account. and the whole process involves little that is perplexing in a retail trade.

His friends all concurred in saying that there had been a marked change in his general demeanor since the operation. While always in-dustrious and sober, he had been rather boisterous and turbulent in disposition, which was in striking contrast with his quiet manners since the operation. It is to be regretted that the man was not highly intellectual and accustomed to describing his methods of thought, as the interest of the case would be greatly increased by minute mental details.
