If there is oil upon the rails, especially upon an up grade, there is no friction, consequently the wheels simply spin around upon the tracks without moving the train."
"Ah," said I, "I comprehend."

"I could illustrate the case by an event which occurred to me on this very spot some years ago. I have al ways thought it a rather remarkable incident, and perhaps you may find it so. The circumstances I refer to," he continued, "took place during the war. I was at the time an adjutant upon Gen. Thomas' staff during the exciting and momentous campaign in the mountains of Tennessee. If you remember, there were many times when it was feared that our hour had come. Our communications were repeatedly cut off and our whole command in danger of instant destruction. It was at one of those crises that the event I am going to relate occurred.

The Passenger's Story.

The night mail upon the Cumberland Valley railroad had reached the heavy station, when it became evident to the passengers that something had gone decidedly wrong. The speed of the train sensibly slackened; there came a series of tremendous jolts, accompanied by a curious and unpleasant whirring sound, followed in turn by a complete stoppage. A dozen heads were thrust inquisitively out of the car windows, and as many voices insisted upand holocausts the traveling public exhibits an astonishing amount of interest in railway concerns, to the great scorn and indignation of all officials 'That engine is a heavy one, and I have seen her make a good fifty miles with a train behind her. This one is a light machine, and I can't promise more than forty at the most. Besides they have the advantage of us in the fact that they have a car attached, and we are running alone.' "'I should suppose that our lightness would be rather in our favor than otherwise,' I responded. "'Got something to balance her," grunted the fireman, sententiously. "'John is right,' explained the engin-

Angered with the delay, and knowing that if we were to be captured at all it must be within the next ten minutes, they were coming more rapidly than ever. We were at the foot of this very up grade where we now are. It extends for nearly three miles beyond Kanakia, and is one of the heaviest in the country. It was at this point that our fate was decided. From the moment we ran up it our light engine began to loose ground hopelessly. Our pursuers were now so near that we could plain-

"'Where are the tallow cans we put aboard? asked the fireman. "'Bravo, John, just the thing!' exclaimed the engineer, as if perceiving a meaning in the other's words which escaped me utterly. 'Captain, those dispatches are safe, and you owe it to John; for I should never have thought of it in a life-time.'

"By this time the fireman was standing at the valves, and the engineer had found the tallow cans, two brass vessels, each holding a gallon or more, with long curved spouts. One of these he gave to me, while he kept the other himself, and we scrambled over the coal to the rear of the tender. I had not the remotest idea of what we were going to accomplish, and there was no time to lose in explanation. "'Now,' said my companion, in an excited tone, lean over and pour your tallow carefully upon the track as we go along. Don't waste a drop, and don't leave a foot of rail unoiled.' "I obeyed him in silence, and soon the tracks for a long distance behind us were shining with the thick, greasy fluid. When the contents of the cans were exhausted, the engineer said, as he arose from his position: I think we have fixed them, John, old man, you can ease her up a trifle. We needn't smash the machine with trying to get away. We shall have no more trouble "I looked back and saw that our pur suers had just reached the oiled section of the track. Their own momentum carried them forward some distance; then there was a harsh, whirring sound, and a furious escape of steam. All was plain to us now. On the up grade, the driver, finding no resistance on the oiled track, simply whirled around, without bearing the enging on a foot. It was as helpless as a hamstrung elephant. "At this moment a shot was fired in the road before us, and a hoarse voice commanded us to halt. Well aware that we were now among friends, our engine was stopped, and the facts explained to the officer in command of the detachment.

"There is little more to relate. Our pursuers and their engine were neatly aptured. Stockton's division made a forward movement and relieved Thomas and his army from their perilous position. As for myself and my brave companions we were not forgotten, and I am glad to say that the inventive John, whose timely suggestions had saved our engine, and perhaps our army, left the service with the rank of captain in the engineer corps." A Ghastly Relic.

It was a fact, at first carefully concealed and known to only a few, that Guiteau's face and features were preserved, as well as his bones, writes a Washington correspondent. I was in the Medical Museum the other day, when a clerk whom I have known intimately for several years said to me 'Would you like to see Guiteau's face?" Though somewhat puzzled as to the object of such a question, I promptly answered in the affirmative. The clerk then led me to a room where a number of large jars, filled with alcohol to preserve various relics, were arranged on shelves. A cover was pulled from one of these, revealing the face and head of Guiteau, just as it looked when placed in the coffin. "That," said the clerk, "is the real face, hair, skin, eyeballs and features of Charles Guiteau. When his body was taken to the Medical Museum it was resolved to preserve not only his skeleton, but his actual features in the flesh. That was done running the knife clear round the neck, splitting the skin in a straight line from the back of the neck to the top of the head, and tearing it off from the entire head, thus obtaining in one piece the scalp and the skin covering the face. To these were added the eyeballs.-This was stuffed with cotton in a way to retain the exact outlines of the murderer's countenance, as well as the expression, sewed together and put in acohol just as you see it now." The head looks as if it were merely cut form the body and placed in the jar, as the surgeon's stiches on the neck and back of the head are not visible. The very sneer of the sensual mouth has been preserved, and stubby hairs of a week's growth that were on the upper lip when Guiteau went to the gallows are still there. The eyeballs, of course, lacking in vital expression, but even they show but little shrinkage. The nose is the only feature the shape of which has not been maintained. It is hind us, and a crackling among the sunken in the middle, as if it had received a blow on the bridge; but the cheeks, the chin, the mouth, eyebrows, eyelashes, hair and everything except the mouth are almost perfect in their lifelike resemblance. Alaska is that vast country forming the northwest portion of North America, which was formerly known on our maps as Russian America. In 1867 it was purchased of the Russian government by the United states for $5,200, 000 and thus a country of more than 580,000 square miles was added to our already immense domain. The sea coast of Alaska by the U.S. survey measurers more than all our Atlantic and Pacific sea coast besides. On the south it begins at British Columbia. north of Oregon, and extends north to Point Barrow on the Artic ocean. The Alaska range of mountains extends through this territory from east to west and reaches out to the Pacific ocean forming the peninsula of over 700 miles in length and then continuing under the surface of the ocean for 1,100 miles occasionally outcropping above the surface in a romantic island, and forms the Aleutian chain of islands whose utmost limit is the island of Attu, near the Asiatic coast. This island is as far west of the city of San Francisco as the coast of Maine is east of said city, so that instead of it being on our western border, it is nearly our central city as to extent of territory. Alaska's population is composed of from 50,000 to 75,000 Indians, with constitutions and habits suited to the climate and innumerable wild animals likewise as to constitution and habits. Its cheif importance, in a commercial point of view, is at present in its minerals, furs, fisheries, berries and forests. Thousands of barrels of cranberries are gathered by the natives and shipped to San Francisco annually. And for the future supply of sponge pine, this is the land of promise.

DISEASES OF THE THROAT. Hundreds throughout the country are suffering from various affections of the throat. Some are only disturbed during the changeable weather of winter and spring, while others are troubled more or less most of the time. In some instances an affection of the throat will exist for a long time without getting in upon the lungs. Not-withstanding this slow progress in some cases, we do not believe there is one case out of ten that will not, if left alone, gradually grow worse, event-ually reach the lungs, and end in consumption.

The symptoms in chronic diseases of the throat are many, and vary according to the nature and locality of the disease. Among the symptoms of this ailment is an alterative of the voice, its tone not as clear as usual, a slight irritation or tickling sensation in the throat with more or less dryness, giving rite to a hacking, hemming, or an endeavor to clear the throat of something which is felt to be an obstacle to a full and free utterance. On attempting to speak there will be an inability to produce a proper sound, until the throat has first been cleared. Loud or long talking or reading produces cough, irritation or dryness of the throat. In the first stages there is no expectoration. Passing from a warm to a cold atmosphere or room, produces difficulty in breathing, and in advanced stages gives rise to more or less cough; the same symptoms follow an exposure to dust, or when walking against the wind. In cold or damp weather, the symptoms are generally more aggravated, the person liable to take cold from the slightest exposure. Sometimes the symptoms disappear entirely, but return again on contracting a cold. It may thus go on disappearing and returning, the patient meanwhile being in a comparatively comfortable health. until the disease has made considerable progress. There is often a tired feeling about the throat, a feeling of discomfort or uneasiness along towards evening. In the early part of the day the tired feeling about the throat is not noticed, as the voice organs have had a chance to recover their power, by rest during the night. In the beginning of the disease no such symptoms are felt, but as it progresses these symptoms show themselves every evening, then earlier and earlier until the voice is clear only for a short time in the morning. The voice becomes more rough, hoarse, and sometimes completely destroved. Sometimes the individual will be able to speak a sentence in an audible voice, while the next one will be in a whisper, or the audible articulation may be cut off in the midst of a single word. Thus the disease may go on for some time, but gradually the symptoms increase, the genearl health, if not previously affected, becomes impaired. Digestion is imperfect, the appetite changeable, the bowels irregular, the kidneys become implicated, the pulse frequent and weak, the skin dry and harsh, the feet are cold, and often a clammy state of the hands. The cough at length becomes severe and trouble some, accompanied with a free, frothy and transparent expectoration. There is soon a gradual wasting of flesh and general debility, and at last the patient is hurried out of life with all the symptoms of quick Consumption. Young or old, who have any trouble about the throat should not allow it to progress, for it is indeed an ailment of a most insiduous character, often making serious inroads upon the general health, as well as parts involved before the person is aware of its danger. It is more dangerous among those disposed to a scrofulous disease of the blood. The course adopted by many physicians for the curing of this disease is a mistaken one, burning the throat with Nitrate of Silver in order to destroy its sensibility, for the cure of this com-plaint. We consider it wrong, and more calculated to aggravate the com-plaint than to subjugate it! If you de-prive the whole throat of strength, as this complaint, by diseasing the blood, weakening the lungs and debilitating the patient. The majority of our best physicians do not deem it worthy of notice, for they know it to be an exploded theory, revived with alleged improvements by medical speculators to impose upon the credulous as a means of pecuniary gain. Medicated air is diseased air. If this ailment is produced by dispepsia, general debility, the excessive use of tobacco, and other constitutional troubles, how can the solution of the Nitrate of Silver applied to the throat, or medicated air breathed into the lungs cure the disease? The cause of the disease must first be removed, or a cure is impossible. By the application of Nitrate of Silver or by medicated inhalation the patient may for a short time experience some relief but the cause not being removed the trouble soon returns. Unless the cause is knon, removed, and nature assisted in her reparative process, the disease cannot be cured. We have treated many hundred cases and never failed to cure when the case is presented before the stamina of constitution is destroyed, and that by means that do not debilitate. We never persuade patients to employ us, to hold out any encouragement of a case without a reasonable hope of success. We have made our visits regularly

A Taste of Free Trade. Bangor knows what it means to have a taste of the free trade business. Her mills are shut down, and it looks as if the stoppage may be permanent. If so, it means that Bangor's progress is killed. The experience through which the bright little town is passing ought to be a lesson to every thinking voter in this country. By one of the laws of last session of Congress the tariff on foreign iron was reduced. That law has shut down the Bangor furnaces. The Decatur Republican gives the reason tersely and to the point when it says: "The nearness to each other of the ore beds and coal fields of England make it possible for that country to furnish iron and the articles manufactured from it at a much less price than is possible in this country." This statement contains the whole question of "tariff on iron" in a nut-shell. With our long distances between the two staples of iron manufacture—fuel and ore—we cannot produce commercial metal as cheaply as England. Take the Bangor furnaces as an example. The ore has to be brought from the upper peninsula. That alone brings an enormous expenditure. Just yet the fuel is attainable from the charcoal furnished in the neighborhood. But as time goes on the supply of that must fail, and Bangor, if her furnaces continued to run, would have to procure fuel from the fuel-producing districts of the nation. Any intelligent man who knows the cost of transportation by railroads can see at a glance that the cost of production must be greater than in England, where the ore and fuel lie almost side by side, Bangor is now bearing the brunt of the battle which must come to every ironproducing town in the country when fuel as well as ore has to be transported.—South Haven Messenger.

Prohibition in Politics. The great body of prohibitionists are Republicans on national issues, and it is only in strong republican states that the prohibition question ever has become a serious issue. Where the prohibitionists have been strong enough to control the Republican party, as in Kansas, Iowa, Vermont and in Massa-chusetts, prohibition has carried the day. Where it has fought independently, it has in no single instance, helped prohibition, while it has often weakened and often defeated the Republicans. In Ohio the Democrats are closely and openly allied with the liquor interests. Yet the course taken by the prohibitionists has thrown the state into control of that party and insured the passage of no laws in the next two years which are unfavorable to the liquor interest. The last Legislature was Republican and, while it was not prepared to accede to all the demands of the prohi-Litionists, it willingly submitted their amendment to the people and taxed higher than it has ever been taxed before in Ohio or out of it. The Scott law is not prohibition, but surely it is better, even in the eyes of prohibitionists, that saloons should be few and liquor costly rather than it should be cheap and for sale at every corner The newly elected Democratic Legislature probably will repeal the Scott law, and certainly will not permit the | a bill of exceptions. test on another vote on prohibition as long as Democrats control the submission of amendments. Prohibitionists may not be able to gain all they wish from the Republicans, but we are yet to learn of a single instance in the north where they have gained anything from their opponents. The Democratic Party all things to David Flewallen, George W. Price and James O. Patterson,—Journal.

The democratic party is wholly dis-nonest on the tariff question, as on all others. In 1844 it carried Pennsylvania for Polk and Dallas on the tariff of 1842, which was a tariff for protection. In 1846 by the casting vote of Vice President Dallas, a Pennsylvanian, it abolished the tariff it was thus pledged to maintain and passed the Walker tariff of 1846, which was hostile at protection. In 1856 the party declared for free trade. In 1868, after a long silence, it declared for a revenue tariff with incidental protection. In 1872 after bawling for revenue reform and denouncing the high war tariff, it nominated for President Hor-ace Greeley, the ablest expounder and most earnest advocate of a high protective tariff the country ever had except Henry Clay. In 1876 the party was for "tariff only for revenue," and in 1880 it was for a "tariff for revenue only." In 1883 it is balancing itself for protection and free trade, favoring each, both and neither. Watterson preaches mornings and Randall in the evenings. The voters may take their choice if they will only vote the democratic ticket. The party has neither principle nor predjudice on the tariff question. It is in favor of whatever the man wants who has not yet voted on election day. It is all things to all men, and issues its promises on both sides of public questions as freely as ever a spendthrift issues his notes. It wants the offices, and if it could get power and should be called on to redeem its pledges it would pay them off

PETER BURNS' barn, in Pipestone township, was burned Thursday, with 30 tons of hay, 500 bushels of oats. 200 bushels of wheat, three horses and a lot of harness. It is not certain whether the fire was started by a tramp or by a stroke of lightning.

THE Board of Supervisors, at the last session, assessed the following taxes to Buchanan township: State, $2,-360.86; rejected, $117.66; county, $2,-308.22: township, $14.072.00, making a total of $18,858.74.

DICK TREVELLICK, of Detroit, the great Greenback manipulator, was advertised for a free lecture in Kinyon's hall last evening, but had a very small hearing. His lecture was in the usual Trevallick style, not to be imitated by any living speaker, and was a complete solution of the vexatious labor question.

L. P. ALEXANDER, P. M.

THERE are a number of parents in this town who would discover some thing to their advantage if they could come out on the street between nine and eleven o'clock, some of these fine evenings, and listen to the language used by their boys, who are carousing about town when they should be at home and in bed.

MRS. J. W. BROCEUS drove to town Saturday, and hitched her horse at the front of A. Willard's, where she was making a call. Soon the narrow gauge engine came steaming along and frightened the horse so that he broke loose from his hitching and from the carriage, after upsetting it, and went home. It was a case when it was fortunate to have a weak harness.

THERE are a few places in the wooden sidewalks about town that might perhaps be somewhat improved by the attention of a street carpenter. Some of the places on Portage street f'rin-Fourth. Mrs. H. L. THE Journal assigns as a reason for the Supervisors refusing to raise money to repair the jail, to a belief that the question of removal of the county seat can be submitted again at the January meeting. The Supervisor from Bertrand gives it as his reason, that the Board could not expend over $500 for that purpose without having first submitted the question to a vote by the people, and that this amount had already been expended. If the Journal entertains any serious fear of the removal of the county seat, let it work for the extension of the narrow gauge past years she has been connected with railroad to St. Joseph, which will place ductions to clubs. THERE appears to be complaint because some of the old boys about town gamble on Sundays, there being a number of "penny anty" rooms about where the aristocrats spend their leisure hours at the quiet but alluring game of draw poker on a small scale. Don't say anything to the officers about it, as it is unpleasant for them to know of such things.

JUDGING from the long list of premiums awarded, the Three Oaks fair was a pronounced success. The most noticable was the premium granted Miss Louise Strehle on two cats. The Sun does not say whether the premium was awarded on the musical qualities, their special beauty, or the good looks of their owner.

THERE was some degree of astonishment excited by the arrest, yesterday morning, of Mr. Samuel Star, of Niles township, charged with raping a thirteen-year-old girl named Otto, daughter of the Otto who was killed in Dayton a few years ago. Mr. Star was arrested by Deputy Sheriff Palmer, about two miles south of Edwardsburg, and is in charge of Deputy Palmer, trying to get bail in $800, to appear before Esquire Dick for examination November 6.

THE editors of the American Agriculturist claim that the November number is not only superior to any other issue of that periodical issued during its forty-three years of existence, evening, and speared a kit of nice | but is far superior to any number of any similar journal in the world. > THE Jackson Citizen, remarking on the fact that the residents of St. Joseph, this State, and Michigan City, just across the line, think a series of big glass factories ought to be started in their respective cities, says: Certainly, why not? They have more sand than they know what to do with, and it is always getting into people's eyes till they can't rest. If they establish factories enough to use up all the sand the citizens along the lake will be able to see their way through the difficulty.

BEFORE the editor of the Mirror writes any more extended discourses on the turning of city filth into a river. making special reference to Chicago, it will do him good to write to some of the people living at Joliet, and learn that the filth from Chicago has not only changed the color of the once clear water of the river at that place to a dirty brown, and made it quite offensive to the smell, but has killed every fish in the river, so that not one can be found there. The Mirror is right, that no one complains, but it is because it would be useless to do so.

THERE is still a lively demand for more houses in Buchanan. Numerous calls for houses to rent and no houses for the renters. One family who | enterprise should receive hearty encame here about two weeks ago propose to take their goods to Niles to store for the winter, while they board here, and in the spring buy a lot and

THE neighborhood about a mile north of town, on the Berrien road, was somewhat disturbed a few nights since, by one of the denizens of that vicinity kicking the female portion of the family out of the house in their night clothes and then firing his revolver after them. Our informant described the fracas as a right lively one, and took pains to say that such work must not be repeated or there would be something done about it. It would naturally seem that once would be enough to cause something to be done, if the report be a true one.

DR. H. A. WOODBRIDGE, an old resident of this place and well known as the occulist, died at his residence, Friday, Oct. 21, after a long and lingering sickness. Aged 75 years. The Premium Engraving for "Peterson's Magazine" for 1884 has been received, and a very beautiful one it is: a picture of a mother carrying her little one up stairs to bed, and called "Tired Out." It is a picture that will go to every mother's heart. It should be had in every family, and would make a very charming ornament for the parlor, if framed and hung up; worth, in fact, a dozen of the cheap, gaudy, vulgar chromos. It can be had, gratis, by getting up a club for "Peterson." "Peterson" is the best and cheapest of the lady's books, the price being but two dollars a year, with great reat this office.

Mrs. Mansfield was one of the early settlers in Buchanan, having lived in the home where she died, over forty-two years. GALIEN, Oct. 22, 1883. MARRIED.—At the residence of the bride's parents, near Galien, on Wednesday evening, October 17, by Rev. S. C. Davis, Mr. Delbert Prince and Miss Emma B. Ingles, both of Galien, Mich. A large number of friends and relatives were present. The esteem in which the bride was held was manifested by the table being loaded with silverware, &c. After the ceremony the guests were seated at a table spread with sumptuous fare. The bridal party left on an early train for their wedding trip. "One Present."

For some time we have wondered what has happened to Dayton that it should have gained the reputation of having one candidate for State prison, two or three for the penitentiary, and a half dozen or more for State jobs at Jackson or Ionia, but the whole mystery is solved by the notice in another column. George Long has been teaching the boys the "manly art of self defence," and so anxious are they to put in practice their hard earned knowledge, they defend themselves on about everybody they meet. As the science of self defence appears to be a very necessary requirement to the editorial fraternity hereabout, we think we shall attend, and advise our worthy cotemporary, Brother Hill, to be there and glean a few points that may be useful in his declining days, as danger increases.

THE St. Joseph Valley Railroad Company have been blasting the rocks in the bluff above their track in the Van Patten bluff, to enable them to straighten the track to one continuous curve along the entire bluff, in place of a alf dozen or more, as heretofore. The giant powder used rattled down some cobble stones about the size of a smallsized house, and of the sand, about fifty car loads at a time. Some of the neighbors are ready to swear there was an earthquake there. The track is being put in first-class order over the entire

The many friends and relatives of Mr. and Mrs. J. K. P. McCollough gave them a pleasant surprise on the 15th anniversary of their wedding day, Tuesday evening last. Congratulations, presentation of several nice and serviceable presents, and partaking of a bountiful supper, was the program of the evening.

In the first place, she craved quiet and seclusion; in the second—well, Mrs. Algernon Mowry was very much ashamed of it. Mrs. Mowry was quite content that "her husband's niece" should pay her board bill. The money was very acceptable to them in their narrow circumstances. But for the life of her

Mrs. Mowry could not see why Joanna preferred to earn her own living when she had a brother able to support her. The little studio was a very pretty place. The bare floor was patched with bright-colored rugs; the walls were tinted a delicate blue, bordered with harmonious bands of crimson, olive and

There was one wide window to the front, and near it, at her easel, Joanna sat one sweet April morning, finishing a birthday card in water colors. From time to time she would pause at her work, and, leaning back in her chair, she would watch the builders over the way. Some one had bought the corner lot and the two lots adjacent to it on the main and side streets. Within the past six weeks a charming little Queen Anne cottage had sprung up there as if Rumor said that it was being built for a gentleman from Washington.

"He must be a man of taste," Joanna thought, as she took in the graceful effect of the building, even in its unfin-ished state. "How I should like to live in a house like that! Ties and terra cotta and low-down grates! That ought to make life worth living!"

Joanna smiled at her own fancies she took up her brush and palette.
When she looked up again the men were hoisting some heavy framework by means of a pulley.

"Look out there!" cried a tall, manly fellow on the roof, who towered head and shoulders above his companions. He was a well-made man, with a rich, bronze skin and a full brown beard that had concealed his finely shaped neck. The only parts of his dress visible were a blue Cardigan jacket and a pair of

"They have got a new workman," Joanna observed idly. "What a splendid fellow he is! I wonder what business a carpenter has with a face and figure like that? Sometimes it seems to me that nature blunders sadly. That stalwart young carpenter disappeared meanwhile, and Joanna left her

"I wish the Palette club didn't meet this afternoon," she muttered as she passed into the next room and began to unplait her long, thick, yellow braids. Her toilet was simple, but somehow it went forward slowly. She felt rather dull that day, and as she smoothed her hair in a leisurely fashion, she hummed to herself-

Heigho! for the holly! Most friendship is feigning— Most loving mere folly!

So she went on, placidly pinning up her braids again, and never once dreaming what had happened since she left the window until her cousin Mabel came bursting into the room with a panic stricken face.
"Joanna," she cried, hysterically

"come on down stairs! One of the workmen has fallen off the new house, and they've brought him over here." "Good heavens!" Joanna exclaimed "Is he killed?"

"I don't know," Mabel answered with a burst of tears. He's all covered with dirt and blood, and-and he just looks Joanna went flying down stairs, and met her aunt in the hall. Mrs. Mowry was on the verge of hysterics. "Do go in and see what they are doing!" she cried. "Good heavens! who would have dreamed of such a thing? And all these men with their muddy boots tramping over my carpet-" "Where have they taken him?" Joanna interrupted, hastily, as she turned away with ill-disguised contempt. "In the library," sobbed Mrs. Mowry. "Oh, I don't know how you can bear to go in! My nerves could not endure it."

But Joanna pushed past her with prompt determination. As she entered the room she saw a little horror stricken group of men in blue blouses and overalls hevering about the lounge on which the injured man was lying. She took several steps toward them and then a low, startled cry escaped her lips. It was the handsome young workman whose splendid physique she had admired only an hour previous, and there he lay, white, crushed and bleeding.

"You have sent for a doctor?" she said, as she dropped on her knee beside the passive, insensible form. "Ŷes'm," answered one of the workmen, who stood at his head. "We sent Who is this man?" she asked ickly. "Where does he live?" "This man here? I dunno, ma'am.

His name's John Ware. He is a new hand. We don't know nothing about him. He was kind of a bossy chap, and yet he didn't seem to know so all-fired much either—did he, Eli?" "Don't you know any of his friends?" Joanna asked. "Where does he live?"

'Deed, I couldn't tell ye, ma'am. I don't know nothing about him." The doctor came, and his verdict was a grave one. Joanna came out of the library with a pale, resolute face.

"Aunt Margaret," she said, quietly, "they are going to take him up to my "What!" Mrs. Mowry screamed, in a spasm of hysterical horror. "Joanna,

"He says he has no friends in the city; and, anyhow, the doctor says it might be fatal to move him from the house. The slightest jar makes him suffer unspeakable agony." "But, Joanna, it is utterly impossible for us to keep him here. Think of the expense. He's only a laboring man,

"I will bear whatever expense his be ing here may entail upon you."

"But suppose he dies on your hands? Or he may lie here for months! For heaven's sake, send him to the hospital."
"I cannot think of doing anything so inhuman. He may occupy my room, Aunt Margaret. Do not distress yourself about it. I will see that he does not occasion you the slightest annoy-

So John Ware was installed in the little bedroom back of the studio, and the doctor came and went for weeks before it was really known that the patient would recover.

Joanna nursed him with untiring de-

"You really think he will get well now?" she said, some days afterwards, with womanly tears in her eyes.

The doctor took her hand and pressed it warmly. "Yes," he answered; "thanks to you." The patient had been sleeping, but now he opened his eyes, and they shone with a glad welcome as they fell upon the pale, sweet face of Joanna. 'I was just saying, my young friend," observed the doctor, releasing Joanna's slim fingers to take up John Ware's finely shaped hand, which was now as white as marble—"I was just saying that you owe your life more to Miss Blight than you owe it to me." The handsome fellow gave her a look so full of gratitude that it was almost admiration. "I shall never forget her," he said, in a musical voice that promised to be a musical voice that promised to be nodded seemingly at the detective. relief's gone. This was the steal, yet ain't got a cent, don't make a whisperer of the night before, now alher, much less repay her." Joanna did not like to be thanked, and she slipped away at the first oppor-tunity; but she carried with her the memory of that handsome head, with its crown of chestnut curls resting softly among the pillows.

The weeks went on, and John Ware was convalescent. It was one midsummer morning that an easy chair while Joanna made feint of working a little in oils. But what did it mean, the tender light that shone in John Ware's eyes as they rested on her lithe, graceful figure clad in pure white? Why did Joanna's hand tremble as it held the palette? And why was her face so often suffused with sweet, concious blush?

"Why don't you come over here and talk to me?" he said, with all the presumption of an invalid. "I have something better to do, Mr. Ware," she answered, mischievously. "But you don't know what you are missing. The little cottage must be complete now. Here comes a wagon load of new furniture." Like every woman (and every man), Joanna had some curiosity, and this announcement brought her to the window without delay. Certainly, there was a wagon load of furniture, and such furniture! In that load, which was the first of several that came that day, there was a beautiful oaken sideboard, exquisitely carved; a. quaint, lacquered cabinet; ebony bookcases, a handsome brass bedstead, and dear knows what not. "They are going to make a pretty home out of it," John Ware observed. 'How do you like the house?" Joanna's eyes sparkled.

"O," she cried, clasping her hands together. "I think it is perfectly charming! But," she added, with sudden gravity, "I should think it would make you shudder to look at it." "Oh! no," he answered with perfect calmness. Then he added, softly, "It might, under different circumstances. But if I had never had that fall I should never had known you as I know you

Joanna did not speak; presently she felt his firm clasp upon her hand. Still be did not look at her.

"You know what has been trembling on my lips for weeks," he said. "I would not ask you to make the smallest sacrifice for me, if you felt it was a sacrifice; but I love you, Joanna, and my happiness will never be complete unless you are my wife."

He had not asked her to marry him; he did not press his suit. He simply told her. She might do as she chose. As for him, he knew that a mere me-chanic had no social right to win such woman as she for his wife; but then-"I could not help telling you," he said, turning towards her for the first time. "The merest galley slave may look at the stars and love them. I can go away-no, no! I cannot go away!

oanna, speak to me!" She was trembling like a leaf. "I know it!" he cried, triumphantly, as he caught her in his arms. "But I was not sure that your love was strong enough to set at defiance the ridicule of society. I did not know that you would stoop to marry a carpenter." "It is not the carpenter I mean to marry," she said, hiding her face on his shoulder. "It is the man." When Mrs. Mowry heard of it there was a scene, of course. In an hysterical burst of tears she declared that John Ware demanded an account of this interview, and heard it with compressed lips and an angry frown. "Joanna," he said, taking her two hands in his, "you must marry me to-day. I have a little money saved, and we will make a home of our own. It will be very humble, of course, but-"I don't mind that," she said, smiling t him through a mist of tears. "You know I am a decorative artist. Besides, I always had a fancy for love in a cottage."

They were married that very evening. John had a carriage at the parsonage waiting to take them away. What extravagance!

"This is a bad beginning." "One isn't married every day," said John, laughing. "I am going to take you to the house of my dearest friend, Joanna."

The carriage stopped in front of a dwelling that was shrouded in darkness. John took a key from his pocket and opened the door himself. "My friend is away," he said. "I have the entree of his house in his ab-of luxury. John had lit the gas up stairs. When she entered the room he had thrown open, he stood in the middle of the floor with his face all aglow. "You like it?" he queried, as he noticed the wonder and delight pictured upon her face. "Joanna, I have deceived you. This is the Queen Anne cottage opposite your Aunt's-this is my house-your house, darling; our home! I am not the poor carpenter you thought me, Joanna. I am J. M.

Joanna could not say a word. "I wanted to see how things were going on, and so I came here in person. But I knew that the men would put their best feet foremost if I came to watch them, so I just appeared on the scene as a new workman, and they never guessed who I was. I did not intend to deceive you. At first I was too ill to explain. Afterwards, Joanna, when I learned to love you-and I learned that very soon, dear—I wanted to win you for my very self, and so I let you think me nothing but a poor carpenter, whereas I am rich, my darling, rich in every way, and, please God, you will never regret your choice." It would take a long time to tell what Joanna said, but Mrs. Mowry never said a word. What could she say?

John and Joanna are perfectly happy in their beautiful home. It is love in a cottage, and there's a great deal of love THE RECONCILIATION OF TWO PRIME DONNE. "But," continued Miss Abbott, "it is not the costly and expensive dresses that are easiest to obtain. Money can get the rich ones, but a large amount of pains, and research and labor are necessary to secure those picturesque suits, the material of which costs but a few dollars. Now, Zelda Seguin has a dress which she wears as the slave woman in Paul and Virginia, the material for which did not cost $1.50, yet she would not part with it for a mint of money, owing to the extreme difficulty in getting it duplicated." "By the by," put in the reporter, "how comes it Mrs. Seguin is with you again? If I remember aright, you folks had rather a stormy difficulty a few years

Miss Abbott laughed heartily, and said: "Yes, we are again the best of friends. We are all great admirers of Mrs. Seguin as a lady and as an artist, and I have always thought her action at the time was only one of the idiosyn-crasies of genius. I do not think we will ever have any difficulty. We have again shaken hands, the 'Abbott kiss' of reconciliation, purified by our friend-ship, has passed, and all is now serene."

Of course it's only a place like New York, London or Paris that will shelter such fellows and give them a chance to live at the public's

We hear of all sorts of development ideas in these days, but the latest is that of a young man of my acquaintance who is naturally modest and re-tiring, and who has deliberately set about curing himself of bashfulness and acquiring cheek by a regular course of expedients for making himself conspicuous and creating remarks. Therefore comes he in and out of church at unusual hours, stands up in the cars and sits down on the boats, scrambles for front seats and places of observation everywhere, and in a general way tries to copy some of his bustling associates. I regret to state that so far his efforts are not promising to avail much toward the end desired. But it must not be inferred that all these young men at the theatres who come in late and leave early and rush for the door at the close of each act, trampling over dresses and French boots and disturbing alike feminine flounces and equanamity, are pupils of his school.

VOLCANIC THEORIES. THE SUPPOSED REASONS WHY THE EARTH

HAPPENS TO "BURST HER BOILER." Chicago Inter Ocean.

The accepted theory of volcanic disturbances and earthquakes is like this: The interior of the earth is like a great reservoir, as it were, of molten matter at white heat. Hottest at the centre. this great mass of fluid fire is gradually cooling on the outer edges, and as it cools there is contraction of the immediate outer crust, and as a result cracks, breaks, and it may be quakes. If the chemical equilibrium of the interior is disturbed by the introduction of some foreign or dynamic material there is an upheaval or an explosion.

If the crack or break in the inner crust should take place under the sea, or in the bottom of a lake or river, the water rushing down through the crevice becomes at once a great disturber of the molten sea beneath. Steam is generated, the mass in the interior is expanded, and, seeking vent, rushes out with tremendous force at the openings in the mountain ridges known as craters, or breaks through the earth's crust at the most vulnerable point and forms a new crater. For example, suppose there is a small leak in the Pacific ocean near the Sandwich islands. A little water forces its way through to the hot interior and furnishes steam enough to set the volcanoes there in motion. Once the impulse is given, immense quantities of lava are thrown out, and this in turn leaves a vacuum, which, in the course of the cooling process, causes a sinking of a considerable section of the bottom of the ocean. If this is accomplished without a break in the crust all goes well, but if there is a break, and a large one, there will be general volcanic disturbances, and volcanoes nearest the scene of subsidence will pour forth steam, mud, dead fish, and ultimately ashes and The foundations will be removed from great sections of coal, rock, and iron, and they will tumble in to feed the flames. If they should be composed of explosive materials the volcano will go off like a tremendous Gatling gun in a running fusilade of thundering peals, and great sections of rock will be hurled scores of miles. As the eruption continues the mountain itself may fall in, the great mass closing the vent for a time and compelling the explosive forces below to find new point

This is the theory of volcanic eruptions and earthquakes in a nutshell, but there are modifications to suit special cases. It may happen, the theorists say, that the water following rock fissures down to the depth of great heat, may strike an unbroken extent of solid rock, hot enough to turn the water into steam. In such a case the steam will be returned through the fissure to the earth's surface and there will be formed a geyser.

QUEER SUPERSTITION IN AN ARMY HOSPITAL.

In one of the general hospitals at Nashville, when the place was first ocpied by Union troops, there was a queer character employed as nurse. He was a large man, troubled with diabetes. This unfitted him for active service, but did not give him the appearance of an invalid. The boys believed that this nurse knew when a man was going to die. Certain it was that when rapid decline in any man commenced the sympathetic old fellow took his place at the bedside of the unfortunate and was most untiring in his attention and kindnesses. In one row of cots he had closed the eyes of four men in death in as many days. The next man in order, going from right to left, grew nervous and was removed out of the row. The second man shut his lips and determined to get well. One night as this man lay thinking over the mys-tery of the "fatal row," and trying to reason about the old nurse's strange instinct, he heard a whisper from the cot on the left, "I say, stranger, if old Fatty comes and sits down by you, hit him one for me, will you? He hangs around for a fellow to die like a dog waiting for a bone." Days went by, and the man with the compressed lips was looked upon as the next victim, and every time the nurse passed the boys expected him to sit down. One night the nurse came through the ward, and discovering that the second man was feverish, picked up a fan and sat down at the head of his cot. Quick as thought the feverish patient sprang up in bed and said wildly, "Take him first," pointing to the first cot. "You old fool, can't you count? You can't jump in this game, old fellow. Clear out, now. None of your sittin' down by me, when it isn't my turn. First relief's gone, second relief's gone, third relief's gone, fourth most a maniac on the subject of the nurse. The surgeon was called and the man was quieted. But even when he was almost well he dreaded the approach of the smypathetic, kind old nurse. Such superstitions were very mon in the hospitals of the army. The Russian Minister to the United States has children enough to require the care of half a dozen nurses

Rev. Father Wilds' EXPERIENCE.

The Rev. Z. P. Wilds, well-known city missionary in New York, and brother of the late eminent Judge Wilds, of the Massachusetts Supreme Court, writes

Massachusetts Supreme Court, writes as follows:

"T8 E. 54th St., New York, May 16, 1882.

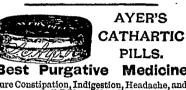

Messrs. J. C. Aver & Co., Gentlemen:
Last winter I was troubled with a most uncomfortable itching humor affecting more especially my limbs, which itched so intolerably at night, and burned so intensely, that I could scarcely bear any clothing over them. I was also a sufferer from a severe catarrh and catarrhal cough; my appetite was poor, and my system a good deal run down. Knowing the value of Aver's Sarsaparilla, by observation of many other cases, and from personal use in former years, I began taking it for the above-named disorders. My appetite improved almost from the first dose. After a short time the fever and itching were also cured by the same means, and my general health greatly improved, until it is now excellent. I feel a hundred per cent stronger, and I attribute these results to the use of the Sarsaparilla, which I recommend with all confidence as the best blood medicine ever devised. I took it in small doses three times a day, and used, in all, less than two bottles. I place these facts at your service, hoping their publication may do good.

Yours respectfully, Z. P. Wilds."

HEART, at the

MAN THINKS HE SEES MONEY. Milwaukee Evening Wisconsin. L. C. Merrick, at one time a well-Great age and painful disease are a sad combination. Yet Mr. Wm. Westfall, formerly of Rock City, Duchess Co., N. Y., now of Washington Hollow, in the same county, came to the office of Dr David Kennedy, the eminent Physician and Surgeon of Rondout, N. Y., some time since, in a condition to excite the sympathy of the most cold-blooded and hard-hearted person in the world We say he came—he was totall, helpless, and bore the weight of 80 years besides. He had suffer d lorg from Retention of 4 rine, and had all the symptoms of an aggravated case of calculus formations in the bladder. The usual instrumental examination revealed the presence in the bladder of a urinary culculus of uncommon size. Dr. Kennedy frankly told Mr. Westfall that, owing to his age and debility, an operation was out of the question, but that he could, by the prescription of "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy," together with local treatment, make him comfortable and leave him to live out all his days. The outcome of this was that the patient enjoys good seath to this day. known tobacconist of this city, who has of late years devoted himself to stock breeding, has on his farm, opposite Gifford's resort, in Waukesha county, one of the most remarkable herds of Shetland ponies ever brought into the United States. The herd numbers about fifty, the little animals being all beautifully built and in vigorous condition. They have been in their present quarters only about a month. They were selected and brought over from the Shetland islands by Max Flowers, a special representative of Mr. Mer-

Jumbo is 30 inches in height, and as fine a miniature model of a stallion as there is in existence. Being from the island of Netland. Jumbo is properly a Netland pony, not, a Shetland. Alexander, a pure Shetland stallion, which is in Mr. Merrick's collection, is a handsome and very valuable animal. The prices which Mr. Merrick secures for the miniature ponies average from $150 upward. He has refused an offer of $500 for a matched pair of the best. When the ponies were brought from Under the hot sun of August, 18%, the village of Dover. N. J., lay still as the sphinx in Fgypt, while Elliah Sharp, of that place, slowly and softly spoke of the past. "Yes," he said. " was in the army and saw many of the sights of those fearful vears. I was finally disclarged from disability, resulting from sunstroke. I came home, miserable in health and spirits; so enfe eld dithat I took cold on the slightes: exposure. Life seemed worthless to me; I lived only in memory." "That was sad enough," I said, dividing my last two cigars. "That's so," responded Mr. Sharp; "Kut I got over it. Outgrew it? Not exactly. When in that condition I began taking PARKER'S TONIC, and my health began to improve right away. I was astonished it it and so was my wife. I piled on he flesh and could eat anything. My ambition blazed up. I could attend to business, and now—excepting that I have to take care about exposing myself to the hot sun—I am as well as I was the day I enlisted. What difference there are in things—guns and bayonets kill; Parker's Tonic saves." Scotland, a month or so ago, their shaggy hair was long and tangled, and to use the expression which was most frequently used concerning them, "they looked pretty rough."

As is not infrequently the case with immigrants, their residence in this country has done much to improve their appearance. In the Shetland islands it is the custom to herd the little animals after much the same fashion as cattle are herded on our western plains. That is to say, they are turned loose and left to shift for themselves. The islands are almost barren of vegetation, and it is not wonderful that, according to pop-ular belief, the only nutriment which the ponies acquire they get from sniffling the wind that blows from more bountiful climes. It will readily be be-lieved that when the ponies arrive here, fresh from such an uncared-for-existence, they do not present an appearance remarkable for sleekness. The members of the Merrick herd, however, after a month of careful grooming, have glossy coats, and look as if they might have been brought up in a lady's lap, like pet poodles. In a few weeks Mr. Flowers will return to Shetland, for the purpose of securing a herd of Shetland cows, which Mr. Merrick proposes to intro-duce into this country. Shetland cows, like Shetland ponies, it is said, are constructed upon miniature models. They are credited with giving a gallon and a half of milk per day and costing nothing to keep. The fame of the elfin herd has spread through all the summer resorts in the neighboahood of the Merrick farm, and when a Wisconsin reporter visited the place yesterday he found a number of curious sight-seers watching the sportive gambols of the ponies and making admiring remarks concerning their beauty and their diminutive size. DOMESTIC LIFE IN THE DES-ERT.

Blackwood's Magazine. Domestic life is not without its drawbacks even in the desert. I was on one occasion invited to the tent of a minor chief, who was my guide and most humble servant. He concocted for my benefit and that of several guests from neightforing tents a brew of very thin coffee with an immense quantity of sugar -a sort of syrup which had hardly any taste save of sugar; and having a small piece of the sugar-loaf left he gave it to me on our parting as the only present he had to offer. We sat in this tent for more than an hour admiring the "masterly inactivity" of the Arabs, who can apparently sit silent and quite unemployed for whole days, and who thus appear to wait with endless patience the day when civilized races shall have worn themselves out by their struggles for existence and the Arab survivors be left master of the field. This inactivity is, however, delusive, for let it be thought that the guest is dosing in the evening, and he may perhaps see these grave, listless men creeping like cats, or hopping nimbly around his person like birds, feeling his pockets with a delicate touch, or endeavoring to abstract his saddle bags from beneath his head. The Arab is, indeed, a continual actor. His haughty, frowning air, his gravity and laziness, his courage and courtesy, are all assumed as a mask, hiding a soul which is often mean, grasping, cowardly and treacherous. His appearance in the eyes of the European is nothing better than a sham, and it is only his brother Arab who knows how to estimate it at its proper value. As I sat reflecting on these matters a noise as of women quarreling arose on the covered side of the tent. My host assumed an injured air and went to pacify the contending parties. His brother, sitting by him, manifested on his countenance a disgust and irritation such as I have rarely seen an Arab betray. The sheikh returned, the quarreling continued, and I en-deavored to console him by the reflection that women always quarreled in all countries in the same way; but at length the brother's patience was worn out, and he arose with a large stone in his hand and looked over the partition dividing the harem from the open part of the tent in which we sat. Without a word he hurled the stone into the unseen, and a sound of wailing took the place of the angry chatter which preceded this assertion of the rights of a guest to peace and quiet during his visit. HOW A MORMON FOUND HIS MULE. Chicago Herald.

In Beaver, Utah, lives Brother Gentry, a latter day saint, who tells the following mule story: "While hunting a stray mule in the hills east of Beaver, I became lost, and after wandering around aimlessly for a couple of days, I rested on the evening of the second, completely exhausted, and almost famished from hunger and think which in this that. thirst. While in this state I saw a bright light illuminate a distant peak, and directly after I heard a voice say, 'Oh, Brother Gentry, come hither and you will find your mule.' Recognizing the voice as a divine command, I did so, and lo and behold, there stood the mule, quietly grazing in a deep ravine, while a bubbling brook made music over its pebbly bed."

One of the most peculiar things con-nected with the electric light machine is the curious effect it has on time-pieces. Placed within a few feet of the positive pole of the electric machine, the watch stops absolutely; if exposed immediately to the negative pole of the machine, it will resume its accustomed ticking, and it is said very little bad effect is noticed. Very many watches have been utterly ruined, however, by careless persons going too close to the machines, through ignorance or the neglect of attendants to warn them of their danger. None of the men employed at the works at the lower falls carry any costly watch, and Superintendent Redmond contents himself with a low-priced piece with American works, which is difficult to get out of order, and which.
