-Merchant Traveler.

John Whitfield's Wife.

John Whitfield was one of those men who involuntarily remind us of a noble old Newfoundland dog; chivalrous to women, gentle to children, and repelling all petty annoyance with a patience that really had something heroic in it. Old merchants with shaven chins, who carried umbrellas and rode to business in the omnibus. called him "sure". Young merchants who drove to their offices in cabs, and thought they were paying commerce a compliment, called him "slow". People generally believed him to be a bachelor, yet he had nothing of that undeveloped, withered, selfish look about him which is usually characteristic of the single state.

I had, indeed, a dim impression that far tack in my childhood, I had heard something about John Whitfield's wife. I once said as much to his head clerk, Jacob Smith, whose assistant I was. Jacob looked up slowly and smiled incredulously. "I have been here, Will Lawson," he said, "just five-and-twenty years, I never saw nor heard tell of any woman since I came." "How old was Mr. Whitfield then?"

"About thirty, I should think. He had just bought this business—came up from New Orleans to buy it." "Ah! He might have been in love and even married before that, Jacob.' "He might, but I don't believe he was. When Mr. Whitfield falls in love, it will be with a woman made to order.

I never saw one half good enough to be his wife." "I called John Whitfield "Uncle John" but he was not really any relation. Forty years previously my father and he had been sworn companions, and in a summer bathing frolic John had once saved father's life. When I left school at nineteen years of age, with a pretty fair record, he took me at once into his warerooms. I did not live with him, nor, indeed, see very much of him outside of business hours; but he occasionally invited me to dinner, and when he did so, he signalized the visit by some such remark as the following: "Will, you have done cleverly lately. Jacob Smith says he can spare you for a couple of weeks' vacation, and here's is a small check to make it pass pleasantly. Your father and I are brothers, you know: I have the right to offer it, He said something very like this to me one hot day in July just before my summer holiday, and then he asked me where I was going. I told him to a little farm-house in the mountains, where I was sure of good fishing. "That is right," he answered, cheeri y. "I like a man who is fond of throwing a line; but, Will, let me ask you something—are there any girls I said I thought so, but had never seen them. "Then take care of yourself. You have had a good education, and a gentleman's home. Don't marry a beautiful ignorant woman; whatever you do, Will, don't make that mistake." He seemed to me quite unnecessari exercised about this subject. He referred to it again and again, and cantioned me, even after he had bid me "good-by, and a happy holiday". However, the caution turned out to be a kind of prophecy. I fell in love with Farmer Jones' little barefooted girl, a beautiful child of fifteen years of age. My two weeks' holiday ited like an enchanted dream, for Nellie and I were together all through the sweet, hot July days. I was so infatuated with her loveliness and simplicity, and so interested in helping her improve her education, that I determined to do a very foolish and unbusiness-like thing-I wrote to Uncle John, and asked him for another week. "Dear Will," he wrote back, "I am glad you said you were so happy, and did not plead sickness or sprained ankle, or some other fraud. I am afraid you have fallen in love-I told you not; but if this is the case, I can't find in my heart to be hard with you. I am an old man now, but I too have been in Arcadia. One week, mind, and no more; and be cautious, my dear Will. Do nothing in a hurry."

Well, all love affairs are pretty much alike. Nellie and I made vows and promises, and exchanged locks of hair. I tried to speak to Father Jones seriously about our attachment, but he only laughed at us, and said Nellie was a child and I was out on a frolic, and he had no kind of doubt but we would both of us forget every word we have said in a couple of months. And though I felt hurt at being treated in such contemptuous fashion, I determined to show Farmer Jones that we were both of us very much in earnest, and had no intention of forgetting. So I wrote regularly to Nellie, sent her books and presents, and was both pained and pleased at the efforts the child made to improve herself. Gradualy there began to dawn upon my mind scheme for her education. I determined to tell Uncle John the whole truth, and also arrange some plan by which she might come to the city and enter some good school. .

I wrote to Nellie at once, and she was enthusiastic on the subject; but it was harder to find the proper opportunity to speak to Uncle John. Indeed it was near Christmas before it came. I had taken dinner with him, and we were sitting silent before the fire. All at once he said: "Will, did you fall in love last summer, as I suspected? Or was it only trout?" "I fell in love." "Does it last?" "I love her more than ever." "Is she pretty?" "I think so, sir. Yes, I am sure she is very loyely.'

"No, sir; she is just a simple, innocent child. She has no idea of life, or "It won't do, Will. Girls of that kind are very pretty to write verses about; they don't answer in real life." "I am sorry you think so, sir. If

He warned me that she was passionate, jealous, and revengeful, and fit for no gentleman to marry. But I thought different. She had a native sense of what was graceful and proper, and was sure that if she was fashionably dressed, and placed in a fashionable world instinctively adapt herself to its ways and habits.

At length her father and I came to open dissension; and he told me, with the rude frankness of his order, that I must leave the house, and speak to Bernice no more. Bernice and I had anticipated this or order, and were prepared for an escape together. In the afternoon, while he was sleeping we took a boat for New Orleans.

As soon as we landed I looked for a clergyman to marry us. We called on several. Some made excuses, and some were from home; but at last, as we rode through a small street, I saw a church door open, and a minister entering. I went boldly up to him, told him I had run away with the lady, and offered him a large fee to be mar-aied without further delay.

He agreed very politely. The congregation were coming in, and many people were present. We took no notice of any one, went up to the altar, and were made man and wife. The service was the Episcopal service, and our marriage certificate was signed by George C. Williams, officiating clergyman. For some time we were very happy. I bought her fashionable clothing and rich jewels, and we traveled about from place to place, Bernice's great beauty attracting attention and remark. At length, being in New York, I thought I would pay a short vist to my native village, and exhibit my youthful bride to my old friends. It was there our trouble began. I knew most of our village girls from childhood, and they came with all the frankness and kindness of sisters to see me. Many of them called me 'John', as they had always done, and there was scarcely a respectable family in the village that did not give an entertainment in our honor. In hotels Bernice had played her part very fairly. She had but little to do but dress well and look handsome, and this she parent. Even her splendid beauty

North, and she felt this dimly, and resented it. Every girl I spoke to became an object of jealous hatred to her, and after one or two outrageous public outbursts of temper Iwas compelled to suddenly leave my friends, without warning and without farewell. But I considered that I knowingly accepted Bernice with all her faults, and I did not re-proach her. Perhaps if I had it might have been less irritating to the proud passionate creature. But I generally sat silent during her outbursts of temper, or else went quietly about my business, until she flung herself at my feet in an agony of reproach and self upbraiding. These scenes once begun, occurred so frequently that I determined to furnish a house, and see if the change of it would interest and amuse her. I bought a lovely place, surrounded with gardens, and had it perfectly appointed. Then I took her there, and gave it to her as her own unconditionally. She was greatly pleased, and for many weeks I was very happy again.

But it did not last, Will: it could not. I prospered in business, became well-known, and was often asked to take part in public dinners and affairs. At first my wife said nothing, and I imagined she had quite conquered her jealousy of me. Would you believe that she was only watching me, and that she was making of my most innocent courtesies dreadful wrongs? I proposed to take her with me. She had discovered her social faults, and she was too proud to attempt to correct them. 'She had been good enough to marry,' she told me, 'and she was just as good then as when she was married.' And this was true, Will; I acknowledged that, though I was getting tired.

I wo years of constant bickering sours the truest love. I left her to her own ways, and I went hither and thither as I wished. Sometimes we had reconciliations and a week or two's perfect happiness, and then some trifling in cident would arouse her anger and jealousy, and for another week or two we were virtually separated. Still I loved her passionately and truly, and I never wronged her even in a thought. I had never then seen any woman half so beautiful, and I have never seen any since to be compared with her. Even her wild, ungovernable nature touched mine as no gentler woman's has ever done, and though there were vile and cross elements in our destiny, none the less Bernice was my destiny—the only woman on earth for me.

riage, and Bernice had been for weeks in one of her most trying tempers. She pleaded sickness sometimes, and in gentler moments hung around me in touching tenderness which even yet makes my heart ache to remember. One night there was a grand ball, and as it had some political significance. I felt compelled to go; neither of us would give way, and I went alone. The ball was in masquerade, and Bernice assumed some disguise and followed me. When I returned home she met me with a passion I was in no mood to bear patiently, for under excitement her want of education was painfully apparent, and I had just left the society of some of the most brilliant and refined women in the world. For the first time I allowed a was personating a clergyman, and so raising money for charitable objects, which of course he appropriated.

He was not a clergyman; he had never had a license; my marriage was null and void. I was in the mood to feel almost exultant. I could tell Bernice now that if I was hateful, she was free to leave me, and that I had no legal claim on her, nor she on me.

that day there was a letter waiting for me from a lawyer in Mobile, that my wife had instructed him to commence suit against me for a separation. I never answered him at all. I wrote a letter to Bernice, Will, which I ought to have been ashamed to write, and sent it to her lawyer, with a request that it should be given to her at once. All that night I thought of what I had done, felt glad of it. For the first time in my life I drank alone, and drank too much. Very early in the morning I fell asleep; but just as the half-awakened birds were beginning to twitter in the trees about the house, I woke-wide awake, Will-as people often do when their souls are aware of some near sorrow. A bell rang loudly and imperatively. I got up at once. I knew instinctively that I was wanted. Before I was dressed my servant stumbled half-asleep into my room and handed me a telegram. It was signed by a woman who called herself Adela Lauve, and said only: 'Your wife is at my home, dying; come at once." What bitter agony now seized me! That dreadful letter! If she got it before I arrived? I could not bear to contemplate such an event. I chartered a special train, and spared no themselves up into the belief that in an average shipload of husbands and wives nine-tenths of them would be glad of a chance of separation, especially if there was a possibility of some-body being killed off and got out of the way. They say, "See the number of divorces." Yes, there are great many. But you forget, dear complainant, that the divorces belong to the category of lurid happenings which bear but a trifling proportion to the average. On the average, husbands and wives are very well pleased with each other. Did you ever think of the difference between the number of applications for marriage licenses and number of applications for divorce? There are 3,000,000 of people in the State of New York, and I should say 3,000,000 of them are husbands and wives. The number of these who are so tired of each other they would be glad to be rid of each other is about as a molehill is to a mountain. Yet the alarmists who read the columns in the newspapers about divorces, fly off into the conclusion that misery is the rule of married life, and that the domestic fabric is ready to crumble. Suppose you take a small section of the population as you come to it. Count every husband and wife of your acquaint-ance. Do you not think nine-tenths of them would stand by each other like the husbands and wives did on the Oregon? Yes, indeed, a hundred times, yes! The quiet, happily married people do not get into the newspapers, nor the dramas, nor the novels. They are not dramatic. They would not be in-teresting, because they are commonplace, but when we come to make up an estimate of human society, we must not leave them out of the count. It is now affirmed that the President proposes to get even with the Senate for rejecting his appointments by not appointing any one to the places until after the adjournment, though the statutes require appointment as soon as practicable. Section 4.716 of the United States Statutes provides that "no money on account of pensions shall be paid to any person or to the widow, children. or heirs of any deceased person who in any manner voluntarily engaged in or aided or abetted the late rebellion against the United States."

Section 3.480 provides that "it shall be unlawful to pay any claim which accrued or existed prior to the 13th day of April, 1801, in favor of any person who promoted, encouraged, or in any manner sustained the late rebellion." It is further provided that "no pardon heretofore granted or hereafter to be granted shall authorize the payment of such account, claim, or demand until this section is, modified or repealed."

In the last Presidential campaign and in the one preceeding, a great many conservative citizens expressed the fear that if the Democratic party secured the control of National affairs that a way would be opened to settle or pay the old claims of ex-Confederates against the government and to provide pensions for the men who were disabled while fighting in the armies opposed to the government, This fear was hooted at by the Democratic leaders, and every stump speaker of prominence put himself on record in the denial that anything so unreasonable would be thought of by the Democratic party. This, however, did not quiet the fears of the people in the West, but it seemed to have some difference in States like New York. There were men there who had been Republicans, and who had been earnest Union men, who ridiculed the idea of there being any danger in that di-

It appears, however, that the House Committee on the Judiciary has recommended the very thing that the loyal people feared the Democratic party would do. That is to say, the committee has instructed Mr. Oates to report favorably his bill to repeal the sections of the Revised Statutes referred to above. The Democrats on this committee are Tucker, of Virginia; Hammond, of Georgia; Culberson, of Texas; Oates, of Alabama; Rodgers, of Arkansas; Bennett, of North Carolina; Collins, of Massachusetts; Seney, of Ohio, and Eden, of Illinois. The Republicans on the committee are Taylor, of Ohio; Parker, of New York; Ranney, of Massachusetts; Hepburn, of Iowa; Stewart, of Vermont; Caswell, of Wisconsin. The Chairman of the committee is Mr. Tucker, and it will be seen that it is essentially a Southern committee recommending a measure to re-peal a law that discriminates against ex-Confederates.

This is the first step in the Democratic platform. If the laws specified are repealed the way is open to such legislation as the Democratic majority in Congress may please to take. Just what will be the next step it is not easy to say, but the first one is a long stride toward accomplishing what the loyal people of this country have believed that the Democratic party meant in the end to accomplish. If these laws are repealed, the claims of all those who took up arms against the government or who favored the rebellion may be presented and paid. The repeal of the laws will, in short, open the gates to all of those who hold claims for damages against the government for the effort it made to preserve the Union.-Inter Ocean.

The World's Wheat Supply. Statements derived from official sources place the total wheat product of the world last year at 2,100,000,000 bushels, Of this aggregate Europe is credited with raising sixty per cent. largely in Russia. British India pro duces fourteen per cent. The exporting countries altogether raise almost one-half of the total of the world's product. The separate figures are given as follows: Great Britian, $2,000,000; Russia, 200,000,000; Chili, etc., 25,000,000; Australasia, 37,000,000; India, 288,000,000; United States, 357,000,000; and Canada. 35,000,000. ment shows that there is an ample supply on hand to meet every demand that will be made on our surplus. These totals of the crop of the world show that there is far from being an over-production of wheat, and that there is no likelihood of any such thing happening. The enormous aggregate given is, after all, but a bushel and a half to each inhabitant in the world for a year's supply, while the consumption of the English speaking people alone is about five bushels per head per annum. If, then, all people should be induced to use more wheat for food, double and treble the largest total product ever reached could be consumed for bread and seed. The value of wheat before it was moved last year was equal to $1 per head for the entire world's population. Evidently, there is yet room to develop trade and open the way to dispose of

SOME FACTS ABOUT THE HINDOOS.

Synopsis of a Missionary's Lecture of Their Beliefs and Characteristics. The Rev. Dr. H. L. Scudder, lecturing on India, said the Hindoos had two great beliefs. One was the doctrine of fate and the other the transmigration of souls. According to the former man was a mere puppet, for with them everything was settled by fate and everything was the result of what they termed the decree of was fate that impelled him, and he had to do good or ill as it was decreed. The doctrine of transmigration was the hardest thing to get out of their heads. They believed that a good life here meant an exalted birth and high station in the other world. If a man lived a mixed life here he would come back as a man again, but if his life were totally bad he would come back as a tree or mineral. Their code prescribed a special birth for each sin. One who stole grain would be born a rat, if he stole fruit he

Visit to a British Archdruid. To-morrow (old Christmas Day) is the eighty-fifth anniversary of the birth of Myfyr Morganiog, archdruid of the British isles. Wales has never been without its representative of the gwyddon (chief bard or laureate of Britain), whose duty it was to sing with his harp that ancient tune known as "The Monarchy of Britain" before the army on the eve of its entering upon a campaign. The old religion becoming unpopular, by degrees his office was forgotten. On the evening of his natal anniversary the archdruid was visited by one of his disciples, who thus narrated what took place: "He sits to-day a white-haired and white.bearded aged priest, alone in an upper chamber in a street in Pontypridd. I took with me to him a presentation from a most generous, noble lord. It was the gift of a Christian chieftain to chief druid. The moment I entered the lonely cell of the Druid, the noble old man with flowing beard stood up to meet me, and, with extended hand, said, with sparkling eyes: (Blwddyn newyd dda' (good new year). He then uttered a Druidic prayer for all blessings to descend on the house of Bute, and the home of Sir W. T. Lewis was not forgotten by him who is preparing for 'cylch y gwynfyd' (the circle of the holy world.) "I ventured to ask him what were his views respecting a future state of existence. His reply was: My father and my mother are well able to provide for me, and in them I trust and not in any one else.' I asked him what he mean by his 'father and mother;' he replied that the Creator was his father and Anian was his mother. By Anian he seemed to mean the fecundating power in the earth, revealing her efforts in the springtime of the year. This he said is the Venus and the mother of the gods in ancient mythology. He seemed to regard all creeds as jumbling confusions of Druidism, and to think that his mission is the world was to restore the primitive order of ancient times .-Pontypridd Cor. London Telegraph.

A Pretty Woman's Secret.

Fear of discovery, when she resorts to false hair and dyes, is a source of constant anxiety to her. The very persons from whom she most desires to hide the waning of her charms are the ones most likely to make the discovery. But there is no reason why she should not regain and retain all the beauty of hair that was her pride in youth. Let her use AYER'S, HAIR VIGOR, and, not only will her hair cease to fall out, but a new growth will appear where the scalp has been denuded; and locks that are turning gray, or have and locks that are turning gray, or have actually grown white, will return to their pristine freshness and brilliance of color. > IT is becoming painfully evident that the Board of Supervisors made a sad mistake when it failed to submit to a vote by the people the question of removal of the County Seat to Benton Harbor, Bakertown or some other point. The great railroad excitement and fair promises that were made at the time the question was being discussed have completely died out, so that nothing whatever is being heard from it. The promises and excitement served their purpose and, of course, were of no further use. Monday afternoon, E. Allen, Homer Bevier, Chas. Case and Wm. Vanderbeck came upon a dead man, Mr. Allen first making the discovery. There were no papers or anything upon his person whereby identification could be made. He was a man about 60 years of age, with white beard, and would weigh about 180 pounds. He had two fingers off up to the first joint on the left hand, and is supposed to be a tramp. The cause of hisdeath is not known, butthe general supposition is that the man was attempting to cross the marsh when he got mired in, and in his efforts to extricate himself he perished, and had undoubtedly been dead four or five days. A jury was hurriedly summoned and an inquest was held late in the evening, and our four gunners were on a dreary marsh over a dead man's body until near midnight. Tuesday morning Gordon Huntley drove in and obtained a coffin at the expense of Cass county, of undertaker Paul Skalla, and the remains were deposited in Howard township cemetery.

occasion was furnished by Buchanan We note that several new wooden sidewalks are being built in various parts of town. And if we mistake not, there is something like a demand by the council that all walks shall be built of either brick, cement, or stone. There appears to be some serious mistake about the manner in which our sidewalk business is being conducted. In many places the village builds the walk and keeps it in repair, and as a consequence the walks are uniform in all parts of town, well made and in good repair. In Dowagiac the tar and gravel walk, that has fallen into such disrepute here, because of poor workmanship and shiftlessness bordering on dishonesty in its manufacture, has been adopted, and most excellent walks are made in all parts of town, lately a wide one on the business street, as firm as stone and cheap. Here each property owner suits his own peculiar fancy, and we find brick, cement, boards, coal tar, and gravel in a single block. One above high water mark and the next a foot or more below. CHARLES BISHOP,

A PRIVATE RESIDENCE TO BE BUILT FOR THE PRESIDENT.

The Early History of the First National Enilding in America-Designed After n Dublin Paluce-Its Attempted Destruction by British Soldiers.

WASHINGTON, April 6.—Senator Morrill's bill, which has been reported favorably by the senate, and is likely to pass both houses, is designed to furnish the president an appropriate dwelling place. The pre ent White House has long since been inadequate to the demands of a president's residence. Out of the thirty-one rooms in the building, there is but one room on the first floor, the family dining room, and six chambers on the second floor are all that is left for the use of the president's family. The rest are devoted to the requirements of official receptions, and to the executive offices.

This is a very different state of affairs to the days of that good housewife Mrs. John Adams, who used to have lines swinging from one pile of lumber to another in the Fast room, and hang the clothes there to dry

THE WHITE HOUSE IN 1800. The president's house has been the scene of more changes, and business of importance to the welfare of a greater number of people has been transacted within its walls during the past eighty-six years of its existence than in any building in the world. It was the first public building erected in Washington. In March, 1792, the commissioners having charge of the new capital city advertised in the New York and Philadelphia papers "for a plan for a president's house to be creeted in the city of Washington," offering as a prize for the competition the liberal sum of $500 for the accepted design. The successful one among the fifteen applicants was James Hoban, a roung Irishman. He pleased the commission ers so well by his talent that they gave him a large salary to superintend the construction of the house. Hoban's plan, it was afterwards found, was not such an original conception as they at first supposed, for he closely cepied the plan of Duke of Leinster's palace at Dublin, so that the present White House is almost a duplicate of that palace. The above sketch of the "President's palace," as it was then called, has been handed down to us from those days. A fitting accompaniment to it would be this extract from a description of the city by John Cotton Smith, at that time member of congress from Connecticut. He wrote: "One wing of the Capitol only had been erected, which with the president's house, a mile distant from it, both constructed with white sandstone, were shining objects in dismal con trasts with the scene around them. Instead of recognizing the avenues and streets por trayed on the p'an of the city not one was visible. The Pennsylvania avenue, leading as laid down on paper, from the Capitol to the presidential mansion, was nearly the whole distance a deep morass covered with elder bushes, which were cut through to the president's hou e." Here is a contrast with the Pennsylvania avenue of to-day.

1792 the corner stone of House was laid, and though the neighboring hills of Maryland and Virginia were full of excellent marble they were unaware of it. and a sandstone from a Virginia quarry was used in the walls of the building. This sandstone was afterwards found to be such a poor building material that it became necessar to give it each year a coat of thick white paint to keep it from crumbling away. The house is 170x86 feet in dimensions. The original White House cost about $250,

000, and when John Adams and his family first occupied it, but six of its rooms were furnished. In 1814, on the invasion of the city by the British troops, President Madison fled from the city to a place of safety in Maryland, but his wife, Dolly Paine Madison, remained to fulfill an engagement for a dinner party which she had made, not believing that the British would reach the city before the next day. While the guests were assembled at the banquet a servant rushed in with the startling intelligence that the enemy was on Capitol hill. Then there was a samper. The guests fled in all directions and half an hour later the British soldiers were in the house. Finding a glorious dinner spread in the east room they regaled themselves first, then pillaged the house and set fire to it. The wines which the soldiers found in abundance at the described feast so fired their brains that they made a bungling job of the inc ndiary portion of their raid and but little damage was done to the building. It was not until 1817 that the house was restored.

When General Jackson was president in 1820 the grand portice was added, with its Ionic columns, which add such a grandear to the building. Sin e "Old Hickory's" time no other important change has been made in the building, except refurnishing and its annual coat of paint. These expenses, together with the original cost of the building, feet up to nearly $800,000.

THE SITE FOR THE NEW PRESIDENT'S HOUSE The site for the new building proposed by Mr. Morrill's bill is located directly south or in the rear of the present White House. At appropriation of $300,000 is asked to begin the erection of a building precisely similar to the present one and to be connected with it by a broad corridor, the new building to 1 used as the president's private residence and the old one for the executive offices. While the bill is before congress there will be considerable chaing of the members advocating it, on the ground that they are only the ones who possess the "presidential bee" and are voting to feather their future nest.

THE SALVATION ARMY

WHO PURPOSE CARRYING OUR CIT-ADELS OF SIN BY STORM.

An Interview With Gen. Moore, Commander of the American Salvation Army-A History of This Wonderful Organization and Its Founders. NEW YORK, April 6.—There are few newspaper readers who have not heard of the campaign against old "Nick," which is being carried on by the Salvation Army on the Atlantic seaboard.

Your correspondent met recently Gen.
Thomas E. Moore, the commander of the American Salvation Army, who talked freely of the plans and methods of their forces, from which the following was gathered:

GEN. THOMAS E. MOORE. No one would suppose to look into the pleasant face and mild eyes of Gen. Moore that he would be able to cope with such a crafty and treacherous enemy as his is said to be. Nevertheless, I question if the enemy has a more thorough knowledge of the weak nesses of the human family than this Gen. Moore. He was for a time an outfitter, or something of the kind for the British army, and there he saw how men would scramble for the privilege of collisting as soon as the prospect of a war became known, and often the more bazardous the undertaking appeared the more eager were men to risk their Here were men forsaking business and home, often encouraged by their wives, to fight England's senseless battles in the torrid heat of Africa or among the fevers of Asia. Moore saw this fondness of man for noise and show and excitement and conquest could be turned to account in Christian warfare. It is said that it was Mrs. Booth, the wife of Gen. Booth, of the Salvation Army in England, who first suggested the idea. She is a born Yankee, and having witnessed how men, sensible enough at other times, through the simple agency of a drum, fife and torch light procession, during one of our political campaigns, will become so enthused as to carrynighs, will become so entities as in-accept any political doctrine their leaders give them. Here was the suggestion for a novel Christian campaign. Gen. Booth being a thorough soldier, as well as a clever business man, modeled the scheme after the plan of an army, adopting the same terms throughout as being ones with which the masses were already familiar. Gen. Moore, the outfitter, designed the costumes, and thus was this army organized. Gen. Moore says the "hidea" originated with the apostles, was taken up by Ignatius Loyola in the sixteenth century, but revived in its fullness by William Booth in 1865 in London.

The army overrun England in fifteen years, when they undertook the conquest of this country. In 1881 the invaders landed on our coast and effected a footing in Baltimore. To-day they have constructed forts and barracks in all the principal cities east of the Mississippi, though their skirmish lines extend far beyond, one outpost having been effected in Idaho.

K. LIGHT. Stonewall Jackson." "Kansas Jack." Out of some 300 officers stationed in the 50 posts in this country are selected two of the typical ones. Capt. Westbrook was one of the first Salvation "lassies" to land on our shores. She is not possessed of a very liberal education. Grammar and she are perfect strangers, and though she plays fast nd loose with her h's she is a worker has not ceased shouting since the day she lande l. Field Inspector and Treasurer Milton K. Light, strange to say, is a converted

New York drummer. Until 1884 the Salvation Army in this coun try was under the charge of Gen. Booth of England, Gen. Moore being simply a commissioner. When it became necessary to acmire land here, on which to construct forts. Gen. Moore found it would be impossible for Gen. Pooth, being an alien, to hold the property in his name as he does all the possessions, amounting to millions, in England. So he broke off all connection with the English forces and has had his army incorporated under the laws of the state of New York, their property being held by five trustees. He also abandoned many of the "dime museum features" of the meetings. "Ash Barrel Jimmy," "The Converted Seal," and like curiosities are exhibited only by the American branch of the Englisharmy, which is also aporting with wonderful species hare When a convert enlists in the Salvation Army he does so on the condition that he obey his superior absolutely. He is not to expect any compensation for his services. He must even supply his own uniform, and must keep himself in condition to fight, not only all summer but night after night as long as he lives, on the principle that the enemy never sleeps, therefore he cannot. After a long and severe trial the recruit or cadet may be promoted to the rank of lieutenant and ater to captain, when he is entitled to draw pay at the rate of $5 per week from the profits of the fort's post at which he may be placed. The army funds are derived from collections, which are an important feature of the war-fare. The income from this source is about $75,000 a year.

When a raid is contemplated on a new town, a captain, Ecutemant and cades are ordered to advance on it. They secure t "barracks" in the town, after which they parade the streets with a hanner and drawers If they are arrested and locked up so much the better, it attracts attention. Notoriety is half the battle won. When the barracks are reached the crowd follows, and then the battle begins in earnest, ending sometimes after milnight. Next day a report is sent to headquarters of the number of prisoners cap-

The Mysterious Amusement Which Is Fascinating Ohio People. Many of our readers will still remember planchette, the strange little heart-shaped board with a pencil at its point which used to walk over yards of paper and write no end of sense and nonsense if the finger tips of two persons touched the upper surface of the Planchette had its day, and mostly died out. But the same mysterious force which used to impel it is moving now another kind tics of eminently sober and respectable Ohio people on their heads.

You see how it is made. A bit of board, say ISx20 inches, is lettered, rather large, with the alphabet, A, B, C, D, etc. The letters are put a small distance apart. At the upper corners of the board are written the words: "yes" and "no," the "yes" on the left, the "no" on the right. On the left and right hand lower corners respectively are written "good evening" and "good night" Underneath the letters of the alphabet are the figures in a row, the whole arranged like

Then a tiny table is made with four legs. It is three or four inches high and very thin and light. Two persons sit opposite each other and take the Loard upon their knees as in the picture. The little four-legged table is placed upon the board. The two persons

THE TALKING BOARD The two sit down and become quiet, asking the question: "Are there any communications?" After a few minutes the little table begins to move over the board. It is an intellig nt, or at least, a semi-intelligent force that guides the table, for it answers and again it will write real information. The table spells out sentences in this way.
When a question is asked, the table moves towards the letters, and the foot stops upon the first one of the sentence to be written out. Then it passes to the next one and the next and so on, with more or less rapidity. A gentleman, who has experimented with the thing, says: "Sometime the table will cover two letters with its feet and then you hang on and ask that the foot be moved from the wrong letter, which will be done."

One man who thought his family was spending too much time over the talking mahine burned it up. Then he left home journey. When the talking board could not be found some one made another, and the nt went on as before. To the ques tion what had become of the other board the answer was given, "Jack burned it up," which somewhat astonished Jack on his re-

The questions may be asked mentally, even by persons sitting in the room several feet away from the operators, and the answers are given just as readily. In some cases remarkable and truthful revelations are said to have been given about living persons. But it is not well to give too much heed to these revelations.

Bernard Macauley. Many an old theatre goer will hear with a melancholy feeling of the death of this well known actor. A man of splendid physique, he ought to have been in his prime, for he was not as old as Henry Irving or Edwin Booth. But he early contracted a passion for drink, which shortened his days at last. Only for this he would have reached a high place among interpreters of the drama. Asit was, Le won distinction. He died of Bright's disgase at St. Vincent's hospital New York

BERNARD MACAULEY. Bernard Macauley was born in New York city in 1837. In 1864 he appeared in that city as Armand Daval to Matilda Heron's Camille. FORT BOWIE, ARIZONA.

The Station to Which Captain Crawford's Body Was Brought. place of considerable importance this old fort is becoming latterly. It is from this point that news of the hostile Indians is sent to Washington, when any news arrives that can be depended on for two days at a time.

time day Geronimo is captured, the next day

he escapes. Then he is recaptured, and, presto! next day he is gone again.

Here at this fort, which you see in the picture, he promised faithfully to appear and deliver himself up to the United States authorities and thereafter keep the peace. Instead of doing so, he fled to the mountains as fast as he and a few trusty braves could get away, considering that they were loaded down with 200 rounds of ammunition each. I was the third time Geronino had broken his solemn premise to the United States government. He is as treacherous as a weasel. The safest way to dispose of him next time he is caught will be to shoot him on sight. But when will he be caught to stay?

FORT BOWIE This old fort, to which brave Capt. Crawford's body was brought by slow, sad marches, has a history of its own. The story dates as far back as the second year of the late civil war. In July, 1862, Gen. Carleton camped here on his way east to the war, with a body of California volunteers. He stopped her because water was struck at this spot Water was more precious than gold on those long desert marches. It was necessary to guard the springs from the Apaches, in order to keep the route of travel open. So a com-pany of soldiers was left, and the place was named Fort Bowie. There was not a recommendation to the spot except that springs of fresh water were there. It was down in the heart of a savage, desolate mountain region. The mountains slope to the north. Their sides are covered with sage brush and cactus, and the ground is wild and broken with rocks.

The place is on the military route from Tucson to Santa Fe. The soil is like much of the rest of the country hereabouts, only barren from want of irrigation. As that is being accomplished the region of what the old geographies called the Great American Desert is gradually being transformed into grain fields and gardens. They say the word Arizona means "arid zone."

Bowie is the oldest garrisoned fort in Arizona. At the outbreak of the war the other military stations were abandoned, and when Gen. Carleton left the little company of California volunteers at this place in 1862 there was not a United States soldier in the territory. The Apache Indians were as hostile to the government then as they are now, and when they saw the other forts abandoned it is said they fancied they had conquered the United States. It is to be hoped Geronimo's repeated escapes will not incline them to the same opinion now.

Fort Bowie has been greatly improved in the last few years.

The New York Mercantile Exchange. The experiment is going to be tried in New York of transacting one hundred different branches of trade under one roof. It is to be a wholesale bazaar, on the principal of one of the retail shopping marts, only that here large quantities of goods will be sold, and then only through samples. If the scheme is successful it will work a revolution in some of the methods of New York business. The promoters of the enterprise have so much faith in it that they have just completed a building for the purposes of the exchange, of which the accompanying cut is an excellent

THE EXCHANGE BUILDING. April 7, was the day set apart for the dedication of this building. It is situated on the corner of Hudson and Harrison streets in the midst of the wholesale grocery and produc district This exchange, though the youngest, promises to be the liveliest of them all. It was organized in 1873 by a few dealers in dairy roducts; it now numbers some 800 member Its success is largely due to the catholic spirit of its governing committee. They realize that this is the age of combination and co-operation and consolidation, and they hope to have the sellers of butter and boots. of dry goods and drugs, as well as grocers meet together on the same floor for barter and ex-change and the prices which rule here will likely rule the country.

A Red Flag Before a Mad Bull. I can bardly understand how the Morgan syndicate are gifted with so little foresight and common sense as to attempt to put up the price of coal in the face of the stand taken by the labor party, more especially when they show such enormous power. Some weeks ago I ventured to point out to these capitalists that labor was beginto assert its power, and yet find that a combination, representing a capital of over $600,000,000, are banded together with a view to advancing the price of one of the necessities of life. It looks as if they were shaking a red flag before a mad bull, and if ever the bull does get among them there will be a lively rattling of old bones.— Financier in Town Topics.

REV. W H. MILBURN.

the Doughty Congressional Chaplain Who Made the Famous Prayer. Rev. W. H. Milburn has gone and done it. He is only less of a sensation than "'Ostler Joa" was last week.

The gentleman is the chaplain of the United States house of representatives at Washington. He is known the country over as "the blind preacher," from having quite lost the sight of one eye, and almost that of

Blindness did not prevent him from studying for the ministry as soon as he was old enough, however.

The future chaplain was born in Philadelphia in 1823. When only 20 years old he was admitted as a preacher in the Methodist Episcopal church. He was a famous itinerant through the southern states. It is said that he traveled in that capacity over 200,000 miles. Nor is the present his first experince even as chaplain of the house of representatives. He filled that office thirty years ago under Buchanan. After his term of service was over there he went to England and lectured with great success. He is an cloquent and attractive speaker. The fact of his blindness adds an interest which has a touch of romance to his ministerial labors. Rev. Mr. Milburn is also well known as a writer, having published several books, mong them "Rifle, Ax and Saddlebags," and "Pioneers, Preachers and People of the Mississippi Valley.ⁿ

He is accustomed to doing unusual things, as also to taking his own head for things. Once he took it into his head that he would not be a Methodist preacher any more. Then he had himself confirmed in the Episcopal church. But whether there was not enough emotional religion in the Episcopal fold, or for some other reasor, he was not satisfied there and returned to t e Methodist denomi-

As chaplain of the house, he is accustomed to inform the Almighty of the sins of the American people in the most vigorous and annistakable manner. The prayer which has stirred up so much comment was one in which he prayed the Lord to rid the land of brokers and stock gamblers and other people who do not earn their bread by the sweat of their brow.
Chaplain Milburn is now physically, although in his 64th year, as strong and ro-bust as most men of 30, and his intellect is of more than common power. more accurate descriptions of Westminster Abbey, Cologne Cathedral, Notre Dame and World monuments he has visited than can the majority of those perons who have not been dependent on other people's eyes and on their sense of touch. He can describe the rocky outlines and mountainous declivities of the Sierras and of the Rocky mountains, and the picturesque beauties of the Blue Ridge with a force and vigor combined with accuracy rarely equalled, even by writers who still retain their sight, while he has been blind since he was 5 years old.

The reverend gentleman is of tall and commanding presence. Broad chested and inclined to stoutness, he is the picture of health. A full, untrimmed gray beard floats way lown his vest, while his black hair, streaked with silver, is brushed back from his high forhead and hangs in bushy luxuriance upon the collar of his clerical coat. His stronglymarked features bear a kindly expression, and are every now and then lit up by a pleasant smile. While talking he fixes his eyes upon the person whom he is addressing and the sightless orbs appear to look straight into the soul of his listener. He is a most entertaining talker, and one of his favorite hobbies is the subject of health and its promotion. He is a very Jew in his selection of food, positively eschewing all hog meats, and he treats himself to a regular course of currycomb and rough towel, cold water, oil and sunbaths every morning. As he himself says, he is one of the best grouned men in the

The inventor of the Pan Electric telephone and the head naturally of the companies formed in opposition to the Bell Telephone company is J. Harris Rogers. He is the son of Dr. J. W. Rogers, a graduate of Princeton and a poet. Of his son, J. Harris Rogers, the inventor, a correspondent says "he is in the neighborhood of 28 or 30 years of age. He is tall and slim, with a large head, something the shape and type of Poc's. His forehead is very broad and high, his eyes are deep set, his nose is straight, while his thin-lipped mouth is shaded by a light brown mustache. The lower part of his angular face is smooth shaven. J. Harris Rogers was educated in

J. HARRIS ROGERS. Smithsonian institution. Young Rogers has a perfect lignity of manner, and one of the most musical of voices. He is the very opposite of his father. He is as re-cryed and cool as his father is expansive and excitable. He is one of those types of young men who are not found outside of the south. He is mild mannered, quiet, almost meek in appearance. A man who would never provoke a quarrel, but who would not walk one inch to avoid one. In peace he is dove-like; in a quarrel he is tigerish. His devotion to his father is one of the most marked traits of his character. The two are almost inseparable. They never act without consulting each other, and if they ever want to have a jolly time they go out together instead of hunting up strangers. J. Harris Rogers has undoubted talents, and will cut a still larger figure in the history of our

MISS KATE FIELD.

Sketch of the Lady Who is Lecturing on Mormonism. By the way, why is it necessary for a newspaper whenever it makes a notice of Kate Field's lectures on Mormonism, to invariably preface the notice with the appouncement that Katie is no longer so young as she once What has her age to do anyhow? It does not appear that the lady is seeking for any man to marry her. No doubt a woman as bright as she is could have had a husband long ago, if she had wanted one. It does not appear, either, that she pretends to be any younger than she is, or cares who knows that she is nearly or quite 50. If her lectures are stirring public attention, as they are, if they are witty, instructive and on a very important subject, as they also are, is not that enough? Rate Field will be interfaining and a woman worth knowing when she is 100 years old. So give us a rest on her age. Come, now!

KATE FIELD Miss Field was born in St. Louis, Mo. Her father was Joseph M., an Englishman, and a talented author and actor. But his chief claim to distinction is that he was the father of Kate.

The lady was educated in Massachusetts and in England. Abroad she made the acquaintance of distinguished literary people. She was a favorite of Walter Savage Landor, and she cherishes pleasant personal reminiscences of that old lion of the English world of letters.

Kate has been making a stir in the world for a quarter of a century now. She has been reader, actress, business woman and lecturer. In Great Britain she carned a pile of money in a way which is a real credit to this clever woman. It was when the Bell telephone was first invented and put upon the market over the water. Professor Graham Bell wished to introduce it throughout the United Kingdom. Miss Field traveled with the invention from city to city, exhibiting it and lecturing about it. In he clear words and musical voice she explained the wonders of the new machine. Thou sunds of people heard her, and were captivated by both the invention and the girl lecturer. The tour was a great success. Miss Field took stock in the telephone company for her pay, and soon was worth $40,000. The story should have stopped there and it would have been a good one, but the talented young woman came back to her own country, embarked much, if not all this bravely earned money in a co-operative dress associa

So she had to start out out in the world and go to earning money over again. She has been lecturing throughout the country this year on Mormonism, and is just carrying on the agitation in Washington, in the hope of keeping congress awake on the subject. She has been in Utah personally, and investigated the much-wiving fraternity. The full horrors of the system, she assures us, have never been revealed to people in the states. Mormonism is blacker than it is painted.

The New California Senatof. Being a Californian, of course, he is no end of a millionaire. Governor Stoneman, of that state, appointed him United States senator to fill the place left vacant by the death of John F. Miller. The term expires in March, 1887. A senator from any of the mining states who was not a millionair would be a curiosity. Mr. Hearst was Gen. Stoneman's own rival for the Democratic nomination for governor of California. He is an active Democrat, and was Senator Leland Stanford's opponent for senator Both men will now find themselves in the senate together. Fate arranges curious surprises.

Hearst owns great mining properties. He also owns The San Francisco Examiner and has a finger constantly in California politics. He went across the plains as a pioneer in 1850, from the east, and began life as a common laborer. The first money he made he saved and went into partnership with two men named Haggin and Tevis.

GEORGE HEARST. The firm began operations immediately by buying and jumping mining claims. They were shrewd bargainers, and in time all became wealthy. Senator Hearst is one of those great laudholders to whom the signs of the times seem to give warning to pack up and go. He owns 40,000 acres of some of the finest farming lands in California, near San Luis Opisbo. His wife went to Washington at the beginning of the winter as plain Mrs. Hearst. She is still there. She received a dispatch the other day that she was now Mrs. Senator Hearst.
Senator Hearst has lived mostly among the mines, and rather prides himself on his homespun ways. While a man of power and influence, he will make rather an eccentric addition to the senate. The Senatorial Photographs Senator Evarts wears a hat of the period of 1840, which he hangs on the extreme posterior part of his intellect, like a knob. The lower part of his face looks as if it had dried up in the hat and would drop out if it wasn't for the skull. Senator Harrison looks as if he had been made by contractors at different times and the plans did not coincide. The contractors for the upper part laid out the work for a big man, with a big head and torso; but the substructure man erect a short pair of stou dumpy legs that make him look like a bus of himself.—Toledo (O.)
