Mrs. Dunham's Match Making.

Her heart was set upon it; and now that Nettie had written that she was coming, her heart's desire seemed much nearer its fulfillment than it had ever done before. Nettie was her dearest friend, and Mr. Prentice the nicest and most agreeable man she had ever met, except Leonard. He was also her nearest neighbor; and the idea of making a match between them had possessed her long before the date at which this story opens. She had dilated upon it until she nearly drove her husband wild; for, if there was anything in the world he supremely detested, it was match-making. Beides, as Mr. Prentice was a very sociable man, and Nettie was coming to stay an indefinite period with them, there was every probability of their meeting and falling in love with each other without anybody's intervention. Privately he agreed with his wife as regarding the eligibility of the match; for he admired Nettie, and he highly esteemed his neighbor. But he always inststed that such matters had

Soon after they | couraging words to Cooly. raduated Clara had married Mr. Dunham and settled in the country, while Nettie whose parents were dead, had gone to the city and engaged in teach-She was both happy and successing. She was both happy and successful in her vocation until old Mr. Gilbride, a wealthy widower and one of the trustees of her school, asked her to marry him. Nettie was full twenty-five, but she was not so anxious to as a morning in June. change her lot as to desire to become an "old man's darling." Mr. Gilbride, however, proved a very persistent lover and to escape his importunities. Nettie finally conceived the idea of running away from him.

At her first move Mrs. Dunham showed her adaptability to the role she had undertaken to allowing her zeal to out run what little tact and prudence she was possessed of. Nettie had not been a week beneath her roof before she broached the subiect that was nearest her heart. "I will invite Mr. Prentice over to spend the evening, if you will promise lo meet him," she said to her one evening when they were out walking together. "He has seen you at church, Nettie, and he will never rest in peace until he has made your acquaintance." Nettie's pride took umbrage in a moment. "Clara Dunham! how dare you propose anything so preposterous to me? Do you think I will parade myself before this stranger to be studied and criticised and, perhaps, derided for my folly and presumption?" Mrs. Dunham was rather startled by this indignant outburst, but she had too long and intimately known Nettie o be dismayed by it. For the present, nowever, she deemed it advisable to change her theme, which she did, waying it with some playful response.

"Now that I think of it, Nettie, there is another matter in which I am specially interested," she pursued. "Mr. Dunham has seen the other trustees of the school, and he says that if you still desire to teach this summer, you may consider yourself engaged."

Though Nettie had never taught in the country, she felt sure she would like the position: the experience would be novel to her, she said, and her duties less arduous than in the city. It was Nettie's custom on rising in the morning to don a white wrapper, and while combing her long silken tresses to watch the robins in the great apple tree that spread its branches in front of her window. She had not ong occupied the room ere she noticed that nearly every morning an individual attired in a farmer's suit with broad-brimmed straw hat, appeared and went to work in Mr. Prentice's garden, which adjoined Mr. Dunham's orchard. It struck her as singular that he always repaired to a certain spot to commence operations, and she thought whatever it was that he cultivated so assiduously ought to thrive. After a few days it came to pass that she not infrequenty divided her attention pretty equally between the robins and the owner of the wide-brimmed hat. But no sooner did she become conscious of even this self-interest in the stranger-who, by the way, she suspected was

Mr. Prentice-then she moved her chair into the middle of the room, and henceforth gave her regard exclusively to the robins. One morning while Nettie was assisting Mrs. Dunham to do a baking in the great brick oven, Mr. Prentice entered the yard. Nettie suddenly disappeared. He rang the bell and inquired for her. Being one of the trustees of her school, he had brought a paper for her to sign, he said. Dunham went look for her, and after a long and eager search - which she would have continued all day, could she thereby have affected an interview between Nettie and Mr. Prentice—she had the satisfaction of discovering her perched upon a high ledge of rocks nearly half a mile from the house. When she reported the situation to Mr.

One afternoon while preparing to mix some rolls for supper, Mrs. Dunham found that Eliza Jane, her hired girl, had used the last drop of milk in the house, the man from the creamery having taken away an unusual quanti ty that morning. She was on the point of sending over to Mr. Prentice's for a supply when Nettie came in.
"Oh! let me go to the pasture and milk Cooly," she exclaimed, on being made acquainted with the deficiency. "Send you to milk!" ejaculated Mrs. Dunham, "I should as soon think of sending the cat!" "But I know how to milk," affirmed Nettie; "Mr. Dunham showed me the other day. Do let me go. Jennie Lovell says warm new milk makes the nicest rolls."

"Well, I surpose it won't do any harm for you to try the experiment; and pointing to a couple in full view, and Leonard says Cooly is very gentle." Nettie took a pail and hurried to the pasture. She noticed while going down the lane that it was separated by a high stone wall from a meadow where some men were at work, and she felt glad that they were stationed upon the farther side; for, though she was confident of success, she did not care to have spectators. The cows were accustomed to come up from the lower pasture and wait in a little grove to be driven up to the barn-yard. And there Nettie found them in the cool shade of the trees. drowsily chewing their cuds and whisking away the provoking flies. Her first step was to identify Cooly. She had seen and caressed her in the barn yard a rumber of times, and that she knew that she was a red cow, but whether light or dark she had now the remotest idea. She remembered, however, that she had a white face, and by this mark she would know her. Ah! there she was now, the darkest and sleekest cow in the whole herd. And what bright eyes she had! Nettie wondered she had never noticed before how particularly bright were Cooly's eyes. She went directly up to her, and stroked her. She went directly up to her head, and spoke to her in a soft persuasive way that Cooly seemed fully to understand. She threw up her handsome head, and, brought it down again with a quick, spirited motion that made Nettie laugh. Then she fixed her pail upon the ground, and sat down at her

"So, bossy," she murmured in imitation of Mr. Dunham. "S-e-e-oh! my goodness!" The involuntary exclamation was occasioned by her receiving full in the face and eyes a forcible stream of the warm, lacteal fluid. This was not a very auspicious beginning, and not being able to account for it, she was immeasurably astonished. But after a few more trials she got on better, and at length she judged that she had nearly a quart of milk in her pail. Her hat had been whisked off her head and her apron was dripping with milk; but Mrs. Dunham and Nettie Fenton she felt quite elated, and stopped to had been class mates at Mount Holyoke | rest her tired hands and say a few en-

At this favorable juncture that gentle creature lifted her near foot, and with a graceful swing planted it in the middle of the pail. Then, with an extra whisk of her tail, she hit Nettie a smart blow in the face, and, walking deliberately off a few rods, turned, where, squarely facing the scene of the disaster, she stood looking as serene A lively, pleasant laugh sounded in

"Oh, you did finely; but Gipsy is such a funny creature; she always amuses me when I milk her; and, by the way, she won't let anyone milk her

"I beg your pardon for my incivili-

"Mr. Prentice, isn't this Mr. Dunham's cow?" "No; Gipsy is my property. She has jumped the fence and got out of her pasture." "Oh, I am so sorry that I have made such a mistake. I thought she was my pet, Cooly." "Sorry? I never was so glad of anything in my life. Ever since I saw you that first Sunday at church I have wished to meet you and speak with "It must be a great gratification to you to see me in this plight," rejoined Nettie, archly. "I am glad to see you, anyway. I never meet you at Mrs. Dunham's, and I believe you have been trying to avoid me. Did you not run away from me the other day when I called? "To tell the truth, I confess that I did, Mr. Prentice." "And I was bringing the school-contract for you to sign. If you do it again I shall not hire you another term.' "It was kind of you to allow me to sign it, under the circumstance. But what will Mrs. Dunham say to me staying so long? I must go up to the house immediately.' "Stay a moment, please. I have one more question to ask. Is it you I have seen sitting by the pleasant east window, mornings?"

The question took her by surprise. "Oh, Mr. Prentice," she said, coloring, 'how could you see me? I was watching the robins."

"The apple tree is not a perfect creen," he answered, repressing a screen," "I was sure that must be your room. My father lived in that house when I was a boy, and I know every room in it from attic to cellar. I trust you won't desert the robins now that you know I have an interest in them." Nettie laughed a merry, silvery laugh that he thought rivalled the robin's song, and turned to go. "Don't be in a hurry, Miss Fenton," he repeated; "you came to get some milk. Let me help you." He took the pail and in a few moments brought to her an ample supply. She thanked him for the kindness, and recovering her hat, went to the house. As Mr. Prentice's sayings and doings were a theme to which Mrs. Dunham did full justice without encouragement, Nettie did not feel called upon to speak of the adventure. Besides, setting aside its ludicrous character that had more amused than vexed her, there was some memories connected with it that she did care to were standing near them. Some people passed in front of her, and then a little girl came up to say that Nettie was going on with Jenny.

"Depend upon it, Leonard, it is some ruse of Jennie Lovell, to favor her brother," she said excitedly to her husband as they left the church together. "He had an introduction to Nettie, and he admires her exceedingly," "That does not strike me as such an alarming matter," returned Mr. Dunham, quietly; "I am sure Nettie might do worse than marry so deserving a young fellow as Ned Lovell." "Oh, Ned is well enough as far as character goes, but you know that the Lovells are miserably poor. Besides, I should be so disappointed if-there they go now! I declare would go home cross-lots, too, if I thought we could overtake them," interrupting herself,

A little farther on they come up Jenny Lovell and her escort, who proved to be the stranger whom Mrs. Dunham had noticed in the vestibule. On reaching home she found that Nettie had preceeded her a sufficient length of time to put away her things. For a wonder she asked no questions, thinking, perhaps, that in good time that Nettie would tell her everything of her own accord The next day the Dunhams were summoned to attend a funeral in a distant city. They were gone a week. In the meantime Nettie was delighted with the opportunity thus afforded her for helping and hindering Eliza Jane in the work of the kitchen and dairy. She also found time to call twice on Jenny Lovell; and one evening Eliza Jane, with a little exact espionage, found that she stood talking a half of an hour by the clock, with some young man by the gate. Without any mischievous intent, she duly communicated the latter fact to her mistress on her return. A few moments later Nettie came in from a walk with a new and beautiful gold ring upon her fin-ger. With all her manœuvering Mrs. Dunham had not succeeded introducing her favorites; and putting this and that together she presently wove such a confirmation of her previous suspicions as quite unhinged her. At the first opportunity she went off by herself and had a good cry.

But Nettie's little romance had also reached a climax, and before the day ended Mrs. Dunham's trials terminated in a denouncment that she had little anticipated. Mr. Dunham, who was slightly indisposed, was lying upon the couch, and Mrs. Dunham was sitting by, occupied with some femi-nine employment, when Mr. Prentice came up the road and turned in at the gate. To Mrs. Dunham's amazement he stopped and talked familiarly a few moments with Nettie, who, her lap full of roses, was seated in the hammock; then he walked briskly into the house. He had in his hand a roll of white paper which after their cordial greetings were over, he presented to Mr. Dunham. It proved to be a teacher's contract drawn in favor of Miss Maria Prentice, who was a cousin of Mr. Prentice's. What with surprise and mystification, Mr. Dunham's face was a study when he had read it. "I'll be blessed, Prentice, if I know why you have brought this to me," he

"I want your signature," said Mr. Prentice, complacently.
"My signature! I thought we had already contracted with Nettie Fenton to teach the school this summer," said Mr. Dunham, somewhat brusquely. "Well, the fact is," observed Mr. Prentice, smiling, "I have formed a new contract with Nettie of quite a different kind and character, and I have her full permission to cancel the old one." At this point of the conversation Mrs. Dunham ran out into the yard, and hugged and kissed Nettie till her roses were scattered in every direction. Then she seated herself beside her, and was soon in possession of the whole

In the first place, the man puts on an old and very ragged coat. Then he puts his hands inside the place where the pipe ought to go, and blackens his fingers, and then studiously makes a black mark down the side of his nose. Having got his nose properly frescoed, the man grasps one side of the bottom of the stove, and his wife and hired girl take hold of the other side, and in this way the stove is started from the woodshed to the parlor. In passing through the door, the man carefully swings his side of the stove around and jams his thumb nail against the door post. At last the stove is set down in the proper place, and the man and his wife and the hired girl set out in a triangular search after the stove legs. Two are finally found inside the stove, where they have remained since spring, and the two others are found nidden under four tons of coal. Then the old man holds up one side of the stove, while his wife puts two of the legs in place; then he holds up the other side while the other two are being adjusted, and one of the first pair is displaced. The trick of getting the four legs into their proper place is practiced with varying and indifferent results for some ten minutes, and by this time the man gets excited and reckless, and throws off his coat, regardless of the consequences. Then the man goes for the stove pipe and gets a cinder in his eye. The stove was put up in first-class shape last year by the stove man, but this year the pipe proved to be a little too long. So the man jams his hat down over his eyes, takes a piece of pipe under each arm, and starts for the tin shop to have it fixed. Then he comes back, steps his muddy boots into one of the best parlor chairs to see if the pipe will fit, when his wife makes him come down. In the act of descending he plants his foot square down on the hollow of the cat's back, and comes within an ace of trampling the baby under foot. Then the man gets an old chair from the kitchen and climbs up to the chimney opening again, and makes the startling discovery that in cutting off the end of the pipe, the tinner had made the pipe too large to enter the hole in the chimney. So the man goes into the back yard and splits one side of the end of the pipe with an old ax, and squeezes it between his hands until he makes it smaller. Then the man gets the pipe into shape only to find that the stove does comes out of the chimney. The pipe is replaced in the chimney hole, when the elbow commences to topple over. The man's wife is visibly agitated, and the man gets the dining table out of the kitchen and balances an old chair on it, and makes his wife hold the chair while he performs acrobatic feats on the grand combine, in an effort to drive some nails into the ceiling, during which performance the man drops the hammer down upon his wife's devoted head, and she surprises him with a yell worthy the emulation of a Co-

Finally the man completes the grand act of driving the nails, constructs a wire swing to hold the elbow in position, hammers the pipe a little on one side and then alittle on the other, pulls one joint a little here and pushes another length a little there, gives vocal expression to a series of deprecatory and mildly profane adjectives, takes a long breath, breathes a deep-drawn sigh of relief, and proudly announces that the job is finished.

Manuring Cannot be Overdone.

The venerable Peter Henderson thinks manuring cannot be overdone, and says: It is a great blunder to attempt to grow vegetable crops without the use of manures of the various kinds. I never yet saw soils of any kind that had borne a crop of vegetables that would produce as good a crop the next season without the use of manure, no matter how rich the soil may be thought to be. An illustration of this came under my observation last season. One of my neighbors, a market gardener of twenty years' experience, and whose grounds have always been a perfect model of productiveness, had it in prospect to run a sixty foot street through his grounds. Thinking his land sufficiently rich to carry through a crop of cabbages without manure, he thought it useless to waste money by using guano on that portion on which the street was to be, but on each side he sowed guano at the rate of 12,000 pounds to the acre, and planted the whole with early cabbages. The effect was the most marked I ever saw. That portion on which the guano had been used sold off readily at $12 per hundred, or about $1,400 per acre, both price and crop being more than the average; but the portion from which the guano had been witheld hardly averaged $3 per hundred. The street occupied fully an acre of ground, so that my friend actually lost over $1,-050 in crop by withholding $60 for manure. Another neighbor, with a lease only one year to run, also unwisely concluded it would be foolish to waste manure on his last crop, and so planted and sowed all without. The result was, as his experience should have taught him, a crop of inferior quality in every article grown and loss on his eight acres of probably $2,000 for that season.—National Stockman.

We are opposed to spelling-books and soap. Educate an anarchist and you enfeeble his constitution; wash him, and he dies. Soap is not a natural product, hence nature did not contemplate its use. Abolish soap and every man becomes at once a holder of the soil, exactly as that great, great man, Mr. Henry George, has so beautifully elucidated. Education is a dangerous thing. It often tempts a man to try to earn his own living and be of some use to the community. The moment a man becomes a wage-earner he perceives that beer and bunkum are obstacles to his success, and he is not so anxious for riot and pillage, for he sees that whatever destroys or hampers capital must necessarily injure the workman to whom it furnishes employment. This pernicious knowledge weans him from our ranks to those of workingmen who seek only their just rights, and seek them by honorable and legitimate means.—New York World.

Probably the most interesting and valuable curiosity in the firemen's museum at No. 2 engine house, is the one brought in a day or two ago by a farmer whose name the men did not learn. He said he saw it running about his farm a few days ago and chased it into a brush pile, where he captured it. The bird is about the size of a ben turkey and its main color is a rich blue black, though many of the larger feathers are brilliantly colored, making the bird a very handsome one. The bird measures five feet from tip to tip of its wings, which are very large and strong in comparison to its body, showing that it is capable of long flights and of carrying a considerable weight in its talons. THE tide of emigration will be to California, this winter. Nearly every part of the east furnishes its quota, Berrien county being no exception. Those who contemplate going should remember that stories come here only of those who succeed. The failures are never reported.

MR. C. BISHOP has bought of Rough Bros, the lot on Oak street, occupied by the old American House barn, and expects in the spring to erect a one-story brick building thereon, for store purposes. It will be a relief to property owners in that neighborhood to have that barn moved. The old store building next south of that, owned by D. C. Nash, would also be better if it were of brick. It has been on fire once.

E. W. SANDERS is preparing to build an addition of thirty feet on the north end of his store building, lately occupied by Wood & Hoffman, making the room ninety feet deep, or ten feet longer than any other building in town. The old front will be replaced with plate-glass, the shelving by that of more modern style, and other improvements that will make it the finest store-room in town.

MOVED.-J. Brown & Co. have mov ed their machinery out of the building next to the A. C. Church into the cheese factory, on Portage street. This will materially relieve the minds of property owners in the vicinity of central addition, especially during dry weather, as their smoke stack has been considerable of a menace to the property in the business part of town. Their new quarters will be more convenient for them in many respect. They have bought that property.

THOSE who live in the bend of the river are beginning to appreciate the treatment they are receiving at the hands of the east end of the township,in delays and bothers, whenever there is any repairing necessary on the river bridge. The experience is the same at each time there is a break in the bridge. No hurry about having a meeting of the Niles township board. When one is found another is away, and nothing can be done. The proper way is for that bridge to be the property of one township or, as done in Indiana, the county, so that but one set of officers are necessary to make needed repairs. There is but one way to do that and that is to adjoin the contiguous territory of Niles township to Buchanan, and it should be attended to before it becomes too late to take the necessary legal steps.

Notice.—At an adjourned meeting of the Citizens' Improvement Association held in the village of Buchanan, on Monday evening, Oct. 25, the organization was perfected and officers elected as follows:

THE DeWolfe gas well was sunk wo feet further yesterday and has for fear of destroying the derrick. Gas now forces itself upon the outside of pipe as well as from within. An effort is to be made soon to determine the forces of the flow. If it increases proportionately as the pipe goes down the owners will soon have a genuine gusher.—Michigan City Dispatch.

This is interesting at this distance. The De Wolfe well demonstrates that gas-boring is considerably like Colorado mining. If you strike it, you are rich. If not, you are poor, and but a short distance may intervene between wealth and poverty. This brightens the possibility for this vicinity. It might be worth the while to tempt the gas at Bridgman that was found at about the same depth as in the DeWolfe well a few years since. It is undoubtedly

INQUIRY SUGGESTED BY THE RE-CENT NEW YORK CALAMITY.

The Laws in All the States Better Than Their Execution—Buildings That Have Fallen in the Past-Buddensiek Now in Sing Sing-Father Kirner. .The sudden fall while in course of con struction of large buildings in the United States has become altogether too common to be comfortable of late years, and the recent collapse of a school building in New York city has started a very general inquiry into the laws of different states on the se-curity of buildings. One painful fact is ap-parent on a very brief examination: the laws in every state are much better than their ad-ministration. Indeed the inspection of buildings is almost invariably a mere matter of form in every state until some great calamity occurs: then there is a savage inquiry and for a long time after the law is well enforced. The moral would seem to be, if you want to be safe go where the last great calamity oc-

Of great fires, too, accompanied with destruction of life, we have had decidedly more than our share. The laws commanding fire escapes in hotels have grown correspondingly rigid, and the most careless reader of the daily papers, when he is conducted through the devious corridors of a big hotel into a remoto room, looks around nervously for the

In cases of fire the chief danger is usually from panic, as there is frequently time for the inmates of a burning building to emerge in an orderly manner; but in the sudden fall of a building coolness is in vain and fire is often added to the horror. In all the first century of United States history there were fewer calamities from falling buildings—at any rate, fewer reported—than in the last ten years. Were builders more honest? Perhaps so, but there were then fewer cities and very Proprietions of father kirner's school house. few buildings over five stories in height. Building was not done in haste, and contractors were conservative. Soon after the centennial year, however, a number of casualties were reported, but as only three or four ersons were killed and few injured, no special action was taken. Finally, on the 8th of February, 1881, the whole heavy iron roof of the Union depot in Buffalo, N. Y., fell with a crash that was heard all over the city, and immediately after large sections of the wall fell in on it, crushing all beneath. In a few hours every city in the country was in anxiety, for it was taken as a matter of course that the depot was crowded. as the time tables indicated several trains in at the time. But by an extraordinary chance (shall we say providenca) all trains were late but one, and over that the fallen roof formed a sort of arch. Only four men were killed and few seriously injured.

On the 9th of November, 1883, the iron roof, inside walls and stone columns of one wing of the new capitol at Madison, Wis., fell and buried forty workmen. A cry of horror went through the city and state, and was echoed all over the country; but the most rigid investigation did not fix the responsibility to the general satisfaction. Ten persons were killed or mortally hurt and many disabled for life. On the same day a building fell in Cincinnati, killing one man and injur of the old United States hotel in Washington fell, burying the employes and two or three others; but only three deaths resulted. On the 21st of the following December a new iron hotel in process of erection at New Orleans fell at a time when nearly all the workmen were on the roof. Though they fell nearly sixty feet only two were killed. Late in the '70s there was an epidemic, so to speak, of falling buildings in Rochester, N. Y., and in '81 or '82 another, the most notable being the collapse of a four story business block near the center of the city, by which four men lost their lives. A singular incident of this calamity was the fact that the owner of the building was upon the roof at the time, and went down to the ground with the falling mass unhurt and even without suffering any appreciable shock. Another calamity of this sort was the falling of the Nebraska State capitol while building, and there were many others, records of which are not accessible to the present writer.

Down to this time, however, the public mind had not been greatly stirred, though many minor accidents of a like nature had occurred; but on April 13, 1885, an appalling calamity in New York city excited the whole nation, led to a general examination of the causes of such accidents and an overlooking of the law, and made the famous. A continuous block of eight five story buildings, on Sixstreet ty-second between Tenth and

Eleventh avenues, CHARLES BUDDENSIEK. New York, fell in an instant. The wreck was complete. Nothing remained of the once imposing block but a pile of debris, from which rose a cloud of dust and among which a few mangled, struggling forms were seen, while groans and agonizing cries for help excited the pitying spectators almost to madness. The police at once formed a guard around the ruins and hundreds of men toiled to uncover the dead and rescue the wounded. The shocking details need not be repeated. By rare good fortune only a few workmen were on the buildings; of all these but one was killed, while sixty were hurt in various degrees. Charles Buddensiek, the builder, was arrested, and then all the horrible details of his career came out. He was a habitual violator of the law—building unsafe tenements, using poor mortar and weak supports in innt walls. As the inquiry extended houses built by him were hastily evacuated, and out of twenty-three it was shown that not one was really safe. This roused the people at last, and in New York at least the law for the inspection of buildings was rig-Restell no person in New York has been the object of such universal horror as Buddeneik, was at that time. It was a charity to hide him from the public eye in Sing Sing, where he is now serving out a term of ten

Public opinion was thoroughly roused and inspectors did their work so well that no serious calamities occurred in New York city till the recent one of Oct. 17, when the new Catholic mission being among that people. The building was 100 by 30 feet, of brick, and the workmen all ascribe the calamity to bad mortar-"it wasn't mortar at all, twas only mud," says one-and the lack of supports as required by law under the center of the long joists. The person alleged most to blame in the case is Inspector

William J. Martin, in whose district the building was located, as it was his duty to forbid the continuance of the work unless the law was complied with. Martin has been dismissed and placed under arrest, and the board of fire commissioners has also dismissed sevcral other inspectors. The penalty likely to be inflicted upon Martin is somewhat more disagreeable than that meted out to a delinquent contractor the writer knows of, whose work collapsed, killing several men and injuring others. There was an investigation in his case, the jury could not fix the blame, and the people of his district elected him to the state legislature!

Father A. Emilanus Kirner was paster of the Roman Catholic church of Our Lady of Mount Carmel and was a native of Germany, and was 61 years old. His work was always in mission fields, and he had built and assisted in the building of a large number of churches and institutions in London-where no went when 26 years of age—Italy and America. He was immensely popular and was known as Father Kirner the Good.

A Brave Soldier at Rest. The long delayed casket containing the remains of Gen. Hugh Judson Kilpatrick, which recently arrived at New York from Chili, was later, after imposing funeral ceremonies, laid to rest. As he died in 1881, the long delay has caused the circumstances to drop out of the public mind; but as long as the memory of heroic deeds survives among men the brilliantly heroic career of this soldier will be remembered. There is not probably another instance in the history of the United States army, and certainly very few in any army, of such a rapid rise; for nearly all the other generals of the great civil war had had experience in Mexico or elsewhere, while Kil-patrick stepped at once from the academy to the field, and rose so rapidly from lieutenant to major general that he was scarcely known by any one title till he had already acquired the next higher. Napoleon Bonaparte may have risen more rapidly, but it may be doubted if history shows another example. H. J. Kilpatrick was born near Deckertown, in the mountains of northern New Jersey, on the 14th of January, 1836, graduated at West Point in 1861, went at once to the front as lieutenant in the First artillery. U. S. A., thoughgiven command as captain of volunteers of Company H, Fifth New York, and was wounded as such at Big Bethel, Va., in June. He recovered in time to serve in the battle of Manassas, having recruited for the Fifth New York, with Maj. Davies, of the same regiment, sufficient men to form a cavalry regiment, of which Davies was made colonel and "Kill" lieutenant colonel. In 1862 he was made colonel of the Second New York cavalry, and was brevetted major in the regular army for gallantry at the battle of Aldie. It was common in those days for gallant officers to advance rapidly in the volunteer service and slowly in the regular service, the places in the latter service being much fewer and precedent of more force. Gen. Custer, after being a major general of volunteers, was colonel of the Seventh regular cavalry after the war. So after another year of active service in the Army of the Potomac, we find Kilpatrick a general of volunteer cavalry and colonel by brevet of regulars. In 1864 he did brilliant service in Sherman's advance on Atlanta and was wounded at Resaca. In the "march to the sea" he was severely wounded, and for conspicuous gallantry was brevetted colonel of regulars. As soon as able to ride he was again at the head of his dashing cavalry, doing the hard skirmish and advance duty for Sherman's army all the way from Savanneh to Fayetteville, N. C. This was the remarkle period of his military life. Every soldier of his command has some special story to tell of Kilpatrick's courage and dash, his unfailing good humor and readiness of resource; and old citizens all along the line of march have strange tales to tell of the wild hereman and handsome swordsman who swept by their homes with a whirlwind of cavalry. He was in that army what Murat was in Napoleon's-Le Beau Sabreur, incarnated the romance of the great march. Tis achievements ended in the brilliant canture of Facetteville, N. C., for which he w brevetted major general; and finally his title in the regulars caught up, so to speak, with

United States regular army.

He soon effer resigned to accept the post of minister to Chili. In 1875 and 1876 he was again in the United States, lecturing and writing. In 1576 he took a very active part in the political campaign, chiefly in OLio and Indiana, and soon after returned to Chiliwhere he died ir 1881. He left a widow and two daughters, of whom the youngest, 14 years old, had never been in the United States till she case with her father's remains.

through the south was them, as Chattanooga and Atlanta welcomed them last week in the midst of the heaviest rains of the season. They had had a deal of fun elsewhere, not only in the cities, but in every town big enough to get up an arch or flag; and in Minnesota one enthusiastic patriot galloped after the flying train some distance, while Mr. and Mrs. Cleveland stood on the rear platform to receive the bouquet he held out to them. At Chattanooga the programme was followed to the letter, though flags, ban-ners and military trappings were soaked with rain, and the president and wife had to ride under dripping umbrellas around the prescribed course of the parade. At Atlanta part of the programme was necessarily omitted, as the rain fell in a blinding sheet during all the hours set apart for the street dis-play. President Cleveland did, however, review the militia, as designed, though they marched through mire and rain, and his carriage stuck so firmly in the mud that it had to be righted by hand. The next two days were comparatively clear, and as the proceedings connected with the exposition were mostly under cover, there was more enjoyment.

The Piedmont exposition has been regarded from the start as the climax of the president's trip, and has proved a great success in every particular.

"Piedmont" may be freely translated "foot of mountain," and is a name given all the eastward slope of the Blue ridge and Alleghonies from Virginia to Alabama. Cheered by the success of the great cotton exposition at Atlanta five years ago the citizens determined on an exposition more specifically de-voted to minerals and home made machinery. While the highland region of the central south abounds everywhere in minerals, three sections of it are peculiarly rich—the Cumberland plateau of Tennessee, the ridged region of north central Alabama and the mountain region of Georgia-still called 'Cherokee," because it was long the abode of the Cherokees. Most of the local

Across the state from northeast to southwest runs the Chattahoochie, parallel with it, at an average distance of thirty miles, runs the last line of mountains; from the average summit level of the mountains to the river is a fall of 2.200 feet, and, as the hundreds of inflowing streams must make that descent in thirty miles, water power is in layish abundance. On the first hills are immense forests of tolerably valuable

Following the line of these mountain ranges outhwestward into Alabama, we find these anticlinal rifts still more abrupt and, consequently, more valuable, as a narrow valley often has on one side the best of iron ore, and on the other various strata of coal. Cumberland or East Tennessee plateau is rather more regular in its formation; but for 250 miles from northeast to northwest it is one vast storehouse of coal and iron ore. And from all these regions, as well as from Virginia and North Carolina, the promoters of the Piedmont exposition have drawn im-mense and varied stores of minerals to ex-

The fair opened on the 10th, continuing several weeks. The inclosure consists of sev enty-five acres of the Piedmont park, which contains 200 acres. The main hall, though an immense structure, proved too small for the exhibit, and other buildings had to be crected. Forty thousand people were present the first day, and when all the machinery was set, ready for the electric touch, Gov ernor Cordon introduced Hon. Samuel J. Randall, who delivered a speech well worth of the eccasion. His comparison between the old and new south was bold and eloquent. and was received with enthusiastic cheers As he finished be touched the electric button all the batteries fired, the great engine began to beat and all the machinery of the exposition started. The visitors are numbered by hundreds of thousands. The display of fireworks is said to have equaled, if it did not exceed, any ever shown in New York. For all this success much credit must be given to Hon. Charles A. Collier, president, and Maj. William H. Smyth, secretary of the exposition company, whose association in such an enterprise is a happy illustration of the complete reunion of north and south. Mr. Collier is one of the best representatives of the young south; a native of Atlanta and member of the board of aldermen, he is a very prominent citizen despite his youth. Maj. Smyth is a son of Professor William Smyth, long eminent as head of the department of mathematics at Bowdoin college. He first visited Atlanta as one of Sherman's conquering host; after the war he located and married there, was for a while United States marshal, but for many year; has devoted himself to agricultural and engineering machinery. STATUE TO PRESIDENT HARRISON It Is to Be Set Up in Cincinnati-Ohio's Centennial. Ohio is to have the next centennial celebra tion, and proposes, with many other good things, to have a beautiful statue of President William Henry Harrison. The statue is to stand in Cincinnati; but as the grave of the hero is just over the line in Indiana, at the obscure village of North Bend, it is pro posed to join with the latter state and all dis posed to help in putting up an appropriate shaft at the grave. To that end a large party of Ohio men, including Benjamin Butterworth and John Stevenson, with prominent citizens from Indiana and Kentucky recently made an excursion to North Bend Last winter the legislature of Ohio appro priated $25,000 for a bronze equestrian statue of Harrison. The statue is now being made by Louis F. Rebisso, of Cincinnati, and will pre sent a striking figure of the great warrior governor on horseback, as he appeared, or is supposed to have appeared, in his last cam paign against the Indians. The first permanent settlement in Ohio was that at Marietta in 1788, and so 1888, the year of the centennial, will be an appropriate time to unveil the monument of the first territorial gov-

WILLIAM HENRY HARRISON'S STATUE At the close of the revolution a body of New Englanders, largely veterans of the war, and led by Gen. Putnam, traveled to the Al legheny river in Pennsylvania, and there constructing keel boats floated down to the site of Marietta; there they made a town, and there many Putnams and other descend ants of the pioneers remain to this day. Soon after the French made a settlement at Gallipolis, and thereafter Ohio was rapidly settled. William Henry Harrison, first governor, was descended in the male line from the noted Harrison who commanded the parliamentary army in the civil war in England and was in power for a short time, after the death of Cromwell. He is recorded in British history as "Harrison the Regicide." A grandson of Governor Harrison is Gen. Benjamin Harrison, of Indiana, late United Harrison's governorship of the territory that he effected those immense purchases of land which extinguished the Indian title in Ohio and in nearly all of Indiana southeast of the Wabash river; but after Ohio was admitted to the Union (1802) his jurisdiction was confined to Indiana. He extinguished the Indian title, except to a few reservations, up to Tippecanoc; there the great confederacy of all the tribes and parts of tribes hostile to the cession, the Shawnee Tecumtha in command, formed its camp, and there they were defeated by Harrison in the autumn of 1811. It is a curious fact that Indiana's centennial came long before Ohio's, though most of the state is forty years younger; for no authority places the founding of Vin-cennes later than 1735, while some place it cennes later than 1105, while some place is as far back as 1690, and there was a French Miami town containing forty well built houses and many huts on Wea plains before Putnam landed at Marietta. The interlock of the heads of the Wabash and Maumee is so complete that the French made their courses the route from Canada to Louisiana at least as early as 1700. Ohio is making great preparations for her centennial, and $1,000,000 has already been guaranteed by private subscription to a great interstate exposition at Cincinnati; while the legislatures of Indiana and Kentucky have appointed commissioners to act for them.

A Fine Challenge Cup. The American Yachting club offers a cup, to be contended for by all the steam yachts of the world, which is a marvel of art and beauty. It is of silver, 3 feet 9 inches high, and weighing 1,000 ounces; the designs are partly classical and partly modern and origi-nal, but all represent speed, steam and vic-tory upon the sea. At the base are Pluto and Neptune as types of fire and water; with clasped hands they unite in producing steam, which is figured as rising is graceful coils up the side of the cup. Around the center, etched on a beautifully polished band, are various types of steam yachts in the attitude of racing, and below them is a border of shields, each with a full and smooth central face, on which are to be engraved in succession the points in the races by which the cup

Of course this led to an abandonment of the square by the bet-ter classes and so to ill feeling and personal combats. The unemployed talked over their grievances and decided to present a petition to the home secretary, demanding work or public charity in some form. Each successive gathering became more riotous, and when a monster mass meeting was called for the 18th, in Trafalgar square, the police received orders to prevent it. The latter took possession of all entrances to the square the people gathered in the adjacent streets there was a push for the gates, and a few men were clubbed. Mass meetings were held in the vicinity and very incendiary speeches made. The statement by one workingman that "they treat hus just as hif we was hignorant Hirishmen" is an amusing illustration of the London laborer's view of government in the two islands. Traffic was completely stopped by these mass meetings; so more police were sent to disperse them, and the crowd moved towards Hyde park with the usual demonstrations.

Not more than 3,000 or 4,000 had got into Hyde park when the police again appeared in force, and being appealed to by the adjacent shopkeepers, who feared pillage, they closed and fastened the gates. The crowd attempted to force their way through a small gate, when the mounted police charged upon

I. Briefly stated, the problem to be solved was: A vessel is lying in a harbor unable to go farther towards the land because of

by a blockade-can she defend herself against forpedo boats or submarine mines? The vessel selected for the test was the Atlanta, the new steel cruiser of the navy, commanded by Captain Bunce; the attacking force consisted of several torpedo boats under the direction of Commander Chester, of the United States cruiser Galena, and the conditions were as

READY FOR ATTACK. Any torpedo boat long enough under fire to receive three rounds (say one minute where a machine gun fire could strike it or a min ute and a half under small arm fire) to be considered as disabled and to retire from the contest. Any such boot within the beams of the electric light for fifteen seconds to be similarly retired. Guard boats which should fail to discover the approach of a torpedo Churchill has denounced Gladstone. boat till the same was within twenty feet were to be considered as destroyed. When her guard boats were thus put out, or the attacking force had successfully attacked a torpedo, the Atlanta was to be considered as vanquished. The judges were to signal either of these contingencies by lights previously arranged. The Atlanta was put in effective fighting trim. Everything aloft was put down except the lower yards, and all the rigging securely lashed. A stout five inch steel hawser was passed around the ship just high enough above water to prevent a hostile boat going over or under it; on this, thirty feet apart, were twenty torpedoes, each controlled electrically and arranged to be fired by contact. Towing astern was a whaleboat rigged with a steam pump hose, to throw (imaginary) hot water on any attacking boat that came near enough; and forward was a somewhat different arrangement for the same purpose. Our cut presents a day view of the Atlanta prepared for the attack, and shows various other defensive apparatus, such as beams, nets, etc. Thus mutually armed, the conflict began at 7 p. m., and at 8:45 the Atlanta was completely victorious—that is, the judges had declared all the attacking boats disabled, and find out is, would it work that way in actual combat? Various other interesting tests have also been made, and the general result seems to have been satisfactory.

NEW STATUE OF LINCOLN. A Magnificent Monument Lately Unveiled

in Chicago. On the 22d of October a colossal bronze statue of Abraham Lincoln was unveiled in Lincoln park, Chicago, the work of the plastic artist St. Gaudens, pursuant to a do-nation by the late Eli Bates of $40,000 for the purpose. The location of the statue is peculiar and unusual. There is a vast oval of cut stone sixty by thirty feet, the interior fashioned to form a classic bench, and the statue stands on a stone pedestal, on a level with the top of the circle, in the middle of the side opposite the portal—the whole on a gentle, broad swell of ground which rises from the Dearborn street entrance to the park. One enters the circle by a broad flight of steps, bounded right and left with large balls of bronze; on the one is a spray of laurel, on the other an ax to typify Lincoln's early life. On the wall to the right as one enters the circle is Lincoln's famous perora

With malice towards none, with charity for all, with firmness in the right as God gives us to know the right, let us strive on. On the other side is this quotation from the Cooper Union speech of 1860: Let us have faith that right makes might, and in that faith let us to the end dare to do our duty as we understand it. Mr. St. Gaudens has been long occupied in tried all sorts of devices to soften THE CHICAGO LINCOLN. facts of coat, vest and pantaloons; but the conventional method was to strike a sort of compromise and either represent our great men in half Roman drapery or with a cloak so conventionally as to hide half the form and make sort of back ground relief. But it was not a success. The irreverent laughed it out of fashion, and soon after the war the bold, bald modern type of dress was sculptured, each successive attempt exciting more and more amusement, until satire reached a climax over Vinnio Ream's Lincoln.

The friends of Mr. St. Gaudens claim that he has overcome all difficulties. The reader has our permission to glance at the cut of the statue and form his own opinion. He certainly has not attempted to disguise the native ruggedness of Lincoln's features; on the contrary, he seems to have given it a sort of fascination. He represents him as an orator, just risen from his chair, which is shown behind him, and waiting for the audience to become quiet before beginning his speech. The attitude is that always assumed by Lincoln at the beginning—one hand behind him, the other grasping the lapel of his coat, the left foot advanced and the weight of his body resting chiefly on the right. At the start his ugliness seemed a serious hindrance; a little later, when he warmed with the subject, and his great soul began to glow in his eyes, it was a decided advantage. Attitudes were forgotten; grace seemed a matter of no consequence, for the great man then appeared as the very incarnation of rugged grandeur. As for the rest, the statue tells it all. It shows the force, the rugged greatness of the kody which held the waster mind of this age.

London has had a small riot, and there are well grounded fears of a very big one. All great cities are liable to riots, and London is no exception; but it is a notable fact that that city has in the last century had fewer city in Christendom, While Paris has witnessed three revolutions and many minor events. Berlin has had the students' insurrection of 1848, Vienna has been in actual possession of a mob, only beaten down by the bombardment of Wundischgratz, and New York her great draft riots and many smaller but terrible affairs, London has suf-CHALLENGE CUP. victory and in the fered no serious riot since the "Wellington troubles" and has not really and

So the matter rests, with the laborers threatening the politicians defending and denouncing and the papers commenting with various de grees of severity. Mr. Gladstone has drawn on himself a deal of Tory wrath by publicly denouncing the police, and Lord Randolp The Lord George Gordon riots have been made noted among all English reading peo-ple by the genius of Charles Dickens, who makes them the sensational subject and turning point of his "Barnaby Rudge." For five days-from the 4th to the 5th of June, 1780-London was at the mercy of a mob; whole blocks of stores were sacked, numerou Catholic churches and chapels were demolished, prisons were broken open, arsenals plundered and scores of persons killed by accident or design, while on the 7th thirty-six fires were raging at one time. The police were completely defeated, nor could even the military disperse the mobs till they had killed and wounded 500 people. The total loss could not be estimated, as scores of wounded wretches crept into abandoned cellars or sewers to die, while many drunken ones perished in the fires. And all this grew ont of an attempt to disperse an assembly of 60,000 to 80,000 people, who marched with Gordon to present a petition against the act removing the Catholic disabilities. He was acquitted, but afterwards sentenced to a long mprisonment for libel and died in prison at the early age of 43, after having become a convert to Judaism. He was undoubtedly nsane—a sort of George Francis Train on the British model. The misery caused by the Napoleonic wars created fearful riots all over England, but not so bad in London; the "Luddites" once numbered $0,000 rioters, who went about breaking the machinery which, they said, threw poor men out of work. At length a mob attacked the house of the Duke of Wellington and broke his windows; this in 1832, during the agitation of the reform bill. During those troubled years also occurred the "Massacre of Peterloo." when the police charged upon an immense and ly packed mass of people gathered in the fields to hear a radical speech. Few were hurt by the police, but hundreds were injured and many killed, being squeezed and trampled upon in the panic. Then followed that beneficent series of measures for the relief of labor, and with them such an improvement in the general condition that London has only known riots by tradition since the accession of Victoria, and the most conservative statisticians admit that "British laborers are 30 per cent. better fed, 40 per cent. better housed, 50 per cent. better clothed and 100 per cent, better educated than in the reign of George IV."

Messrs. F. J. Have prescribed it a great many times and its effect is wonderful, and would say in conclusion that I have yet to find a case of Catarrh that it would not cure, if they would take it according to directions.

A Confidential Letter, Dated Oct. 1, 1887, Which We Publish by Permission Under Later Letter, Dated Oct. 12, 1887. GENTLEMEN:

Some months ago I received your letter of inquiry. My daughter has been taking your sylup for months, now using the seventh bottle; has been on her back bedridden six months with liver consumption. Since using your remedy, has had two large abcesses of the liver which has been cured by using your syrup. Her life has been saved, we all believe, from its use. Yet she is in a very feeble condition and takes no medicine whatever, except your syrup. I, myself think it the greatest blood tonic known, and firmly believe had we known of it a year earlier my daughter would to day be in sound health. Have had best medical skill, also traveled extensively for her good, but in all never found its equal. I have prescribed it to my pa tients and have in every case had the most desired effect.

Very respectfully, DR. A. E. CHAPMAN, Ionia, Mich. To Hibbard's Rheumatic Sprup Co. Jackson, Mich.

Gentlemen: Your letter of the seventh inst. be fore me in reply will say. If my former letter to you will do suffering humanity any good it should be published. It was through a letter from a resident of Pontiac that first brought it to my daughter's notice and my only regret is, that we did not know of it a year ago instead of the last six months. I shall still prescribe it to my patients, as I think it the most wonderful medicine known, or ever put before the public. Truly your reward will be great as suffering humanity is blessed and as you become thoroughly known Very truly yours, Dr. A. E. Chapman.
