Read it aloud, Ruthie, there's a dear! It's took my breath away." And Miss Prudence dropped helplessly back in her chintz-covered rocking-chair, and stared dismally at Miss Patience, who continued to knit away calmly, nowise disturbed by her sister's agitation, while Ruth Fletcher, a pretty girl of nineteen, let fall the potato she was paring, and read with ill-concealed

Mædam:—I propose to entrust to your care, for an indefinite period of time, my ward and your grand-niece, Miss Elise's Dural, now nineteen years of age, and especially in need of the watchful care and surveillance I am sure you will bestow upon her when I inform you she is on the point of making a most undesirable match—one in which her great beauty and fortune are sure to be sacrificed. It is in hopes of rescuring her from this unhappy entanglement that I send her to you, her nearest of kin. All pecuniary matters are of course to be referred to me, and I will also mail instructions from time to time. Believe me, madam. Most respectfully yours,

"Does Miss Fletcher live here?" she asked, in a gay, musical voice, her great, soft brown eyes dancing and sparkling with mirth. "Yes'm," said Ruth, timidly, feeling elegant, self-possessed young lady. Won't you walk in, please?" "Oh, you dear little sweet, unworldly Puritan!" cried the girl, with a ringing laugh, as she clasped Ruth impulsively in her arms. and dropped a kiss on her white forehead; "You'll be friends with me, won't you, dear? I all my possessions, and sent them ahead of me." "Wal, I never!" again sighed Miss Prudence, peering at Elise's pretty igure. "So you're Lizy Devoll. You hain't got your mother's looks none, as I can see. What's all this talk about your getting married?" But Aunt Patience, nowise impressold-fashioned spare chamber reached by a winding stair. "My guardian is than in any of these flimsy folderols. such a stiff, disagreeable old ogre- and I guess Flip'll think so, too."

> "I swan to man, Prudence, I can't have that gal fussin' round here much longer," declared Miss Patience, two or three weeks later, as she clapped a pan of gingerbread into the oven. "I could git along with Lizy after a fashion, though she is flighterin' a kite, but as to havin' that French minx a sassin' me in her furrin lingo, and potterin' around amongst my vittles, makin' I-talian creams and Charlotte Roosts, and the Lord knows what not, overhear Miss Patience's tirade. "Listeners never hear no good of themselves," said the old lady, grimly glancing disapprovingly, at the bright young figure. "Where be you goin' on that sewing machine o' yourn?" for Elise was arrayed in a scarlet trycycling suit, that she donned every morning, thereby keeping the villagers in a perpetual excitement, by appearing in it, upon her handsome trycycle, as Aunt Patience worded it, every tack'n turn.

"Oh, out sketching, of course," laughed the girl, indicating the Russia leathders, and giving Ruth a wicked little wink. "Have mince pies for dinner, won't you, Aunt Patience? I shall be -ahem!-so hungry, you know," with another glance at the unconcious Ruth. "Good-by, dear," giving her a sudden hug and kiss. "Don't forget me, will you?" And the next moment she was off, flashing down the road, "like a streak of 'lectric lightning', as Aunt Patience remarked, peerin' after her. Ruth stood looking, too, a strange sense of heaviness at her heart she was at loss to account for, but she bravely threw it off, and sang blithely over the chocolate cake she was mixing for tea, until Miss Patience chanced to send her to the attic to fetch a bunch of herbs for the Irish stew. There the sight of eight tall Saratoga trunks, not open, as they had been left three weeks before, but strapped, corded, and marked anew with their owner's name, caused her to drop suddenly Ruth's neat green and white gingham the dish she was holding to the floor. "Oh, Elise!" she cried faintly, and turning, ran down the stairs to the best spare chamber. But that was empty, too, save for the pretty chocolate server she had admired so much, and the pale blue cashmere house dress flung across the bed. "For Ruth", was written on the daintily perfumed card attached to both.

"Fanchon!" she called timidly. But there was no response, and she remembered the maid had set off for a walk with a light valise, and both the dogs, an hour or so after breakfast. There was a rote lying on Aunt Patience's mahogany table, and breaking the seal with trembling fingers, Ruth read hur-

Tell dear guardy I grew tired of waiting for his interesting son to make up his mind to marry me; and give the enclosed to Aunts Prudence and Patience, with Lizy's love. For you, darling, I have left a tiny trousseau in the big wardrobe; so haste to your wedding before the gowns become unfashionable. I know they will fit you, we are so nearly of a size. How can I think you, pet, for your own kindness to me? And how ungrateful I must seem to run away in this fashion. Harry will be at the station waiting for me, with Fanchon and the dogs, and we shall be married in the next town. Good-by, ELISE. dear: God bless you. P. ing into violent laughing and sobbing. "She gone—she's married, Aunt Prudence, and her trunks are all strapped, and standing up garret, and she's left three hundred dollars for you and Aunt Patience. Ob, dear!" with another hysterical giggle, at Miss Patlence wildly inserted burnt feathers under her nose, and the sandy haired gentleman sat perusing the note, scarlet to the roots of the above mentioned article, with baffled rage and mortification.

"Wal! thank the Lord she's gone. and he's gone!" cried the good woman, after the flurry was all over, and Mr. St. Clare had departed, with difficulty ensconced upon Elise's toboggan in a shy nook amongst the eight Saratoga trunks. "Sassy little jackanapes! a-takin me to task for not taggin round of a full-grown gal, wherever she'd a mind to go-me on one of them lightnin' machines, with my rheumatizhuh!' Strange as it may appear, vagrancy has become a regular profession. It has members of every conceivable worth and worthlessness. It may real ly be termed a learned profession. To live by one's wits and endeavor above all things to avoid any labor, requires more skill, tact and training than it would to earn a good support in some carelessness and abandon of the profession, constitute such a charm that its members prefer its chances to the certain rewards of honest labor. All vagrants are not poor. There are times when some people possessed of considerable wealth are no less vagrants than the miserable tramp who burglar, the midnight assassin and the little girl who insists on selling you tickets to a charity concert, are universally acknowledged to be vagrants, who should be cut down and cast into the oven. There are others who are also va-

Gamblers and their retainers, pugilists and their backers, are really nothing but vagrants, and yet such classes are not only tolerated but even courted and encouraged by society. As long as a man has money society does not ask how he got it. His life and antecedents are matters of minor importance. While society recognizes the fact that there is no real difference between the poor vagrant and the wealthy vagabond, so long it will be possible for the worst classes to mingle with the best, and so long will the attendant evils curse and blight, hence we say that society needs turning inside out and scraping.—Texas Siftings.

When the bread is dried by the animal heat, I drop water on the other side, so as to keep it thoroughly moistened, and disolve the soda crystals in contact with the skin. This, you will perceive is merely a bread poultice, the bread being a vehicle through whose moisture the soda reaches the humor. I find that washing or bathing with soda water, even continuously, will not suffice with me. My skin requires the heat and moisture of the bread in order for the soda to act on and neutralize the poison. I rarely have need to retain this soda poultice for more than thirty minutes to any affected part. No pain ensues. Formerly I suffered often for weeks, as the poison would spread all over my body. Now thirty minutes measures the duration of its

A City Within a City.

Twelve years ago, there were but about one hundred and fifty Chinamen in New York. The Chinatown of the present day was a very insignificant colony, and a queue seen on the streets created a sensation, at least among the ranks of the small boys down town Now there are fully nine thousand Celestials in this city. They are doing well in various lines of business, and there are a large number of them who have bank accounts running into thousands and tens of thousands of dollars. In fact there are at least two Chinese merchants in Mott street, who each own considerably over one hun dred thousand dollars in property and money. It was not until 1875 that the Chinese took possession of Mott street. At that time the six companies of San Francisco, which practically controlled the Chinese population of that city. established an agency in this once fashionable street. As new arrivals from the flowery kingdom appeared on the scene, they settled down in this spot, and Chinatown waxed and grew strong, until it became what it now is, a veritable city within a city, having its own municipial government, and in most matters making laws.suiting itself, and so growing in strength, oblivious of the political and social amenities of the great city around it. The Chinese evidently believe in close corporations.

I find one out of three women stout. Let us count them, young and old-it's quite interesting and also amusing." The count was made and resulted as follows: Time, one hour; number of women over eighteen years of age (estimated), six hundred and thirty eight; abnorand four; total, all kinds of stout, two hundred and twenty, or more than onethird. them rapturously. "Give them a bath, and put fresh ribbons on them, Fanchon, and then you may do my hair,' to the stylishly dressed, supercilious looking French maid, why stood gazing at the old-fashioned furniture with politely suppressed disgust. "Are you going to change your dress, Miss Duval?" asked Ruth, timidly, as Elise tossed the pink roses carelessly "Don't call me Miss Duval, child; call me Lizy," she laughed, unconsciuosly mimicking Miss Patience's austere tone and manner. "Change my dress, my dear? Of course I am. You didn't suppose I was going to dine in this dusty thing, did you? The pale green faille, Fanchon-or-no, the ruby velvet will be best, I think," as the deft hands of the maid skillfully unpacked, and arranged a score of elegant dresses upon the hooks of the high old-fashioned wardrobe.

Miss Patience's face was a study, as Elise swept in at the kitchen door, an hour later, the ruby folds of her velvet train reaching half across the floor, and the creamy lace scarf wound around her neck pinned with a star of flashing brilliants. "Wouldn't you like an arron?" she asked, dryly, glancing at her own and dresses, and then at the gorgeous one of their guest. "An apron, Aunt Patience?" she repeated in a puzzled tone. "I never wore one in my life. Oh, stay! I did once in a masquarade party but it was blue satin trimmed in lace." "Humph!" grunted Miss Patience, disapprovingly. "Did you ever eat any fried chicken?"

"Fricassee? Oh, yes! I dote on it," cried Elise, sweetly, and ate her full share of the full tempting, though home made, dainties set before her.

"A giddy, flighty piece of extravagance, I'm afraid," muttered Miss Patience, after Elise had left the room, vawning prodigiously, and carelessly inspecting a huge gravy spot on the front of her velvet gown. "If she tries to spile our little sweet pea blossoms yonder, I'll pack her off quicker'n 'lectric lightning'." And to emphasize this declaration, the good lady washed dishes with such vengeance that she knocked off the knob of the best china

"Come in, Clover," called Elise's musical voice, as Ruth tapped shyly at bright and fresh as a flower in her dark red dress and showy apron. "I mean to call you that all the time, you're so sweet! You look exactly like one, too, in that red dress. It's immensely becoming, but so dowdyish, dear! Now I have a pale blue cashmere house dress that would suit you to a charm. By the by, do you love chocolate? Just sit down on this ducking stool a moment, and I'll give you a cup," the dimples playing merrily as bewildered little Ruth sat gingerly down upon the edge of the best spare room rocker, that she had just heard disrespectfully designated as a ducking stool, and gazed with all her big blue eyes at Elise, who was lying on the high four post bedstead, which was surrounded by a handpainted satin screen, dressed in a creamy white wrapper, all ruffles and lace, a yellow covered

Then the General made them each in succession take hold of the wires at both ends of an electric battery in full operation. After which he exclaimed: "I command you to let go the wire!" "I can't; my hands are benumbed," said the Indian. The battery was then stopped, and the man released. Not long afterward the General restored them to liberty, giving them strict injunctions to keep the secret, and not to betray it to their countrymen on any account. Edison on the Labor Question. Thomas Edison, the electrician, when asked by a newspaper interviewer what he thought of the Keely motor, replied: "I have never seen it, so I have no opinion about it. But all the results he is said to have obtained can be got from compressed air. All the air in this room can be condensed into a liquid that could be carried in a filbert shell, and its explosive force would be tremendous. Skillfully released and reconstructed, it would move a great machine." In reply to the question, When motive power gets to be four times as cheap as it is, Mr. Edison, what will become of the laboring man?" "He will be enriched by it. Machinery will be his slave. See how machinery has multiplied in the last fifty years. As a direct result, workingmen get double the wages they did then and the necessities of life cost only half as much. In other words, a hand worker can to-day buy four times as much with ten hours of work as his father could fifty years ago. For the first time in the world's history, a skilled mechanic can buy a barrel of flour with a single day's work. The machinery in the United States represents the labor of a thousand million men, or fifty times as much labor as that of all the men in the country. When motive power is still further cheapened—say in another generation —I believe that the unskilled laborer, if sober and industrious, can have a house of his own and a horse and carriage and a library and a piano. It is terrible stupidity that leads some laboring men to suppose that machinery is their foe. It is the thing that gives them independence and even freedom. Without machinery society would drift into the condition of master and slave. The multiplication of machinery means for every worker more food, better clothes, better house, less work. In fact, I believe that the indefinite increase of machinery is go-

BUCHANAN RECORD.

JOHN C. HOLMES, Editor.

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER, 17, 1887. Don M. Dickenson, of Detroit, has been appointed Postmaster General in President: Cleveland's cabinet, and has accepted.

President Cleveland gave his check for $10 to the Grant monument fund, $20 for the Charleston earthquake sufferers, and $1,000 for the New York Election boodle. Such is reform.

By the elections of last week the republicans lost one Senator in Virginia, Reddleberger, and gain one in New Jersey, where a republican legislature has been elected and William Walter Phelps will probably recieve the vote.

Fielden and Schwab commenced their active life in Joliet prison Monday. Schwab in the kitchen and Fielden with the stone hammer at the quarry. After a little more than a year of refined rest their experience as workingmen will be good for them.

Eastern authorities have taken a cue from Western performances, and are taking measures to quell the blood-thirstwutterances of the Anarchists in their midst. Herr Most and others of his character have been notified to keep quiet, and no more red flag parades will be allowed.

Germany is apparently in a bad predicament. Her Emperor is near the end of his career and the Crown Prince so affected by a fatal malady that he can last but a short time. With Prince Bismark for a balance wheel, the country will run safely through the changes of administration.

But four of the Chicago Anarchists were hung Friday. Fielden and Schwab having had their sentence commuted by Gov. Oglesby to life imprisonment, and Lingg blew his own head off with a fulminating cap, the day before the hanging. This should show to the foreign reprobates who, like Mr. Schulenberg, of Detroit, believe that the American people do not know anything but to play ball, that they will require something besides dynamite bombs to teach them. Such men who entertain Mr. Schulenberg's ideas should return promptly to the realms of Prince Bismarck, where they can find more congenial companionship.

Attorney General Taggart, with his little opinion, has knocked the stuffing right out of the new Michigan marriage license law in the first round. One of its alleged main objects, as set forth in the discussions in the Legislature, was to put a stop to runaway couples from Indiana and other States coming into Michigan to be married, though nobody can give any reason why Michigan should object to that. But now comes the Attorney General's opinion and says that people from other States can come into Michigan and be married just the same as of old, without any license, and such mar-riages will be valid, and the clergymen or magistrates will be free from any penalty. The new law is simply a tax and nuisance imposed upon Michigan people.—Lansing Republican.

A Democratic Estimate of the G.A.R. The Augusta (Georgia) Gazette, an excellent Democratic paper, which flies Cleveland at its head for President in 1888, gives voice to its feelings toward the defenders of the Union in the following frank and fearless manner:

"The meanest, shallowest, most contemptible organization in all this country is that which poses under the pompous name of the Grand Army of the Republic. It is an aggregation of leeches, hypocrites and dead beats. This diabolical organization merely embodies the true spirit of that party of which John Brown and Thad Stevens were great and shining lights. It is capable of anything but regard for lawful authority and the proprieties of common decency. It is an organized menace to law and order."

We have no doubt a good many other Democratic papers feel just as the Gazette does, and are only restrained from speaking right out because fearful that they will thereby prejudice the next election. Only let the Democracy get another lease of power and they will be in the saddle and show the patriots of this nation what they mean when they proclaim them an "organized menace," and an "aggregation of leeches, hypocrites and dead beats."-Elkhart Review.

J. Brown & Son are comfortably settled in their new quarters, in the old cheese factory building, with machinery far more conveniently arranged than in their old location, where the work was in three stories instead of one as in the new building.

WARSAW is offering $100 reward for the detection of those who celebrated Hallowe'en in that city by demolishing a lot of city property. The license taken on such occasions is sometimes pestiferous in the extreme.

No; the two large cisterns that were to have been built at the main school building will not yet hold water and most likely will not before spring. Money for their construction has not yet been paid in and they cannot be

FROM J. L. Richards we have received a copy of the Chautauqua county, Kansas, Democratic ticket, on which appeared the name of B. E. Binns as candidate for County Treasurer. When Capt. In addition to the fine display they intend to have, there will each evening be given a choice musical or literary entertainment. Admission, morning and afternoon, 10 cts.; evening, 15 cts.; session tickets, 50 cts.

MRS. NAOMI BOYER was completely surprised on the evening of the 5th inst. when on returning home with her mother, who had decoyed her away for a short time, she found a company of some twenty persons, mostly members of the Christian church, in possession of her home. After the formal presentation to Mrs. Boyer of a neat willow rocking chair and a pleasant social interview the happy company dispersed.

THOSE who occupy the upper story of the Union School building think they might work better, and would certainly feel more safe, if there were fire-escapes on the building, so that in case of a fire in building they would not be doomed to certain destruction. They would feel better satisfied with the situation if there were nothing more than some ladders reaching from the windows down to the balconies of the next story below.

ONE of the Hartline boys took a plunge bath in the creek just below the mill wheel, yesterday. He had been taking some kind of medicine called Spiritus Frumenti, that made him dizzy. He afterwards had the misfortune to fall from his wagon before being taken home by his friend, who was with him.

We are very sorry to learn that some of the young ladies of Buchanan have the itch. Nothing so disturbs the equanimity of the average Buchanan male youth as to have his best girl troubled in this way.— Niles Star.

Let us give you a pointer, Fred. The next time you venture over here you will need an extra anchor to your scalp if you have any intention of taking it back with you.

THE new Evangelical church on Portage prairie is one of the neatest and substantial church buildings in the county, costing $7,200. Last Sunday morning the society owed $2,200 on the building and before proceeding with the dedicating services proceeded to take up a collection which amounted to $2,241 which ensured the proper dedication of the building.

THE committees of the W.C.T.U. in this place express a determination to more thoroughly enforce the law requiring the teaching of hygiene relative to the effects of tobacco and alcobol on the human frame. Wonder what difference that will make in the management of our village schools? It seems as if we had heard it some way that that law is being pretty thoroughly observed there.

OH YES! We almost forgot to thank the Star for its kindness in letting its readers of Oct. 31, know that they can get law records and briefs cheap at this office. It is a fact. We do such work at what it is worth and don't try to cheat our patrons by using a small faced large bodied type and double leading the matter so as to make a large number of pages, either and that's why we get the work from highly appreciated, we assure you.

ELDER W. P. BIRDSALL and wife were agreeably surprised last Saturday when a company of about fifty of their friends, principally members of the Christian church, took possession of their home, and for a portion of the day made them their guests. A sumptuous dinner was prepared, and the occasion was one of joy and happiness the addition to the Elder's possessions of four loads of wood, the promise of several others, and a nice supply of bodily wants, betokened the good will of his happy visitors.

clerk of Van Buren county, last week, calling for a special election on the local option question, was signed by 2,786 of the county. We understand that TUESDAY morning we noticed a twelve-year-old lad going down Oak street puffing away with great vigor on a cigarette he had just bought. We have partly expressed our opinion of the man who will sell such stuff to such boys before this. The full opinion would hardly appear well in print. It is better spoken. This boy's mother is a poor widow who is working as hard as she can to bring up her children as they should be. Any man who will by any means hinder her does not deserve a place among men.

Those who have occasion to pass to the east end of Front street may rejoice in having a new sidewalk, between the saloon and Lister's livery stable. That portion of the street has been with nothing but a mud path too long. There is another string of the same kind of path, only worse, farther east on the same street, and another on the west side of Portage street, north from the corner of Second street. Is there any reason why these places should be left in their present condition?

THE Commissioner of Agriculture in his report just received says that one half ounce of Corrosive Sublimate mixed with four gallons of rain water and sprinkled about the pen will prevent the spread of hog cholera. Every part of the surroundings of any sick animal and the carcases of all dead ones should be wet with the mixture which he recommends as a thorough disinfectant for that disease. Care must be taken about using too much of the Corrosive Sublimate as it is a deadly poison. Wooden or granite vare should be used in handling it. Farmers in this vicinity who are having trouble with the disease which has cost Berrien county a good many dollars this fall may find this worth trying. The authority is certainly

Once more we are told that the cholera has come. The last of the so-called twelve year epidemics, which has been creeping along the Mediterranean, in its usual slow way, for four years, has crossed the ocean and cholera patients have landed in New York. But, thanks to men of science, we know as much about cholera as about scarlet fever or any other regular disease, and we know that courage, cleanliness and temperance are as efficient prophylactics against this as against most other epidemics. The mysterious Lorror excited by Asiatic cholera in 1833, and still more in 1849, is no longer possible; our physicians have proved beyond controversy the

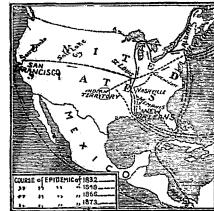

1. That cholera is a true zymotic disease, propagated by germs from cholera patients, following the ordinary lines of travel, and that rather slowly. 2. That it is not "in the air." On the contrary, one may live in the very midst of the worst cholera epidemic with safety-if the germ does not in some way get into his stomach from the excreta of a patient. 8. That the germs are almost always introduced by drinking water which has become infected, but they may be carried by flies, or, as some suppose, dried and blown into food or water. For all practical purposes, however, infection in America is by the medium of water, and when pure water is assured the danger is reduced to a minimum. 4. That the germs or bacteria will not develop in a healthy subject, for the acid of the stomach will destroy them. If, however, they are carried through the stomach and into the intestines by excessive draught of water on an empty stomach, then they pass from an acid to an alkali environment and develop rapidly; or, if the system is weakened by poor food, great fatigue or debauchery, the acid of the stomach may full to do work and the germs survive. In short, we know of this as of so many other diseases that cleanly and temperate people, not overworked or scared or starved, need have no fears. But the true point of defense is at the coast, for there is no native cholera of the severe type—it is always imported and could always be excluded by a sufficiently

The history of Asiatic cholera is full of instruction. It is always present in parts of Hindostan, and all the virulent epidemics have had their start in the delta of the Ganges: Peculiar conditions—crowded population, moist, warm climate, great filth, overflowed land and extreme poverty—make it a constant disease there; but as the destructive epidemics have only spread to other lands in the track of religious pilgrimages, two sorts of epidemics are recognized—the Juggernaut and the Hurdwar. At the twelve year anniversaries pilgrims assemble by millions; they lie thick upon the ground and bathe in and drink from the sacred stream; the dead are buried where they die, while excretions are so carclessly disposed of that the whole earth becomes tainted. The stream are horribly polluted; then cholera breaks out and follows down the river, while the returning caravans carry it to all the ports and cities of Arabia, Egypt and Persia. Every twelfth year sees from 1,500,000 to 3,000,000 pilgrims at Hurdwar, and in more than one epidemic one-fifth of the entire number have died there or on the road home. The main route westward in the last great epidemic was lined for 200 miles with corpses. In various degrees the Asiatic cholera has existed from the earliest recorded times. Hip-pocrates described it 400 B. C., and Areteus of Cappadocia 50 B. C.; but 1756 was the first year in which the twelve year recurrence was noted. But as the disease travels with varying degrees of slowness, no such regularity is noticeable in Europe and America. The first epidemic to prove very fatal to the Engin the horrible destruction caused by that of 1817. In two weeks 9,000 British soldiers were prostrated, and the dead lay thick along the line of march. The epidemic traveled around the coast of India and across from the Ganges to Bombay; thence it extended along the Persian gulf, destroying one-fourth of the people in several towns. Inland it followed the lines of travel to the cities of Persia and across the Caspian to southern Russia, where it stopped for the time. The westward line of its march reached Egypt and Constantinople, but it had lost its force, and ceased in 1821. In 1826 the great Hurdwar epidemic started, following the same lines vestward, but sending out additional branches north and east; one traveled across the country and the other around the coast to China, from which it went with slow and horrible regularity northward into Siberia and westward into Russia. Meanwhile another line of infection had gone northwest across Persia, and in the summer of 1829 the two lines united in Russia and moved on Moscow. All winter it raged there with uncontrolled violence and in the spring went into Poland with the Russian soldiers. It also moved northwest to Riga, on the Baltic, whence it was carried by ship to Newcastle, Eng-Another line proceeded down the Oder to Berlin, and thence to Hamburg, whence it too reached England. Thence it crossed to France, and produced in Paris the horrible scenes of 1832—scenes made horribly fascinating by the genius of Eugene Sue in his "Wandering Jew." Almost at the same time several emigrant stips carried it from England and Ireland to Quebec; and once planted in the new world, it spread with frightful rapidity to all the lake ports. The United States army, on its way to the Black Hawk war, was rendered incapable of action. In one company at Chicago forty-seven nien were prostrated in two weeks, and the regimen lost 200 men in, one week. It followed the military routes to every post in the northwest, and from Fort Armstrong, at Rock Island, went down the Mississippi, decimating many places, but reserving its utmost for New Orleans, which it reached in October, 1832. The entire population was prostrated or frightened into helplessness—6,000 died out of a population of 55,000. And with this the epidemic seemed to exhaust itself and thereafter it rapidly died away. The next twelve year epidemic began in lower Bengal in 1841, and following nearly the same routes, except that it first came in through southern Europe, reached western France in 1848 and was taken by German emigrants from Havre to New Orleans. Once in the new world, it seemed to take the American character of rapid movement and ex-tended to the head of every affluent of the Mississippi. It went with the "gold hunters of '49" to the Pacific coast: over 1,000 of them died in a few weeks, and scores of Indians who came about the camps to beg were destroyed by it. Bad as it was in America, its ravages were slight compared to those in eastern Europe, where the Austrian, Russian and Hungarian armies were contending. In 1853 India missed the twelve year epidemic (counting from 1841), but in 1865 it came with redoubled violence, along the Mediterranean, reached New York early in 1866, and went thence to almost every section of the country, even to the newest railroad towns on the plains. But though the regular Hurdwar or twelve year epidemic had not raged, there had been a milder visitation of cholera which seriously affected some parts of the United States in 1854-5. Some writers speak of this as the Juggernaut epidemic; but the distinction is In 1854 there were 125,725 deaths from it in France. In 1871-3 a comparatively mild form of cholora came through central Europe and from Havre to New Orleans, there being only 7,000 cases in all the western valleys, while New York ex-cluded it entirely. And finally, in 1883, the plague began its westward march, raged fearfully in Marseilles and Toulon in 1884, then crossed to South America and back again to Italy, and now once more threatens New York. All through last year and the early part of this the disease moved from point to point in South America, finally reaching the Isthmus and threatening the United States from that direction. To sum up, we see that the lines of cholera travel are simply the lines of commerce, whether by great caravans, by rail or by ocean vessels; that the wind has nothing to do with it, and clothing or other stuff which can carry the The nature of the cholera germ has been investigated by many, and no physician now questions that, like most other diseases, cholera has its specific germ—a living organism; but Dr. Robert

Koch has spoken most positively on the subject, and is regarded as the discover of the "comwas born in the Hartz mountains, Germany, in 1846; ma bacillus." Ho took his medical degree at the age of DR R K KOCH voted himself chiefly to the study of microscopic objects in disease, especially the minute animalcules called microbes, or ba teria, which propagate disease. The chief value of his discoveries thus far consists in proving one factthat the microbes of cholera, as of many other diseases, are almost always harm-less in a healthy subject. Indeed, it is probable they are constantly present in the secretions; but when the cholera bacterium, or comma bacillus, gets into a weak stomach, the acid is not sufficient to destroy it, and cholera is generated. The moral of his researches is: use only sound and well ripened fruit, avoid excess, eat your usual food, don't get scared-and, above all, treat the first symptoms promptly. Do not be misled by the fact that no pain is felt with the first watery discharges. If they are like rice water, and a sense of languor accompanies the attack, have treatment at once, and the chances are 250 to one in your favor. Dr. Koch has also developed and described the bacillus of consumption and some diseases of cattle. Many honors have been bestowed upon him, and he is to have a pro-fessorship at the Berlin university as soon as there is a vacancy. Jime, Limonzin.

With this we give a portrait of Mme. Limouzin, the go between, whose traffic in decorations wanted by men with little character, but plenty of money, has brought Gen. Caffarel, M. É. Wilson, son-in-law of President Grevy, grace. It will be seen that she is not a prepossessing perby those who have met her that in admet her that in addition to her repulsive face she is humpbacked and generally ill favored in appearance, so that in this case looks and character quite agree.

Rumored Cabinet Changes. It is now rumored that there are soon to be important chinet changes in Washington. Secretary Lamar is said to be slated for the supreme court to take the place of Justice Woods. Postmaster General Vilas is to suc ceed Secretary Lamar in the department of the interior, and Don M. Dickinson, of Michigan, is to succeed Mr. Vilas as postmaster general. Mr. Dickinson is a lawyer of Detroit with a large practice, is still in the forties, and is reported to be an able man.

A ROMANTIC HISTORY. That of Mrs. Shevitch, Wife of the Socialist Editor. In the social life of the New York Socialists women occupy a more prominent postis hardly to be wondered at when it is remembered that they contribute as many agitators and zealots as do the men.

Of the women leaders of the new organiza tion four stand more prominent than the rest. These are Miss Gertrude Kelly, who represents the Anarchist, if not the dynamite, school of politics; Mrs. Cynthia Leonard, who is a unique character; Mrs. Isabel B. Hinton, a writer, thinker and lecturer of considerable ability and power, and Mrs. Helene Shevitch, formerly the princess of Racowitz. Of the four named Mrs. Shevitch has had the most eventful career. She was born in Bavaria in 1846, and is now in her 42d year. Her family, the Von Doenn ges, was one of the oldest and most aristocratic 🏂 in that part of Germany. From childhood she displayed a rare love for literature, and even manifestedastrong

liking for scientific and politico-economic subjects. When 15 most men at 30. At this epoch of her life she met Ferdinand Lasalle, the great Socialist leader, if not the father of modern Socialism. She had read his works and had taken a deep interest in the author long before she had met him in person. Lasallo was in every wise a remarkable man. He was very handsome, companionable and fascinating. To a powerful intellect and great scholarship he added wit, humor and descriptive power seldom found among Germans. Inspired, or pretending to be inspired, by an intense love for humanity, he was absolutely devoid of those qualities which are usually summed up in the word purity. Naturally he was attracted by the young girl, who admired him as a superior being. She was extraordinarily handsome. A symmetric and well developed form; an oval face, almost Greek in its purity and regularity; a head of marvelous blonde hair, which varied from pale gold to hummered copper; a graceful carriage and charming manners made up a woman that was bound to rivet the attention of such a man of the world as Lasalle. The result of the meeting was disastrous to both. She fell deeply in love with the brilliant writer, and he on his side perceived and resolved to take advantage of his new conquest. Letters many passed between themhers warm with a girl's first love; his could reach him she was captured by her father and his servants and brought back to her home. Lasalle, chagrined by the disappointment, challenged her father, an old and infirm man, to fight a duel.

Janeo von Racowitz, a relative and the promised fiance of the lady. The duel, contrary to expectation, resulted in Lasalle's reeiving a mortal wound, from which he died in August, 1864. Thereafter Miss von Doenniges married von Racowitz, with whom she lived a very happy life. During this period she was an important figure in the social circles of Berlin, Dresden and the other capitals of Eu-hood she espoused Sergius E. Shevitch, now editor of The New York Leader, then a promising journalist and scholar. Owing to political causes they came to the United States, where her varied accomplishments soon made her widely known. Her parlors became the headquarters of the more adnot very clear. Mrs. Shevitch is a fine linguist, a brilliant conversationalist, a clever writer and speaker She retains much of the beauty of her youth and although as enthusiastic as ever over her theories of human regeneration no longer takes the same active interest in them as in the past.

Sir Lyon Playfair. Sir Lyon Playfair, who made the principal address to President Cleveland on the occasion of the call of the English peace commis sion, is much more a scientist than a politician, though he has done some good work in the latter capacity. He is, in truth, a native of India, but calls himself an Englishman, just as Dean Swift did, though born in Ire

Murat, India; was educated at St. An-LYON PLAYTHER often employed by the government. He was a renoted chemist, Albert, and had much to do with getting up the Crystal Palace exhibition of 1851. For many years he held positions under government as a chemist, and in 1857 was elected president of the London Chemical society, and in 1858 was made professor of chemistry in the University of Glasgow. In 1868 he was elected to parliament, and for several years represented the Universities of Edinburgh and St. Andrew's, acting always with the Liberals. In 1873 he took office as postmaster general under Gladstone's administration, and went out with the Gladstonian defeat in 1874.

Mrs. Schnaubelt.

Much interest was excited recently by the story that Mrs. Schnaubelt, moth-er of Schnaubelt. the alleged Chicago bomb thrower, had come to America with alibravits detailing the facts of the bomb throwing exonerating certain of the condenned from all MRS. SCHNAURF was afterward denied by her friends, who said she came simply to be with her daughter during the winter. Her portrait is here given as one of those whose names are just now uppermost. MRS. JAMES BROWN POTTER.

Is She or is She Not a Good Actress! That Is the Question. Have we another great American actress Such is the question dramatic New York is asking about Mrs. James Brown Potter, who has just made her first appearance in the metropolis at the Fifth Avenue theatre before the most fashionable and critical audience ever gathered in New York. Indeed, the marvels of that audience, the array of eminent men and richly dressed women, have almost overshadowed the actress in the press conventional and commonplace. And while the press critics differ in Critics differ in the unprofession-telling on her als are still worse, one set falling on her artistic character like birds of prey and the other going into raptures over her beauty and grace. But on one point there is enthusiastic unanimity: the audience was the most brilliant over gathered in New York on a "first night." Over $12,000 had been paid for seats; box, parquetto and dress circle blazed with diamonds, and even in those sections usually given up to people of limited incomes were crowded with the wealthy and fashionable. The society in which Mrs. Potter was not many years ago a leader was there en masse, and, to their honor be it said, they were determined to approve if possible. Fair and richly jeweled hands were clapped in applause of every little success; and fashiona ble New York very emphatically gave notice that a lady does not lose caste by becoming an actress, if she becomes a great one. Foreign born actresses have of course had as large audiences, but none to compare with this in brilliancy; the best known authorities in art and the infallible leaders of society wero all there.

Mrs. Potter's career as an actress began in amateur theatricals, with the best and brightest of the haut ton as assistants and the parlors of the wealthiest as stages. In an "unlucky hour," as the moralists then said, she recited "Ostler Joe" in an expressive manner before a fashionable audic She woke up a week after to find herself famous-locally at least. A storm of criticism was answered by a torrent of vehement defense and praise. Denunciations of "Ostler Joe" as a "vile production" were promptly followed by such vigorous defense that millions read it where but dozens had heard of it-and all who read it had their minds directed to Mrs. James Brown Potter. She escaped the drudgery of slowly toiling her way to a high position on the stage much as Mrs. Langtry did, but with a far better social standing. Her husband's income having been greatly reduced by business reverses, she decided to become an actress. Her career in England and France has been judiciously kept before the public, and she comes to the United States with public curiosity just at the pitch a manager likes to see it. Add that she is still young, piquantly beautiful, of more than average general intelligence, and that fashionable society has, as it were, adopted her, and it will be plain that her path to dramatic greatness is as nearly strewn with roses as the path to any kind of

All the critics agree that the character for her first night was badly chosen. The play was "Mile. De Bressier," adapted from the French of Albert Depit—and badly adapted,

RUNNING FOR SCHOOL COMMISSIONER

Two Young Ladies of Wayne County, N. Y., Who Have Entered Politics. "Room for the ladies!" They are coming into politics rapidly. In Utah, Wyoming and Washington territories they enjoy all the political rights of men, in Kansas they have municipal suffrage, in other states school suffrage, and now two young ladies in Wayne county, N. Y., were party candidates for school commissioners during the campaign just past. Ellen A. C. Clark was the Prohibition candidate for one district of the county, Miss Nellie L. Cook the Democratic candi-MISS FLLEN A. CLARK date for the other. The latter is young, handsome and vivacious, the former a little older, staid, thoughtful and inclined to very solemn methods of cam-paigning. The eastern district of Wayne county usually goes Republican by a large majority; so, when the Republicans nominated a popular young man for school commissioner the Democrats thought well to do farmer, is but 21 years old, is very handsome and well educated: Being a good talker and well posted on school affairs, she made a personal canvass for votes and excited great onthusiasm. She started out with 1,000 photographs of herself and soon exhausted the lot. In each town where she spoke the young Democrats turned out en masse and escorted her to the public hall to the music of a brass band. In the other district Miss Ellen A. C. Clark, of Macedon, was the Prohibtion candidate, but did not excito so much enthusiasm, as there are but few young men in that party. She has been a teacher for twelve years, has very decided opinions on school government, and s well qualified for the office. She declined the personal canvass business, but made a few speeches with great effect. She said little of general politics in lear speeches, but made an able argument on the superiority of women as school officers. All who heard her admired her views and the ability with which

A New York correspondent claims to have investigated and ascertained that all this talk about fashionable girls working in gymnasia, fencing, boxing and taking long walks is pure nonsense. She says that there are not forty women learning to fence in this city, and most of them are actresses: that the average woman's clothes won't let her walk, and as to boxing, there is absolutely none of it done.—New York Sun.

DR. PETERS.

The American Who Has Received the Cross of the Legion of Honor. Dr. C. H. Peters, of Hamilton college, Utica, N. Y., who has been the victim of more practical jokes, probably, than any other professor in the United States, is also the recipient of many honors, the last of which is the "Cross of the Legion of Honor," conferred by the president of the French republic. The letter accompanying the ornaments is signed by M. Flourens, minister of foreign affairs, and bears date of Aug. 3, but the insignia did not reach Utica till some time in October, as they had to come through the office of the French legation at Paris.

This high honor, conferred by a foreign govern-ment, is but one of many recent proofs 'of the high reputation American astronomers have on-tained abroad. Watson, of the University of Michigan, obtained the PROF. C. H. PETERS highest honors of his time, especially in Egypt, but, to the in-tense regret of Michigan, he accepted a place in the University of Wisconsin, and died there from cold contracted in his very first observations. Professor Watson was a native of Michigan, but Dr. Peters, despite his name, is by birth a German; they were great rivals in the discovery of asteroids until it became one of the standing jokes of the semi-scientific press. Dr. Peters, however, has taken first place, having located forty-four asteroids. He has also catalogued 75,000 zodiachal stars and recorded 12,000 solar spots. The articles he has written, the charts he has prepared and the valuable notes he has contribated to scientific works are almost beyond computation, as he is singularly careless of his claim to any production. He loves his science for itself alone. He is a good general scholar, a graduate in Greek and Latin and modern languages; but celestial mechanics are his specialty, and he loves astronomy with such devotion that he has never found time to woo and win a woman.

Christian Henry Frederick Potors (his full name) was born in Germany, Sept. 19, 1813, graduated at the University of Berlin, took the higher degree of Ph. D., and was about to locate in Germany when the increasing probability that he would have to serve seven years in the army induced him to come to the United States. He was first employed in the coast survey, but soon demonstrated his capacity so thoroughly that in 1858 he was chosen professor of astronomy in Hamilton college. In 1867 Edwin C. Litchfield, of Brooklyn, endowed the chair and observatory with $30,000, since which time it has been known as Litchfield observatory, and has been identified with the fame of Dr. Peters. Among the doctor's many noted achievements was the observation of one eclipse of the sun from the station at Des Moines, Ia., from which important deductions were made; and maps of the transit of Venus made in 1874 in New Zealand. The doctor's party on that occasion took 237 photographs of the different phases of the transit, all of which have proved of great value. Dr. Peters only teaches one class, for a part of the term, and has become so identified with his telescope that he is the subject of known to the students as "Twinkle," and is so near sighted that it is a common thing for the boys to slip out of his recitation room without his knowledge. There was a marked contrast between him and his great contemporary, and in some sense rival, of Michigan. Professor James Watson was the perfection of physical manhood, with perfect sight and digestion that an athlete might envy. Yet the deep chested and brawny Watson died of disease resulting from the exposure of an an-

taining talker-to those who can understand him; but he has never mastered the English language, and in moments of excitement the German of his childhood comes out in accent and idiom. He is extremely modest, and never alludes to his own name, saying only of a certain fact that "it was discovered at Litchfield observatory on" a given date.

THE PURITAN. The Deacon Chapin Statue at Springfield,

Springfield, Mass., rejoices in the possession of a new statue which unites many attractions-it represents the Puritan of early days, the founder of the widespread Chapin family of New England and the early days of Springfield. It was made for the late Chester W. Chapin, president of the Boston

"THE PURITAN" and Albany railroad, in honor of his ancestor, Samuel Chapin, deacon of the first church in sent the man, but as an ideal type of the Puritan character, stern, resolute, self reliant and God fearing, the man who laid the foundations of the free commonwealths of New England. The artist, Augustus St. Gaudens, has done his work well. We see in the statue the firm step of the Puritan on his way to church, his cloak flung back, in his hand a stout staff and under his arm a great leather bound clasp Bible. The figure is bronze, of heroic size, and the impression is one of power and carnestness. It stands upon a broad granite pedestal. The face is a sort of composite-made up by a study of the family features of the Chapins. The statue is to stand on the Worthington street side of Stearns park, facing Bridge street, with a setting of trees and shruks to give a fine effect. The position was chosen by the artist, St. Gaudons. The Springfield critics who have been favored with a view of the statue in advance of the unveiling are warm in praise of it and claim that their city will soon possess the masterpiece of the foremost of American sculptors. Beavers are very abundant on the Appomattox river in Virginia.

SAM COX'S BOOK. EXTRACTS FROM THE DIVERSIONS OF A DIPLOMAT.

A Girls' School in Turkey Described and Pictured—The Interesting History of a Diver Who Was Recognized by Minister Cox as a Sometime New York Fakir.

Following are given some extracts from Hon. S. S. Cox's new book, "The Diversions of a Diplomat in Turkey." Let me instance some of our divers all the legation take part in the dramatic per formance:
With wild demonstrations, after the manner of With wild demonstrations, after the manner of all Orientals, except the Ottoman, a Greek fisherman seeks reclamation, in money, for the destruction of his nets upon the Bosphorus, into which the screw propeller of our Jaunch had made havoc. It was quite a comfort to know that, irrespective of rank, it was possible to plead the relation of a oreign minister to a claim founded in the wrong-doing of the claimant himself; for was not the Bosphorus our essement, our dwn waters, under Another is occasioned by a call from an American citizen of Greek descent. Whether he was descended from Lernidas or Themistocle I did not inquire; probably the latter, as he had much to do with fighting the marine clements. He presents himself and his case. He is a diver. He had been at Chios, old Homer's isle. While diving to raise a vessel in the harbor, he is arrested by the author ities for illegally diving for sponges. He had no license. He is jailed. He appealed unto the American Cæsar, i. e., the Legation. It heard his case in full council. As he spoke no English, little French, some Turkish and much modern Greek, we called in all our aids to assist the ragoman interpreter.

"Have I not seen you before?" I asked him, after his complaints are understood and the talk akes a social air.

After much explanation he says: Oni: Twas in America.

"Ever in New York or Washington?"
"Oh: oui, oui," he promptly rejoined.
"Do you ever smo' e?" I blandly asked, tendering him a cigarette. He smiles a fishy smile and

He looks surprised and pleased at the recogition. "You are the man who drank schnapps under water? How are you, Kippapaporos?" He becomes at once genial, and in his muddled style tells his troubles in the Homeric isle-all over again. I asked him how long he could stay under water and how he does it. He shows us how to do it. He clutches his nose by his thumb and index finger and gathers into his capacious chest a surplus revenue of atmosphere. His wheezy noise makes he legation tremble. The capouju is alarmed nd the kavass confounded. When his performance is over I ask for his passport, as evidence of citizenship and as war-rant for our protection. But it is not handy; so that the American Cosar cannot intervene just now in the local laws to the classic sponges, not even for a descendant of Themistocles. Besides, he complains that he is impecunious. He must nave help or starve.

I suggest divers modes of accumulation—a pun the never suspected.

"Why not work in the clear waters of the Bosphorus, ratse boats and thus raise money?" He acquiesces and leaves, Afterward he returns to say that he has had a job; had dived for a sunken vessel in the Bosphoris, but could not make more than twent piasters (a dollar) a day, and he had a family to

He could stay under water nearly as long as a porpoise, without a blow. What became of him I never knew, but he is a sample which diplomats will recognize as a class of citizens who belong to all flags and are really, by their vagabond life, There has been much difficulty, though a great desire, in establishing Turkish schools for girls. This is a reform. Mrs. Walker, in her book about Turkey, was employed in one of these schools to teach drawing. Her picture of the school is a

She has charge of some forty girls; some of them are matured women. They all rush into the educational business, just as our young Africans did after the war; but a cigarette was more than a slate and pencil, and the promenade more alluring than even making pictures in oil or water. Their minds ran more on matrimour than in depicting ruined temples and spoiled kiosks. An incident in connection with her school in a Turkish village of the Bostonia illustration the med abundant learning. phorus illustrates the mode by which sometime the young women are selected as wives. When the girls are assembled in the school, a strange, weird, old woman enters. She produces a flutter in the dovecote. The teacher makes inquiry: "Who is she?"
"Oh! she comes to look at the girls."

"For what purpose?" asks the artist teacher "You will see soon," reply the giggling beau-The old woman settles down in a special stare at two of the houris, and then leaves. Then the explanation comes. She is picking out a wife for some one. The school then bec marital market. After such a scene, those selected for matrimony begin to dress with ex-traordinary attire and fantastic splendor. The girls wear all their jewelry and their head dresses, with a "twittering" sort of conscious look and a general airiness of manner.

ADRIAN, MICH., Sept. 1, 1886. Messrs. Wagner & Sheppard:
Both myself and husband are using that medicine, "Hibbard's Rheumatic Syrup," which you advised us to try. I used it for neuraliga and my husband took it for rheumatism. It has entirely cured both of us, so that we are now able to do our farm work and are in the best of health. We have recommended it to our neighbors, and they are using it with equally good results. It is one of the greatest remedies for the blood in the world, and for a lost appetite or a disordered stomach we don't helieve there is anything equal to it. MRS. E. A. KNOWLES.
