ber day, in the year 186-, a young man was standing, with his back to the fire, in a small but well-furnished apartment in -- Street. Scattered about upon the table were several open and evil-looking volumes, bearing, as their titles indicated, upon witchcraft, spirit natural phenomena. Their appearance showed that they were frequently and deeply studied. Seated on the hearthrug, close to the young man's feet, was sharp about the muzzle, very bright about the eyes, and very tremulous about the tail. Rather we should say, perhaps, that we have discovered a remedy for the trouble which we have borne for many years, and which we hasten to make known to others in the hope of lessening their troubles. Our remedy is simply lifting the stove upon a platform, which will raise it to such a height that it will bring the cooking utensils, when on the stove, within easy reach to one standing in an erect or nearly erect posture. Haw Pond is about seventeen miles east of Cordelle, Ga., and is, perhaps one of the most wonderful natural curiosities in the states. It annually sinks with a roar about the middle of

May, in a few minutes every drop of water disappears. Last Thursday about a dozen Cordelians left for the pond. They carried fishing tackle in abundance and spent a day and night

catching any number of the finest met about fifty others who gathered at the pond to fish and wait for the water to disappear. Where the fisher-

It seems that the Detroit board of alderman or part of them, have been in the habit of awarding paving contracts, not to the lowest bidder but to whoever would pay them 10 per cent on the amount of the contract. Peter Malcom, contractor, has made an affidavit stating that this was demanded from him by President Jacobs as the price of a contract. This expose by the Detroit News may result in breaking up the rotten paving ring which has been robbing the city.

"Her husband and both brothers entered the army, and from that time until the close of the war her home was a refuge for wounded, sick and furloughed soldiers. She spent two winters in camp with her husband in Virginia, and after the battle at South Mountain, where he was badly wound ed, she joined him at Middletown, Md. and later spent much time in the hospital near Frederick City. After the war she accompanied her husband to Washington while a member of congress. ### ADDITIONAL LOCALS.

So far as Buchanan is concerned the location of the Vandalia railroad extension is settled. It is to be built by way of Galien. There was a time when Buchanan might have secured the road at a moderate cost, but we had so many wise men here some of whom thought that a road could not be bullt from St. Joseph to South Bend without going through Buchanan; others who would do nothing nor allow any one else to do, and others who are ready to fight everything that comes up, and stand with a wet blanket ready to throw over any improvement that shows itself, that it was impossible for those who are interested to do anything. We cannot secure that road now if we had $25,000 to pay for it. Some of our merchants who are afraid some of their trade will go to South Bend, may soon be thankful to have that from the north-west of them to come as near as to go to South Bend. There will be another town at Hill's Corners to monopolize that trade that has come to Buchanan.

A Timely Suggestion.

Now that the hope of securing the Vandalia extension for Buchanan is gone, the question is, what shall we

Our citizens have worked earnestly to secure this line, and have endeavored to prove to the officials of the Vandalia company the importance of entering Buchanan with their line. Yet these efforts have met with little encouragement. One thing seems certain. The difficulties of reaching this point have been exaggerated. The opinions on this matter have been based upon old and incomplete surverys, and it seems quite certain that a very much better route into this place could be found than any line yet surveyed. But this is not the subject for present discussion. The citizens and property owners of Buchanan have a vital interest in this railroad question, and therefore ought to take an active interest in the solution of the present problem. What can we do?

The answer seems plain. It is, to give our united support to the only interest that now offers us another railroad-namely, the St. Joseph Valley Railway Company. When this line is completed between South Bend and St. Joseph or Benton Harbor, there will be no trouble about finding friendly. connecting lines, and the business that such connections afford.

The people of St. Joseph and South Bend have desired all along that any line connecting those two places should touch Berrien Springs and Buchanan, for they know very well the importance of being connected with the county seat and with a place of the business magnitude of Buchanan.

With the cooperation of South Bend, Berrien Springs and St. Joseph or Benton Harbor, a line from South Bend to the Take ought to be assured. It may be said that the business offered does not warrant the building of a third road between the places mentioned, but let it be remembered that the advantages which a lake-port gives them insures the cities at the mouth of the St. Joseph with a strong, steady growth. With this growth will come increase of bu iness which will be desired and sought for by some very great east-and-west lines. But it is not St. Joseph and Benton Harbor that are to be considered. Let a railroad reach Berrien Springs and there will be a growth and increase of business at that place. Besides being the county seat of a growing county, it is situated in the midst of a rich farming country which makes it a good market and shipping point for grain. And further as to our own interests. No one who has marked the steady growth of Buchanan and of its factory interests, even without the advantages of competing lines of railroad, can doubt that when we secure another independent line, our growth and prosperity are certain. There is too much capital invested in Buchanan for our citizens to allow it to decrease in value for lack of another railroad. The duty of the hour seems clear. As enterprising citizens shall we not show ourselves equal to the occasion?

The writer lives in Buchanan, works for Buchanan's welfare, and to this end has been an industrious worker in trying to secure the Vandalia line. Seeing that the efforts of our citizens to secure the Vandalia are futile, let us work with still greater determination for the extension of the St. Joseph Valley. If we all work together with a will we shall succeed.

PROF. A. J. COOK, of the Agricultural College writes as follows to the Lansing Republican about the grain lice found in nearly every wheat field in this vicinity:

Many farmers in Indiana, Ohio, and Southern Michigan are becoming seriously alarmed because of the presence on their wheat of the grain aphis, Aphis avena. In Indiana it is called, very incorrectly, the green midge. This plant louse is very abundant, and often does serious damage to wheat, rye, barley, and oats. Like all the aphides, it sucks out the juice, and thus ruins the grain. Dry weather is favorable to the growth and development to all plant lice, and no doubt the exceedingly dry spring-April and May-explains the abundance of this grain aphis this season. It is probable that the abundant rains of June will lesson their numbers and injury. I hope that the rains are in time to prevent any serious mischief:

Although we know how to kill plant lice, and can always do so by the use of the kerosene and soap mixture, yet the very nature of the case prevents the use of this specific in case of this grain aphis. There is no way of applying the remedy in this case without doing more harm than good.

Unless the late frequent and copious rains are too late, I shall expect that they will destroy this enemy and save our wheat. This grain aphis has often been observed, and has not infrequintly done great harm. One comforting fact may be given: This enemy rarely contronts

the farmers success on two successive

Extremely Cool.

Dowagiac is mad and Buchanan is mad because the fast trains do not stop there. We would like to know how the Central can compete with other roads in conveying passengers to the Atlantic coast if they are compelled to stop at every little station. Every stop puts them back several miles. While they are crossing Detroit river the Baltimore & Obio speeds along twenty miles or more with their fast trains. There are trains enough stopping at all stations to accommodate the people. We sometimes wonder why the fast trains do not run Niles station, and we p.esume they would, only it is but little expense and trouble for the people of Dowagiae and Buchanan who wish to be rushed through to the seaboard, to get here for these trains. Once on board they know just what time they will arrive in New York or Boston. provided they are not detained as the people of different towns seem to en deavor to do. We quote the above from the Niles Mirror, and for really cool cheek it certainly takes the buscuit; but we will try to answer it in our poor weak way. In the first place, the Michigan Central, if they stop the express trains in this city, would compete with other roads in the same way they did before when they stopped here. Second, they can afford to stop in every "little station" that gives them about twice as much business as such great big cities as Niles. To relieve our contemporary of the wonderment as to why they do not run Niles station, we would timidly suggest that it is on account of the bridge over the river. Were it not for that they would get their trains through there so fast that Nilis people would see only a streak and some dust. But the coolest of all is to think of Dowagiac people going to Niles to take a train to go somewhere else, spending perhaps hours of ennui such as is found nowhere else except in Niles and the solemn, sombre stillness of the graveyard.—Dowagiac Times.

Great Brittain shows a willingness to increase the American census. The various parishes of England and Wales by legislative act raise funds by a yearly tax to defray the expenses of the very poor who wish to emigrate. The gnardians of the several parishes have a fund to promote "voluntary emigration" of paupers or those likely to become such. Guardians are empowered by law to expend $10 to each pauper emigrant who will consent to emigrate from their parish. The United States has been the dumping ground of this class long enough. These laware to-day in force in England and can be seen in 11 and 12 Vict. c. 110 and 12 and 13 Vict. c. 103 and 13 and 14 Vict. 101 .- Chicago Inter Ocean.

The present administration inherited the Samoan troubles," and the war ships of America and Germany were in Samoan waters with loaded guns ready for a conflict. That all has been settled with such honor to the American Nation, before four months have passed, is so highly creditable to the administration, and in such contrast to the dwadling methods before in vogue that no intelligent reader will fail to

PHACTS AND PHYSIC.

The noblest art is that of making others happy. Great mistakes have been made in the world by supposing many nervous troubles were due to bad blood. Thus headache, fits, dizziness, sleeplessness, etc., are always due to weakness or irritation of the nerves of the brain; dyspepsia, pain, wind, etc. to weakness of the stomach; weak lungs is caused by weakness of the parts; biliousness, constipation, etc., to weakness of the nerves of the liver or bowels; pains, irregularity, sterility, to derangement of the uterine nerves. THE LARGEST DRAWBRIDGE IN THE WORLD AT NEW LONDON.

A Flying Machine Which the Inventor Believes Will Work All Sorts of Aerial Wonders Reopening an Unused Iron

About the middle of the present century, when the first great triumphs of engineering skill which mark the age took place in America, they attracted great attention. But today chasms and rivers are bridged, precipices are ascended by steam, the Atlantic is crossed in six days, and people have ceased to wonder. They scarcely ask, "What next? but accept each new work as a matter of course. For years those accustomed to travel over the "Shore Line" railroad between Boston and New York have looked forward while on the road to an agreeable change at the crossing of the Thames river at New London Conn., where trains have been put on a ferry boat and floated across. A bridge is about being finished at this crossing, and the "Gro-ton ferry" will soon be a thing of the past. What matters it to say that the "draw" of this bridge is the largest in the world? The expectant American public will look for a larger one somewhere else almost before the

The crossing is placed about half a mile above the ferry, the new line making a de-tour on the New London shore and leaving the land at Winthrop's Point. The Thames river is a tidal estuary about fourteen miles long, New London being situated at its mouth The United States government has a naval station above the bridge, and that there should be no obstruction in the way of passing vessels made a requirement that there must be an immense draw. There are two openings, one on each side of the pillar on draw rests, of 225 feet, making s draw 502 feet long. This bridge may be swung around in a complete circle, following the motion of the passing vessel and thus saving time. This is the usual plan of draw bridges at lake cities, like Chicago and Milwaukee. The machinery for moving the draw is placed upon the central pier, below the bridge span. An engine moves the span on a turn table of steel. Where the bridge is located the distance from shore to shore is 1,500 feet. The channel is from 40 to 60 feet deep, and hard bottom is only found 130 feet below the water surface. An open caisson was sunk into a dredged hole 18 feet below the natural bottom, and in this piling was driven down to hard bottom. Upon the piling an open top caisson was sunk. The masonry for the piers was laid on the bottom of the caisson while it floated, and the weight gradually sunk it until it reached the piling. The masonry was then carried up to the requisite height. The superstructure is of steel. The bridge completed will be one of the most imposing in America. There is about it something of the appearance of the suspension bridge which arises from the curves of its super

The ability of engineers of the present day to remove earth rapidly is well illustrated in the reopening of the Tilley Foster mine, about fifty miles from New York, on the New York and Harlem railroad. The ore contained in this mine is very valuable, and has been largely used in the production of Bessemer pig, but owing to an overlying stratum there was great difficulty in mining. In order to support the roof, large quantities of the ore had to be left in position. Concrete pillars were tried, but found liable to be crushed. All plans having failed it was at last determined to remove the super strata and expose the ore.

The work was commenced two years ago, in June, 1887, and has since been steadily pushed forward. Up to March, 1889, 280,000 cubic yards of material were taken out. There is now a great hole 450 feet long, 300 feet wide and 170 feet deep. Of the material removed there have been 15.000 cubic yards of rock in which ore was mixed, but this is small compared with what must follow, for there are still 350,000 cubic yards of rock to

THE LATEST FLYING MACHINE. be excavated to secure a million tons of ore. The excavation of this rock costs $1.15 for each cubic yard. The material is removed by means of a series of wire cables stretched across the pit, which lower empty car bodies into the pit and bring them up full and place them on trucks. The blasting material used is rackarock.

If the solution of problems of transportation by land or sea, of methods of delving into the earth, have been solved, one great division in mechanics is still the vast unknown it has always been. We are practically no nearer navigating the air than we have been for a century or more. But the restlessness of the inventor shows itself as conspicuously in this field as in the others. Every year one or more new contrivances with which to fly through the air are brought out, and some of them are very ingenious But thus far none have solved the prob-lem. How mocking must be a little sparrow to one of these investigators, which from a fence post, turning its tiny head aside, looks archly at the mechanical genius glued to the earth, except for the support of a cum-bersome balloon, and then sails up to the eave of a roof. Can there be anything more tantalizing? For many years men have watched the simple mechanism of the bird and endeavored to imitate it, but thus far in Vain.

Now comes Mr. Herman A. J. Rieckert, of New York, with still another patent. The main feature of his machine is a balloon made in three compartments, the lower one held in a framework, over which is the sec-ond, and on this is the third, which is exposed to the action of the wind, and with its edges attached to the framework. There is the usual hanging basket, which in this case contains motive power for operating side wings and central wings. The steering device is located in the front of the basket. It consists of a vertical wing mounted to swing and a disk wing pivoted on the vertical wing, ropes extending into the basket for operating A suction wheel is mounted above the basket and at its rear, the power being transmitted through a friction wheel. In the basket are wheels mounted, to be rotated by crank arms and treadles after the bicycle

The different compartments of the balloon are covered with silk, as is usual, and the top compartment is made to shift into different positions according to direction and strength

The mechanism in all its various features can hardly be understood except with the aid of a model in operation. Like all other machines of the kind, there are a number of connections and bits of mechanism too detailed to specify in a brief article.

THE LATE LEONARD SWETT. A Brilliant Lawyer Who Was a Friend o

Leonard Swett, the eloquent lawyer, recently deceased, was not a very old man, and yet he had to a certain extent outlived his fame, which was at its maximum some twen-ty-five years ago. Alexander Hamilton once said, with something like a sigh, that no fame was so evanescent as that of a great jury lawyer, and though Mr. Swett was undoubt-edly the indst successful jury lawyer of this ers, his fame as for as it is lasting will rest upon his early and efficient support of Abra-ham Lincoln and his splendid services in deli-cate management during the war. He made the speech in convention putting Abraham Lincoln in nomination, and twenty-eight years later in the same city did the same service for Judge Walter Q. Gresham. In the anti-slavery contest he was a great power in Illinois, his speeches from 1852 to 1865 being very numerous and wonderfully

LEONARD SWETT. made Abraham Lincoln president. He declined to take office under the administration, though the Peruvian mission and other places of honor were offered him, but he remained in Washington through most of the war, was frequently consulted and employed in delicate and confiden-tial missions. He went to Missouri with discretionary powers to remove Gen. Fremont and reorganize the department, and did the work with rare skill and diplomacy. At the close of the war he located in Chicago, where he became the successful lawyer, taking comparatively little share in politics. Leonard Swett was born Aug. 11, 1825, on farm in Oxford county, Me., worked hard in youth and gained a tolerably liberal education by study in the winters. Emigrating to the west at majority, he enlisted as a private for the Mexican war and returned an invalid, unable to get any further than Illi-nois. This fixed his residence at Bloomington, in that state, where he entered on the practice of law on the same circuit with Abraham Lincoln, Stephen T. Logan, U. F. Linder, Edward D. Baker and others who have made that circuit immortal. Judge David Davis long presided over that circuit. In 1854 he married Miss Laura R. Quigg, and they had one child, Leonard Herbert Swett, now about 30 years old. She died early in 1886, and the next year he married Miss Marie Decker, who had been his clerk in the law office for several years—a marriage which excited much Chicago comment at the time. Mr. Swett's experience at the bar was remarkable. He defended twenty-nine men accused of murder and secured the acquittal of all but one, who was sentenced to the penitentiary for life, but afterwards pardoned. He then took charge of the Anarchists' cause after they had been removed to the supreme court, but was defeated. In civil cases he was scarcely less successful. His untiring industry in preparing his cases and his power before a jury brought this success. In person he was imposing—six feet two inches in height and weighing, when in health, 225 to 250 pounds. His wife, son, brother and three sisters are the only near relatives who sur-

Uses of Electricity. It doesn't seem possible that pa would do such a thing, but The Belfast Age says he did. According to that paper a Belfast man has a small electric battery which he put to a novel use. His wife occasionally makes him stay at home to take care of the children. He was left the other day, and wanted to go across the street badly, but the children were too young to be left alone. He finally set the battery going, then placing the handles in the children's hands started the current strong enough so they couldn't let go, and left them. They were there on his return. The beauty of this story probably is in the electrical current of imagination that runs through it.

The Yacht Valkyrie. It is now a question as to whether there will be any race for the America cup this year at all, but most people will be interested n the accompanying cut of the yacht Valkyrie (from a photograph taken during one of the English races) which was built by Earl Danraven for the express purpose of carrying the cup back to England. She is a graceful craft. GREAT DISPLAY AT PARIS.

AS A SHOW MERELY IT IS THE GREATEST ON EARTH.

The Useful Not Well Represented Yet-The Curious and the Beautiful Abundant. The Home Life and Work of All Races in All Ages Well Portrayed.

The American workman, to whom the passage money is an unattainable fortune, is invited to see the Paris exposition by proxy and at a triffing individual expense. This is substantially the proposition of Mr. Edward W. Scripps, who proposes to leave for Paris on the 24th of July with forty representative and genuine workingmen, each chosen by the associations of the trade he represents; and these forty are not only to see the exposition, but to investigate the condition of European laborers from the south of France to the north of Scotland and make a full report. The claim is made that many valuable suggestions will be gained, even as Americans learned to do many things better by seeing how the foreigners did them at the Philadelphia exposition of 1876. Only practi-cal workmen will be taken, each a master in his own craft, and as each would naturally take most interest in the foreigners in his own lines, the variety of opinions returned would be amusing as well as instructive. In the meantime an army of reporters are giving all readers a view by proxy, and as they are on the ground before more than half the visitors get there and while the exhibit is incomplete their views are amus-ing and contradictory enough. Each one nally writes of that feature most inter ses and failures. It is agreed at the start that the "grand opening" by President Car-not was little more than a farce. Even the French soldiers in ranks on that occasion could not repress their smiles and sneers. M. Sadi-Carnot is far from being an imposing figure. His duty on that historic date and eventful day was to typify something, to personify a grand idea—and he couldn't. His progress was on a plan all his own-to strike a medium between gorgeous royal or imperial equipage and plain republican sim-plicity; it therefore combined the absurdities of both and was ten fold more ridiculous than either. The point that impresses every one is the immense size of the affair. Warned by the crowded condition in 1867 and in again in 1878, the managers this year gave up the idea of a symmetrical inclosure, and so the bounnd in and out on both sides of the Seine, and the antennæ of the exposition, so to speak, stretch into quiet quarters a long ways from the Champ de Mars, and strangers ignorant of the city often leave the grounds and go along a street, which they suppose is leading them directly from it, only to come square upon another section of it. There is a vast amount of walking to do, and delicate visitors who can afford it have themselves wheeled about in regular invalids' chairs. There are three miles of outdoor walks protected by awnings, and many more not protected. The grounds take in the whole Quai d'Orsay and a large section of the left bank of the Seine, all the bridge of Jena and all the Trocadero

SENEGAL SOLDIER. tures representing all styles of human dwellings of all times, from the cave and brush and bark but to the palace, are in good form, and the "restauants of all ages" are comically complete.

On these last the Parisian satirists have turned themselves loose, though the correspondents indicate that their wildest caricatures scarcely surpass the facts. L'Illustra-tion, the illustrated paper, gives a series of views from the "first full meal recorded in history" (that of Adam and Eve) down to the wild Indian dining at the Vienna cafe. In the "Prehistoric Restaurant" the waiter is dressed to represent the original man of the "Stone Age," and the Parisian exquisites who dine in the cave consider him a "howling success." The mammoth tun of champagne, which required twelve oxen to draw it into the grounds, is always surrounded by a curious crowd, and the choice Epernay flows in an almost continuous stream for the thirsty

Similarly the local customs of various nations and races are wonderfully well represented. In the Algerian department sits a Kabyle girl spinning in the same primitive fashion the Orientals have kept up for 4,000 years, and by her sits an Arab boy in the same costume, no doubt, as was worn by young Ishmael when he played at the feet of the spinning Hagar. The woman of the Soudan works in native products, the wild Australians make and sell boomerangs, the Turks fabricate many delicate textures of leather and wool, a few Americans are there to exhibit the telephone and many other proofs of the subtlety of American genius. And the music and dancing of nearly all nations is equally well represented in various pavilions, In machinery, however, the exposition is as yet a poor a Tair, and the French made almost a failure of their part of it. The elevator for the Eiffel tower is being put in by an American, and the working of the colored fountain display was finally intrusted to an Englishman. The gathering of soldiers from the semi-civilized nations is unique and won-derfully varied, the French, of course, taking most interest in and giving to the world the best pictures of those in their own possession or with whom they have close relations. To the American mind there is something lu-dicrous in these "French soldiers," with black faces and woolly hair, and the "Cavalryman of Senegal" would be taken on this continent for a specimen of "burnt cork minstrelsy." But the French take him "au serieux." They have few color prejudices and can scarcely understand the American idea on that sub

FATHER DAMIEN, THE LEPER PRIEST, AND HIS SUCCESSORS.

Some Account of Leprosy—Its History, Its Treatment and Its Extent-It Does Not Flourish Usually in Either Cool or Damp

The recent death of Father Damien, the "Hero Martyr of Molokai," the prompt aceptance of his vacant place and work by Father Lambert Conrady, who is doomed to the same fate, and the appearance of isolated cases of leprosy in America, have awakened new interest in that dread disease. At the beginning, the sad fact must be acknowledged that but little more is known of its cause and ssential nature than was known when "Ghehazi went forth a leper as white as snow,' and when the Jewish law was so strict and so thoroughly enforced that even a stricken king had to abandon his throne and become an outcast. But some important facts as to prevention and possible cure, still more as to illeviation, have been discovered, and in this line Father Damien did and suffered enough to entitle him to immortality.

This devoted priest, whose portrait has but just reached America and is here given, was a Belgian, born Jan. 3, 1840; at the age of 16 he devoted himself to celibacy and good vorks, and in 1860, when all of manhood was before him, he reached the Sandwich Islands as a missionary On the 9th of May, 1873, he entered on his work as resident missio in the leper settlement, devoting his life voluntarily to those stricken people, and treme end is a pelong and a mile FATHER J DAMIEN wide; across the neck connecting it with the main island a regular prison wall is built, and on all sides the cliffs rise some 3,000 feet above the sea except at one place, where there is a gentle slope to the landing. On this secluded spot have been imprisoned for many years from 500 to 900 people, dying by inches, uncared for morally until the good priest came, and but poorly provided with necessaries at any time. The Hawaiian government enforced their segregation, but too long neg-ected their comfort. When Father Damien arrived the lepers had no houses but such flimsy huts as they could construct, no medical attendance and only the poorest food. The weakest and most despondent at once lay down and died; the stronger began what he called "the orgies of despair." There was a considerable tract of fertile land and taro root and sweet potatoes were tolerably plenty; of the latter the eper made a fiery liquor and drank to frenzy, followed by temporary oblivion. The huluhulu (a pagan dance) was their common amusement, and its conclusion is usually in the most abandoned licentiousness. In this dance and its products, in playing cards and in the frenzy or stupor of intoxication most of these doomed creatures were away their days. Their motto was: Aole kanawai ma keia wahi. "In this place there is no law." Yet in that dread retreat noble sentiments survived and heroic devotion was witnessed; healthy husbands accompanied their stricken wives and wives their husbands to a certain cath, but children not tainted were for bidden entrance. As in the Orient, a leper is "civilly dead" in those islands; his estate is administered upon and his family relations are dissolved as if he were buried. In some parts of the east this idea is carried so far that a sort of burial rite is observed and a shovelful of earth is cast upon the leper at the time of his official banishment to typify his complete extinction. In Kalawao, as the place is called, Father Damien wrought a vonderful reform. The government was roused and the peninsula was soon dotted with neat cottages, in the center a handsome chapel, and near it a residence for the priest. Cows were taken to the retreat and a generous diet of milk and vegetables insured. A regular medical board now makes frequent visits. The mortality has decreased one-half and the disease so greatly mitigated as to raise sanguine hopes that a cure may be discovered. The morality of the settlement is good, and comfort and happiness are not entirely unknown.

For twelve years this hero labored in daily association with the lepers, then the disease showed in leprous tubercles in his face, and early in 1886 he was prestrated most of the time. But the world was ringing with his fame and faithful followers appeared. That year arrived Father Conrady, a young priest, native of Oregon, and soon after seven sisters of the Franciscan order came to serve as nurses in the leper hospital. Father Damien used his remnant of strength in writing a comprehensive report to the Hawaiian government, with many valuable suggestions, and it is scarcely possible to read it without tears. He barely indulges a hope that a cure may be discovered, but proves that it may be greatly mitigated and the danger of infection

True leprosy is very rare in any branch of the Aryan race, and comparatively so in any race living in a cool or damp climate with an abundance and variety of vegetables. In Norway it has lately infected several persons, and in two localities of Canada. An American lady was recently secluded in Philadelphia with the disease in its worst form having contracted it in Brazil, and a few deaths have occurred on this continent since the Chinese immigration set in. It made frightful ravages in Europe soon after the crusades, but was finally banished by quarantine and improved conditions. The Jews appear to have completely eliminated it from their race by long observance of the Mosaic law. In the crowded sections of Asia, where erty, is its true habitat. We may feel reasonably sure that Canada and the United States will escape, despite the Chinese, as long as they remain clean and Christian and have abundant food.

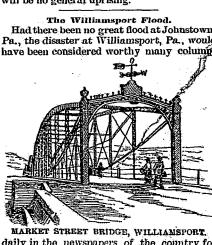

A Book with a History. Mrs. John Ogilvie Roorback, of Mystic, has one of the twenty-two copies of the Epis-copal payer book, and administration of sacra...ca.ts, in the Mohawk language, print ed by servial order of the Rev. John Ogilrie, assistant minister of Trinity church, New York, under whose auspices the entire work was published in 1769. These few copies were ordered by him to be bound in calf and gold, to be used as presents to particular friends. The book in question came into the hands of Sir William Johnson, superintendent of Indian affairs, and was given to Thomas, a chief of the Oneidas, for whom he had a great regard. Jan. 6, 1770, it came into the hand Eleazer Williams (reputed dauphin of France) and was presented by him to the present owner.—Hartford Courant. THE CHIPPEWAS.

Somothing About the Indians Who Have Broken Out in Minnesota. The Chippewas have "broke out," which is almost as much of a surpriso to Minnesota as an "outbreak" among the Quakers would be n Pennsylvania. The Chippewas have been peaceable so long that many people would have forgotten their existence but for the names they scattered on the geography from Lake Erie to Winnipeg; but the late murders at Mille Lacs show that the wild nature is still hereditary in them. There was a time when these Indians, more properly called Ojibbeways, were the terror of the northwest, and in their long wars with the Sioux they had a roll of heroes equal to taat of Homer, ending with the great Pal-yah Goonseh, the red Napoleon of the northwest. The two tribes have been at war from a time whereof the memory of man runneth not to the contrary. The Chippewas were generally victorious in the timbered region, but the Sioux prevailed on the prairie, and so the Red river had become a sort of boundary when the whites began to settle northern Minnesota. For many years the Indians of one tribe would venture to a town or fort only on one side, as the others came up habitually on the other side, each party sending in scouts to see that the other did not take snap judgment on them. As late as 1855 they had a regular battle in Shackopee, making it very lively for the white inhabitants. Mille Lacs is a lovely lake, some sixteen miles long, and is the head of Rum river Along its shores is the Indian reservation, and fish and game have been quite abundant: but of late years there have been too many passed on the Indian lands. The Chippewas and been peaceable so long that no one dreamed of their doing any damage; but their annual gathering gave occasion to air and discuss their grievances, and their dances excited the young bucks to the point where they felt that they must go off and kill somebody. It takes at least ten generations of careful culture to breed the wild nature out of any race of men or stock of animals. The Ojibbeways, or Ojibways, were the main branch of the great Algonquin family, and centered on Lake Huron, stretching as far east as Ohio, and to the far northwest, from which they had come. Indeed, all the tribes this side of the Rocky mountains, and many farther west, have clear traditions of having come from the north, each invasion driving its predecessors before it. They took part with the French and then with the Eng-lish against the Americans, but made a permanent peace in 1816. Retiring westward from Michigan and Wisconsin they expelled the Sioux from upper Minnesota, and have remained there some sixty years. They are noted among Indians for having produced some remarkable scholars. One of them, George Copway, wrote the traditional history of hi people and attracted much attention in England. Another, Peter Jones, is a writer of nbility. They have a written language, newspaper, and many books. The missionaries speak very highly of those in Minnesota; many of them are well-to-do farmers, and so it may safely be concluded that there will be no general uprising.

daily in the newspapers of the country for some little time. But in the shadow of the loss of life by the thousand at the first named place, the loss of between thirty and forty by the carrying away of the Market street bridge at the latter was quite swallowed up. 60 7 --

GIORDANO BRUNO IN MARBLE.

Curious Career, Disputes and Doctrines of the Iconoclast. Giordano Bruno has a monument in Rome at last, which is much the same as if August Spies should have a monument in Chicago; and the agnostics and other innovators of Italy made its unveiling the occasion of a monstration against the About 30,000 people from all parts of Italy witnessed the demonstration. All this was not so much for what Bruno did or said or wrote, for not one person in ten thousand knows what his real opinions were; but it was for what he has been assumed to represent. He was the Bob Ingersoll of 'the Sixteenth century, attacking with wild humor all the assailable points of the people's faith, but overlooking its beauties. He roamed over southern Europe and England for fifteen years, disputing with all who would contend with him, ridiculing the local opinions of the place he happened to be in, writing an immense number of essays and publishing some forty books and pamphlets. Very naturally, ST. JAMES' CATHEDRAL, BROOKLYN.

It Was Lately Struck by Lightning and Burned to the Ground. St. James' cathedral in Brooklyn, recently destroyed by fire consequent upon being struck by lightning, was the oldest Roman Catholic church in the Catholic diocese of Long Island. Prior to 1822 the Roman Catholics of Brooklyn were obliged to cross the East river to attend service at St. Peter's church in Barelay street, New York.

Masses were held in private places in Brooklyn, and on Jan. 7, 1822, a meeting was called to take measures, and it was found that there were only seventy Roman Catholics to be relied upon to further the work; but lots were purchased, and the new building commenced, and on Aug. 28, 1823, it was dedicated. It was built of plain brick, oblong in shape, and cost $7,000. Wings and galleries were afterwards added, the addition of the wings making the church cruciform in shape. Formerly the churchyard was such in the old sense, but burial in it was discontinued in 1849.

John Loughlin was consecrated bishop of Brooklyn in 1853 and made St. James' his cathedral. Since then a number of prominent clergymen have officiated in it. Prior to 1868 Bishop Loughlin selected ground for a new cathedral. The corner stone was laid, but the work has not yet been completed. he got into trouble with the authorities in many places, was expelled from the Dominican order, was driven from Geneva by the Calvinists, ridiculed out of Paris by the philsophers and finally put to death at Rome. He was born in 1548 near Naples and came to his death Feb. 17, 1600. All long out of print when collected and published as curiosities fifty years ago, but even now they are only found in a few libraries. His numerous satires canuot be appreciated bese modern readers caunot appreciate the conditions of his time or mas ter the details, and his philosophy has largely become obsolete or ridiculous by the great flood of recent science. His great principle, however, survives aud has lately been fully elaborated by modern philosophers, and as far as the common mind can see does not differ materially from that of Herbert Spencer. He maintained that there is one original and fundamental principle or substance, and but one; all that we see or feel are but appearances of it. It is at once the original intellect and matter, and is eternal. Mind and body, spirit and matter, are merely varying phenomena of the eternal one. So there is a soul in everything, and all is immortal, but in constant change. This appears to be only the modern doctrine of the persistence of force. Bruno died with coolness and bravery, stoutly refusing to recant any of his views, and for this, if anything, he deserves a monument.
