"Is this the tel'graph office? Asked a childish voice, one day, With its message from far away. As it ceased I turned; at my elbow Stood the merest scrap of a boy.

The golden curls on his forehead Shaded eyes of the deepest blue, As if a bit of the summer sky Had lost in them its hue. They scanned my office rapidly,

And he asked the question o'er. "Is this the tel'graph office?" "It is, my little man, I said; "pray tell me what you want, And I'll tell you if I can." Then the blue eyes grew more eager. And the breath came thick and fast;

"Nurse told me," he said, "that the lightning Came down on the wires some day, And my mamma has gone to heaven, And I'm so lonely since she is away,

And I've brought it for you to see. "I've printed it big so the angels Could read out quick the name And carry it straight to my mamma And tell her how it came; and now won't you please to take it. And throw it up good and strong Against the wires in a funder shower?

Ah, what could I tell the darling? For my eyes were filling fast. turned away to hide the tears, But I cheerfully spoke at last; "I'll do the best I can, my child,"

And the lightning will take it along.

But the blue sky smiled in answer, And the sun shone dazzling bright. And his face, as he slowly turned away, Lost some of its gladsome light.
"But nurs," he said, "if I stay so long, Won't lot me come any more. So goodby; I'll come and see you again, the Southern accent, deprecated by her mother-in-law as "indolent," musically apparent in her deliberate articulation. "I found a pretty shell, red and yellow spotted. An odd thing, heavy and shut up all around. My brother told me that it was a terrapin, and to prove it, he put a coal of fire on its back. When, behold! it stretched out four horrible legs, a tail and such a wicked-looking head that I ran screaming to my mother, believing that I had seen the devil. I felt just so while you were talking. I do not defend myself against your charges. You only take the cue from your mother and sisters in believing me capable of all manner of impropriety and iniqui ty such as they would never impute to one born and educated in their set, and it could seem there is nothing in the code of our best circles to prevent you from saying what you please to a woman when that woman is your wife. fact.' heel and went out. In another halfminute she heard the dull clang of the front door. "Your visitor stayed late last night," Miss Welhelmina observed to her sisterin-law next morning at breakfast. Nellie raised her eyebrows mutely in cool impertinence, and went on with her breakfact.

"I do not know, mamma. I was in the music room until a quarter of eleven, and passing by the small parlor not knowing it was occupied, I saw Jerusha talking with a gentleman, a stranger to me. Half an hour afterward I went down stairs for a letter I had left on the piano, and they were still there.

The mother turned to her son "Do not you help entertain your Nellie answered for him in blithe

"He went off to the club at half-past eight, and did not return until after midnight. I was rather glad of it, for I dearly enjoyed a tete a-tete with my old admirer. You have heard me speak of Jack Tyler, Ev? He has just come back from San Francisco, stunningly handsome, and with more millions than he knows what to do with. I haven't had so charming an evening for two years. He was quite low about my marriage, but I succeeded in convincing him that it was not so serious a matter as he had supposed. Had she been less madly bent-on mischief and hurt, she must have quailed at the effect produced by her words. Madam's complexion was ashy purple, her daughters' whitened and trembled. Four pairs of horrified eyes stared upon her. Everard she could not see in his seat behind her, but she felt him, hold his breath, then the dauntless little rebel to the butler. When the official had served her, his mistress dismissed him with an imperative wave of the hand. "I really must insist Jerusha, that you refrain from unseemly jesting in the hearing of domestics. It is sufficiently reprehensible when there are unmarried young persons of your own sex present. When servants are by, such folly verges on the scandalous.

"I don't understand!" Nellie pretended to stammer and look the picture of bewildered innocence. "I was never in deader earnest. I can't remember when Jack and I weren't in love with one another, and I was awfully sorry for him last night when I saw how cut he was at seeing me the Bride of Another, as the song says. flattering your cook, Mother Vroom, I must say that these mufflns are almost equal to those we had at home when I was there last Christmas."

"Mother" Vroom, to whom the provincial address was especially odious, arose majestically severe, "We will avail ourselves of Jerusha's premission to withdraw, my daughappartment, "like a temple-of-Juno gouse at the head of a line of overgrown goslings," commented Nellie to Jack Tyler, later in the day. "Don't let me detain you, Ev!" was her next attack. "I am extremely hungry, and you are not, you see." He was no master of fence, as we have seen. The fa'l of his hand upon her arm was heavy, if not hard.

"What is the meaning of this tom-foolery?" he almost hissed. "Have you taken leave of your senses?" "On the contrary I am finding them as fast as I can. You threw off the mask last night-that is, you put your feet and head out of the shell. So did I, and I don't mean to draw them in again until I have had my run of the turf. It doesn't pay to cramp oneself in such close quarters forever. Hereafter I shall be myself-independent Nellie Jones, as the Lord and my parents made her. The Roosevelt-Vroom stamp won't take on such material. I shall not interfere with you, and it will be wise for you to let me alone. I can take care of my own morals and man-

He seldom came home for luncheon, but Mrs. Grimes had joined the group when Nellie entered ten minutes behind time, radiant and pretty, most becomingly and exquisitely attired. "How d'ye do' Helen!" she said, nod-ding gayly to the visitor. "I know I am awfully late—you'll excuse me, Mother Vroom, for not going up-stairs to take off my bonnet and wrap I am just famished-but I have had a perfectly gorgeous drive in the park with Jack Tyler. Cold chicken? Yes, thank you, Bennet; bring me a good deal of everything there is for lunch, please. Jack is trying no end of splendid horses before buying a span, so I am booked for a spin every fine afternoon. He has tickets for the opera to-night. Tomorrow evening we go to see Irving and Terry in Much Ado about Nothing.' He used to call me 'Beatrice' in our courting days. I never dreamed until now how delightful life in New York could be. I wonder I ever found it the quintessence of stupidity." "What does Everard say to your little arrangements with your former lover?" queried Mrs. Grimes, in amusement her family considered in

"Haven't consulted him. For his sake it is to be hoped he won't be so absurd as to be jealous of poor, dear old Jack, whom I have known for untold ages. That would be too thin!" He was so nearly absurd as to refuse to go into the drawing room to be introduced to his wife's "best friend" when he called in the evening, after remonstrating strenuously against her out twice in one day with the same "I am sorry you wont go down. It's your loss," said Nellie adjusting a captivating opera hat above her bangs. Mother Vroom did not approve of bangs, and Nellie had taken the modified form of bandeaux for some months past. To-night it had come fluffly to the front with a mutinous, dare-devil kink in every hair. "If you are bent upon self-denial, good-by."

She stooped to kiss him, and when he turned his face away, laughed and patted him on the head. "Don't be sulky, Ev! That would be bad form even in a well-bred-man-ser vant. You needr't sit up for me,"

He stayed at his club until one o'clock in the morning, and did not see her until they met at breakfast. She was fresh-eyed and rosy, he haggard from late hours or care.
"Who is this Mr. Tyler?" asked heroic madam, by the time all were sexted. "From his ignorance of the rules governing polite society, I conclude that he has been long absent from civilized communities." "He is my brother's business partner in San Francisco," replied Nellie, in perfect temper. "A Virginian by birth, and a regular gentleman. By critic and a fine planist. He remarked upon your playing night before last He considered it really creditable for a young lady amateur."

Did I tell you that we supped at the Brunswick after the opera? We had quails and tuffles that were all angels' food, and the oysters were simply heavenly, just what would have gone to your heart. We go to the Academy of Design this morning, and lunch afterward at Delmonico's. It is such larks! run-ning about with one who appreciates everything as Jack does."

Madam asked an audience with her son before he went down town. She was honestly frightened by Nellie's triumphant revolt from lawful rule.

"Where will it end?" she asked. "Have you no influence with her?" "None!" he answered hollowly. He was pitiably changed from the com-placent, handsome man of three days ago. "This is a phase of character and action entirely new to you and to me. We went the wrong way to work with her from the first. Too much drilling and repression from you, and to much carping and cold disposition from the girls, have made her feel like an alien, a hopeless heretic. No woman of spirit will submit to be put always in the wrong, or to suspicious espionage. As for me, I insulted her night before last, and she broke bounds, as she ought to have done. No matter what happens, I am helpless." Madam looked after him as he quitt-

round eyes closed visibly. "He has no more stamina than his father had!" she muttered. "If he thinks I will succumb to those proceedings, he has studied me to little purpose all these years," She rang the bell, and sent a summons to Mrs. Everardus Vroom. Nellie kept her waiting twenty min-

"Yes, Bennett," said Nellie. "Say to Mr. Tyler that I will be down at once." On the threshold she glanced back at the gray-visaged, benumbed woman, bolt upright in the tribunal chair. Nellie had a tender heart, but this was a moment of victory, and her motherin-law had been pitiless to her youth and desolate strangerhood.

'Good-morning, Mother Vroom." she said in her most Southern intonation, linking the soft cadences together as with satin threads. "Thank you ever so much for our lovely talk. I sha'n't be in to lunch, you know. Ta-ta!" She had silenced the battery, but not spiked the guns. Four days subsequent to this interview, as the family were taking after dinner coffee in the library, a card was brought in to madam. A flush suffused the strong old face, a Regularity of Health.

One of the most difficult of all minor habits to acquire, says an able waiter, is that of regularity. It ranks with that of order. The natural inclination of most persons is to defer until the last possible moment, or to put it off to another time, where this can possible be done. Yet habits of regularity contribute largely to the ease and comfort of life. A person can multiply his efficiency by it. We know persons who have a multitude of duties, and perform a vast deal of work daily who set apart certain hours for given duties, and are there at the moment and attend rigidly to what is in hand. This done, and other engagements are met, each in order, and a vast deal accomplished, not by restrained exertion, but by regularity. The mind can be trained to this that at certain hours in the day it will turn to a practical line of duty, and at other hours to other and different labors. The very diversity is restful, when attended to in regular order. But let them run together, and the duties mixed, and what before was easy is now annoying and oppressive, and the exact difference between many is at this point. There are those who confuse and push, attempt to do several things at once, and accomplish little, while another will quietly proceed from one duty to another, and easy accomplish a vast amount of work. The difference is in the capacity of the two, but in the regular methods the one, as compared with the irregular and confused habits of the other. Fools and Their Follies. A fool always finds a greater fool admires hin

This discussion of where to hold the world's fair in 1892 is becoming interesting. The contest is narrowed down to Chicago or New York, as there is little use of talking of any of the other ambitious aspirants. If the show is to be gotton up for the sole accommodation of foreigners, so that when they come here they shall see nothing of this country excepting the exposition, there is no question but that New York is the place for it, but if any consideration of the convenience of American citizens is to be had, there is no other place than Chicago in which to have it. It is the only city near the center of the population of the country fit to have such an exposition in and that ought to settle it.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Sept. 3.-A saloon row between white men and negroes Friday night at Howerton store in Bibb county, the killing of John Lawrence by two negro burglars and the lynching of the latter Saturday, have caused much bad feeling between the whites and blacks and a murderous conflict may be expected at any moment. The negroes have massed in and about Centervale, a little village not far from Howerton store, and all are well armed. Three negroes alone bought 10 Winchester rifles in this city Saturday, while every white man in the surrounding country is well provided with firearms. A Bibb county man says so great was the alarm felt that Saturday night two trusty citizens were sent in person to Nashville, Tenn. for 100 stands of Winchesters. He said no work had been done there since Friday and if a conflict came every negro in the county would be extermi-

Not many days ago a couple of young ladies, from one of our rival villages, had their sensitive natures very much shocked by a small opening in our sidewalks. The aperture was about two by six. From effects found with her it would seem that she was canvassing in selling models for dress-making. Besides this she had a cheque on the Merchants Exchange Bank of South Chicago for $100, in favor of one Elizabeth Rourke, and between $40 and $50 in cash. After the required process of law attending such accidents were performed, as no friends came to claim the body, it was interred in the Galien cemetery.

> A Century of Progress.

Only a century ago charcoal fron was produced to the extent of about 30,000 tons yearly; twenty years later the product was but 53,000 tons. Even Great Britain in 1788 produced only 68,300 tons-not so much as some furnaces in the United States now turn out yearly. The manufacture of steel was just beginning in the States; twenty years later only 917 tons were produced in the country. The coarsest pig iron then cost about as much as steel rails do now. Last year the American product of pig iron was 9,480,789 tons, and the highest price of best foundry pig was $21 a ton. The output of steel rails was in round numbers 1,350,000, and the best price $31.50. A single American railway now buys more iron than both Great Britain and the United States made a century ago. There were neither railways, iron bridges nor buildings; no petroleum pipes, for there was no petroleum; no gas pipes, for there was no gas lighting even in Europe until

Washington lived in an age of darkness; instead of the electric light the people had candles costing about two cents apiece. In all the departments and applications of chemistry the century has simply created a new world. American pressed glass, which has completely revolutionized the supply of table and house ware, is an invention of the last sixty years. Farming in Washington's day knew nothing of machinery; even the first iron plow, patented in 1797, was a failure, for New Jerusalem farmers thought it poisoned the soil. Mowers, reapers and harvesters began to be invented about the same time, and even the ordinary implements were such as it until forty years later the cost of trans-portation by wagon confined the area

The estate of Varzin, which former y belonged to Count Blumenthal, is the finest in Pomerania. Prince Bismarck owns only half of the original Blumenthal property, the other half having been purchased by the Prince of Hohenzollern-Sigmaringen. The schloss of Varzin is a large plain house of two stories, with a courtyard and two projecting wings, in which are the kitchen and offices. The principal rooms look out on a vast lawn, and on this side of the lawn there is a wide veranda. The estate extends to 22,000 acres, of which 15,000 are covered with some of the finest forest in Germany, principally oak and beech. The prince has a home farm of 400 acres, and the remainder of the property is let in large farms, averaging 700 acres. All the woods are in hand, and Prince Bismarck has several large mills on the River Wipper, which runs through the estate. He has greatly improved and developed this property, and his forests furnish most of the wooden pavements in the streets of Berlin. The country all around Varzin is very picturesque, and there are beautiful walks and drives through the woods for many miles in every di-rection. The estate was given to Prince Bismarck by the late Emperor William in 1866.—London World.

Extensive Buddhist Temples The Buddhists in Burmah do not consider the question of expense in beautifying their temples. Here is the description of the new vane of a pagoda at Rangoon: "The vane is about three feet by one and a half feet broad and thickly crusted with precious stones and lovely fans of the red Burmese gold. One ruby alone is worth 6,000 rupees, and there are several hundred rubies alone on this beautiful thing. On the tip of the iron rod on which works the vane is a richly carved and perforated solid gold ornament called the Semboo. It is somewhat egg-shaped and about a foot in height, tipped by an enormous dia-mond encircled by many smaller ones crusted on like bandacles. All over this exquisite oval object are similar clumps of diamonds, no other stone being used for this part."-London

Westhercocks.

At Bishopstone church, in Herefordshire, the vane is in the form of a gridiron, this being the symbol of the cruel death of St. Lawrence, the "patron saint" of the place. The towers of town halls are frequently furnished with five vanes, a central one higher than the rest, and one at each angle. Sometimes the initial letters of the four points are placed midway between the vanes. We know the market place of a small border town, pebble paved, with a tall market cross raised on nine steps near the center of it. There is still a large square stone among the pebbles, where bulls used to be baited, tied to the ring upon it. There is still an annual procession of men to it on horseback, carrying halberds, to proclaim a fair. There is still a bevy of pleasant country women clustered in it every Saturday, who have brought butter and eggs for sale from the distant farms among the hills and moors. It is always cool, quiet and gray, with the surrounding houses looking down upon it pensively. Among these houses, on the west side, stands the town hall, with an archway running right through it for foot passengers, and on top of the hall rises a central tower, with the vanes all pennon shaped. Curiously, in country residences, the vane is generally placed in the stable yard, either on the bell clock turret or on the louvred ventilator. As these notes have raised our eyes to objects above the ordinary level, we may notice the ornamental ridge with which large steep roofs are generally furnished, as they have an origin not generally known. In early times our predecessors placed turfs or clods on the upper ridges of the slanting sides of the rough roofs to keep out the rain at their junction. Out of these lumps of earth clusters of flowers and weeds grow freely. Accustomed to the floral outlines thus made, our more recent ancestors handed down their remembrance of these wind borne seedlings in the conventional foliage of the ornamental clay ridge now in common use.—Quiver.

He Got His Half. Capt. John Allen was one of the famous men of the times when the held possession of Penobscot bay, in the early part of this century. He was presented with a sword for gallant conduct in capturing a British privateer. Many stories have been told about the dashing captain, and a new one is now related by the Brooklyn correspondent of The Mt. Desert Herald. While the English were in Castine, commanded by Gen. Goslin, Capt. John had occasion to visit that town. He was accompenied by his wife Sally. On the road near the neck he met the general out on a sleigh ride. With customary arrogance the general kept the middle of the road, expecting Capt. John to turn out. But our redoubtable captain only gave the customary half and when they met there was a halt. After a moment's pause Gen. Goslin com-manded him to turn out and let him pass, saying: "Do you know who I am?" "No," thundered Capt. John. "Well," he replied, "I am Gen. Goslin." At that Capt. John's ire reached fever heat. "Get up, Sally," said he, and from under the seat he drew the

There is a record of black snow in Walpole, N. H., but snow of this color appears to be somewhat rare. There is little mystery about these peculiar snow storms, however, since micro-scopic investigations have from time to time proven them to be caused by either portions of various minerals, shells of infusoria, or parts of plants or insects. Infusorial shells and aquatic plants of especial localities have been identified after having crossed the ocean and been deposited in dust storms, thus tracing the course of the aerial currents. Ehrenberg is said to have found not less than 320 dust of various showers, of which five were of marine origin. Humboldt and Lieut. Maury have also treated largely on this topic. The same general explanation that accounts for these showers applies also to the fall of living organisms which have been pre-viously mentioned. There seems to be little doubt that winds, whirlwinds and waterspouts are the chief cause of these phenomena. The several fish showers that have been recorded were all preceded or accompanied by heavy rain or a violent wind, forming what is termed on land a whirlwind or at sea a waterspout.-Cor. Globe-Demo-

Hypnotizing by Telephone. Dr. Pinel, of Paris, is said to have succeeded in hypnotizing several subects by means of the phonograph All the commands given through this channel were, he declares, as readily obeyed as those which he uttered d rectly, and suggestions of every possible sort were as effectually communi cated through the medium of the machine as if made viva voce. The conclusion which he deduces from his experiments is that the received theory of a magnetic current passing from the operator to the subject is entirely baseless, and that the real cause of the phenomena of hypnotism is neryous derangement on the part of those subject to them .- Medical Times.

Sullivan's Sledge Hammer Blows. The habitues of the Laclede hotel have a lively recollection of the visit which John L. Sullivan paid to that hostelry some four years ago. He was there for several days, and during his stay was the observed of all observers. A number of gentlemen did their best to induce him to give an exhibition of his wonderful strength. This he declined to do, but at length yielded to their solicitations and performed a feat which none who witnessed it will ever forget. Stepping to the bar, which is of hard mahogany, he laid a silver dollar on the counter. He then raised his right hand and brought his fist down upon the coin with tremendous Upon raising his hand it was force. seen that the coin was stamped deep into the bar and could with difficulty be extracted. Receher and the Dog. As a child. Henry Ward Beecher was not remarkable for precocity. His spelling was refreshingly original, and the catechism was a hopeless stumbling block. He could sew, darn and knit, or chop wood, better than he could master the mysteries of grammar or mathematics. A bonnie, gold-on curled boy, he was full of childish courage. When going to school, the Beecher children used to say, if a great big dog should come out at us?" and Henry would answer, would take an ax and chop his head off." This was curiously prophetic Long afterward, in Brooklyn, Mr. Beecher saw through his window a rabid dog foaming on the sidewalk. A number of children were playing in the road. Without an instant's delay he seized an ax, opened the door and rushed out. The dog sprang at him, but was felled by a single blow.—

THOMAS JEFFERSON'S LAST HOURS.

On the southwestern slope of Mon ticello-in the midst of a forest hallowed by associations which have protected it from the ax, and where the winds murmur of the past-stands a plain granite monument, simple, chaste, appropriate, yet impressive. The inscription is brief, but it relates a chapter, the brightest and proudest in the life of him whose memory is consecrated by it: "Here lies buried Thomas Independence."

Jefferson, author of the Declaration of The weakness of old age came over Thomas Jefferson's sound and vigorous body gradually. He dreaded the weakening of the mental powers, and found more symptoms of this than really existed, for his mind remained clear to the last. He was much disturbed about the disposition of his papers and the estimation in which posterity would hold him, and wrote to James Madison shortly before he died: "To myself you have been a pillar of support through life. Take care of me when dead." This was because he feared the posthumous historical literature of the Federalists, a fear that has since been justified. He was theatrical to the last, and when he retired from public life it was in such a way that he posed conspicuously as the "Sage of Monticello," the good the wise old man, the benefactor of human ty, the statesman-philosopher His fame was so great throughout all nations that more levees were held at Monticello than at the president's man-Crowds invaded the grounds and house to gaze at him as he passed from one room to another, and Jefferson would not have the large hospitality of the plantation curtailed, though the guests and slaves literally ate up the estate and left the master penniless. Yet his last years were melancholy. His vast fortune was gone and his power diminished, he saw himself an historical figure of a brilliant past, even while alive. In the winter of 1826 he began to break visibly, and in March he made his will. Then he took to reading the Bible and the Greek tragedies and brooding moodily because his work was finished. He longed to die for months before his dissolution, but as summer approached expressed a desire to live until July 4, to witness a half century of independence. His wish was granted. For weeks he lingered life ebbing slowly, and died at 1 o'clock that day, a few hours before John Adams. He was surrounded by a host of relatives and servants, but lay unconscious of them for hours. and died without speaking a word of farewell.—Chiacgo Tribune.

SOME FACTS ABOUT EGGS.

Iniching Chickens by the Million in Egypt for American Stomachs. The Egyptians are, however, far in dvance of us in the science of raising chickens, and the incubating establishments of the country hatch out eggs by the million every year. At a hatch the farmers trade fresh eggs for young chicks and the rate is two eggs per chick. Another artificial hatchery turns out 500,000 little chickens every season, and the oven crop of chickens in Egypt amounts, according to figures furnished me by the consul general, to more than twenty millions of chickens a year. We have about two hundred million dollars worth of money invested in the fowl industry in the United States, an amount so large that all the money of Jay Gould could not equal it, and still we have to import more than sixteen million dozens of eggs every year. If America would adopt the Egyptian hatching system we could sell eggs instead of buying them, and our farmers might buy little chickens to raise at a price of twenty cents a dozen. More than twenty millions of little chickens are sold each year in this way in Egypt, and there is a regular business in chickens just old enough to

The incubatories are rude, one story buildings, made of undried bricks, so arranged that the eggs are laid upon cut straw in racks in rooms, around the ovens, which are kept fired on during the hatching season. The outside walls are very thick and are built so that they retain the heat, and the only thermometer used is the blood of the boy or man who attends to the fires. By long practice these men learn just how hot the ovens ought to be, and they replenish the fires as the weather demands. A small amount of fuel is needed, and the temperature

THERE are different opinions regard ing the selection of Miss Tate as secretary of the board of county examiners. There are some duties connected with the office that require the hustling qualifications of a man who is himself a hustler. The office is one of the most important, if not the most important, in the county. REV. S. L. HAMILTON will close his third year next Sunday, and will leave next Monday for the annual conference, which will convene September 11 at Greenville. Mr. Hamilton and family have spent three pleasant years in Buchanan, and as the rules of the M. L. L. REDDEN

Another of those livid flashes which have lighted the way of the Hamiltons for more than a century has come in the tragedy so closely connected with Robert Ray Hamilton, whose wife stabbed a nurse, Mary Donnelly, at Atlantic City the other day, inflicting a wound at first thought to be mortal. There are those who hold that a man is only a bundle of inheritances whose career is determined by circumstances. Here philosophers could scarcely find a better example in support of their peculiar faith than in the Hamilton family. Alexander Hamilton, the great grandfather of Robert Ray, could never, or did never, explain satisfactorily a mystery that overhung his birth.
One account makes him the son of John

Hamilton, a Scottish merchant, and his wife a French lady who had been divorced. Another says that his mother was a Miss Lytton, who came to America, where she was supported by Hamilton and his wife. He was thrown on the world by the bankruptcy of his father when he was a mere lad, and entered a counting house in the West Indies, which was his birthplace. He was ALEXANDER HAMILTON, so bright that distant relatives and friends sent him to New York to be educated. He entered King's college (now Columbia) and while he was there the colonies were wrangling with the mother country preparatory to the revolution. One day-it was the 6th of July, 1774-a mass meeting was held in the fields, not far from the college, to discuss the questions at issue and bring in the lagging forces of New York. While the meeting was in progress a stripling of 17 was seen elbowing his way to the pl tform. Mounting the steps, the crowd cried out, "A collegian!" Where you the youth began to harangue them is eloquent and burning words in be h; If of \merican rights. This was the beginnin of the political career of one who has Al the greatest of American statesxander Hamilton

Then lows a series of historical pictures in this ... ntful life. They are all brilliant, but the are all to be seen through one lurid flash—t it which lighted the great states-man to his grave when he fell at Weehawken pier ed by Aaron Burr's bullet. Strange to say, it had been repeated less than three years before in the case of his son Philipthe great uncle of Robert Ray-who fell on the same spot killed in a duel which came out of a nelitical quarrel. After his son's death Alex wher Hamilton conceived a horror of dueling, and before going out with Burr wrote a programst it. But so great was the profile of the times among certain people against a man who would not accept a challenge. that Hamilton, who aspired even to the head of the government, feared that if he refused to fight it would injure his chances. The spot at the foot of the hill at Wee-hawken, by the margin of the Hudson river, has been those tragedies so common in the family. There father and son met death in accordance with a c lewhich their countrymen were already beginning to denounce, and which today they hold in horror as well as contempt.

At 19 Alexander Hamilton was fighting with the revolutionists as captain of an artillery company; at 20 he was aid-de-camp on Washington's staff; at 82 he was secretary of the treasury. "He touched the corpse of the public credit and it stood upon its feet." He was a brilliant writer, a brilliant speaker, a wonderful political manager, an extraordinary financier. Indeed, there was nothing that he touched that he did not handle as if he had been born to that especial purpose. No American has been so versatile, so great in his various fields, as America's first secrein his various helds, as America's hist secre-tary of the treasury, appointed in this very month just one hundred years ago. While in the revolutionary army Alexan-der Hamilton was sent to Albany on a mission to Gen. Gates. In that old Dutch town he met, wooed and won Elizabeth Schuyler, of the powerful New York family of that name. She was very nearly his age, being about six months younger, and they were both about 23 years old when they were mar-ried. Her husband was then on Washington's staff, with rank of lieutenant colonel Mrs. Hamilton proved such a wife as a man of Hamilton's talents and career would need. She assisted him, counseled him, and doubtless served to restrain his impetuous nature, and prevent many of those mistakes which brilliant and impulsive men are apt to make. She kept his papers in order—an excellent assistance to such men, for they are seldom methodical seldom methodical —and years after his death turned over to the United States government a large collection of © manuscripts which SCHUYLER HAMILTON. have been used extensively by historians. They are especially valuable as bearing on the secret history of events during the last quarter of the Eighteenth century. Mrs. Hamilton survived her husband half a century. She died in Washington in 1854 at the age of 97.

Alexander Hamilton and his wife had six sons. One of them, John Church Hamilton, was the grandfather of Robert Ray. John Church, after being graduated at Columbia, studied law. Away back in 1814 he was commissioned a lieutenant in the army, and served for awhile as an aid-de-camp to "Old Tippecanoe," the progenitor of President Harrison. John Church spent a great many years in preparing a memoir of his father. He lived to be 90 years old, dying only seven years ago.

On perusing the history of this family, the head of which in Revolutionary times was a soldier, one would naturally look for some representative in the civil war. Such a one is to be found in the person of Gen. Schuyler Hamilton, the grandson of Alexander, who still lives.

Gen. Hamilton was educated at West Point. He was graduated in 1841, having been there two years with U.S. Grant, who was in the class of 1843. Hamilton served in 學會 the Mexican war. and true to the tradition of his ancestors, became an addedecamp, serving on the staff of Gen. Scott. When the civil war came on Schuyler Hamilton was living in

New York. He went to the front ROBERT RAY HAMILTON. as a private in the Seventh regiment. He first served on Butler's staff, and then became military secretary to Gen. Scott. After Scott's retirement he joined Gen. Hal-leck at St. Louis as assistant chief of staff. But his health gave out, and he was obliged to resign in the midst of the struggle, in 1863. Gen. Hamilton is now 67

Such is the lineage for three generations of Robert Ray Hamilton, whose connection with the recent onslaught upon nurse has produced such a sensation. He is in middle life, being about 87 vears old. He has served eight years as a member of the New York legislature, but has rather been given to clubs and a rambling life than to work. It is said that he has nged greatly since MES ROBERT R HAMILTON the Very uncom-

There is, perhaps, nothing so calculated to fill one with shame at unworthy deeds or connections as to become notoriously involved, having an honorable and distinguished ancestry at which every one points to bring contempt by contrast on the trans-

This takes one back to the parentage of Alexander Hamilton—that unrecorded event wherein a child was brought into the world, if not out of wedlock at least with a shadow resting upon its birth. There is a connection for the student of heredity as well as for one who remembers the text: "The sins of the father shall be visited on the children," between the first Hamilton and the innocent babe whose nurse was stabled. The first of the name begets a child and passes away That child is a wonder, but of a tempestuous nature. After a brilliant career he falls in a duel. His son, too, falls by the same means and exactly on the same spot. In the next generation there is a full in that violence which has preceded. Still another generation lives, and the specter which haunts the family seems to have forgotten it. The next is the fifth from the first-the generation of Robert Ray. A Hamilton is now married to a woman who, first an adventuress, becomes almost a murderess.

CANADA'S LIBERAL LEADER.

Facts of Interest Regarding Hon. Wilfrid

Laurier, M. P. Hon. Wilfrid Laurier, M. P., the Canadian Liberal leader, is a resident of Arthabaskaville, the chief town of the county of Arthabaska and Drummond, near Arthabaska sta-tion, which lies 100 miles to the east of Montreal on the Grand Trunk railway. Here he lives in a two-story red brick house, boasting little external ornamentation—not at all the apparent home of wealth, but rather of substantial, home like comfort. The house stands in the midst of well kept grounds, eight acres in extent, and is filled with books and flowers. Flowers are plentiful at this season, too, outside, and though Mr. and Mrs. Laurier are childless, everywhere are heard the happy voices of children. For at most times the home of the Liberal leader is filled with visiting little ones, to whom the host and hostess devote themselves assiduously. The library is naturally the favorite room with Mr. Laurier, and he has gathered a choice collection of English and Freuch books. He is faerature of both languages. 自 毫 student of philo-(Comment sophical works. WEST SAND Burns he places first in the ranks of English poets, and Shakespeare, Macaulay and the speeches of John Bright and the few WILFRID LAURIER.

remaining speeches and writings of Abraham Lincoln are held in high esteem. Twenty years ago Mr. Laurier came to Athabaskaville a poor barrister, broken in health, without powerful friends and seemingly little to encour age him. But step by step he rose by dint of perseverance, and after a time he came to be recognized as a power in the courts. In 1871 he entered politics, becoming a candidate for the legislature from Drummond and Arthabaska, and winning after an exciting contest. Three years later he stood for the commons, and was again successful. Since then he has suffered but one defeat. He now sits in the commons for Quebec East, while Mr. Lavergne, one of his law partners, sits for Drummond and Artha-

The Permeability of Cements and Mortars. The question of permeability of cements and mortars has been treated of by the board ELIZABETH HAMILTON. the scene of two of of experts appointed to report on the Washington aqueduct tunnel. From their report it appears that even if the brick lining of the tunnel were carefully made and backed, still leakage could not be prevented, as bricks are themselves pervious under somewhat moderate heads. In some experiments made by Mr. Francis last year about 13.8 gallons of water per square foot of surface passed through a thickness of nearly 16 inches cement in twenty-four hours, under a pressure of 77 pounds per square inch. Mr. Stauffer, another engineer, constructed a bulkhead of brick work in cement in the Dorchester Bay tunnel, which measures 10 feet by 10 feet. Under a pressure of 72 pounds per square inch water percolated through at the rate of 96,000 gallons per day. Experience on the Boston main drainage work showed that it was not practicable to build a brick bulkhead which should be tight for pressures exceeding 64 pounds per square inch, and at the Croton reservoir water under 30 feet head was found to percolate through 26 inches of prick work and 4 feet of concrete.

HAS HE LIVED 150 YEARS?

"Old Gabriel," It Is Claimed, Has Seen a Century and a Half Roll On. In the Monterey county (Cal.) hospital is an Indian known to the inhabitants for miles around as "Old Gabriel." He may well be called "old," for it is claimed there is abundant proof that he was born at least one hundred and fifty years ago. What the day, month or year when he was born was no one knows, but the place was somewhere in what is now Tulare county of the state where he still lives. He removed when he was still a child to Monterey. In 1770 Father Junipero Serra went there, and it is well authenticated that at the time of his arrival Gabriel was a grandfather. Indians never marry before they are 15 years old. If Gabriel married at that age, he could not have been less than $2 or 33 years old in order to have grandchildren at the time of Father Junipero Serra's arrival.

OLD GABRIEL. Father Junipero taught Gabriel with other Indians the art of cutting and laying stone In the years of 1771 and 1772, and Gabriel took part in the construction of the chapel on the site of the present Carmelite mission, below Monterey. In 1781 he helped lay the walls of the San Antonio mission, which still stands. He was then living with his second wife. He still speaks with pride of his skill as a stone mason. Another proof brought forward of "Old Gabriel's" age is the testimony of Father Sorrentini and Bishop Amat, who reached Monterey in 1845. He was then married to his sixth wife, and was by many years the senior of all the old inhabitants. He was then spoken of as being 110 years old.

A widely known old lady of the name of Castro, who died five years ago at the age of 05, in testifying to Old Gabriel's age said that when a child she saw Old Gabriel and. that at that time he had children several years older than she then was. Gabriel remained at Old Capitol until a few years ago, when he removed to Salinas valley, where he has been sojourning ever since. Down to within two or three years he was a familiar figure on the streets of Salinas City, but now he is rarely seen, as his trips from the hospital to the town are becoming less frequent. He has always been fund of striking colors, and for years were a coat made of cloth representing all the colors

A JOURNAL WITH A HISTORY.

The Paris Journal Des Debats and Its Hundred Years of Life. Here is a reduced fac-simile of the first issue of The Journal des Debats, of Paris, a newspaper that, in its hundred years of life, has had as thrilling a history as ever fell to the lot of printed sheet. Its full title is Journal des Debats, Politiques et Litteraires, though it was first called Journal des Debats et Decrets. It began as a news letter, and was first issued Aug. 20, 1789, being founded by one Gaultier de Bianzat, a member of the states general, for the purpose of supplying his con-stituents of the province of Auvergne with news of the session. In its long career it mas numbered among its contributors many if not most of the great writers of France.

FIRST NUMBER OF THE JOURNAL DES DEBATS. It was not long after the paper was founded that greater facilities for its production and distribution were found indespensable. So Baudoin-who did the printing-got himself made printer to the assembly by agreeing to deliver one copy of the paper free to every town and commune in Auvergne which should ask for it. His profits were to come from sales elsewhere. The body of the paper was simply a summarized report of the proceedings. Its character did not change till 1800, when the brothers Bertin secure the paper. They gave it the tone it has mainmined, with rare lapses, ever since. It was under them, as it is today, the organ of those well educated Frenchmen who have for their political ideal a government which shall be liberal, parliamentary, capaole, stable. . They were the true descendants of the politiques, the men who wrote the "Satyre Menippee," who are prepared to support any government which seems likely to give them what they want, who are forever defeated in French politics, and yet are as a party destined not to die. Napoleon robbed the Bertins of their property, but after Waterloo they regained posession and it assumed its old tone. Of its 700 known contributors, 132, or a little less than one-fifth, have belonged to the institute or scientific bodies. Forty-eight have been nembers of Academie Francaise. M. George Patinot is the present conductor.

He Was the Founder of the Shaw Botanical Gardens in St. Louis. St. Louis has lost the best friend she ever had by the recent death of Henry Shaw. Mr. Shaw was born in Manchester, England. At the age of 19 he sailed for America, and finally settled down in St. Louis on May 4, 1819. He started a handsome business on his own account in a small building on the river front, and for a time was proprietor, clerk and porter. Owing to his close attention to business, economy and natural shrewdness the young merchant prospered. After twenty years of active commercial life he had imassed a fortune that enabled him to retire from business when but 40 years of age. Mr. Shaw's record as a business man was of the highest. During the busiest part of his life he had found time for study, and when he retired was well fitted to appreciate and profit by the years of travel in which he next indulged. He was away from the United States about ten years, visiting nearly every quarter of the globe. On his return he commenced the study plants and flowers and eventually established the world famous botanical gardens, one of the most complete in existence. For

He was a great public benefactor. His gift to the city of the Tower Grove park, and the statues of Humboldt and Shake speare are fitting emblems of his great generosity. He was of a singularly modest and un-assuming nature. His residence at Tower Grove was always open to the public.

On the 4th of May, 1869, the fiftieth anniversary of his arrival in St. Louis, a brilliant company of St. Louisians gathered at his residence to do honor to the city's benefactor. Mr. Shaw delivered an address relating the incidents of his first arrival in the city and other reminiscences, and was answered by an address from Governor B. Gratz Brown. Mr. Shaw lived at Tower Grove for years He was very hospitable, was always glad to welcome visitors, and nearly every afternoon a number of callers were to be seen at his beautiful homestead. He was a member of the Episcopalian church, the charitable institutions of which will be particularly favored in his will. Mr. Shaw never new what sickness was until 1873, when he suffered from a severe attack of double pneumonia, from the effects of which he never entirely recovered. His estate is estimated to be worth $2,500,-000, and the greater part of his fortune will be left to the city of St. Louis in various be-

One Has Celebrated and the Other Is About to Celebrate a 250th Birthday. Milford, Conn., has just celebrated the 250th anniversary of its founding, and Guilford, of the same state, is about to follow suit, her quarter millennial date falling Sept. 8 and continuing three days. The Milford celebra

It is adorned with divers tablets bearing appropriate inscriptions. The town is filled with old houses, churches, etc., and the old graveyard is a delight for those who love the antique in burial places.

The Guilford celebration is in some quarters regarded as more important than that at Milford, especially by the Guilford people. The exercises will include the delivery of a poem by Charles Lute, of Guilford; historical

It is the oldest house in Guilford, and by some is held to be the oldest in all New England. A cut is also given of the oldest house in who declared that he could detect no diffe ence between the taste of castor oil and of olive oil. To test the question his wife dressed a salad with ol. ricin., which he partook of with great gusto, but not without enjoying afterward all the remedial benefits of the drug. The editor of The Journal, commen ing on the foregoing, says: Perhaps this is only another example of inability to detect certain odors. The peculiar "flavor" of castor oil is conveyed through the olfactory nerves. Children are directed not to breathe through the nose while taking this medicine and in this way they escape its disagreeable "taste." The subject has interested many readers. One writes: "It seems like an affectation to say that mignonette has any odor. It has no more to me than a clean china plate." Another writes that the members of his family frequently praise the delightful fragrance of the flowers of a large vine of Clematiz crispa, now in full bloom, while he has never yet been able to detect the slightest oder in these flowers.

THE BIG LONDON STRIKE.

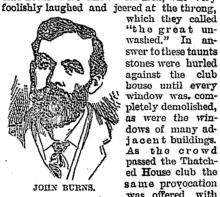

POINTS ABOUT JOHN BURNS, "THE MAN WITH THE RED FLAG."

He Is the Leader of the Present Movement, and He Has a Record as an Agitator That Is Well Worth Thoughtful

John Burns, leader of the great London dockmen's strike, is a Scotchman by birth, and is only 33 years of age. He is a machinist engineer by trade, and was employed by one of the dock companies prior to the beginning of the strike. Burns is a large and well proportioned man and has a remarkably strong voice, especially adapted to out doo speaking. He has for years been identified with the labor movement in England as an active member of the trade union of his craft, and during the past four years as a leader and orator in the Democratic Federation, the formidable Socialistic organization of Great Britain, of which William Morris, the poet; H. M. Hyndman, writer on economics, and Dr. Edward Aveling are prominent members. In the elections of November, 1885, Burns stood as parliamentary candidate for the western division of Nottingham, but was defeated. He was not generally known, however, and recognized as a public character by the press of London prior to the Trafalgar square and Hyde park meetings of unemployed workingmen which took place early in 1886. He was chairman of the meeting held in Trafalgar square on Feb. 8 of that year. Over 40,000 persons were present, and addresses were made by H. H. Champion, H. M. Hyndman, John E. Williams, Burns and others, of the Democratic federation. A large force of policemen, under charge of Superintendent Dunlap, were in attendance, but the crowd was orderly and the meeting was not interfered with.

Near the close of the speaking a gang of roughs attempted to create a disturbance, and Burns, after consulting with Superintendent Dunlap, adjourned the meeting to Hyde park, he and Champion marching at the head of the monster procession that headed for that place. Everything went smoothly until the procession was passing the Carlton club in the West End. The windows of the club house were filled with men, who very stones were hurled against the club house until every window was completely demolished, as were the windows of many adiacent buildings. As the crowd passed the Thatched House club the same provocation was offered with like results, and the stoning did not cease until £11,000 damage had been done to the fronts of the fashionable West End. Burns, Williams, Champion and Hyndman were arrested on the following day, charged with seditious conspiracy. The trial did not take place until in April, 5th-10th, when it was heard at the central criminal sessions in the Old Bailey, before Mr. Justice Cave. Strong speeches were made at the trial by Burns and Hyndman, in which they arraigned the social system of Great Britain, and charged that the then demoralized condition of affairs was due to the indifference and recklessness of the aristocratic govern-ment. The defense consisted of testimony, the chief witness being Superintendent Dun lap, showing that the accused had used every effort to check riotous demonstration on Feb. S, and then had it not been for the influence of the defendants the damage would have been much greater and probably arson and murder have been the result. The accused were all discharged.

It will be remembered that Sir Edmund Henderson was forced to resign from the head of the London police department shortly after the Trafalgar Square meeting of Feb. S. It was shown in the official inquiry that followed the troubles of that day that the rioting was due to the fact that there were no police to restrain the mob between Trafalgar square and Hyde park. Burns did not seem to be frightened by his arrest, for he continued to agitate in England and Scotland as an apostle of the Democratic Federa-tion, and was not again interfered with by

From the tone of the dispatches and the English journals it appears that the people of London look upon him as an agitator along peaceable or legislative lines, as he claimed in his trial in 1886 and still claims he is. The reports state that his efforts have been directed toward keeping down rioting in the dockmen's strike, and the processions of 40,000 strikers which he has led through the streets of London during the past few weeks have been perfectly orderly; yet he has unflinchingly stood for the demands made by the strikers, and leaves no stone unturned to secure what they claim. John Burns, "the man with the red flag," is certainly a remarkable character.

Named by Ohio Democrats. James Edwin Campbell, who has been named for governor by the Democrats of Ohio, was born in Middleton, Butler county, O., July 7, 1843. He comes of Scotch extrac tion. He served during the rebellion in the Union navy, and entered the service before he was 21. He was master mate on the gunboats Elk and Naiad, serving on the Missiserats, therefore, as a regular mascot. His congressional district (the old Third), is one of the most historical of all of Ohio's districts, and has been represented in congress by such men as Gen. Will-iam Henrý Harrison, Judge John McLean, Thomas Corwin, Robert C. Schenck, Clement . Vallandigham and others. In his first race for congress Mr. Campbell was elected by 63 majority. In the second race a strong Republican county had been added to his district, yet Mr. Campbell won by 412 majority. The third time the district had been again changed, and the fight was a terribly close one. Mr. Campbell defeated his opponent, Hon. John Little, ex-attorney general of Okio, by only two votes. The World Advancing. Optimism has the best of the figures and facts in almost all directions. Robert Giffen gives us as criminal statistics in England that there has been a decrease of over one-third in e or over one-half. This, too, while the popution has been greatly increased. Pau-perism has decreased quite as remarkably; so that there were over half a million fewer paupers receiving relief in the United Kingdom from 1850 to 1880. Statistics of the same sort are obtained from other European countries. Even Russia, with its burden of poverty and degradation, has made enormous gains. The very latest news shows that Count Tolstoi's reformatory measures are accepted by the czar, showing that the government is committed fully to the most ameliorating and progressive ideas. — St. Louis

SAYRE-HAMMOND.

Sketches of the Men Who Have Been Quarreling About the Elixir. W. A. Hammond, M. D., of Washington, and Lewis A. Sayre, M. D., of New York, who have been airing one another's private records because of a disagreement as to the advisability of making experiments with Dr. Brown-Sequard's alleged elixir, are both old enough to know better than to make such an exhibition as they have of themselves.

Dr. Hammond was born at Annapolis, Md., Aug. 28, 1828; is 6 feet 2 in height, and still carries himself erect. He was graduated from the medical department of the University of New York, and entered the United States army in 1849 as assistant surgeon, with the rank of first lieutenant. In October, 1860, he resigned, to become profes-sor of anatomy and physiology in the Uni-versity of Maryland, but when the civil war broke out he again entered the army and rose, step by step, to be surgeon general in April, 1862. He instituted radical changes, but suffered from charges of irregularity in awarding certain liquor contracts. Then came trouble, and his dismissal as surgeon general, after a court martial, by Secretary Stanton. This was in 1864, and the young surgeon had but about $500 in the world. He determined to leave Washington and settle in New York, and when he did so made a vow that he would return to the capital in twenty-five years reinstated and cleared of all suspicion.

His reinstatement took place in 1879, but he was not yet ready to return to Washington, and in fact did not go back till 1888, when he established himself at Washington at the head of a large private institution for the treatment of the disorders he had made a specialty. He had by that time accumulated a very comfortable competence, and had won a name second to none in the ranks of his profession. During the early days of his residence in New York he was often instraits financially, but he struggled manfully with adversity, making nervous diseases his specialty and eking out his slender income with his ready pen. Quite early in his New York career he was made lecturer on nervous diseases at the New York College of Physicians and Surgeons. In 1878 he set about the vindication of his character, a bill being introduced in congress authorizing the presideut to review the court martial by which he was displaced. The result was reinstate

He has been an indefatigable worker in his profession as a medical and surgical writer and in the journalistic and literary fields. Some of his novels have reached several editions. His son, Braeme Ham mond, is a New York surgeon, and his daughter Clara married the Marquis Man fredi Lanza di Mercato Bianco, an Italian. The experiments made upon himself by Dr. Hammond with the Brown-Sequard elixir are only in the line of what has been his usual practice. While he was in New York he experimented on himself with cocaine, the newspapers publishing accounts thereof under the head of "On a Spree for Science." The information gained was very valuable. Dr. Sayre is a native of Bottle Hill, now Madison, N. J., where he was born Feb. 29, 1820. He was graduated from Transylvania university, Ky., in 1838, and the College of Physicians and Surgeons in 1842. He was shortly given the office of prosecutor to Dr. Willard Parker, professor of surgery in that institution, which he held for ten years. In 1853 he was made surgeon to Bellevue hospital, New York, and since that time has held several similar offices in other institutions in and about New York city. In 1873 he became consulting surgeon at Belle vue. Dr. Sayre was one of the first to advo cate clinical practice in medical colleges and was among those who helped along the establishment of the Bellevue Hospital Medical college in 1861. When its faculty was formed he became professor of orthopedic surgery and fractures and luxations, and later of clinical surgery, which chair he still holds.

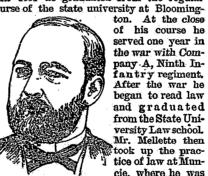

From 1860 to 1866 he was resident physician of the city of New York, in 1876 he was a delegate to the International Medical congress that convened in Philadelphia, and in 1877 was a delegate from the American Medical association to the British Medical association. He has served in a similar capacity at several succeeding meetings of the same sort in many cases being called upon to demon strate before those present difficult treatment of different sorts. His surgical inventions are many and useful. In 1873 he was made a Knight of the Order of Wasa by Charles XIV, king of Sweden and Norway, and is member of many medical bodies in America and elsewhere.

He is a voluminous writer, but his works have been confined to surgery. In the recent discussion of the Brown-Sequard elixir, in which he held Dr. Hammond up to ridicule for his experiments, he proved himself an extremely vigorous if not an elegant and temperate master of English.

took up the praccie, where he was made district attorney in 1868. In 1872 he was a member of the Indiana legislature and helped to return Oliver P. Morton to the United States senate. Mr. Mellette was the proprietor of The Muncie Times for seven years. He then went to Watertown, D. T., where he was afterwards appointed register of the Watertown land office. For four years he remained in this position, and was succeeded by C. G. Williams. He was a member of the first Sioux Falls constitutional convention, in 1883, and displayed great skill in the management of territorial affairs. In 1885 Mr. Mellette was elected governor of South Dakota by a large majority, and since his term expired he has been practicing law at Watertown.

Sheep in the United States. It is calculated that there are at the present time about 70,000 large sheep breeders in the United States, besides fully 1,000,000 small farmers who own small flocks. The number of sheep reared in the States was doubled in twenty years, being returned at about 22,000,000 for 1860 and 44,000,000 in 1880. In 1883 it even reached 50,-000,000; and during that year it is said that the wool trade in this country absorbed a capital of about £100,-000,000, and that the production reached fully 300,000,000 pounds.-Once a Week.
