THE PEDDLER'S STORY

Suppose I tell you of about the last thing of any consequence that happened to me? You see, 1 am now right from the far West, and on my way home for my winter quarters. It was about two months ago, one pleasant evening that I pulled up at the door of an inn in a small yillage in Hancock county, Indiana. I said it was pleasant—I meant it was warm, but it was cloudy and likely to be very dark. I went in and called for supper. and had my horse taken care of, and after I had eaten I sat down in the bar-room. It began to rain about eight o'clock, and for a while it poured down hard, and it was very dark outdoors.

Now, I wanted to be in Jackson early the next morning, for I expected a load of goods there for me, which I meant to dispose of on my way home. The moon rose at midnight, and I knew if it did not rain that I could get along very comfortably after that. So I asked the landlord if he would see that my horse was fed at midnight as I wished to be off at two. He expressed some surprise at this, and asked me why I did not stay to breakfast. I told him that I had sold my last load about all out, and that a new lot of goods was of them, one man only arresting my attention. I had in my possession a to deliver to the sheriff at Jackson notices for the detection of a notorious robber named Dick Hardhead. The bills gave a description of his person. and the man before me answered very well to it. He was a tall, well formed man, rather slight, and had the appearance of a gentleman, save that his face bore those hard, cruel marks which an observing man cannot mistake for anything but the index of a villainous dis-

When I went up to my chamber I asked the landlord who that man was. describing the suspicious individual He said he did not know him. He had come that afternoon, and intended to leave the next day. The host asked me why I wished to know, and I told him only because the man's face looked familiar, and I wished to know if I had eyer been acquainted with him. I resolved not to let the landlord into the secret, but to hurry on to Jackson and there give information to the sheriff, and perhaps he might reach the inn before the villain left; for I had no doubt with regard to the identity.

I had an alarm watch, and having set it to give the alarm at one o'clock, I went to sleep. I was aroused at the proper time and immediately got up and dressed myself. When I reached the yard I found the clouds all passed away, and the moon was shining brighty. The hostler was called, and by two was on the road. The mud was deep, praying that administration of said estate may be granted to said petitioner, or to some other suitable person.

Thercupon it is ordered, that Monday, the 30th day of September uext, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, be assigned for the hearing of said petition, and that the heirs at law of said deceased, and all other persons interested in said estate, are required to appear at a session of said Court, then to be holden in the Probate Office, in the village of Berrien Springs, and show cause, if any there be, why the prayer of the petitioner should not be granted: And it is further ordered, that said petitioner give notice to the persons interested in said estate, of the pendency of said petition, and the hearing thereol, by causing a copy of this order to be published in the Buchauan Record, a newspaper printed and circulated in said County, three successive weeks previous to said day of hearing.

DAVID E. HINMAN, and my horse could not travel very fast -yet it struck me that the beast made more work than there was any need of. or the cart was nearly empty, my whole stock consisting of about half a dozen tin pans and a lot of loose rags. However, on we went, and in the course of half an hour I was clear of the village, and at a short distance ahead lay a large tract of pine forest The road lead directly through the woods for about twelve miles. The moon was in the east, and as this road ran nearly west, I should have plenty of light. I had entered the wood and had gone about half a mile, when my wagon wheels settled with a bump into a deep hole. I uttered an exclamation, but that was not all. I heard another exclamation from another source. What could it be? I looked around quickly but could see nothing, and yet knew that the sound I had heard was very close to me. As the hind wheels came up I felt something besides the jerk into the hole. I heard something roll from one side to the other of my wagon, and I could also feel the jar occasioned by the movement. It was simply a man in my cart. You may have noticed my cart as I came up this eyening. The main part of it opens behind, and there is room enough within for quite a party, providing they'd stow themselves closely enough. Of course I felt puzzled. At last I wondered if some poor fellow had not taken this method to obtain a ride. But I soon gave this up, for I knew that any decent man would have asked me for a ride and taken it comfortably. My next idea was that somebody had gone in there to sleep. But this thought went as quickly as it came, for no man would have broken into my cart for that purpose. And that thought, gentle-men, opened my eyes. Whoever was in there had just broken in.

My next thought was of Mr. Dick Hardhead. He had heard me say that my load was all sold, and of course he supposed I had some money with me. In this he was right, for I had over two thousand dollars. I also thought that he meant to leave the cart when he supposed I had reached a safe place, and the cites of the care over and shoot and then either creep over and shoot me, or knock me down-or perhaps slip out and ask for a ride. All this passed through my mind by the time I had got a rod from the hole.

Now I never make a point to brag of myself, yet I have seen a great deal of the world, and I am apt to be cool and clear-headed under a difficulty. In a very few moments my resolution was formed. My horse was now knee-deep in the mud, and I knew I could slip off without a noise. So I drew my revolver-I never travel in that country without it—it is six-barrelled and sure fire; I ran behind it and examined the hasp. The door of the cart lets down and is fastened by a hasp which slips over a staple, and is secured by a padlock. The padlock was gone, and the hasp was kept in place by a bit of pine stick -so that a slight push from within would break it. My wheel wrench hung in a leather bucket on the side of the cart, and I quickly took it out and slid it into the staple, the iron handle just making all secure. Now I had him. My cart was al-usage, heavy loads and service. I didn't believe that any ordinary man could break out. I got on my cart as noise lessly as I got off, and then urged my horse on, still keeping my pistol handy. I knew that at the distance of half a mile further I should come upon a hard road, and I allowed my horse to pick his way through the mud. It was about ten minutes after this that I heard a motion in the cart followed by a grinding noise, as though some heavy force were being applied to the door.

This continued some moments, and then a heavy thump, as though the sole of a boot were applied to the door. I said nothing, but the idea struck me that the vilain might try to judge about where I sat and shoot up through the top of the cart at me, so I sat down on feelin' purty good.' the footboard. Of course I knew now that my pastinue, I'd like to know?' senger was a villain, for he must have been awake ever since we started, and nothing but absolute villainy would have caused him to remain quiet so dhrinkin'.' long, and then start up in this particular place. The thumping and pushing grew louder and louder, and pretty

"Let me out of this!" he cried, and he yelled pretty loud. "I raised my head so as to make him think that I was sitting in my usual place, and asked him what he was doing in there. "Let me out and I'll tell ye," he replied. "Tell me what you got in there for," said I. "I got in here to sleep on your rags," answered he.

"How'd ye get in?" "Let me out or I'll shoot ye through the head," he yelled. Just at that moment my horse's feet struck the hard road, and I knew that the rest of the road to Jackson would be good going. The distance was twelve miles. I slipped back upon the foot-board and took the whip. I had the same horse then I have now-a tall, stout, powerful bay mare—and you may believe there's some go in her. At any rate, she struck a gait then that even astonished me. She had had a good mess of oats, the night air was cool, and she felt like flying. In fifteen minutes we cleared the woods and away we went at a great rate. The chap inside kept yelling to be let out and threatening to shoot. Finally he stopped; and in a few moments came waiting for me at Jackson, and I wanted to be there for them before the exfour balls whizzed over my head. If I press again left in the morning. There | had been on my seat, one or two of was quite a number of people about these balls must have gone through while I told this, but I took little notice me. I popped up my head again and me. I popped up my head again and gave a yell, a deep groan, and then said, "Oh, spare me! I'm a dead man!" Then small package of placards which I was I made a shuffling noise as though I were falling off, and finally settling down on the footboard, I urged up the old mare by giving her an occasional poke with the butt of the whip, and she went faster than ever.

The man called out to me twice more reply, he made some tremendous efforts | do that to break the door open, and as this failed, he made several attempts upon the top. But I had no fears of his doing anything there, for the top of my cart is framed with dove-tails, and each sleeper is held to its post with an iron bolt. I had it made so that I could carry heavy loads there. After all else had failed the scamp commenced to holler 'whoa' to the horse, and kept it up until he was hoarse. All this time I kept perfectly quiet, holding the reins firmly and poking the beast with the

 We wasn't an hour going twelve miles—not a bit of it. I hadn't much fear-perhaps I might tell the truth and say that I had none, for I had a pistol, and more than that my passenger was safe-yet I did feel glad when came to the old flour barrel factory that stands at the edge of Jackson village, and in ten minutes more I hauled up in front of the tavern and found a couple of men in the barn grooming the stage horses.

"Well, old fellow," says I, as I got down and went round to the back of the wagon, "you've had a good ride, haven't you?

"Who are you?" he cried, and his voice trembled a little. "I am the man you tried to shoot in in the woods," I said. "Let me out?" he yelled. "Look here," said I; "We've come to safe retreat, and mind you, I've got a revolver ready for you the moment you show yourself. Now keep quiet." By this time the two hostlers had come to see what was the matter, and I explained it all to them. Then I got one of them to find the sheriff and tell him what I believed I'd got for him. The first streaks of daylight were just coming up—in half an hour it would be broad daylight. In a few minutes the sheriff came and two other men with him. I told him the whole story in a few words, showed the handbills I had for him, and then he made for the cart. He told the chap inside who he was, and that if he made the least resistance he'd be a dead man. But the sheriff didn't tell him the suspicions he had about him. Then I removed the iron wrench, and as I opened the door the fellow made a spring. I caught him by the ankle and he came down on his face, and in a minute the officers had him. It was now daylight, and the moment I saw the chap I recognized him. He was the very man I had suspected, and his fine black clothes were pretty well covered with lint and dirt. He was marched off to the lock-up, and I told the sheriff I should remain in town all day. After breakfast the sheriff came down to the tavern again and told me I had caught the very bird, and that if would remain until the next morning I should have the reward of two hundred dollars which had been offered. I found my goods safe, paid the express agent for bringing them from Indi-anapolis, and then began to stow them in my cart. I found the bullet holes in the top of my vehicle, just as I expected. They were in a line, five or six inches apart, and had I been where I usually sit. two of them would have struck the small of my back and passed upward, for they were sent with a charge of powder, and his pistol was a very heavy one. Next morning the sheriff called upon me and paid me two hundred dollars in gold, for he had made himself sure that he had got the villain. I set out after an early dinner, and here I am.

I've sold my load all out, and am now ready to lie up for the winter. I found a letter in the office at Portsmouth for me from the sheriff of Hancock county, and he informed me that Mr. Hardhead is now in prison for life. So ended the peddler's story. In the morning I had the curiosity to look at I drew this and carefully slid down his cart, and I found the four bullet into the mud, and as the cart went on holes just as he had told us, though they were now plugged up with vial corks. Viney came out while I was looking, and showed me the print of the villain's feet upon the cart. They were plain, and must have been given with a great deal of force.

dred men engaged in business, but three are successful, in a statistical chestnut which may be correct in the main, and if so, the pertinent inquiry, What is the matter with the other ninety-seven? is the order. This query, so far as it relates to manufacturers using steam power, has a partial answer. A leading firm has recently been pursuing a systematic series of investigations to determine what percentage of the power actually developed was utilized in production and how much was wasted. Careful tests in some of the most prominent manufacturing concerns in the country gave some curious results. In nearly every case it was found that nearly fifty per cent of the power was wasted. One large establishment wasted sixty-five per cent and another seventy-three per cent, while in another, where the engine was developing sixty indidated horse power, eleven-twelfths of this amount was wasted in friction and other useless work, and only five horse power was available for purposes of manufacture. In most manufacturing enterprises the cost of fuel is a very serious item, and The Stationary En-gineer thinks it would appear to be well worth the time of the owners to start a little investigation as to what becomes of the power they pay for. Economical production and judicious utilization of steam are the beginning and end of steam using, and the concern which pays no attention to these points need scarcely hope to be one of the lucky three.

Electric Car Lamps.

One of the latest novelties of the application of electricity consists of an electric reading lamp, which is being fitted to the carriages on the main line of tha Southeastern railway. It is on the principal of the "put a penny in the slot" automatic machines. The apparatus is situated immediately over the passenger's head, and under the rack, and is contained in a small box five inches by three. The light is of five-candle power, and is obtained by the introduction of a penny at the top of the box, and by a subsequent pressure of a knob, and will last for half an hour, and extinguishing itself at the end of that time automatically. If the light be required for an indefinite period, a penny every half an hour will suffice. The light can be extinguished at any moment by means water is used for sprinkling the streets. of a second button provided for the purpose. One of the special features of the invention is that, if the instrument is out of order, the penny is not lost, as it is in the present machines. It drops right through, and comes out at the bottom of the box, so that it can be recovered, and the same result happens in the case of any coin other passengers during night journeys.

Especially he can have little idea how much leveling up has to be done with the wages of most Continental workers. If we say that from a half to one-third of our wages is the rate over vast regions of the Continent, we should not be far wrong. They are excessively low in some districts of Southern Italy, as on the plains below Vesuvious, where five shillings a week is not uncommon, and the agricultural laborer of Bohemia is not much better off. A Pump Operated by Waves at Ocean Grove, N. J.

In the spring a pier was begun at this watering place on the Atlantic coast of New Jersey, having eight gates, each of which swung upon a steel rod, so that the lower part of each gate would be submerged about two feet at low tide and seven feet at high tide. Each gate is thirteen feet long, and at its top is attached a rod serving as an angle bar for the piston rod of a force pump, the force of each wave sufficing to effect a stroke of the piston, and the pump being used to elevate water from the ocean to tanks that are forty feet high. It is said that on one day, recently, when the surf was by no means heavy, 40,000 gallons of water were thus raised to the tanks. The Death of Mrs. Elizabeth Fulton.

The funeral of Mrs. Elizabeth Fulton was held at the residence of her daughter, Mrs. M. L. Cox, on Monday afternoon. The following is a brief report of the remarks made by Elder Wm. M. Roe on the occasion.

"And I heard a voice from Heaven saving unto me, write. Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them.

Jesus Christ himself is the author of the Book of Revelation. In his preface to the wonderful apocalyptic, visions exhibited in this book, the apostle John testifies, Rev. 1: 1. "The Revelation of Jesus Christ, which God gave unto him, to show unto his servants things which must shortly come to pass." The voice referred to in the text was from heaven. It was not the voice of an uninspired, fallible man, but evidently it eminated from the Lord of life and glory. The voice commands the apostle John to write. A glorious message that will bring consolation to bereaved saints for all coming time is now to be presented. "Blessed are the dead who die

An animal in captivity must, however, be treated differently, and must not be allowed to meeting beyond the grave-live for the do as it likes. So I reasoned, and as I inexpressible delights and undying had no herb ready to correct the evil which I knew would result from eating a pencil I proceeded to recover the stolen article. Though my new pet did not mind being touched, though he would jump into your lap and make himself at home, he strongly objected to part with anything which he had once got hold of, and a good deal of diplomacy had to be used before I possessed myself of the pencil. Scarcely was this fun at an end before some black fingers were dipped into the ink, and when the ink was removed out of reach the gum bottle was next turned over, the gum being particularly appreciated. Thinking the animal might be thirsty I put a saucer of water before him, but though easy to put the saucer down it was impossible to pick it up again, even though there was not a drop of water left in it. At first the name of "Sambo" was given to the gibbon, on account of its et black color, then this was changed in course of time to "Samuel," the little fellow becoming too respectable to be called Sambo. At the last port at which I was stationed the lower windows of my dwelling house were provided with iron bars-about five inches apart—as a protection against thieves. These bars were a great convenience to me, as I could attach Sam to them at meal times, thus keeping him out of mischief while giving him plenty of freedom. The question of feeding Sam was not an easy one to tackle. If we sat down and began eating before he was served the most noisy protests were made, and when the saucer of rice was put down there was no one courageous enough to recover the empty saucer. The point was often settled by Sam himself, who, having finished his rice, would throw the saucer into the air a few times, catching it very cleverly, and then hurl it away from him. A wooden bowl was found to answer better, but this also received much rough usage and had to be re peatedly renewed One very noticeable feature about Sam was his extreme jealousy. If I stroked the cat in his presence he used to get into a paroxysm of rage and make efforts to bite me. He would be almost as much vexed if I patted the When a guest came to luncheon he was so angry at the intrusion that he often had to be removed. He would absorb all the conversation until removal, it being quite impossible to keep him quiet. He had a singular objection—he has it now in a mild way—to anything being removed by the servants; and had he been fastened to my chair instead of the window no plate could have been removed. When in the drawing room with me —and he was often there—he would even fly at my wife if she attempted to touch the tea things. At this date he has sobered down a good deal; but even now, though a servant may bring me a letter, he must not take away a reply if Sam is with me; and if my wife shakes my coat, or even touches my shoulder, he catches hold of her, though now perhaps more in play than in anger.—Cor. The classic type seems better preserved among the "chulas" of the lower quarters of Madrid than among the higher classes, and this is due to the fact that the "chula" dresses in a way that follows the fashions of the past. Her shoes are made and her hair is arranged in the Spanish manner, and she wraps around her the manilla shawl embroidered with bright colors. When the ladies of the aristocracy bring out the mantilla during Holy Week, the classic type shines forth immediately in all its genuine brilliancy like a diamond in its setting. On visiting Spain, every tourist of artistic instincts laments the disappearance of the mantilla. Formerly a hope remained for him outside Holy Week, namely, the bull fights. But even from this last stronghold the mantilla has been cast out by fashion. Nowadays the proper thing is to go to the bull fight in hats, the more exaggerated the better; and if the simple truth must be told the right thing is not to go to the bull fights at all, but to prefer the race course, with its ins and outs of betting, its rivalry of ostentation in the rows of carriages, and its exhibition of loud summer costumes. The taste for bull fighting which is the true Spanish taste, with which the whole nation is deeply imbued, is now to be found almost exclusively among the men, the "chulas" and the common people. The middle class, which always follows in the steps of the upper, has deserted the bull ring, and the Spanish woman whose nerves are getting to be so highly strung that she cannot stand a sad play, cannot now endure the emotions of a bull fight, which the philanthropic propaganda has represented to her as similar to those experienced in the coliseum of old. -Fortnightly

Storks in Holland. Every one knows that the stork is almost superstitiously beloved by the peasants of northern Germany and the low countries, and that iron supports upon which he may build his nest are set on cottage gables in the belief that where a stork has his brood fire will never come. Nevertheless, travelers are often surprised when they see how tame the great birds become, following the agriculturist through field and furrow, and often sleeping on the tall red leg close to where he is at work and within sound of the rumble of the passing railroad train. So fond is the Dutchman of having storks about him, indeed, that he makes provision for its nests even in the center of his bulb fields. Here one may often see slender poles some twenty or thirty feet in length, supported by braces, and bearing at the top a small round platform similarly strengthened. On these the storks build their nests, and here they perch, like sentinels, protecting the beautiful crops. - Chicago Times.

After all that has been said, it must be admitted that changes in the climate. filth, sewer gas, malaria and what not have much to do with the production of catarrh. Even Fifth avenue is so filthy half the time as to make us feel disgusted with it. Catarrh in many cases is nothing but a filth dis ease, and Dr. Mackenzie, of London, says that that is the chief cause of catarrh in the United States. He says there is no such thing as scavenging in this country. This is quite true of some places, but there are towns where catarrh prevails which are as well scavenged as any town in England. But it is not New York city. There are cases of catarrh in this city which are undoubtedly kept up by irritating particles floating in the atmosphere, carried hither and thither by the winds, such as horse dung and fermenting, putrefying substances. Do not consider, then, that any specialty by itself will control the situa-The treatment of the nose may be well enough where it is indicated but where filth is the cause of catarrh something more must be done.-Dr. Beverly Robinson.

A Victoria Dog Story. John Clough, the keeper of the dog pond, trains every valuable animal which comes within his jurisdiction, and he occasionally instills into them an intelligence which is almost his charge for the last ten days a magnificent mastiff for which he was offered $20, but refused, as he thought the rightful owner might come along and claim him. He held long conversations with the dog daily and the seed of knowledge thus sown did not fall on barren soil. The animal liked his surroundings and was satisfied with his existence and the society of his instructor. On Saturday, however, he learned from some unguarded remarks let fall by the chief in conversation with the sergeant that John was going to put him up at auction. He morning very early he slipped his col-lar and, bringing a ladder from the woodshed, placed it against the high fence and jumped over into the little garden east of the hall. When here he found that he had another fence made of pickets to surmount and, being afraid that if he did not succeed in clearing it at a bound he might in-jure himself, he climbed up and broke two of the pickets off. He then got over quite easily and safely and fled. He has not been found yet. Any one doubting the facts herein set forth can have them verified by visiting the city hall.—Victoria News.

They came of their own accord, asked prices, were satisfied with them, and bought space, which is for sale to any one doing any legitimate business, and who is responsible for the pay.

THE Detroit Tribune is making an effort to have the stars and stripes floating over every school house in the state, and to that end proposed to Detroit City schools to furnish each with a good bunting flag, ten by eighteen feet, the list price of which is $21, if the pupils in each school should raise $5,25, which is one-half the first actual cost of the flag. This brought forth a request that the proposition be extended to schools in the interior of the state, which was done, but the Tribune publishers ask those schools outthe cost of the flag, $10.50. Every village school in the state ought to do this, and that includes Buchanan. DESPITE the most unfavorable condition of affairs conceivable the new management of the Buchanan schools seems to be proving a decided success. Reports say that the opening is unusually auspicious. The high school enrollment and nor-resident attendance are larger than they have ever been in the history of the school, while the school census is smaller than it has been for years. There are nearly eighty pupils enrolled in the high school, over thirty of whom are non-residents. This speaks well for so small a village as Buchanan.—Niles Repub-

Pope Leo XIII. Deeply Interested-No. Such Complications Here as in Europe. Centennial of Bishop John Carroll, of

The arrangements for the most interesting as well as most important meeting of Catholic priests and laymen ever held in America, namely, the first American Catholic congress, which is to be opened in Baltimore, Nov. 10, have been about completed. A few insig-nificant details remain to be attended to, but practically all is ready for the great convention, the first of its kind ever held in this country. The full pro-gramme has been drawn up. All the invitations to attend the congress are out, and most of them have been replied to. The orator for the occasion of the grand recess in the old Baltimore cathedral has been selected. The papers that are to be read are for the most part prepared and are in the hands of the committee that is to have charge of them. So practically the committee charge of the congress has nothing now to do except to attend to the applications for seats in the congress that are coming in and will continue to come in from all parts of the country until the time of its meeting.

This congress will be a new and an interesting event to Americans of all creeds, being the first of its kind, and it is perhaps for that reason that interest is growing in it as it is. Such meetings of laymen are, of course, com-

Congresses have been already held this year in Austria, France, Belgium, Italy, Spain and Portugal with much success, and across the Atlantic, where the relations between church and state seem always so delicate, these meetings have been the subject of much discussion. Here in the United States, where there is no quarrel between church and state, and in fact, but little friction between the various denomina tions, the meeting of a Catholic congress will not have the same sort of significance as in Europe. For many reasons, however, the gathering is certain to be both important and interesting.

Despite his advanced years and fast increasing weakness Pope Leo XIII is said to take a lively interest in the coming conference. He has always favored the holding of similar congresses in Europe, and has never failed to give each meeting some direct assurance of his favor. In this respect he takes the same ground as Cardinal Manning, of who advocates the holding of congress of all English speaking Catholics at some early day. It is the opinion of these dignitaries that new zeal and interest i aroused by these meetings, as it gives to the layman the feeling that he is a factor in the government of the church. It is going some what in the direction of Protestant bodies that give laymen a direct voice in the management of church affairs by allowing then to sit as delegates, with a vote in church conferences. Of course it is not going so far. Catholic laymen can have nothing to do with matters of church doctrine or Lull, these congresses are a notable step to ward a church democracy.

As the programme stands the celebration proper of the centennial of the establishment of the Catholic church in the United States will begin on Sunday, Nov. 10, and the business sessions of the congress will be held on the two following days.

Nov. 10 was fixed as the opening day of the big celebration for the reason that on Nov. 10, 1789, a few months after the inauguration George Washington as first president of the United States, his friend and co-patriot, John Carroll of Carrollton, was named as first bishop of Baltimore, the first episcopal diocese created in the United States by the Catholic church. The propriety of opening the celebration as arranged is, therefore, manifest. Nov. 10 being Sunday, there will be none but religious exercises.

The high mass that will be celebrated in the Baltimore cathedral on that day, with Cardinal Gibbons as the celebrant, will furnish an imposing pageant. Pope Leo XIII will be represented by a papal delegate, who is to come from Rome for that purpose in com-pany with Mgr. O'Connell, who is now rector of the American chapel at Rome, a position which he won by his work assecretary of the last plenary council at Rome. Then besides the host of priests who will be present sixty American bishops will assist in the mass, an Cardinal Taschereau, of Quebec, is coming to take part in the caremonies. The sermon on this occasion will be by Archbishop Ryan, of Philadelphia, considered the first Catholic pulpit orator in the United States There is no possibility that the cathedral can hold the people who will throng to it on this day. The big New York cathedral itself would be hard put, too, to do it. On Monday, Nov. 11, the business of the congress will begin. William J. Onahan, of Chicago, who is chairman of the committee on organization of the congress, will call the meeting to order at 10 o'clock, and, after prayer, ex-Governor John Lee Carroll, of Maryland, who comes of the Carrolls of Carreliton, of whom Bishop John Carroll was one, will be named temporary president. After his address the other temporary officers will be named. Committees on credentials rules, resolutions, permanent organization and future congresses will be appointed. Two special committees will be named. One will wait on Cardinal Gibbons. The other will wait on President Harrison, the desire being to carry the respects to the chief executive as well as the head of the Catholic church in the United States. At the afternoon session the reports of the committees on rules, credentials and permanent organization will be heard. The selection and installment of permanent officers will come next, and the rest of the session will be given up to the reading of pa pers and to discussion of them.

Cardinal Gibbons will open the second day's session with an address, and then the reading of papers, discussion, and the reports of minor committees will follow. In the afternoon the committee on resolutions and the committee appointed to wait upon President Harrison will make their reports. Then there will be further discussion of matters general, when the congress will adjourn to go over to Washington to assist in the opening of the Catholic National university. The papers that will be read in the congress will be of a varied character, and their authors have been selected from all parts of the country. Here is a list of the papers, with the names of the men who will read them:

"Catholic Congresses,"
John Gilmary Shea; New York "Lay Action in the Church,"

Maj. Henry F. Brownson, Detroit

"The Papacy,"...Charles J. Bonaparte, Baltimore
"The Catholic Press,"

George De Wolfe, Philadelphia

"Catholic Societies," Henry F. Spaunhorst, St. Louis Maurice F. Egan, Notre Dame, Ind.
"The Work of Women and Children in the Industrial World."

"J. W. Cummings, Boston
"Catholic Education,"

Ex-Judge Edmund F. Dunne, Florida Professor Heman Allen, Chicago

There will also be a historical article read by Richard Clark, of New York.

It will be seen that this will have a wide scope for discussion, but in addition to these subjects those appertaining to our social conditions, to immigration, and the matter of forming colonies in proper localities where the newly landed immigrant can assimilate and prosper without being subjected to the temptations attendant upon tenement house life in the large cities, and to the temperanc problem, will also engage the attention of the

But there will be men in the congress well fitted to discuss any of these questions fully and welf. As laymen and dergymen will meet on an equal footing where they can speak their mind, some interesting talk may be looked for.

The leading figure in the congress will, of course, be Cardinal Gibbons, by reason of his position as the chief dignitary of the Catholic barrels in the Halfred States and for other church in the United States, and for other reasons. It is highly probable, too, that the cardinal will have considerable to say upon some of the questions that will come up. He has long been an earnest student of the social blems of the day. On the occasion of his problems of the day. On the block time and hardhard to the sucres conditions of France. Germany and Italy. Since his return he has traveled through the south, taking observations as he went. It is understood that he has some interesting things to say when this congress shall meet. The cardinal's intense Americanism will render his utterances the more interesting, and what he may say will be sure to receive wide notice.

But there will be other notables, too, in the congress. Archbishop Ryan, the orator of the church, will be present. Bishop Keane, formerly of Richmond, but now at the head of the Washington university, will be present, too, as will Archbishop Ireland, who is the leader of the Catholic temperance movement in this country; Bishops Spalding and Fitzgerald, of Little Rock, who are at the head of the movement to settle Catholic immigrants on the rich farming lands of the west, northwest and southwest, instead of in the overcrowded cities; Archbishop Feehan of Chicago; Bishop McQuaid, of Rochester; John Gilmary Shea, the venerable Catholic historian; Bishop Loughliu, of Brooklyn, the senior American bishop; Maj. John D. Kieley, commendator of the order of St. Gregory; Bishop Ryan, of Buffalo; and other bishops and priests and laymen without numben That Cardinal Taschereau, of Quebec, a papal delegate, and Mgr. O'Connell will be present has already been stated.

EX-GOV, CARROLL, CARDINAL TASCHEREAU The attendance at the congress will be very large. Any Catholic organization that can gain the approbation of the bishop of the dio-cess in which it exists causend delegates, and most of them are taking advantage of it. In the making up of the permanent officers of the congress the archbishop and the bishop are each allowed to name a vice president. It is now very certain that the congress will become a permanent body, with the control of its offices largely in the hands of laymen, as in Europe, and it is the hope of those who are starting it that it may eventually be able to cover a wide and useful field. Marking as it does practically the centennial of Catholicity in America, or at least in the United States, this particular meeting has an historical interest for us just now when we are scarcely through with thinking over past incidents of history as drawn out by the centennial of Washington's inauguration.
One hundred years ago, when Bishop Carroll was raised to the purple, there were but a handful of Catholics in the United States. There are about twice as many Catholic negroes alone-some 150,000-in the United States now as there were Catholics of all nationalities and races in this country in 1789. The Catholic population of the United States is generally rated at 10,000,000. Besidesthere are 1 cardinal, 12 archbishops, 71 bishops and S,000 priests. So it will be noted that the congress that will represent this great organization will be a no small affair. Its proceedings will undoubtedly attract wide interest.

THE FIREMEN IN PARIS.

THEY HAD A WHOLE WEEK ALL

says L'Illustration, as if it were a sur prise for Americans to get there. The international firemen's congress paid their first respects. of course, to Presi-HUNGARIAN FIREMAN. dent Carnot, and listened to some "able remarks." after which they gave three days to demonstrating what they could do, and closed the proceedings with the usual excursions and banquets. The gathering of spectators was immense and the Parisians were much impressed. The visitors, on the other hand, admitted a surprise at the serious, solemn ways of the French firemen, especially at the custom of calling the names of those who "died in ac tion." When their names are sounded at the regular roll call some one responds, "Died at the fire!"—"Mort au feu!" The various uniforms of the foreign firemen made the review a scene of great interest. There were present Portuguese, English, Luxembourgers, Hungarians, Italians, Russians, Americans and some others.

The English delegation attracted special attention because it contained a company of 'firewomen" from Manchester, that is, women devoted to the life saving department of the work. They were young, agile and dressed in what would once have been called the "Bloomer" costume. They gave elaborate expositions of the best methods of rescuing women from the upper stories of burning buildings. By one method a cord is dropped from the window (all hotels are now supposed to keep them) and by it a long, stout sack—a tube of stout sacking rather—is drawn up and fastened, the lower end is held out by the firemen and the rescued woman slides gently but rapidly to the ground. This when no fireman can reach the window. In case it is accessible, however, other methods are practicable. A British fireman exhibited the plan of going down ropes with a woman hanging on to him in a style that delighted Paris.

For the free-for-all final trial an immens scaffold was erected before the official stand of President Carnot, the scaffold or open frame representing a six story building then, at the "fire signal," the firemen of the different nations represented their methods of removing the inmates and saving the building. By the universal voice the palm other. The expression of his features is that of a man in a thoughtful mood, imbibed with hibition of their method of descending by rope thrown about the waist, their down-ward velocity regulated by a rope held in the hands. They also maneuvered the English fire engines to demonstrate their lightness and facility of movement.

After the maneuvers the captains were invited to President Carnot's platform and ecorations and medals were bestowed. The political reporters did not fail to note that M. Grabezensky, representing Russia, received marked attentions, and when he came to the front the people shouted, "Vive la Russie!" Maj. Heath, commanding the English firemen, also received many compliments on the life saving apparatus and general efficiency of his corps.

It is to be regretted that the Parisian papers say no more of the American firementhan to merely mention their presence, as there is a deep seated impression "on this side" that America rather leads the world in that line. Indeed, one of the first things a stranger generally hears in a new city is that they "have an unusually good fire depart-ment." But in American cities the buildings are so much higher, as a rule, than in Europe that totally different methods of life saving must be adopted. Of course the rope fire escapes now required by law for hotels in many states, and the upright "escapes anchored into the walls, are excellent, but they require some presence of mind in the one who is to use them, and, unfortunately, three persons out of four go wild as soon as use they are in takes fire. For these and many other reasons heroic acts of life saving have abounded in all the annals of American firemen, especially in New York city. The exploit of James R. Mount, March 17, 1853, on the Bowery, was a famous subject of talk for years. He reached the third story of a paint and paper store

The stairs were nearly ready to fall in when he dashed down, and with his cont wrapped around his head (for the snoke was stifling) went up the ladder which had been spliced. It was several feet too short. The firemen below raised that end upon a hogshead and held it there by main strength. The two men reached it and climbed down; then the children, one at a time, were placed upon his shoulders and brought down; but now the lower rungs of the ladder were ablaze and the flames from the paint store were rolling up the side of the

One of the women climbed some distance and fell, but was not seriously hurt; the other, Mary Koephe, weighed 225 pounds and was almost helpless from fright. He got down in safety to where the rungs were on fire, then fainted; those below managed to break their fall, so that neither was seriously injured. The cheer raised by the spectators was heard high above the roar of the flames. Mount's clothes fell off in cinders and the flesh was burned from the palms of his hands; but he recovered without permanent injury. After all, however, it is conceded that the firemen must do the work—unless there is genius and courage in the firemen, many lives will be lost, no mat ter how perfect the escapes provided. As it is, the ladder still remains the great reliance of those who must work outside the building. In the French reports of the late interna tional congress nothing is said about rank and pay, nor could Europe and America be compared without special study of the sub ect; but in the United States it is evident that the general standing of firemen has vast-ly improved since the early days. One hears no more of "firemen's riots" or feuds between different companies. The firemen of New York city, especially, are gentlemen in every respect, and on great days none present finer appearance or are more heartily cheered by the people. It is only reasonable to conclude that there is the same difference in pay as in other pursuits, and that in old and methodical Europe the days of riotous or even sportive firemen are far in the past.

EMMONS BLAINE'S MARRIAGE.

McCormick Cottage at Richfield Springs. The Trousseau. The marriage of Emmons Blaine to Anita McCormick, who is said to be as lovely as she is rich, has called forth a host of descriptive articles upon the groom, the bride, the tros-seau and the "cottage" selected for the ceremony. The latter is located at Richfield Springs, N. Y., was built in 1881 by the late Cyrus McCormick, and is beautifully located.

The grounds are as attractive as nature and well directed work can make them. There is a large number of evergreen and handsome foliage trees about the lawn, and the whole is bordered with a carefully tended hedge. The drives are smooth and artistically laid out. The mansion is not of the fancy pattern, but rather of substan-

It is a three story building and finished on the exterior in a manner which presents the appearance of natural wood, On the east, south and west sides is a broad veranda, which is double on the southwest. From this a good view of the town and surroundings is obtained. The first floor of the house contains a magnificent parlor, finished in natural wood and furnished with the richest drapings; a reception room, a dining room and an elaborately finished hall. Nothing that wealth can furnish is lacking to make these rooms beautiful and attractive. The bride's trousseau has been described as a marvel-a symphony in white. Every-

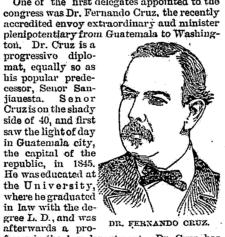

THE M'CORMICK COTTAGE. Emmons Blaine himself, who is described as a "good fellow," said thereof: "It's something white. It is glossy, and I guess it is satin; but, mind you, I don't say that I know. It was merely by chance that I had a glimpse of a sample of the fabric, anyhow, and I won't warrant you that there hasn't been an entire change of plan."

After much persuasion he plaintively said of his own clothing for the momentous occa-sion: "Well, the trousers are middling drab, the vest is the same cloth as the coat and the necktie is a shade or two lighter than the trousers-and there you really are, aren't you?"

DR. FERNANDO CRUZ.

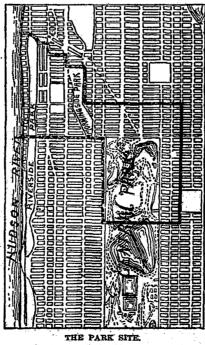

The New Guatemalan Envoy and Minister to the United States.

Great preparations have been made by the state department at Washington for the congress of nations, which convenes there on the 2d of October. The conference was first suggested by Mr. Blaine when secretary of state under Gen. Garfield's brief presidency. It will be one for conference and debate only, and the deliberations will be published in three languages-English, Spanish and Portuguese. Seventeen republics and one empire will be represented in the congress—the United States, Mexico, Honduras, Nicaragua, Costa Rica, Guatemala, Salvador, United States of Colombia, Bolivia, Ecuador, Venezuela, Peru. Chili, Argentine Republic, Uruguay, Paraguay and the empire of Brazil, a very democratic one. It will be composed of sixty-five to seventy delegates, the United States appointing ten, the largest number. One of the first delegates appointed to the congress was Dr. Fernando Cruz, the recently accredited envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary from Guatemala to Washing-afterwards a professor in the law department. Dr. Cruz has filled important positions in his own country, having been secretary of the interior several times, and more recently secretary for foreign affairs. As might be expected, he is a diplo-mat of varied accomplishments and linguistic attainments, speaking, besides his own native tongue, Italian, Latin, French and English so that he will be enabled to read nearly al of Mr. Blaine's authorized state department reports without the aid of copies of "Ollendorf's Without a Master" and "Lempriere's Classical Dictionary," for he excels all the other republican envoys in this particular at Washington.

Yesterday morning, as a train load of circus was coming into town over the west side road, a short distance south of town a car containing some of the elephants was detailed. No damage was done, but two of the elephants were obliged to walk into the city. They were very indignant. either at being thrown off the track or ether at being thrown off the track or at having to walk, and as they passed through South Portland they were waving their trunks wildly, while their drivers were what an old bull-whacker called "socking the gad to them," and as he swore, driving six inches through their hide at every blow. A horse hitched by the side of the street through which the elephants passed was so scared that he sat down on his haunches and folded his fore feet across his breast in an attitude of prayer, and sat and trembled till the horrid monsters were out of sight.—Portland Oregonian.

Among the important additions to the army of religious workers in the Ohio valley the new editor of The Western Christian Advocate, one of the leading publications of the Methodist church, Dr. David H. He has now arrived from Colorado, where he lately was chancellor of the University of Denver, and, beginning with the issue of Sept. 18, The Advocate will be under his personal editorial supervision.

Dr. Moore was born at Athens, O., in September, 1838. He was the only son of Hon. E. H. Moore, one of the trustees of the Ohio university, at which institution the son was educated, and from which he was graduated in 1850, receiving his master's degree three years later. He was converted in boyhood. and began preaching before he left college. Immediately after graduation he married Miss Julia Carpenter, of Athens.

After the war he returned to the ministry and occupied charges in Ohio, at Columbus

At the last meeting of the book committee he was unanimously elected editor of The Advocate, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Rev. Dr. Bayliss. This was against his personal desire, but after the choice of the committee was announced and made known to him he responded, in the language of a patriot of 1860: "If the summons is imperative, I am a soldier."
