8th Grade Prophecy Written and Read by Miss Reba Binns at Their Exercises June 16

When we finished Geography in the seventh grade I did not stop studying. After reading many Geographies by different authors, I decided to write on myself. I had some ideas which I thought would improve the others. Also I wished to prove that the general surface could be more easily learned from an airship. To do this I would be obliged to hire a professor and procure a telescope and an airship. Therefore I placed advertisements in those thriving papers the Buchanan "RECORD" and "ARGUS" and at once received many replies, the most promising of these being from the noted aeronaut, Mable Montgomery.

After engaging her we picked the crew, the telescope was her own invention. On the tenth of May 1915 we made a brilliant ascension and I at once began studying the earth's surface from an airship.

One day while pursuing my occupation my hand slipped down over the great side of the telescope. It must have touched some hidden spring hitherto unknown to me, for below me spread a smooth glassy mirror. In this I saw my classmates as they were that day.

First a mist spread over the shining surface as a breath, when this had cleared away I beheld a dark impressive gentlemen-clad in a dark suit with cap and leggings; in him I recognized, Ross Batten. Behind and about him I saw the trees and verdure of the Soudan. Peeking from behind trees I spied several natives. Ross has done much in exploring the wilds of Africa and civilizing the natives. When he first went he was sent as the United States ambassador to the Soudan. I saw him take two natives by the arms and walk off into the mist

When this scene had entirely disappeared I saw the noted Judge McGown, while practising law she had carried many cases successfully through the court. Imagine her stern visage peering over at the box in which the jury sat and a pair of heavy gold rimmed nose glasses and in stentorian tones commanding "Order in the Court."

When this realistic scene disappeared there came a wise looking person holding in one hand a paper machaise logrinette and a clumsy yard stick in the other. Over her lap sprawled an urchin who we recognize as the ring-leader. But isn't it queer that she doesn't get fired for not obeying those rules against corporal punishment? Maybe they just leave her alone for she is good to help in the base ball team. Her most noted act in her many games was when she made the home run. We can tell by her jovial disposition this is Blanche.

Impatiently I waited for the mist which gathered over this scene to fade away and there stood Floyd. Why you wouldn't of known that stout gentlemen clothed in a great linen duster with a roll of anti fat under his arm. He is a professor at Harvard and a very brainy person most probably because he attended the Buchanan eight grade in 1905. As he walked away he displayed a card labeled "kick me" on the tail of the aforesaid duster probably pinned there by his capricious pupils.

Then down in the swealting clime of Texas I saw a sunburned, freckled farmer slowly plodding behind two lagging horses. At intervals she calls "Gee Shanghai" and "Haw Miserable." I know that the mirror did not play me false because in her letters to me she said that as soon as she graduated she went to the land of cactus where she has since made her abode a successful agriculturist. In the glass I recognized Ruby Eldredge.

But see there on a platform surrounded by bunting and waving with flags, stands the great politician. He waves his hands aloft in fantastic gestures, in one which has the air of being practised he doffs his hat baring his head and I recognize Cyrus. Twice has he been nominated for governor of Michigan. Defeat only makes him more anxious for success and he may yet reach the White House.

Then came a personage who we recognize by her lofty manner as the fieriest anarchist that ever lived. She was helped to the throne of Russia by a band of conspirators but she ruled with such a high hand and lived so luxuriously that even her fellow conspirators became envious and she was overthrown in the fifth year of her power. Though she has many names ending in "skys" her simple English name is Mildred Roe.

When she made her exit there stood Fay. Low well we remember his ready jest and smiling visage, this he has not lost. After graduating at a noted college he became a civil engineer. He also runs a farm near the Mammoth cave. He was seen in the magic mirror capering about for joy at his success in raising toadstools at the feet of stalagmites in the Mammoth cave. You see though he is very busy he has to have some recreation. He has built a very successful bridge over the British channel for this he received fifty million dollars. In 1913 he married the famous opera singer Rose Hershenow. Before the marriage his wife had won great fame all over the world in fact she had displayed her superb talent before all the monarchs of Europe.

When the mist which gathered to hide this scene had faded I beheld a gentle looking lady seated before a typewriter. I can see this is Minnie Blodgett. She has been a stenographer for the Secretary of State but now is pursuing the same occupation at the great Lick Observatory on Mt. Hamilton. Yonder stands the great inventor

Mr. Foster. I remember now that on my airship was painted in flaring purple and gold letters "The Capoodle" invented my the famous Max Foster. He had many difficulties in winning fame but after repeated struggles he got Andrew Carnegie interested in his theory, with the capital which this man furnished he soon soared on the waves of glory.

Over in Europe are two characters who have been chums since their eight-grade-shop, one studying art and the other music. These we recognize as our friends Mary Glidden and Lulu Bush. Mary's most celebrated painting took the prize at the World's Great Art contest which took place at Paris in 1910. Lulu was at one time amusing the ruler of Russia, Miss Roe.

Who is that wise looking personage there, carrying a medicine case with a self conscious air? Miss Wagner M. D. I Wouldn't have known her had you not told me. How she struts about, and wears the customary high silk hat.

Clad in a white dress with a red cross on her arm is Grace Fowler, nursing victims of the recent war between India and Great Britain. As she passes, the dying lifts their eyes to the nurse who has been a pitying companion through their suffering.

Poising a pair of forceps high in the air over a screaming impatient stands the world's great dentist, Irene Troutfetter. She is known to possess the most modern mode of practising jiu-jitsu on the teeth. Her office is in Arizona it takes up as much room as two of our common Buchanan blocks. She takes a periodical vacation when she rests, by the change from dentistry to platform speeches on her favorite subject woman suffrage. She has many prominent men and women interested in this subject.

Then for a few minutes in the glass I beheld them all, the explorer, the aeronaut, inventor, the artist, musician, dentist, the farmer, civil engineer, singer, judge, professor, doctor, speaker, an archist and the stenographer.

And after all time had not changed them much. Indeed to behold them as I did seemed almost as though we were back in the eight grade room. I was glad that they all had succeeded in their life's work. It made it easier to bear the separation. All of us had realized that; school friends are like ships which pass in the night, seen for a while and then pass out of sight.

MEANING OF SNOW BROWN

Actor Explains Famous Expression in Use Since Henry Irving's Debut in London.

Two actors were dining together in a New York restaurant. They had ordered, for their salad course, artichokes. The waiter came and said:

"Gentlemen, I regret to inform you that we are out of artichokes."

"Then snow brown," said one of the actors. "In other words, send to the market and get some artichokes for us."

The waiter bowed and withdrew and the other actor asked:

"What did you mean by 'snowing brown?' You told the waiter to snow brown. What did you mean by it?"

"I meant 'don't give up. Persevere. Don't fail. Do something or other,'" said the first actor. 'Snow brown' has meant that ever since the first year of Sir Henry Irving's management of the Lyceum theater.

"Sir Henry was producing a drama that demanded, in one scene, large quantities of snow. White paper, cut fine and packed in a great number of little bags of brown paper, was given to two men perched up aloft and they were told to snow hard and fast from the scene's beginning till the curtain dropped.

"The men obeyed this order too well. They snowed too hard and too fast. Before the scene's end they found their white paper running out. So their snowstorm became feebler and feebler and finally it ceased altogether.

"The hero's next speech was: 'I cannot see your face, dear heart, for these blinding flakes of snow.'

"And no snow, not a drop, was falling.

"Sir Henry rushed like the wind to the two supers.

"Where's your snow?" he demanded.

"We have no more white paper," they answered.

"Then snow brown, you fools! Snow brown!" cried Sir Henry."

THE REQUISITE NECESSARY

Manager Told Theatrical Aspirant That Only Thing Needed Is to Be Well Dressed.

It is told in the Chicago Inter Ocean of an observing theatrical manager that on one occasion he proved fully equal to the stage aspirant problem.

A young woman of that class which the newspapers catalogue as "society women" brought a letter of introduction to a prominent actor-manager which secured for her a brief audience with the man. With one swift glance he took in the plumed hat, the pretty inconsequential little face thrown into oblivion by the plumes, the sable cloak and moleskin gown, the watermelon muff and stepladder shoes.

"Have you ever been in love?" he demanded.

"Sir-r-r?"

The word ran the gamut from angry exclamation to dubious interrogation. The actor-manager repeated the question.

"I am married," was the answer.

"But have you ever loved?"

"I—don't—know."

"Have you ever hated?"

"I—don't—remember."

"If you had hated, you would remember. Having never really loved or hated you will not make an actress. There is only one thing left for you—musical comedy."

"But I cannot sing."

"You do not need to sing."

"And I cannot dance."

"You do not need to dance."

"My husband says I have no sense of humor."

"You do not need a sense of humor."

"Then what?"

"You dress well—that's enough."

The Toothless Baby

A sweet little baby brother Had come to live with Flo, And she wanted it brought to the table

That it might eat and grow. "It must wait for awhile," said grandma

In answer to her plea, "For a little thing that hasn't teeth Can't eat like you and me."

"Why hasn't it got teeth, grandma?" Asked Flo in great surprise.

Oh my, but isn't it funny? No teeth, but nose and eyes."

"I guess," after thinking gravely, "They must have been forgot.

Can't they buy him some like grandpa's?"

"I'd like to know why not." That afternoon to a corner

With paper and pen and ink Went Flo saying, "Don't talk to me, If you do you'll 'sturb my think.

I'm writing a letter, grandma, To send away tonight,

An' cause it's very 'portant I want to get it right."

At last the letter was finished A wonderful thing to see,

And directed to God in heaven. "Please read it over to me,"

Said little Flo to her grandma, "To see if it's right you know."

And here is the letter written To God by little Flo.

"Dear God, the baby you brought us Is awful nice and sweet,

But, 'cause you forgot his toofoes, The poor little thing can't eat.

That's why I'm writing this letter A purpose to let you know,

Please come and finish the baby, That's all.—From little Flo."

Easy Money.

An unopened letter in a John street chop house has aroused the interest of the customers. A few days ago a stranger hurried up to the cashier. He took out a letter bearing a special delivery stamp.

"This letter is addressed to me," he said, "and it has money in it. But I don't want to open it. You lend me a little on it and I'll leave it with you as collateral."

Astonishing as the proposition was, the cashier was so impressed by the honesty of the man's appearance that he did not laugh.

"I tell you that envelope has money in it," the man repeated, more than I want from you. You let me have $10 and take the envelope."

The cashier thinks he must have been hypnotized. At all events he gave the man the money.

"I'll be in tomorrow to pay it" the man said as he handed over the envelope.

In his drawer the cashier keeps the envelope. The man has not returned. The cashier cannot open the letter, addressed as it is to another, without laying himself open to probable arrest. So he can only keep the collateral as a souvenir.—New York Sun.

Huge Task

It was a huge task, to undertake the cure of such a bad case of kidney disease, as that of C. F. Collier, of Cherokee, Ia., but Electric Bitters did it. He writes: "My kidneys were so far gone, I could not sit on a chair without a cushion; and suffered from dreadful headache, and depression. In Electric Bitters, however, I found a cure, and by them was restored to perfect health. I recommend this great tonic medicine to all with weak kidneys, liver, stomach, guaranteed by all druggists; price 50c."

Summery Dress.

A sheer veiling in shepherd plaid checks of tangerine and white was among last summer's offerings and it appears again in the new stuffs at the light end of the gamut of white and brown checks and conjures up a vision of an exceedingly smart shirt-waist frock or afternoon frock. It would, for instance, enter effectively into a frock distinctly of lace, bordered by velvet ribbon shirred at both edges. The bodice blouses slightly and opens all the way down the front to show soft jabots of lace, the fronts being finished by velvet ribbon set on in scrolls. The model might be effectively and easily carried out in any pretty voile, crepe or eolienne and would be surely modish throughout the summer.

Wrinkles.

Wrinkles and creases should always be massaged in the opposite direction—that is upward and outward. It is well to learn the anatomy of the face before attempting to erase wrinkles. The general rule given above is established, but does not provide for exceptions in individual cases.

An Opinion Reserved.

FOR THADDY'S SAKE

 His stepmother was not far behind him. The dog was in great trouble. Perhaps some one was trying to steal him, and with a strange, jealous feeling of ownership she hurriedly thrust her feet into her shoes, slipped on her dress and, seizing her gray shawl, hastened after Thaddy.
 "Oh, oh, oh!" called a voice from the shadowy group beside the burrow. "This is Kooje's master, and he's an Eskimo dog!"
 The old man pulled off his hat. "Your servant, sir, not a dog."
 Thaddy, excitedly hugging Alpatok, was not listening to him.
 "Do you own this dog?" asked Mrs. Timbs briefly, addressing the old man.
 "Yes, ma'am, him and his mother before him. She was one of my sledge dogs when I traded in Labrador after I give up the sea. She was half wolf, and if she'd been landed here she'd have fought her way or swum her way to me, and, if she couldn't have done that, she'd have been queen of this city. She saved my life once, and when I went to Newfoundland to live I took her with me. She died and left this pup. He's not like her. He's been brought up soft, and his hard side ain't developed yet."
 "How did you lose him?" asked Mrs. Timbs sharply.
 "Have ye got any enemies, ma'am?" asked the old man abruptly.
 "Yes, a few."
 "I've got a hundred—one of 'em, the worst one—swore he'd get even with me. He stole my dog, the pup I was bringing up like a child. If he'd 'a' shot him, I'd have forgiven him, but he brought him to this strange place, he let him loose in the streets. Then he come to me, says he: 'I've took your babyfied dog. I've freed him in a foreign place, where he'll get a foreign welcome. Most likely he's inching along to death of starvation and being bit to pieces by native dogs.'
 "Oh," said Mrs. Timbs, with a sudden indrawing of her breath.
 Thaddy stamped on the ash heap. "I'd have killed that man."
 The old captain looked earnestly at him. "That's the way I felt, boy. I raised my arm. I couldn't have downed him, for he is young, and I am old, but I'd have tried. Howsomever, someor whatever your name is, I don't want to give you up."

 "Who are you?" asked the old man shortly.
 The lad stopped petting the dog and stood up. "My name is Thaddeus Timbs, sir."
 "What you do?"
 "Go to school," said Thaddy proudly.
 "Want to get an education?"
 "Yes, sir, I just do."
 "That's right. I'd have got on better if I'd had one. This your sister?" And he again turned his keen eyes on Thaddy's stepmother.
 "No, sir; my father's second wife. He's dead."
 "Indeed!" said the old man, and his gaze went again to the tiny cottage. "Have a hard time to get along?"
 Mrs. Timbs drew herself up stiffly, but Thaddy smiled a charming, boyish smile. "Yes, sir; in winter. Not so bad in summer when I'm earning wages running errands."
 "How long have you had this dog?"
 "A month last Thursday," said Mrs. Timbs quietly.
 "Step-ma!" exclaimed Thaddy, and his astonishment was pitiable to see.
 There was a mystery here that Captain Slocum was anxious to clear up.
 "My dog's grandfather was a wolf," he said, "and Alpatok has a wolf's appetite. Who's been feeding him?"
 "She has!" cried Thaddy, wildly pointing an accusing finger at his stepmother. "Oh, step-ma, step-ma, you had so little to give away."
 "Who did you think fed him?" asked the captain.
 "I—I thought he picked up stuff on the dumps and about the streets, sir," said Thaddy in a choking voice. "She's crept out and fed him to save my victuals. Just see how thin she is," and he stared in sorrowful distress at his slender young stepmother.
 "Thaddy," she said, "there's a proverb about low down persons that clean their soiled linen before strangers."
 "F-forgive me, step-ma," stammered the boy, "but I don't know when I've had such a blow!"
 "Is she a good cook?" asked Captain Slocum, with a motion of his head toward Mrs. Timbs.
 "Yes," said the boy bitterly, "when she has anything to cook. Just wait till I'm a man. I'll pile her kitchen table with groceries to the ceiling."
 The old sailor was a shrewd judge of character. He gave one more glance at the woman's face, then he said: "Will you take me to board with you? I'm getting too old to live alone."
 She hesitated.
 "Ask for my character down at Whitehall's shipping office," said the old man shortly. "They know me."
 "It isn't that"—and she hesitated—"but our house is small. We have few comforts."
 "A man that's been used to a ship's bunk half his life don't want oceans of room."
 Her face cleared. "I'll take you, sir. If you don't like us you can leave us."
 "All right, it's a bargain," he said briefly. "Here's some earnest money." And he forced a roll of bills into her hand.
 "Hurrah!" cried Thaddy, throwing an arm round Alpatok. "Now I'll not lose my dog. Will you tell me of sealing voyages, sir, and strange countries?"
 "That I will," said the old man heartily. "I'll move my trunk out tomorrow. Come, Alpa, boy, down to the hotel with me."
 "He doesn't want to leave us," cried Thaddy. "See him look at step-ma and me. Come on, Alpa, I'll run a little way with you," and, kicking up his heels in glee, he seized the dog by his shaggy neck and scampered over the ash heaps with him.
 "You've been scrimping yourself, ma'am," said the old man, turning to Mrs. Timbs, who was weakly crying over the roll of bills.
 She made no response beyond slightly shaking her head.
 "For those two," said the old captain, pointing to the boy and the dog. "And neither of them beauties nor thoroughbreds."
 She threw up her head. "Mixed blood in the best blood."
 "I guess you're right," he said slowly, "but don't fret no more. I've got no kith nor kin but that dog, and them that is good to him, I'll be good to."
 Mrs. Timbs' lip was trembling. "I didn't do it for a reward, sir. 'Twas for Thaddy's sake. But I think the Lord sent you to us. There isn't a bite in the cupboard, and tomorrow I was planning to take him from school, though I just hated to do it."
 "And he's only your stepson," said the old man curiously.
 "But he loves me," she replied softly.
 The old man smiled. "Well, let him get an education. You're right there. Education and always education, otherwise you're bound to go lame legged through life. Good night, ma'am."
 Captain Slocum went away, but the next day he arrived with his trunk. He is now installed in Mrs. Timbs' best room, and Alpatok is growing to be a huge dog, who walks with a firm and masterful tread the streets of the city that he once roamed as a starved and forsaken puppy.
THE END.
An Outrage.
 When Major General Sir John McNeill, V. C., was badly wounded at Essaman, in the Ashanti war, he emerged from the bush exclaiming, in angry and indignant tones, as if some one had deeply insulted him, "An infernal scoundrel out there has shot me through the arm!"
A Mere Trifle.
 Miss Fleyne—Oh, Mr. Nocoyno, how lovely of you to bring me these beautiful roses! How sweet they are—and how fresh! I do believe there is a little dew on them yet! Mr. Nocoyno—W-well, yes, there is, but I'll pay it tomorrow.—Cleveland Leader.

TOM FREED BLIND JERRY.

Care Taken by a Sixteen-Year-Old Horse of His Blind Mate Is Pathetic.

Tom and Jerry are 16-year-old horses owned by a Jersey City lawyer who has a farm at New Brunswick, N. J. They are greatly attached to each other and are apparently miserable unless together, says the New York Sun.
 Jerry has been blind for several years and Tom has appointed himself his mate's guardian. They occupy adjoining stalls and spend hours rubbing noses.
 For a long time after Jerry lost his sight the stableman found the blind horse in his companion's stall every morning. He couldn't understand how he managed to untie the halter, and told his employer that he guessed somebody was playing pranks in the stable.
 But the pranks continued so long that he was directed to solve the mystery. He hid in the hay, where he could get a full view of Tom and Jerry in their stalls, and waited developments.
 They came at a late hour. Tom shoved his nose over into Jerry's stall and whinnied. Jerry poked his nose close to Tom's ear, and the man in the hay was almost certain that he saw the horse with the good eyes smile.
 Then Tom turned his head around and looked all over the stable as if to learn if the coast was clear. A moment later he was tugging away at the blind horse's halter with his teeth and he didn't stop until his team mate was free.
 Old Jerry slowly backed out of his stall and crowded in alongside of Tom, who greeted him with an unmistakable neigh of delight. This trick was repeated night after night, and now the horses spend half their time in Tom's stall.
 The sorrels have been pensioned off and are living in ease and luxury on the farm as a reward for faithful service.
CHINESE BOYS IN SCHOOL.
 Peculiar Methods of Learning in Vogue in Educational Institutions of Far East.
 When a little Chinese boy is six years old he begins to go to school, and the event is so important that a fortune teller is consulted, so that a lucky day may be chosen, says the Brooklyn Eagle.
 He always wears new clothes for the occasion, and, with his head freshly shaven and his pigtail nicely plaited down his back he walks beside his father until he reaches the school.
 Here he marches up to the teacher and gives him a present. Then he burns incense before a tablet bearing upon it the revered name of Confucius. Afterward he takes his place on a high stool behind one of the many little desks and draws out from the great sleeves, which serve him as pockets, his slate, toys and books.
 In Chinese schools they do not study as we do here, but each boy shouts as loud as he can. When he has learned his lesson he goes up and gives his book to the teacher then turns his back and recites it in as loud a voice as possible. When he learns to count he uses balls, set in a frame like a slate. These balls slide on wires.
 In writing the Chinese boy does not use a pen, but a small brush dipped in ink. Each boy makes his own ink by putting water on a stone and rubbing a cake of India ink over it. With this he fills his brush and beginning at the top right hand corner of the paper, writes toward the bottom, putting one word after the other, instead of beside it, as we do. Books are printed in the same way, and begin where ours end. If you should pass a school in China and hear the noise that comes from it, you would think that Bedlam was let loose indeed.
