

City Owners Of Residences To Organize

Scrutiny Taxes And Control Of Intrusion Undesirable Housing Are Purposes

The Buchanan School Board was in session yesterday afternoon preparing details of the proposed District bond issue of $45,000, for submission for state approval.

If and when such issue receives the state approval, it will be submitted at special election here. Members of the board stated they wished it to be clearly understood that the money for the payment of these bonds had already been arranged through the special call tax for school construction passed in 1944.

What the board is doing is arranging to borrow $45,000 in anticipation of the income from the five-mill tax. The bonds, if authorized by both state and local electors, will then be paid off by the receipts of the five-mill tax, which has already yielded over $22,000 for the first year and will be ample to discharge the bond debt with a considerable balance left.

It is necessary that the board borrow the $45,000 through a bond issue at this time, as that is a condition for the Federal grant of $78,000 for the new school building. The money already in the treasury plus receipts of $45,000 from the bonds will more than care for the $65,000 which the federal government requires from the local district before making its grant.

Clark Laboratory Use Is Deferred By War Priorities

The new experimental laboratory building erected on the north side of the Portage street entrance to the Clark Equipment company is about completed, but its use will be deferred indefinitely because of the fact that delivery of equipment is held back by priorities for actual war production.

All experimental equipment now located at any of the four plants is to be brought here and centralized in the local laboratory. However, considerable new equipment is to be added which will come in slowly.

Record Wet Spell Is Tapering Off

The record wet spell which prevailed here during last April and May is apparently tapering off, somewhat, the June total now being 2.12 inches for 20 days as compared with a June normal of 2.93. Weather has been very cool and pleasant during the past week with a high of 82 Friday. On Tuesday the high was 76, which was quite typical. Wednesday the mercury promises to mount a bit higher.

Some corn remains unplanted here, and that planted has made comparatively little progress. Small grain crops have developed a luxuriant growth of straw at least, and hay and pastures are making record growths.

Work 12 Hrs. Day 7 Days Week In War Prison Camp

American POW's Not So Hot About Leniency To Foe, Says Wallace Lewis

If you'd served six months in a prisoner of war labor camp under the supervision of Nazi "party members", you might be a bit prejudiced against any kind of a soft peace for Germany, according to Pfc Wallace Lewis, who arrived at his home here Saturday following that experience.

Lewis was located in a railway labor camp in Czechoslovakia most of the time. The camp included French, English, Indian, Russian and American prisoners of war. They were guarded by German soldiers but their work was immediately supervised by German civilians, good party members, each wearing the Nazi swastika.

They got out of bed at 5 a. m., ate a meager breakfast of vegetable soup, a small portion of bread and butter. They left at 5:30 by train for their work, which was usually the repair of tracks bombed by Allied aviators. They started to work at 7 a. m. and worked steadily all day until 7 p. m. without any lunch. They got just so much food anyway, as the bread ration being limited to three (Continued on page 5)

Jack Knight's Flight To Bedside Of Dying Father Got Big Publicity

Telling How Jack Knight Won Race With Death To Bedside Of Father

Some weeks ago we printed a letter from North Africa by John Dale, in response to the Jack Knight articles, in which Dale referred to having seen Knight's plane drop into the field opposite his father's farm on the South Bend road, while flying here from Cheyenne, Wyo., to see his father, Dr. M. M. Knight, before he died.

The field was the open space on the Hall farm, just this side of the orchard and about where A. B. McClure later built a home, now owned by Robert Hall. Jack's older brother, Fred Knight, had arrived here called when Dr. Knight was attacked by bronchial pneumonia. Taking a look at his father, he sent a wire to Jack at Cheyenne, advising him to come at once. As Jack received the wire and notified the field officials. They gave him permission to use a mail plane. This was on August 25, 1923, and the glory of Knight's performance in the air mail cross country test a little over two years before entitled him to anything the air mail service had. In fact, his work in saving the test had very likely saved the air mail service itself.

Knight lifted his plane off the field at Cheyenne at 6:02 p. m. Mountain time. He covered the 460 miles to Omaha in four hours and 43 minutes. He reached Chicago, 425 miles from Omaha, at 4:42 a. m. Central time. He had flown the 885 miles of lighted airways (the airways that he had lighted) in nine hours and forty minutes. From there he went on to the remaining 75 air miles to Buchanan. He left the Chicago air field at 5:08 after refueling, and probably dropped into Hall's field a few minutes before 6 a. m., as the planes were flown then.

His mother and other relatives and a number of friends, had been kept informed of the progress of his flight. The late Frank Kean, a close friend of Dr. Knight, was watching and listening closely. As soon as he saw the sum of the plane (planes were not so plentiful those days and there was not much chance of being mistaken) he started in his car and drove out south toward the Hall farm as he saw the airplane settled in that vicinity. Scarcely had Jack dismounted from the plane before Kean was on hand to take him to the home of his parents, where his mother still lives, just across the Michigan Central tracks on the South Bend road.

Knight arrived to find his father still conscious and able to talk. That was Saturday morning, and the doctor lived until the following Tuesday. Dr. Knight had been ill four days and had suffered a relapse before the wire was sent to him. In those times, as in fact until very recent years, pneumonia was a deadly disease for the old, and dangerous enough for anyone, as sulphur and penicillin were both twenty years away in general application.

The village of Buchanan had at once sent a guard out to patrol the mail plane until another airmail pilot was able to come out from Chicago and fly it back to that place. It was housed at the air field. Paul Henderson, second assistant postmaster general of the United States had given Knight permission to fly the mail plane. After Knight's famous airmail test flight of Feb. 22-23, 1921, anything he did was news, but the "flight against death" to his father's bedside was the "real McCoy." The Chicago American carried a two-line top headline on the front page over five inches high, carrying the message on a red front page.

KNIGHT WINS DEATH RACE

One newspaper hailed the trip as "what is believed to have been the longest single flight in the history of aviation." That was in 1923 and airplane performance has gone a long way since. Only three years later Lindbergh flew the Atlantic. There are many professional aviators from those days who will tell you that Jack Knight was a good deal better pilot than Lindbergh. If you want to know why they will give you a detailed case in proof. Ten years later Wiley Post was flying around the world.

Col. Paul Henderson, the government official who approved his use of the plane, wrote, "The world is moving fast. It was only a matter of a few years ago that you read of some millionaire chartering a special plane to reach a dying relative, but now a plane is taken and you reach your destination in a few hours."

Lt. Manspeaker Describes How It Feels To Bail Out

Came Down With Crew Over France Ten Miles Inside American Lines

How it feels to bail out of a lumping bomber over doubtful ground, and to plummet earthwards through clouds toward an uncertain rendezvous with friend or foe was vividly described by Lt. William C. Manspeaker in a visit at the Record office Saturday afternoon.

Lt. Manspeaker was inclined to be rather taciturn about his experiences during 35 combat missions over Germany, but there seemed to be little connection between his story of how it feels to bail out and military security.

Manspeaker was piloting a B-17 bomber labeled "Bundles For Schickelgruber" on the home trail from a bombing excursion over a synthetic oil plant at a large city in southern Germany. The Germans had thrown everything but the oil plant up at them, and "Bundles For Schickelgruber" was quite muddled up with flak hits. Two engines had been shot out completely, a third was about finished, and he had been gunning the engine left until the superchargers had caught fire.

Below them lay dense clouds, really a heavy fog lying on the surface of the ground. Manspeaker circled with the idea of attempting to "belly" the ship in How- (Continued on Page 3)

Duane DeWitt Hurt In Auto Accident

Pfc Duane DeWitt, returned from Marine service in the Pacific, suffered a back injury on West Fourth at Chippewa Tuesday afternoon. He was driving the car and struck a stretch of gravel. The car skidded and he lost control, the auto turning over in a field. His father, Harold DeWitt, and an uncle, Marvin Bay of St. Paul, Minn. were in the car, and were treated at a hospital for minor cuts and bruises. DeWitt remains as a patient in the hospital. He had arrived home May 21 on a thirty-day leave and married Mildred Wortinger of Goshen on June 12. He was scheduled to leave Tuesday night to report at Washington, D. C.

Harvey B. Carey Dies At 82 Years

He came to Detroit from Chicago in 1919. He is believed to have had two daughters, a Mrs. Pearl Varro of Detroit and a Mrs. Cora Smith of Chicago but had not heard from them for several years.

He followed the profession of painting and interior decorating. However, about six years ago he fell, suffering a back fracture, and had been unable to work since. He had lived several years in a garage apartment at the H. S. Bristol home at 412 Arctic street. There will be a committal service at Oak Ridge some time today. No relatives have been located.

Wild Deer Seen In North Buchanan District Corn Field

At first it was thought they were calves, but after watching them more closely, their identity was certain. Finally they started off into the timber on the west side of the field. A son of the Stoners trailed them for a way, but finally lost the trail.

School Board To Submit $45,000 Bond Issue Soon

Payment Of Debt Incurred By Bond Issue To Come From Receipts Of 5-Mill Tax

A group of residence property owners representative of all sections of the city met Thursday evening in the American Legion hall and decided to form a Buchanan Property Owners' Association.

Enos N. Schram, organizer, acted as chairman and more than eighty per cent of those present signed for membership. The purpose of the organization is to keep property owners acquainted with civic affairs and to protect their interests in these happenings.

Membership in the organization is open to all residence property owners of the city. Another meeting will be held within the next two weeks when officers and committees will be named. E. N. Schram, temporary chairman, stated that main purposes would include scrutiny of local property taxes which he said were higher in Buchanan than on corresponding types of housing in Niles and South Bend, and protection against invasion of undesirable housing would be main objectives of the organization.

24-Hour Cafe Service Opens At Dormitories

Federal Restaurant Serves 1st Meal This Morning

The government cafeteria located in the community building under construction for the new dormitories for war workers on East Fulton street is scheduled to open tomorrow morning, serving breakfast that day as its first meal, according to Charles Myers, manager.

From then on it is scheduled to remain open 24 hours per day, seven days a week, with three shifts of workers in charge. The force consists of a salad chef, three dinner cooks, one salad waitress, three bus girls, three coffee cashiers, to take care of the night-hour shifts.

The dining room will seat seventy-five patrons, and the adjacent recreation room can be opened to accommodate 125 more if need be. The dining room is a long space with large screened windows opening on the north. Good insulation and fans should keep the place very comfortable. Between the dining room and the kitchen on the north is a long serving window with an electrical heating serving table underneath. The kitchen is very well equipped with electric ranges, refrigerators and many electrically operated labor aids.

Manager Myers states that he will feature home-made pies, a "California special" meal of ground beef and cheese, and that chicken and T-bone steak dinners will be available. There will be staple meals at popular prices.

Tales of An Old Town An Attempt to Reproduce a Cross Section of The American Scene, As Witnessed Here Through the Past Century

The Good Old Times In The Wagner Dist. As Seen In A Letter From John Wray

If anyone is "honing" for the good old days even in these troublesome times, here's a letter written by a Wagner husband and wife in those same "good old days" which should effectually blow away some of the golden haze which tends to settle over them.

The letter is relayed to the Record, with other material by the painstaking historian of the Wagner district, May Mitchell. The letter comes from a Mr. and Mrs. John Wray, of a family still well known in this district. Here it is:

Buchanan, Mich. May 3, 1859. Dear Brother and Sister: I will try to write you a few lines in answer to your letter of December last. We think you wrote somewhat hard, not knowing of our home troubles and sorrows which kept us from thinking of others, but we will excuse you.

One year ago our two oldest boys were taken ill with the lung fever (pneumonia) and were ill a long time but lived. In May, Louise took the scarlet fever and died the first of June. In two weeks from that time, Miner and Emereth were taken sick and both died after suffering beyond description. Then the baby took the same and in six weeks time we had laid out four youngest in their graves. The other children all had it but they are well now.

Sorrow, suffering and fatigue brought Ellen down with typhoid fever and for a long time we thought that she would die, but she recovered. Then Emereth took the same and did not get well until almost spring. So you see it has been one constant round of sickness and sorrow for the past year.

We tried hard to get off to see you last fall. We had several times set to come to see you but trouble after trouble arose to prevent us from coming. We want to hear from you all and especially mother. We want you to come again and see us. We did mean to live up to our word and have always tried to do so, but you must know that times are hard and with $100 doctor bills and other expenses crowding on our hands, we cannot have much time even to write. Now take the word for the deed and do not wait for us to come. We want to see you all and want you to come down, and we will come up there as soon as we can make you a visit.

Letitia is at work on Portage Prairie and is engaged until fall. She says she is going to spend the winter with you next winter. She came home last summer to help us take care of the children and caught the fever from them and was very sick with it. She has been working at one place for over a year. Amanda has been on the Prairie at work too, but is home now.

Yours truly, John and Eleanor Wray. The pattern of the home life of pioneer days is seen in this letter, although the tempo of disaster doubtless was even faster than usual in those times. Large families with large death rates, a constant round of children's disease with little of modern scientific method for combating them. Birth and death very frequently alternating callers at the cabin houses. Travel slow and even mail expenses high, so that written communication was rare and travel even the shortest distances beset with almost insurmountable difficulties. It was a heavy task then—the business of linking the generations together. Death in the younger ages much more frequent than now, even counting in the toll of war.

But war came also in that generation, and in a recent issue of the Record were mentioned two of the older children of John and Eleanor Wray, Emereth and Al. Wray, who enlisted in the Union army about three years after the above letter was written, the latter dying of disease at Jeffersonville, Ind., on March 10, 1865, just before the close of the Civil War.

John Wray was a cousin two or three times removed from Riley Wray, who came from the same locality, Rocky Mount, Franklin County, Va., in 1857. Riley Wray was the grandfather of Arthur Wray, supervisor of Buchanan, and also of John Wray, who lives on the ancestral Wray farm south of the Wagner Road.

The mother to whom he and his wife were writing lived at Waterford, Ind., only a short distance southwest of LaPorte, Ind. It would be only a three-quarter of an hour trip there by car these days, but then it was four long days' journey by wagon over winding forest roads. Unless the roads were dry it would have taken two or three days.

The incident of the two older girls "working out" on Portage Prairie also fits the pattern. The Prairie had been settled about ten years earlier, as pioneer lands went the Prairie farms were much preferable, set as they were in the

Will Wood Raises First Green Peas

Chicago St. Gardener Noses Out Mayor Bradley

William Wood, 201 East Chicago, flashed under the wire this past week with the first mess of green peas harvested in Buchanan during the 1945 gardening season. That is, Mr. Wood appeared to be first from this reviewer's seat in the grand stand. Yours truly had been betting on the mayor, Mr. C. J. Bradley, who had pea vines racked up two and a half feet high at his home on West Roe street. However, the mayor lagged a little on the home stretch, permitting Wood to win by a belttuck. The mayor told us afterwards that he could of had a mess as soon as Wood, but that he waited until the peas were a little bigger. Wood picked his first Thursday evening, June 14.

If there are any other contestants who wish to challenge the above, we want to hear from them. We hereby announce that William Wood was first, if there be any doubters, let them speak at once or forever hold their peas. Whatever the weather may have done to the fruit, 1945 will certainly go down in garden history as one of the best pea years on record.

Lt. Manspeaker Describes Bailing Out

(Continued from page 1) ever he unexpectedly sheared the trees on the side of a mountain, at the supposed height of 1,500 feet, so they climbed another 1,500 feet.

He rang the alarm system to notify the others of the crew of nine to bail out. It was then 5:45 p. m. and they were in a latitude about parallel with southern Canada, so it was quite dark, being in midwinter.

The others went out of the waist panel, going headfirst, doubled up, and over end. Lt. Manspeaker went out the nose panel. The business of going out headfirst was so as to be sure to keep from head contact at least with the plane as it passed over you.

Manspeaker had never bailed out of a plane before. He checked with others "Head first?" "Oh sure, you've got to go out head first."

However after the crew had gone out, he thought it over. Everything was all right except this head first business. He swung out of the nose panel, holding by his hands and dropped off. He saw the wing and the turret clear him safely. Then he jerked his rip cord. He had a back-packed chute and it opened at once.

One of the other fellows had a chest-packed chute and it didn't open up when he pulled the cord so he had to rag it out himself. Manspeaker said that there was no jerk when his chute opened, such as he had heard others report. He seemed to approach the clouds rather slowly. When he was in the clouds - rather, in the ground-hugging fog - he lost all sense of motion whatever and seemed only to be suspended in air.

The most vivid memory he had of his descent was when he looked back and saw the wounded plane zooming off into the night without benefit of pilot. "It was a funny feeling," he said. "I'll never forget watching the old ship as long as I live."

There was a sudden but not violent bump, and he was lying on his back in a muddy field. He got up, tore a piece of the white silk of his chute off for use if he met the enemy. Whether he was in France, Germany, Belgium or elsewhere he didn't know but he feared the worst.

However he did not hunt any human contacts that night, but slept as best he could, in thickets and in a hollow that looked like a shell hole. Early in the morning he heard a church bell and walked down a valley toward the sound. It seem to be tolling the time, about every fifteen minutes.

After a while he came on the church, down in a little town nestled in a valley. He was on a hill overlooking the town. The fog was still heavy so he was able to approach pretty close without being discovered. He circled the settlement trying to "case" the place by looking for signs which would indicate language. Finally he found a dump of old bottles and packages all bearing French labels. That looked better, so he headed into the town. The first person he met was a man working at masonry on a scaffold. A dog dashed violently at him barking, and calling the mason's attention. However the man looked at him without a parent hostility. "Spreken Sie Deutsch?" he inquired. Manspeaker shook his head. "English?" asked the man. "American," replied Manspeaker (meaning the nationality).

The mason climbed down the ladder and took him to the house of an old lady, whom he thought could talk English. However her linguistic ability was not adequate. Some one brought in a French-English phrase book and for two hours they made conversation, pointing at words as "pilot," "plane," etc.

Then two men arrived with bands in their arms labelled F.F.T. They were members of the "Free French of the Interior" and they were able to assure the inhabitants of the correct identification of their guest. Manspeaker learned that they had suspected he was a German paratrooper landing behind the lines. He found that the tide of American conquest had lately swept by the place and was now only ten to fifteen miles beyond. He was between Metz and Verdun.

Assured that Manspeaker was an American, everyone warmed up at once. They brought food and wine. A boy came in with the music notes of the "Star Spangled Banner" written in longhand. It had been written in pencil on a piece of paper by an American officer as he went through the town and given to the boy, who played it haltingly on an accordion.

The next night he spent with two Americans who were operating a field radio station. They had a jeep, and the next day they took him into Rheims. Then he went on to Paris.

Afterwards he learned that all his crew had landed safely except one, whose ankle was broken on contact with the ground. The rest of the crew had found each other and had located their plane, lying in a field. They reported that it was riddled by flak and its return that far had been a miracle. However the only injury incurred by one of the crew was when the No. 2 propeller was thrown off and a filing from the shaft came in and hit the bombardier.

After completing 35 missions Lt. Manspeaker was sent home on a thirty-day leave, to visit his parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Manspeaker, 106 South Portage. He left Monday to report at Santa Ana, Calif.

Strawberries High But Not Highest Ever

If you think strawberries are high today, with a ceiling of $5.76 per case and the precious scarlet nuggets going at 50 cents per box retail, they are not the highest ever.

Two years ago Fred Richter told how Fred Hevi, who had the first commercial strawberry patch at Dayton, sold at least a part of his first crop at $8 per case. Richter thought that was in the late eighties. The strawberry as an article of commerce was strictly in the luxury class then—and isn't it now!

Richter wrote that when he started picking in the nineties the berries sold at $4.50 per case at the start of the season. The pickers got 25 cents per case for their work. This year pickers are reported to be getting 6 cents per quart.

The strawberry crop here will be much larger than was first anticipated, states Robert Koemigshof, manager of Buchanan Co-ops, for the reason that after the early May freezes there has been increasing late blossoms that have developed berries. The cool wet weather has favored such development.

Turnip Greens. Turnip greens grown on soils rich in organic matter are high in iron. Turnip greens grown in the spring generally contain more iron than those grown in the fall. The iron content in turnip greens decreases with the application of nitrogen fertilizer, the specialists explain, although such applications increase the yield of the greens.

Improves Soil. During normal times with moderate prices for crops, limestone on acid land has returned four to five times its cost.

Mich. Farmers Start Drive On Bang's Disease

Cattle Scurge Costs State $4,000,000 Yearly

Dairy farmers and beef cattlemen of Michigan, backed by the State Department of Agriculture and Michigan State college, are mounting a newly organized statewide offensive against Bang's disease, regarded as the state's livestock enemy No. 1.

This ever-growing scourge is taking a heavy yearly toll in beef cattle and dairy herds. This year it will assess a levy of $4,000,000 against the income of Michigan cattle owners, as it has done in past years. At present there are at least 1,500,000 cattle on 145 farms in the state that have in some way felt the scourge's touch.

The scourge's effects are extended to the health of humans who are often afflicted with undulant fever.

Bang's disease is continuing to make inroads in the face of combative efforts of both state and federal agencies. During the past 10 years more than $2,500,000 has been spent in Michigan to fight the disease. The federal government has lent assistance in funds and personnel to aid the State Department of Agriculture.

To broaden and intensify the drive, a 20-member committee has been appointed, headed by Russell E. Horwood, research specialist in dairying at the college. Representatives of all the state's beef cattle, dairy and dual-purpose breed organizations are members, as well as Commissioner Charles Figy, of the State Department of Agriculture, and representatives of dairy and animal husbandry departments at the school of veterinary medicine at the college.

One of the principal objectives will be to clear up confusion that has existed among many farmers as to proper methods of control. An informational program will keep farmers informed on plans as they are developed and are ready to be placed into effect.

Works 12 Hrs. Day In German Camp

to four slices daily, and about 1/24 of a pound of butter. That is, one pound of butter was divided among 24 men. They were given their choice and elected to eat the ration in two meals. It was hardly worth carrying a third of it with them for a noon meal.

They had to move steadily—no sitting down. Did they get tired? They were tired all of the time, day or night. The maintenance did that for them. A third of the men were in the hospital all of the time from effects of malnutrition.

But it was better to work than to sit idle in the prison camps as so many did. At least the time went rather fast when they worked all day. The German civilians supervising them were tough and hard. They could beat the prisoners if they talked back or refused to work. They did beat them with the broad flat forks used in digging.

This camp was too far from the point where Red Cross packages and mail entered Germany. The big camps in central and western Germany fared better on Red Cross gift packages. The Czechoslovakian labor camp was too far away—most of the packages of food sent through Red Cross channels were lost in transit. Lewis got three such packages in six months, although one was sent to him weekly. He got no mail at all, although much was written him. Only two boys in the camp that he knew received mail. He wrote a letter or a postcard weekly to his wife, but she received only one card and one letter.

At rare intervals one of the prisoners would get a gift of a carton of American cigarettes. Then he had extra changes to get food—the Germans were crazy for them and would trade a "stucke brot" a piece of bread like a sandwich with meat gravy or margarine filling for one cigarette. The last mess sergeant they had was a Czech, and he helped them as much as possible. He would take the money they all shipped him from their wages and buy snacks of meat, potatoes, and red beets through the black market. The prisoners received a minimum of 16 marks per month in pay.

The French prisoners of war were treated best in all ways, and the English next. The Americans ranked next to the bottom on the score of treatment. The Russians got the dirty end of it. They got nothing through Red Cross or other outside channels.

However, on one occasion they all got a good meal. That was the time the inspecting doctor from the International Red Cross came to the camp. The sixty men in the camp got fifty pounds of meat that day.

How did the prisoners of war get the news of the German surrender and how did they take it? Well, they were not without their news sources. Some of the French and English prisoners had radios, smuggled in part at a time and buried under their quarters, they had heard of the German offer to come to terms with the Americans and English in a separate peace excluding the Russians. The first word they received direct from the Germans of the real close of the war, came to them about 7 p. m. about five and one-half hours following the actual signing of the terms. That was because they wanted the shift on the job to finish the days' work.

The soldiers' guards told them that they did not have to work the next day and that the gates were to be open and all guarding relaxed. However the prisoners had been told so many things by their jailers that they were skeptical. However, an English doctor that had access to the camp told them that they could take the German supply trucks the next day and drive to the American lines beyond Prague. They wanted to get to the American lines before being liberated by the Russians, because that would entail some twenty days of diplomatic red tape to secure a transfer to the Americans.

The next morning they started for Prague. The Russians were only about four miles away and had already lobbed a few shells into the town. The roads were packed with marching people, mostly prisoners of war and German soldiers and Czech soldiers in German uniform, headed for the American lines to surrender. The Russians were following not far behind. As they got by Prague they mixed with Russian soldiers who were vociferous in their approval of the Americans. One enthusiastic Russian veteran with four battle stars across his breast, for the campaigns in defense of Moscow, of Stalingrad and two others grabbed Lewis in his arms and kissed him.

The prisoners contacted the American forces at Pilsen. There the famine ended. Within a month's time Lewis had gained 42 pounds, two pounds more than he had lost. On the boat across the cats were gorgeous chicken, T-bone steaks and all of the fixings. At New York City an army officer told them he would see that they had the "biggest T-bone you ever saw". He did it—the steaks were double the size of a plate, with ice cream afterward.

And then, best of all—home! Buy War Savings Bonds and Stamps.

Buchanan Ball Teams Take Lead In Niles Leagues

Buchanan teams playing in Niles baseball and softball leagues have been gallantly upholding the honor of the home ballclubs to date at least, the teams sponsored by the local American Legion heading the Junior baseball league with three straight wins, and the River Street softball team taking the same position in the Men's Softball League.

The Legion team has won 3 to date, taking the Niles American Legion team 12-6, the Barron Lake team 4-2, and the Niles Elks team 5-2. Wesner has occupied the mound for the locals, his work in holding the Elks to one hit Monday evening being typical of his play. The team was started by F. B. Heezen, B. H. S. coach, and is now under the management of Louis Poplar.

Said the Niles Daily Star, Those lovely Bucks from Buchanan have taken over sole possession of first place in the Junior baseball circuit and all signs point to their residence in the top apartment being permanent. At least that's the way they see it, and they certainly are playing permanent winning baseball.

The River Street team blanked Tyler's of Niles last Wednesday evening 12-0. They faced tougher going last night when they played the Niles Creamery, literally cream of the Niles crop.
