Tim's expense, though, apparently, much to his gratification; which had no sooner subsided, than the young Lieutenant offered, in the most polite and friendly manner, to supply the stranger with a suit of his own clothes, until his help could be dried.

The latter declared himself much indebted for the kind offer, but urged that his engagements were such as rendered it impossible to avail himself of it.

Ephraim, however, knowing by experience how uncomfortable it was to remain in wet garments, ventured to give his advice on the subject, in his own blunt way.

"I say, stranger, I wouldn't love to urge anybody to do anything what they couldn't look on the face of affairs without blushing, but I do reckon that in a case like this, it would be better to let engagements go than to have consumption come, which it surely will, if caution don't keep the fence, that keeps it out, in good repair."

"Then you are Federal, and I am among friends," eagerly inquired the stranger.

"Don't be too sure as to that," quickly returned Ephraim, "for I was only doing 'my own talk,' as for the rest, they've got tongues, and can do their own."

Here Herbert interrupted by assuring the stranger that whatever might be their sentiments on the subject, he might rely upon every attention and kindness that hospitality could afford.

The point being now settled, Grace, who had all this time remained unobserved, in the recess of the window, stepped forward and offered to conduct him to the kitchen—the only room in the house where they had a fire.

The eyes of the stranger, and those of Grace, met in a moment of recognition took place, followed quickly by the exclamations: "Miss Arlington!" "Colonel Harland!"

At which the old Major cast an inquiring glance toward Grace, who, interpreting rightly its meaning, first introduced Colonel Harland to the family, and then went on to relate when and where she had been honored with his acquaintance; but as her relation was so very limited, we, with an eye to the gratification of the reader, will enter more fully into the details.

Grace Arlington had spent the greater part of the previous winter at her home in Boston. It was there that she became acquainted with Col. Harland, and a mutual attachment had sprung up between them; but before he had an opportunity to make any open avowal of his love, Edward Harland was called away, on business, for some weeks, and ere his return, Grace had, at the earnest solicitation of her Uncle Arlington, accepted the invitation to spend the summer at his residence.

On the receipt of this intelligence, Edward would, in obedience to the promptings of his feelings, have immediately sought her out, and cordially avowed his love, solicited her hand, and had not the long-continued difficulties between the North and the South now assumed a very serious aspect.

The booming of the guns at Fort Sumpter had hardly died away, ere he had commenced raising a company in his native village, which soon swelled to a regiment in numbers, and at its organization he was, by an unanimous vote, elected their Colonel. But that we may not keep the gallant Colonel so long in his wet clothes as to verify Ephraim's prediction with regard to the consumption, we will defer his hearty shake of Ephraim's hand, with many assurances of his desire to reward him, allow him (the Colonel) with Grace as his conductress, to go to the kitchen, whither the young Lieutenant was about to accompany them, when a significant sign from his father caused him to change his purpose.

THURSDAY MORNING, AUGUST 19, 1899.

CONFLICT OF AUTHORITY—THE UNITED STATES VS. JUDGE McCUNN.

The threatening aspect of the legal collision between U. S. Marshal Barlow and Judge McCun, of New York, has caused no little excitement throughout the country.

It seems U. S. Marshal Barlow arrested one John H. Pratt, the Texas assassin-leader of the mob that killed Captain Smith.

Of course U. S. Marshal Barlow could not see the point to release Pratt, and the Judge became greatly incensed.

Judge McCun perhaps had not studied Judge Taney's decision when Chief Justice of the United States Supreme Court rendered the case of Sherman v. Booth, of Wisconsin.

The case then went before the Wisconsin Supreme Court, on application of the U. S. Marshal setting forth the illegality of Booth's discharge.

The State affirmed the decision of the Associate Justice Smith, who issued the writ of habeas corpus.

As soon as Gen. Rosecrans learned of his nomination, by the Democrats of Ohio, as candidate for Governor, he accepted, declining the honor.

The Democratic State Central Committee have placed in his stead Gen. H. Pendleton, as the standard bearer of the Ohio Democracy.

The National Capital. From the State Republican, August 15. In consideration of the growing agitation, by the people of the Valley States, upon the subject of the removal of the National Capital from Washington to the Mississippi Valley.

The decision of the Chief Justice goes on to state that: "We do not question the authority of State courts, or judge, who is authorized by the laws of the State to issue writs of habeas corpus, to issue it in any case where the prisoner is imprisoned within its territorial limits, provided it does not appear, when the application is made, that the person imprisoned is in custody under the authority of the United States."

REMOVAL OF THE NATIONAL CAPITAL.

Within the last month or six weeks, since this subject was first brought to the attention of the public, by the Chicago Tribune, it has been discussed pro and con, from Maine to California, and from the Lakes, to the Gulf.

The press, all over the country, have been bringing to the attention of the people. No question, perhaps, ever has, in so short a time, been so thoroughly discussed.

From the tone of the press, East and West, North and South, we should judge there is a settled conviction that the National Capital will be removed, soon or late.

The St. Louis folks are alive to the importance of the question, and are taking hold of it in a manner that soon or late must insure success.

They mean work, and will have the hearty co-operation of all the Southern, West and Pacific States. The call for a National Convention, to consider the matter, which we publish in another column, fully explains the interest felt in the question by the St. Louis people, as well as being indicative of the interest in the subject throughout the great West.

GEN. ROSECRANS DECLINES THE DEMOCRATIC NOMINATION. As soon as Gen. Rosecrans learned of his nomination, by the Democrats of Ohio, as candidate for Governor, he accepted, declining the honor.
