KILLED BY SLANDER WRITTEN FOR THE SATURDAY EVENING POST.

Story.

BY EDLA WHEELER. The sweet May sunshine fell in golden showers upon the few streets of Hydeville that drowsy Sabbath morning, and the grass that had been soak-ed with rain for a week past, was as bright and soft as green velvet, and the heart of Bessie Brown—the little milliner of Hydeville—swelled with a nameless joy and happiness, as she shut her shop door, and walked down the street toward the -village church; its only church where Congregation. alist, Methodist. Episcopalian and Universalist, each and all, gathered upon the Sabbath to listen to the word of God, and to gossip after service.

Hydeville was one of those slow, "one-horse" inland hamlets, that are so plentiful in the West, where the inhabitants dress extravagantly think lightly, and feast upon gossip.

Bessie Brown had been there only one year, but long enough to establish her reputation as a milliner, and to-set the hearts of the Hydeville swains affame with love, and consequently to render the young ladies green with envy and jealousy.

Bessie walked swiftly down the street for she was late that morning.

It was not intentional, not "done to: attract attention" as was said after service, but she had sat up late the preceding evening to finish a hat for Miss Sheldon, and a bonnet for Mrs. Adams, and in consequence had overslept the next morning. She had worked hard that week all through. There had been new hats to trim, and old hats to make over, and dresses and mantles, and saques to cut forhalf the maidens in Hydeville, besides a suit to finish for herself. She wore it that morning; a fresh, pretty silk, trimmed with dainty laces, and fitting the graceful figure to perfection, as did all her garments. She was modestly and becoming attired, from the white lace hat with its droop ing buds, and sprays; to the neatly gaitered foot that tripped down the treet.

There was a little stir in the congrestreet. gation as she entered, as there always was wherever sweet-faced Bessie

Brown went: She took her seat in the central row of pews, and the young men upon either side feasted their eyes upon her unusual lovely, but not knowing why, while the young ladies upon either side surveyed her "spring suit" from the corner of their eyes, and jotted down items in their memories, to chat over after service. Charlie Steams walked home with Miss Brown; much to the annoyance of several other parties. Just behind them walked Mrs. Adams and her lartin. "Lots. of style at church to-day," Martin. whispered Mrs. Adams to Mrs. Winslow, with an expressive glance at the slender figure a few rods in advance. "Yes! we were out in gay feathers! Wonder where that girl gets her money to dress as she does?

"Oh, in making bonnets and dress "I was quite surprised when I learn-res, of course." It was a harmless ed that Miss Brown painted. She alsentence that fell from Mrs. Adams' ways seemed such a guileless little lips; yet her manner and voice were thing; but it seems she owes her fair so peculiar, her inflections so meaning, face to the paint brush, that the two women looked quickly at But that Sunday gossip already re-came here. Very few girls as young ... "And I could not help wondering as she is, could fight against poverty; at her speaking so," she said, in con-single handed and alone, and succeed clusion. "I think she must have as she has, I think—but it does seem theard something, about Bessie, but I all that is being said about me, what a little strange, the way she spends would not ask her. It is upholding wrong doers, to let them go on and act as if you didn't it out of the family. Bessie is a nice see them."

"Lsuppose Bussie Brown thinks her pretty face will carry her through, let her act as she may, but she'll find her mistake before she dies, perhaps."
"Oh my! do you think she is pretty, Celia?" exclaimed silly Dell Martin, turning to Celia. "I have heard lots of folks speak just as though she was a beauty, but I don't see anything even pretty about her, excepting her complexion. Her: features are no handsomer than other folks, as L'éan see."

The vellow-haired angel smiled a heavenly smile.

"People differ in their tastes," she said sweetly. "I do not think Bessie possesses any beauty, unless, as you say, it is her complexion. And if that is natural, as I never heard doubted, it certainly is a great addition to her appearance."

"I thought her cheeks looked queer to-day," Dell said, catching at Celia's insinuation. "They were spotted, red and white; and 'the rest of her face was as white as marble. I never saw anybody look just like that before. I couldn't help wondering how she Celia smiled serenely. "These milliners keep up with the times always,

That was how it all started; no word had ever been breathed against Bessie Brown before that day. There was very little said then to be sure. But "behold how great a matter a little fire kindleth."

There was a little gathering in the village a week later. Mrs. Winter's son had returned from abroad, and she gave a party in honor of the event. All the young people in the village were there.

Pretty Bessie Brown was chatting with Charlie Sterns early in the even-Oliver, who stood near him. "Who is she?"

Miss Oliver glanced at Bessie. "Oh, that is our milliner-Miss Brown. Yes, she is a very pretty girl." What a lovely complexion," continued Mr. Winters, feasting his eyes upon Bessie's fair face. "The pure lilly and rose." "Yes, she gets herself up very artistically."

Mr. Winters looked inquiringly at Miss Oliver. "You don't mean to say-" he began, and Miss Oliver—a bright, mer-well-meaning, but thoughtless girl-interrupted laughingly-"Oh, don't look so shocked. It's a mournful fact that Miss Bessie Brown owes her lovely complexion to paint and powder, and not to nature. I never knew it until recently, but I pure profile, seeing that she looked understand it to be a well-known fact now. But she is a pretty girl, and you surely ought, with your experience, to know by this time that women are not always what they seem?"

Miss Oliver had not the least idea that she was telling anything but the truth. Miss Sheldon having in mind what Miss Celia Adams and Miss Dell Martin had said coming from church, remarked to her mother that evening . Charlie Sterns saw how she was yellow-haired daughter, Celia, Mrs. that "some folks" thought Bessie Winslow, Miss Sheldon, and Miss Brown painted. Mrs. Sheldon, the following day, asked her boarder, Miss, Stevens, if she knew that Bessie Brown's complexion was not natural; and not long after Miss Stephens went to call on Miss Oliver, and while they sat chatting together, Bessie Brown tripped by the window, and Miss Stephens said:

"Oh, mother, I think you judge Bessie harshly." spoke up yellow, haired Celia who had a habit of "play" known it anywhere, and of course I recognized it when Bessie Brown "Not very."

She's forever excusing in, and she said she had had no custhing about it, and shouldn't now but to you, and you'd better not speak of little girl to all appearances, and I don't want to start any scandal." But Mrs. Winslow could not keep this rare tit-bit to herself. The following afternoon she called upon Mrs. Sheldon, and extracting a promise of secrecy, she made that lady her confident.

But after Mrs. Winslow had departed Mrs. Sheldon became alarmed lest keeping this precious scrap of gossip a secret should be "winking at iniquities;" and having fully assured her-self that it would, she donned her bonnet and ran across the street to talk it over with Mrs. Adams.

Mrs. Adams was horrified. "Worse and worse!" she exclaimed, rolling her eyes in distress. "What is that girl comin' to! Seein' the truth is gettin' out, I may as well tell what I know. About a week ago my little Willie was taken with the croup; for a touch of it, in the night. I think 'twas near eleven o'clock, and there wasn't a light in the village anywhere. The moon shown bright as day 'most, and as I went to close my window, fearing Willie might catch more cold, I heard voices, and lookin' down the street, I saw a man just stealin' out door shut after him by some one inside, heard the lock turned, and then the farther door that leads into Bessie's bed-room slammed to, and all was still. I have wondered a great deal what it meant, but I guess it is easily explained. Ah me! What is the world comin' to?" Before forty-eight hours had passed the shameful scandal was half through the village. There were plenty ready to seize the sweet morsel and roll it upon their tongues, and of course it was enlarged and exagerated with every repetition: The old ladies and the young ladies said to each other, "Have you heard that awful story one word of it, but they say so."

But Bessie Brown, sitting singing at her work in the pleasant little shop, knew nothing of this for many a day. Her conscience was clear, her mind pure, her heart 'light, and she never dreamed that the breath of slander could touch her fair fame. But by-and-by she fell to wondering why her companions—the girls who had sought her society, and fondled and caressed her previously—acted so strangely toward her. And then there were two or three little gatherings in the village, to which she was not invited: a thing which had never occurred before since she came to Hydeville. And some of the loafers and the little boys made impudent remarks and stared at her as she passed them in the street; and then Bessie Brown knew what it all meant-knew that her character' had been assailed, though she knew not how, or why, or wherefore. And the rose faded out of her cheek, and the light from her eye, and her step grew listless and weary; and the dreary weeks dragged drooping, and he came to her one day. "Bessie," he said tenderly, "I want you for my wife. You are wearing your life out in this work, and I have a good home to offer you. Will you around her, ignoring the past. The minister's wife had been her friend all through; and one day Bessie said to her as she laid upon her bed and the lady sat by her side, "Mrs. Gibbs, I want you to tell me just what people have said about me. I know that I have been slandered. I have had hints thrown out to me of the nature of those slanders, but I want to know before I die just what people have said, and to know what I have done to draw remark."

Mrs. Gibbs hesitated, but Bessie pleaded until she told her all the shameful slander. Bessie's face was buried in the pillows, and she was sobbing violently when Mrs. Gibbs concluded. "Oh, heavens!" she cried, passion ately, "it is more than I dreamed. Oh, thank God I am going to die-but not until I can clear myself in your eyes, Mrs. Gibbs."

"Hush, hush," Mrs. Gibbs responded, soothingly. "I have never believed one word of it, dear; you need not explain one word to me. I know you are pure as the angels.' "But I mist explain!"

cried excitedly, with a bright spot burning on either cheek. "I remember perfectly well about that five dollar bill. One Tuesday night, just as I was closing my shop, Ned Peters called at the door and handed it to me He said he owed Mrs. Smith for some sewing she had done for him-and she of Bessie Brown's shop. I thought was owing me a similar amount, and of thieves at first, but I heard the wished him to hand the money to me, wished him to hand the money to me, and so settle both accounts. The man who went out of my shop so late one night was old Mr. Williams, who lives some ten miles from Hydeville. His daughter had ordered a bonnet the week before; and Mr. Williams had been to Columbia, five or six miles beyond Hydeville, that day, and he did not get here until late that night. I was asleep, and had been for several hours, when I heard a rapping at my shop door. I raised my window and asked who was there: and Mr. Williams answered that he had been detained by business in Columbia until ing, looking unutterably lovely in her whispered it over their tea cups, the la late hour, and regretted to disturb dainty garments, when Alex Winter's old men talked it in the stores and the me, but his daughter was to be married rested upon her in pleased admiration. post-office, the young loafers told it the following day, and he wanted the surface. I don't believe the moon was full, and I knew just where the box stood which contained the bonnet. I gave it to him, locked the door, and returned to bed and to sleep. And that is all the foundation

there is for these foul slanders." Just one week later, in the hazy November afternoon, Bessie Brown

"Of quick consumption, Bessie Brown, aged twenty," the "Weekly Gazette" said: But it should have been—"Killed by slander." The Herald of Health says: The first, the best, because the safest for laborers; invalids, the sedentary, for all classes, at all times of the day and night, is half a glass at a time, repeated in ten minutes if desired, of common cold water, at the temperature of the spring or well, or reservoir, or cistern. Ice water is more palatable, but-often kills. Any drink which contains alcohol, even cider, roof beer, or domestic cordials, all, are not only harmless, but are positively njurious, because the atom of alcohol, by using the strength of the next minute for the present, leaves the system that next minute just that much weaker than it would have been had not that atom of alcohol been taken. This is the case because that atom of alcohol has not one particle of nutriment, hence cannot supply the system with one atom of strength. If anything is added to the summer drink, it should contain some nutriment so as to strengthen the body as well as to dilute the blood for the purposes of a more easy flow through the system, as any one knows that the thinner a fluid is the more easily does it flow. Some of the nutri tious and safe drinks are given below, especially for those who work in the sun of summer, all to be taken at the natural temperature of the shadiest spots in the locality. To any of them ice may be added, but it is a luxurious, not a beneficial ingredient, nor a sale one.

Freaks of the Absent Minded.

Absent minded people are funny. Sir Isaac Newton wanted his servant to carry out the stove which was getting too hot. A fellow stole his dinner before eyes, and he afterwards thought he had eaten it because the dishes were empty. A Scotch professor walked into the middle of a horse pond while pondering on Final cause.

Ben Franklin punched down the ashes of his pipe with the finger of a young lady who was sitting by his side, and severely burned the little white poker. A gentleman in Troy, New York, received a letter in the dark, and used the letter to light his lamp, and then looked for it to read. This after a day or two dried out, leaving a bed of clay quarter of an inch in thickness. This clay rapidly dried in the sun, cracking and curling up until a portion of the cellar looked as if covered with broken crockery. No finer work in finishing, either upon the upper or under side, ever came from the hand of the potter. PROGRESSION. .

The world moves, whether man approves or not, and so the public debt keeps constantly growing less whether the Democracy likes it or not. During the month of June, the reduction was $7,103,349. Since March 1st, 1869, the entire reduction has been $243,432,425. Just think of it! Nearly two hundred and fifty millions of dollars of the National debt has been paid since General Grant has occupied the Presidential chair. The taxes have been greatly reduced under the present administration, and still our National debt keeps growing less under Republican rule. The people look on and approve, while the sharp, political opponents secretly gnash their teeth to see how successfully government affairs are running under the control of their political enemies. Bound to Come.

The wriggling of some of the old-fogy Democrats of the East under the operation of Vallandigham's New Departure reminds us of an anecdote.

An aristocratic metropolitan millionaire, whose very thin skin compelled him to keep his own barber, was induced a few years ago to visit the West to look after his new lands, just then coming into market. Worn with days and nights of travel, he dropped into a barber shop in Illinois conducted in the off-hand manner in which everything is carried on in that progressive section of the country. Having seated his customer in a cushionless chair, the stalwart Sucker commenced operations on the countenance of the old millionaire in true Western style. Wincing under the rough and rapid strokes, the July, there should be a general dis-play of Mormon militia in Great Salt victim uttered a cry of pain. Never staying his hand, but grasping the writhing metropolitan more tightly by the nose, the barber roared out, "What's the matter?" "Do you believe you can ever give me a clean shave with that razor?" was determined the grand parade fearing the results, and that serious faintly replied the man of the thin skin, a tear starting in his eye. "Never you fear, old hoss," responded the barber; "if the handle of the razor don't break, the beard is bound to come off." The Eastern Democracy had better accept the situation with a good grace, for the Western Democracy are earnestly intent upon their work, and in spite of grimaces here or elsewhere the beard is bound to come off.—N. Y. Sun.

The Illinois Tragedy Details of the Recent Fiendish Child Murder in Illinois—A Child Rossted Alive and Whipped to Death.

CHICAGO, July 8.—The testimony, given by the coroner's jury on Sunlay last, at Onarga, Ill., by Mrs. Mera and her daughter Sarah, in the case of Martin Mera, under examination for whipping and otherwise tortuing his son to death, shows the crime of Mera to be one of the most fiendish and revolting in the history of the State. Mary Mera, wife of the man and mother of the dead body, testified: "My husband whipped Martin two weeks ago Tuesday night. My babe was born on that day and I did not see the whipping. It was done in another room. I heard blows and heard the child beg for mercy. The child then went to bed. About ten o'clock the next morning the child came into my bedroom, followed by his father, who was whipping him. He whipped him very hard with a black snake horsewhip. The child dodged around the room so as to avoid the blows and begged for mercy. The child was completely naked, his fa ther having compelled him to strip himself. His face was swollen from the whipping he had received the night before. father whipped him very hard for 10 or 15 minutes. At last he stopped and told the child to put on his shirt. He made an effort to do so and failed. His father repeated the order, when the boy said, 'I can't see it; I can't see it.' 'You can't see it,' responded the father. 'No, father,

I can't see you father. I can't see you father,' and fell dying." The fiend then rubbed the boy with spirits and lorced some down his throat. The child raised his hands, moved his lips and expired. Mera then took the body, put it under the bed where the sick mother was lying, and it remained there until evening, when he buried it as previously stated. Sarah Mera, daughter of the murderer, aged 14 years, testified that her father often whipped him very severely with a horsewhip.
"On Tuesday, two weeks ago, he brought brother in and said he had not worked, and whipped and whipped, and knocked him down twice. Father continued to whip him, and said he would whip him until he could not stand up. He would whip the life out of him. Two .or three times he would say this, and brother would plead 'Father, father, don't whip me any more. He was a good boy, and liked him. Brother went to bed about ten o'clock. He said he did not know why father whipped him so. He never fold stories, only when father made him. Father would say that if he did not own that he did so and so he would whip him, and to avoid it he would own to things he never did: On Wednesday I got up and got breakfast ready.

Father rose when breakfast was ready.

Brother got up but felt so badly that he went to bed. Father bid him go out and feed the stock, and when he came back father whipped him and sent him to the field. He went for him and brought him in, made him take off his clothes and then whipped him. He then picked him up and laid him on the stove. The stove was hot enough to heat an iron. I was baking biscuit. Father put him on the stove twice, brother pleading all the while, 'Father don't burn me; don't burn me.' He screamed very loud, and the skin stuck to the stove. His skin came off from his back and feet, and it stuck to the stove. It smelled so I opened the door, and father immediately shut it. While brother was pleading father said he would burn him until he worked. I have seen him strike brother with his fist many times. He knocked brother down several times with the butt end of the horsewhip. I never

ort of the death of Mrs. Metzgar, a Russian, facts have come to light which go to show that the husband has proven himself to be the right | and wife were devotedly attached to each other, though their privations and sufferings were great. It seems that their parting on the Sunday morning before her death was most affectionate. It is now thought by some that Metzgar left through fear. Knowing that his wife would die, and it being understood between them, he having nothing to pay her funeral ex-penses, and fearing arrest and im-prisonment, as in Russia, in such cases, and not understanding our laws, he left. The night his wife died it is understand, that a few days after he worked for a man in the north part of the county, for three days, refusing to eat scarcely anything, sleeping but little, and acting like a heart-broken or insane man, when he left and has not since been heard of. In connection with this case, it is but just to say that some of our saloon folks showed more practical Christian works than some of higher pretensions. "Frank" hired an extra team on the occasion, and several other persons,

Mr. Smith lifted the seemingly dead man into his buggy standing near by, and took him to a saloon where help was rendered. Dr. Bell was summoned, and a half hour's vigorous work brought the man to consciousness; and he will doubtless speedily recover.— Benton Harbor Palladium.

we are frank to admit, from what we say, that we have heretofore underestimated the amount of business transacted in this village. We met many of the principal business men of the place, and found them wide awake, enterprising and intelligent, and all encouraged by the prospects before them. Of the manufacturing interests of the town, we venture the assertion that no village of the size of Galien can be found in Michigan where there is so much manufacturing carried on. And it is this which gives life to the place, and renders its business interest permanent and per-petual. The handle factory of Smith & Montross, which has gained a reputation second to no other in the western country, is in operation, having in their employ 25 to 30 hands, and manufacturing all kinds of handles, also barley forks and cradle fingers. George A. Blakeslee is building an addition to his already large and extensive steam saw mill, and intends to put in some machinery for turning broom handles .- Other improvements we noticed were a new dwelling house being put up by R. B. Wheaton, and also a large residence building by George Zimmerman. We made many agreeable acquaintances in the village; and were treated throughout by the people with the kindest consideration and respect. We were favorably impressed with the place and its inhabitants, and trust that in the future we shall learn much of the success and prosperity of Galien.

At 10 a. m., the procession was formed under direction of Major Warner, Marshal of the Day. The procession then marched to the Indian Fields, where, after listening to Rev. FROM STEVENSVILLE.

July 8th, 1871. EDITORS RECORD :- The good people of Stevensville having taken the cars on the line in search of a celebration, and teeling quite lonely upon being left solitary in this great city, I concluded to hitch up and go out in the country. Having heard that the people of Berrien Springs would be at home, and would celebrate the day, I concluded to bring up at the county seat. Up by Ruggles' Mill, out through the Feathventure to say that I2 miles of better found in the State. The wheat was about one half cut, and a better harvest the farmers say they have not had for seve: al years. The country had the appearance of a Sunday. Mowing and reaping machines stood in the fields, and the people had moved on to Berrien. Upon approaching the town, I could hear the boom and rattle of drums, mingled with the harmonious blast of horns, which sounds I found were made by a very good brass band hailing from Berrien Centre. I had arrived a little late to participate in the grand basket pic-nic which took place in a beautiful grove called the Indian Fields. But I was informed that many good things were said and more good things were eaten. The programme for the afternoon consisted in a revival of some of the old English games. Climbing the greased pole amused the crowd for an hour. $5 was invitingly placed at the top of the pole, and many strenuous efforts were made by the boys to reach it. At last, after tle soap had been nearly wiped off by the boys, a strapping six-footer grasped the prize. "Oh!" sighed a nice little girl, "I do wish that pretty hoy that tried so hard had got it." It took our worthy Sheriff some time to clear the streets for the footrace which now came off in good style, two champions running first for a prize. There were several competitors in the last race, the leading runner unfortunately stumbling, which caused a general tumble, thereby bringing in the last first. The Marshals used every effort to give the greased pig a fair chance, but all in vain. The crowd closed around him and he was seized by four athletes before he had ran one rod. The ancient order of Snolagos ters were most worthily represented by about twenty gentlemen, superbly mount ed, and clad in the most approved regalia of the order. The fire works were got up on a liberal scale, and made a fine display The thirsty earth had but just drank up the copious rain of the previous day, and a more glorious day of shadow and sunshine is seldom seen. I may be mistaken.

but I thought the people of Berrien Springs were the most liberal and whole hearted people I had ever met; nor can it be otherwise, living as they do in a perfect paralise of fertility and beauty. It is true that they have no R. R., but it is better being a little longer going to mill, if we are sure of bringing home the grist. If I should be asked the question, "Where is there a quiet village to live in?" I would answer, Berrien Springs. If I should be appointed a committee of the whole to select a place for a grand 4th of July celebration, I would say Berrien Springs. Numerous avenues lead from larger towns to Berrien, and a drive over any of these fine roads, on a bright summer's morning is worth a long excursion by rail. Hav ing taken up my quarters at the DeField House, I was surprised, early in the evening to find myself enveloped by 80 couples threading the mystic mazes of the dance. Gaining my liberty at last, I passed out on the River Bluff, and was entranced by the quiet beauty of the scene—beauties almost rivaling the fair dancers within. The moon seemed to look down with a smiling and approving glance at the pretty scene; the noble river making a graceful bend and faithfully reflecting every object that casts a shadow upon its broad bosom: the little sparkling eddies lingering along the grassy slopes, and seeming to invite a parting kiss before whirling away to be lost in the wild waters of Michigan Lake; the sweet tones of viol and horn floating

As resterday the same.

Then take the grief to Him,

He'll bear both it and thee,
He'll make the burden light,
He'll read the mystery.

And darling, ave remember, Tho' storms should come amain, That constant trust in Heaven, Will lighten every pain. old Jonas.

There was an old man—he was called "old Jonas"—who made his living and spent all his life-time in hunting in the gutters of the city for things that were lost. And, though it may seem strange, yet it is truer that in his old age Jones had laid up quite a sum of money that he had made in this way, for during his long life he had picked from the gutters many a coin, and rescued from filth. many a precious jewel.

'It seems strange to me,' said a wealthy banker to old Jonas one day, how any one could have grown rich over a gutter."

"Oh! sir," said old Jonas, "it's not where you work, it's what you work for that does it. I worked all my life to be rich, and I am; so do you, and you are; but we work in very different places."

Alas, for wealthy banker and miser-ly old Jonas! It never came into their heads that there were better things to work for than riches. And it matters not where you work, whether in poverty or filth, or cleanliness, wealth and luxury; if you but work for the saving of a soul, you will re-ceive a glorious reward. Remember what the Savior said—

"Whatshall it profit a man, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his Nails, Glass, Locks, Paints, own soul?" Oils, Iron Steel, own soul?"

The Final Examination. A young man who graduated at West Point, said that so intense was the feeling and anxiety felt with regard to the final examination at the close of the course, that the first scholar in his class fainted and fell at the first question asked him. He felt that his standing in the profession he had chosen was now at stake—that had chosen was now at stake—that his future position depended upon the manner in which he acquitted himself. If the loss or gain of a little worldly distinction could so move a man, what must be the feeling of the soul as it stands alone at the bar of God! We shall be judged as individuals. Each must appear by himself at the great judgment as truly as if he was the only person in the universe. Oh, what a meaning in that word: "Some shall awake to shame and everlasting contempt." No wonder that they "pray for the rocks and mountains to fall on them." West Point honors are but for the little moment of time here, but the results of this final examination are for eternity. The cadet keeps this examination constantly in view. He studies and drills with the wrestler's earnestness to attain a high standing at the close. How strange that we so lose sight of this solemn hour.—S. S. Times.

Down the Hill. The evening of every man's life is coming on apace. The day of life will soon be spent. The sun, though it may be up in mid-heaven, will pass swiftly down the western sky and disappear. What shall light up man's path when the sun of life has gone down? He must travel on to the next world, but what shall illumine his footsteps after the nightfall of death, amid the darkness of his journey? What question more important, more practical, more solomn for each reader of our journal to ask himself? That is a long journey to travel without light; without a guide, and without a friend. Yet every man must perform it. The time is not far: distant when all men will begin the journey. There is an evening star in the natural world. Its radiance is bright and beautiful, and cheering to the benighted traveler. But life's evening star in the natural world. Its beauty and brilliancy are reflected from the sun of righteousness, whose bright rays light up the evening of life, and throw their radiance across the darkness of the grave into Imman-uel's land. It has illuminated the footsteps of many a traveler into efernity. It is of priceless value. A thousand worlds cannot purchase it. yet it is offered without money and without price to him who will patient-ly and thankfully receive it.

* Depend on Christ.

In time of great danger, we some-times gloomly mutter, "Now we shall not be preserved; Christ has kept us up till now, and we quite believe that ne would do so if the circumstances to day were no worse than those of times gone by, but now we are extremely tempted, now we are violent. Thought a limit of times gone by, but now we are extremely tempted, now we are violent. assailed, now our sorrows multiply, will he help us now?" Dare you say, 'Will he?" when you know that he cannot change? Dare you say, "Can he?" Is anything too hard for the Lord? Are you going to make your Savior a mere appearance? He is a seal Savior, lean on him; he will pring you safely through, cover you with his shield, and keep off the ficry larts from you. He will not leave you or forsake you.
