CITATE OF MIGHIGAN, Second Judicial Circuit, in D Chancery. Suit peuding in the Circuit Court for the County of Berrien, in Chancery, at the Village of Berrien Springs, on the 10th day of January. A. D. 1872.

Richard Swahk, Complainant, vs. Sarah Ann Alden and Harriet Selover, defendants.

It satisfactorily appearing to this Circuit Court that Sarah Ann Alden and Harriet Selover, defendants in the above entitled cause, are not residents of this State, and that by reason thereof personal service of the subpoenal issued in this cause cannot be had, and that such defendants are now and have been, since the issuing of said subpoena, residing without the State of Michigan. On motion of D. R. Hinman, Solicitor for the complainant, it is ordered that said defendants cause their appearance to be entered in this cause on or before the 12th day of April, A. D. 1872, and that in case of their appearance, they cause their answer to said bill of complainant to be filled, and a copy thereof to be served on the complainant's Solicitor, within twenty days after service of the cryy of said bill and notice of this order, and in default thereof, or of said defendants' appearance as aforesaid, that the said bill be taken as confessed by the said defondants. Said bill being field for the purporse of having partition of the following described lands to wit: The south half of the northwest fractional quarter of section twenty-one (21) in township eight (3) range nineteen (10) west, and the northwest quarter of the northwest fractional quarter of section twenty-one, (21) themse running east to a ditch, thence south along said ditch to a lake, thence west along the shore of said lake to the section line, the nee northwo flectuates and substantial and state of the northwest corner of the southwest quarter of said section twenty-one, (21) themse running east to a ditch, thence south along said ditch to a lake, thence west along the shore of said along said ditch to a lake, thence west along the place of beginning, and The good ship Marion lay in the port Hong Kong, with her cargo and crew aboard, her sails bent, but waiting for the coming dawn and a fair wind to bear her on her homeward Lay, although he already possessed journey. Everything had been prepared for a long voyage and a wres- object, whatever it might be, was still now. I have plowed the ocean, Lettle with the elements. One anchor dissatisfied, and hence his visit to the had already been secured, while the lafter part of the ship. had already been secured, while the l second sufficed to hold her as she lay upon the waters, that gently beat against her side. Her deck had been cleared of every unnecessary movable thing; the water casks and boats had been properly stowed and cared for; and but for the cook's galley that loomed up athwart the ship, her deck would have been unobstructed. Her tall, tapering masts were gaily dressed with flags and streamers; her decks and gangways were carpeted; and the delicious music that arose from the cabin, and floated away on the gentle breeze faintly stirred her bunting as it passed, gave truthful indications of what was in progress

Around and about the ship were gathered numerous boats, that, at the first sound of music and revelry, had put off from the shore, the occupants of some of which lay upon their oars and seemed to drink in the enchanting melody; while others with uncontrollable curiosity peeped in through the cabin windows of the deeply laden ship, while the more venturesome clambered up her sides, jumped upon her decks, and intermingling with the crew who loitered forward, endeavored to ascertain the cause of all this

Boats containing the select few who were interrested in the evenings festivities occasionally appeared at the gangway stairs, at the head of which stood Captain Hudson to receive his guests; while at the cabin door the winning smiles and graceful attentions of his niece, Lettie Fay, were exerted in tendering all a cordial welcome.

Lettie Fay was of medium stature; her classic features, dark blue eyes. and luxuriant dark brown hair, attracting hosts of admirers, while her gentleness of mind and kindness of heart endeared her to all. This was her seventeenth birthday, and the eve of the departure of the Marion, and her worthy uncle had made the double event the occasion of a gathering of their many friends. The band of her majesty's ship Vixen furnished the music; and interspersed with those who were present, the gay uniforms of the officers of the English war vessels that were then lying in Orders for Flour, Meal, Feed, &c., for the port, were conspicuous.

Among the assembled guests was Capt. Crane, of the ship Vixen. Beneath a modest demeanor, he had concealed a record that many an older heart had sighed for in vain, and had received such undoubted proof of his country's gratitude, that, while his companions could not but admire his courage and rejoice at his success, still they could not at times restrain a feeling of envy that would rise unbidden in their hearts. Captain Crane loved Lettie Fay.

tain. But it was remarked, too, that Lettie Fay often furtively glanced around her, as though she sought some absent face or sighed for the cadence of some well-known voice, and occasionally, as clouds will pass before the sun, a sadness scemed momentarily to rest upon her face; but it would soon pass away, and then, if possible, she would appear brighter and was soon ascending the rigging than ever.

While this scene of revelry was in progress in the commodious cabin, an entirely different scene was presented on the deck of the vessel. Many of the crew had long since retired to their bunks to steal a few hour's sleep, preparatory to the exhausting and laborious duties of the approaching morning; but a few still remained on deck, waiting to row the visitors back to the shore when the assemblage should disperse. Among the foreigners who had ascended to the deck of the vessel, and who still loitered there, was Chang Lay, with his small, piercing eyes, high cheek bones, and extremely nervous temperament, he was a fitting exponent of the wily and cunning Mongolian. Although he appeared stolidly indifferent to the various objects that surrounded him, yet he had already, without exciting comment or observation, examined the four carronades with which the ship was armed, observed their caliber and position, counted the crew when they were mustered upon deck, noted their physique and nationality, and, cautiously entering the cabin, seemed apparently absorbed by the gyrations of the dancers and the dazzling scenes that was presented to his vision; and then, "like the Arabs" silently stole away.

If Chang Lay had contented himself with his observations upon the deck of the vessel, and had avoided the cabin, this story would never have been written; for the fate of the good ship Marion and her gallant crew would have been enshrouded in a veil of mystery that no human eye could penetrate, and another vessel would have been added to the already voluminous list of the unknown lost. But, like a man who is wedded to his cup, and with whom a free indulgence but begets a stronger appetite, Chang information enough to carry out his after part of the ship.

His movements there were artistic, but one eye had followed his in their silent wanderings; one eye had watched him as they rested on the musket rack which surrounded the mizzen mast, and where, like the shining silver, was arrayed the armory of the ship, and cautiously followed in his wake. It was the gig of Captain

It was now nearly morning. The last leave taking had been made, the last farewell had been uttered, the last visitor had left the ship's side. when Lettie Fay hurried to her room, and throwing herself on the couch burst into tears. "He's gone! he's gone!" she exclaimed, with the deepest emotion; "and without whispering one good by Oh! Richard Crane, if you could but see the wound you have inflicted upon my heart?" And above her half suppressed sighs the bell of the ship struck eight. It seemed like the death knell to her young life's fondest hopes. * * * *

With the rising of the sun all was bustle and excitement on board the ship. The anchor was weighed, the sails were set, and with a light breeze and a smooth sea the Marion was headed for home. For several days all passed pleasantly, and nothing could be desired except a sharper wind, and its continued absence seemed to somewhat affect the captains nerves. The sailors lolled about the decks, or gathered together to listen to some interresting yarn that one of their number was spinning out to an interminable length. From a gentle breeze came a dead calm; and the Marion floated like a helpless thing upon the face of the waters. For two long days this continued, when a light breeze sprang up; the ship felt it, and gently careening again, obeyed her rudder, and cleft in twain the silent waters.

To a high-spirited girl like Lettic Fay this delay seemed insufferable. A prolonged absence from her native land, whose hills and dales and silver streams slie loved with all the fervor of an affectionate heart, had developed within her a desire to return once again to the scenes of her youth. There was intermingled with this feeling a desire to leave forever behind, the land that had crushed her young heart, which had severed the hopes which she had cherished fondly for two years, and made her life misera-

Lettie Fay loved Richard Crane. Oh! what would she have given for a momentary insight into his thoughts! Though never indifferent, he was never familiar; though ever kind and considerate, he always maintained a modest reserve and demeanor which her anxious eye could not penetrate. His unassuming manners and retiring disposition sufficiently explained to her his conduct in holding himself aloof during the ball; but when the last visitor had wished her a good voyage, and taken his departure, and For two years he had worn her image he did not appear to tender his conin his heart. He had first met her at gratulations and to offer a wish for her uncle's house in London; but nev- her safe return, her overcharged heart er by word or gesture had he appris- | could no longer contain its emotions, ed her of his sentiments, but, like the pagan of old, he worshiped her in silence. And her prayer

"Where?" asked the captain.

"On the starboard bow, sir, making toward us." "Mr. Williams," cried the captain to the mate, "hadn't you better take the glass up aloft, and see what she looks like?"

"Ay, ay, sir," said the mate; and with a hurried step he proceeded to his state-room, procured a telescope, at a rapid pace. "Can you make her out, Mr. Williams?" called the captain.

"Ay, ay sir. She's a Chinaman of about three hundred tons, and bearing straight down upon us; and there are three others astern, sir," cried the mate.

"Pirates, by heaven!" exclaimed the captain, for the moment moved from his customary propriety, "Come down, Mr. Williams. All hands on deck!"

And, obedient to his command, the men flocked on deck from the forecastle, and scanned the horizon with eager eyes.

"Come boys," said he, "don't stand gaping there, for the pirates of China are after us. Cut loose those carronades. Mr. Johnson. Bring out the rifles, and sharpen the cutlasses. Be brisk, men. More lively! By Job, we must fight now! Get the ammunition out! And, Mr. Roberts, an extra glass of grog to the men! For a moment a nervous anxiety appeared upon the faces of the men; but that was soon replaced by a look of fixed determination which threatened disastrous consequences to their opponents. The rapidity with which the captain issued his orders seemed momentarily to disconcert them; but his placid features and nervous energy seemed to inspire them with renewed courage, and confidence in his ability to successfully cope with their merciless pursuers.

Having completed his preparations on deck, Captain Hudson entered the cabin; and there, pale as marble, and tremulous with fear and excitement, sat Lettie Fay; to grasp her to his heart and fervently kiss her was the first impulse of his affectionate nature.

"My poor dear girl !" said he; "the image of my sister, whom I loved so well, whose memory I sacredly rever ence, and whom I promised on her death-bed to be a father to her child, the only fear I have known I fear a gale. But when I look upon you, my darling, and think of those bloodthirsty scoundrels who are pursuing us, I tremble when I think what fate may be in waiting for you, for they know not mercy.

"But, my dear uncle, they will not capture us. See, we are well armed, and have many brave men on board, who would sacrifice their lives to shield us from harm. Surely we shall beat them off, or escape their clutches."

"It may be so," he replied calmly but how can we hope to succeed against such overwhelming odds? Lettie, do you remember the night that your mother died? You were at one side of the bed, I was at the other-your hand was clasped in hers. She said something about duty. Do you remember what it was, Lettie?" "Oh, uncle! how could I ever forget those sacred words? She said, Lettie, I have placed you in your uncle's care. Be kind and obedient to him, obey him as you always have me, and your life will be devoid of snares, and happiness and comfort will crown your declining years,' You know, uncle. I faithfully promised."

"Now, Lettie, listen. My place is with my men upon the deck of the vessel. Where the fight is the thickest, there I shall always be found. Lettie, we may never meet again; but by the memory of thy dead mother, I charge thee to hear me, and hearing to obey. Within this locker are two kegs of powder; one I shall take upon deck, the other I shall open, and leave with you. Here is my pistol. Stir not from here; but if a Chinaman enters the cabin door, you will know that all is lost. Then with a firm hand, and muzzle close to the powder discharge the pistol, and leave the rest to heaven!"

"Oh! uncle! what dreadful deed do you contemplate? Would you ask me to blow up the ship? How could I face my God with such a crime upon my hands? Oh, you know not what you ask! Only think that mine should be the hand to hurl so many brave souls into eternity! Ask me anything but that, and I will cheerfully comply."

"My dear child, fear not for us, for the pirates of China never allow a human being to live on board a ship. they capture. Dead men tell no tales, is their motto. And as for you, Lettie, would you purchase life at the price of dishonor?" "Oh, uncle!" she exclaimed, "give me the pistol-I will obey."

And with her trembling fingers she seized the revolver that he held within his hand. At this stage of the proceedings with which they counted became every moment more manifest. Nearer the pirate approached, till the rattle of musketry became incessant. They were soon along side, and amidst a cloud of smoke, they mounted the bulwarks, jumped upon the deck, and engaged in a hand-to-hand contest with the crew.

A long and deadly fight ensued. With cutlass in hand, the captain was seen in the thickest of the conflict, dealing death and destruction at every blow; but foot by foot, and inch by inch, they were steadily being driven back and into the sea, when the loud report of a heavy gun was heard. It was like throwing ice on boiling waters. For a moment the combat ceased, and all eves were involuntarily turned to ascertain the cause of this strange firing. A short distance astern, with every sail set, guns unlimbered, and flying like the wind, was the Vixen. The pirates, paralyzed for a moment, stood like statues, until above the tumult was heard the clarion voice of their leader, ordering a retreat. Cantain Hudson heard the order, saw the man who uttered it, and pouncing upon hin like a tiger, cut him to the waist. It was Chang Lay.

Observing the movement of the pirates, the Vixen opened upon them with grape, and soon the sea was stained with their blood. Seeing that further resistance was useless, the survivors surrendered, were put aboard one of the vessels, in charge of a portion of the crew, detailed for that purpose, and were sent back to China, where the executioner's sword speedily severed their heads from their bodies, in a manner peculiar to that flowery region.

Captain Crane soon appeared upon the deck of the Marion, where he was received by the captain with open arms. He had brought his surgeon, who was soon engaged in alleviating the sufferings of the wounded, and making preparations for the burial of the dead. Leaving him thus intently engaged in performing this sacred duty, together the captain and the young man entered the cabin.

There sat Lettie Fay, her lips compressed with a firm determination, her eyes sparkling like diamonds, and her face so deadly white that a cold thrill passed through the frames of each as fully cocked, the barrel of which rested upon the edge of the keg, while the muzzle was actually buried in the coarse-grained powder. In this position with her eyes riveted upon the cabin door, she had remained through the terrible battle that had just ended. waiting for the signal to earry out the fearful order of her uncle.

When she saw Richard Crane enter, she gave a wild shrick of joy, and fell insensible into his arms. The pistol dropped from her grasp, and quivering for an instant upon the edge of the keg, fell into it, and lay harmless upon its terrible contents! The escape was a narrow one.

Carefully removing the pistol, Captain Hudson cast the powder into the sea. For the second time that day he had stood upon the brink of eter-

Restoratives were applied, consciousness returned, and over and over again was Richard compelled to explain to Lettie the particulars of his opportune arrival. The appearance of Chang Lay at the cabin door on the evening of the ball had excited his suspicions, and as he watched him closely he discovered that he was actually examining the armament of the ship. He followed him stealthily as he quitted the ship, jumped into his gig, which lay in waiting, and followed cautiously, until he saw him ascend the side of a piratical looking craft, when he immediately repaired with all speed to his vessel, and reporting the facts to the admiral, was ordered to follow the Marion until she was safely out of Chinese waters. Owing to the breaking of a portion of the machinery, he was compelled to use his sails; hence the delay.

The rest of my story is soon told. After a prosperous voyage, the Marion arrived safe in the Downs, where the Vixen was already riding at anchor, having been ordered home, owing to the expiration of the time of service of many of her crew. It is said that history repeats itself. After the engagement with the Chinese pirates, it was noticed that Captain Crane was assiduous in his attentions to Lettie Fay, and it was soon rumored that another engagement was in prospect. However, it must be told, he courted and won her; and it is not exageration to say that a happier couple does not breathe under the starry canopy of heaven.

Twas None of His Funeral.

A Western paper tells a story of a deaf gentleman's mistake. It seems that in the procession that followed good Deacon Jones to the grave last the cabin boy appeared, and in an excited tone informed the captain that new clergyman of East Town, found Mr. Williams wished to see him on himself in the same carriage with an deck immediately. A farmer living near Farmington, Ill., was prostrated last Fall, with a severe illness which continued so long that his three daughters took one wagon, husked and cribbed four loads, or one hundred bushels of corn per day; besides feeding thirty fattening hogs and other stock. The corn-one thousand bushels in quantity-was in the crib in advance of most of that of the neighbors. When they were done, the old gentleman gave them money, and they went to the city with a good degree of independence and pride-feeling that they had earned it—and laid in a winter's supply of clothing. These girls are worthy of better husbands than the young man will make who turns up his nose at the performance of this honest and healthful labor by rosy-cheeked girls.

A Ghastly Joke.

During the recent small-pox excitement in Indianapolis, an excited individual rushed into a telegraph office, hurriedly wrote a despatch, and handed the same to the able and talented clerk. The message bore the startling intelligence that the sender's wife was down with the small-pox, and closed with the request that his mother-in-law would "come immediately." While making change the telegraph man said:

"My friend, are you not afraid your mother-in-law will take the smallpox?" Without youchsafing an immediate

England has no tariff, and yet keeps ment, therefore, protection destroys

American shipping and free trade destroys Brittish shipping. So that the two doctrines once let loose upon the world would destroy the shipping of both nations. If England was not Such is the absolute conclusion logically deduced from free trade premises

Ventilation.

Ventilation is the act of operation of exposing to the free passage of eir, or of causing the air to pass through any room or building, for the purpose of expelling stagnant air, and dissipating anything noxious from any close apartment. The object of ventilation is to exchange contaminated air, for air that contains oxygen 20.61, nitrogen 77.95, carbonic acid .04, watery vapor (average) 1.40. This is the composition of the atmosphere when it is fit for respiration, and when any of these gases are increased or diminished the air becomes foul or unfit for breathing. Let us see how the quality and purity of the air is affected by the double movements of inspiration and expiration; the former consisting in drawing air in the lungs, the latter expelling it from them. The quantity of oxygen is diminished, and the amount of carbonic acid is increased, as may be shown by sinking a glass jar into a pail of water, until the air is expelled from the jar. Fill the lungs with air, and take a bent glass tube, and insert it in the mouth of the jar inverted, blow the breath through the tube until the water is forced from the jar.

Close the mouth of the jar under water with a piece of paper, laid on a plate of sufficient size to cover the opening, invert the jar, and in it place lighted taper. The flame will be exinguished as soon as if put in water.

This is owing to the absence of oxygen, and the excess of carbonic acid naking the former four per cent. less, and the later five per cent. more, while the nitrogen remains nearly the same in both inspired and expired air.

What has become of the oxygen which thus disappeared from the air in respiration? It is absorbed by the blood. For the blood vessels are distributed throughout all the cavities of the lungs, here the air comes in contact with these vessels and is robbed of its oxygen This substance disappears, so that the air that has once been inspired and again expired, no longer contains it in due proportion.

and the second s CONGRESS. The present session of Congress, thus far, has accomplished perhaps the nearest nothing of any session in the history of the Government, for many years. In fact it seems to be the determination of a few Senators and Representatives that nothing shall be accomplished. They only interest themselves in President making, to the manifest neglect of needed legislation. It needs no very keen eye to discern the object of many of the moves and resolutions, offered by various memters of the Senate and House. The opponents of President Grant are uniting in their efforts to defeat his renomination, while his friends are fully as determined that nothing shall be call or done in any way to affect his prospects. Thus the time is spent, by one party, in concecting some scheme to damage President Grant, and the other party studies day and night to defeat his opponents. In this way almost the entire session has, thus far, been thrown away. The people are being disgusted with their public servants, and, unless we are very much mistaken, the memory of their present acts in Congress will not soon be effaced. The opponents of the President introduce their resolutions in such a manner, or have them so worded, that the merest novice cannot fail to see their design. They cannot present a resolution of investigation without so wording or introducing it as to reflect on the Administration. While this is true of Grant's opponents his friends act equally ridiculous in the manner of their opposition to these resolutions. The people see these things and are heartily sick of them. Their

It is full well understood by the people that no President can possibly administer the Government for four years without making some mistakes or appointing some scamps to office. For the friends of Grant to endeavor to make it appear that he has made no blunders, is equally as absurd, on the part of his friends, as it is for his on the Administration and try to prove that Grant has been a failure. If Senators and Representatives suppose the people do not understand these things they are woefully mistaken. If they suppose so they will find the people are not such fools as they imagine them to be. When Senator Sumner offers a preamble to a resolution, by clearly drawn inference, implicating President Grant in selling arms to France during her war with Germany, every body in the land knows what it is done for—every Republican and Democrat in and out of Congress understands it. It is also fully as well understood when Senator Morton, by his manner, and clearly manifest sentiments, seemingly opposes everything wherein there is a possibility of any damage being done by investigation to the Administration. It is time that these things were stopped, and that Congress go to work and attend to such legislation as the country demands-Let President making alone and the people will approve

LABOR REFORM CONVENTION.

The new party, or rather the effort to break up the Republican party, held a convention at Columbus, Ohio on the 22d inst., under the name and style of the Labor Reform Convention. There was a considerable representation, delegates from fifteen States being present. The convention nominated Judge Davis, of Illinois, for President, and Joel Parker of New Jersey, for Vice President. The New York Tribune says of these nominees: "David H. Davis of Illinois, the nominee for President, was of old a Whig, and has been since 1854 a Republican. He was Abraham Lincoln's next friend, and was most influential in securing his nomination for President at Chicago in 1860. Mr. Lin coln in turn nominated him for a Justice of the U.S. Supreme Court, and he has served in that capacity with eminent ability and usefulness. Joel Parker, the nominee for Vice President, is the present Governor of New Jersey, elected last Fall by six thousand majority, and a life-long Democrat. Neither of these candidates has hitherto been identified with the distinctive Labor organization.' That this move of the so called Labor Reformers will amount to any thing very serious we have but little apprehension. There is however a determination on the part of some Republicans, who have hitherto been regarded as sound and substantial members of the party of progress, to break up that party, if in no other way President Grant can be defeated. With these Republicans of course the Democrats will readily coalesce, as their object is the same.

This Labor Reform movement is but one of the out growths of this spirit of discontent, and we imagine will not tend materially to weaken the great Republican party or the nominees of the Philadelphia Convention, whomsoever they may be. The determination of some Republicans that Grant shall be re-nominated at all hazards is equally reprehensible with that of his opponents. The greatest good of the nation should be the question in selecting the standard bearers for the Republican party in the coming campaign. Let all personal considerations be sunk into the greater claims of the United States for indirect damages in the Alabama case, has been received at Washington. The tone of the communication of Earl Granville is couched in the most respectful language. The contents of the note was discussed in the Cobinet meeting on Friday. The contents of the document is kept entirely secret, except as to its conciliatory tone. Secretary Fish's reply is said also to be of a very amicable character, and is written in the most respectful terms, yet he will insist on the submission of the question of consequential damages to the Geneva Arbitra-

As England cannot afford to let the present opportunity pass, for a full and complete settlement of the Alabama question, we opine that she will yield to the firmness of our Government, and that the question of indirect damages will be settled by the Geneva Arbitration. The indignation expressed by the English press, which was undoubtedly for political purposes, forced the government to make same move in the case. That the English Government was well aware of the contents of the American case, long before the great surprise and flurry of the press, is evident, from the fact that Gladstone had our case by the middle of December. The English Ministry made no protest against it till about the first of Februnry, when they were undoubtedly driven to it on political considerations. The affair is quieting down now, and the prospects for an amicable settlement, of the questions at issue between the two Governments, seem not in the least impaired by the recent

Indiana Republican State Convention. INDIANAPOLIS, IND., Feb. 22, 1872. With the return of this, the one hundred and fortieth anniversary of the immortal George Washington, assembles in this city the bionnial Indiana Republican State Convention. Every county in the State was duly represented, and a creditable amount of earnest harmonious action was marked during the entire proceedings of the Convention. After the usual preliminaries incident to the organization of political assemblies, the Convention proceeded to the selection of candidates for the various offices of State to wit: For Governor, Gen. Thomas Browne, of Randolph county; for Lieut. Governor, Hon. Leonidas Sexton, of Rush; for Congressman at large, Godlove S. Orth; for Secretary of State, Hon. W. W. Curry, of Vigo; Auditor, James A. Wildman; Treasurer, John D. Glover; Reporter Supreme, J. B. enemies to attempt to heap disgrace | Black; Clerk Supreme Court, Chas. Scholl: Superintendent Public In-

During the interval between nominations there was a resolution offered. and some effort made to secure its passage, under a suspension of the rules, instructing the delegates to the National Convention, to cast the vote of Indiana, first, last, and all the time for Grant and Colfax, which met with considerable opposition, and was fi-

The platform adopted contains an introduction and eighteen articles. which declare in substance that they will sustain the Constitution of the United States as the true basis of popular freedom, and will maintain the equal right of all men before the law. They approve of the acts of Congress, and of the adminstration. and demand the enforcement of the laws: congratulating the country on the complete restoration of the Union, declaring their obligations to the soldiers and seamen of the late war, and demand that the bounties and pensions provided for them shall be paid to the recipients without cost; charging on the Democratic party North and South the cause of the late rebellion, and the large debt now resting upon this Nation. They declare that the financial policy adhered to by Congress and the Adminstration had been fully justified by the security and confidence given to the business affairs of the country; that the affairs of State and Nation should be conducted on principles of economy, fees and salaries limited to a fair compensation, prohibiting all of the offices of Agent of State and That they are opposed to making donations of public land to railroad or other corporations, demanding that they be reserved for actual settlers; approving the efforts being made for the punishment of corrupt officials, demanding of all public officers honesty, sobriety and dilligence in discharge of all their duties; declaring the free school to be the safeguards of our liberties, pledging themselves to cherish and maintain them; and for a revision of the criminal code so as to secure a more speedy and effectual administration of justice. They declare in favor of the effort now being made by the working men of the nation to improve their condition, opposing all attempts to array capital against labor, that free homesteads be provided for settlers of public lands, and in favor of a reduction of the hours for labor. A STATE OF THE STA the other members of the Club that but little remains for me to say. I suppose that it needs no argument on my part to convince any member of this Club that dairying is a profitable employment. In starting a dairy the first thing to be done is to select the right kind of cows. I prefer the Ayshire, if I could not get them I would take the Devon. I have givon this subject considerable study, have seen numerous reports of Dairymen, and the majority prefer the Ayshire, as they give a larger quantity with a good quality of milk. Others of course have their favorite breeds. As the subject of starting a cheese factory has been talked about, I thought a few statistics would not be uninterest-

ing. The American Cheese Factory system had its origin in 1850, and did not make much progress until 1860, when about twenty factories were in existence. Since that time this branch of industry has advanced without parallel. In 1860 there was 103,663,972 pounds of cheese manufactured, while in 1869 there was over 240,000,000 pounds made. In 1860 we exported 16,515,699, and in 1868 we exported over 51,000,000 pounds. Our home consumption has increased three fold. the average per person in 1860 was two pounds, now it is five. And here let me remark that our cheese has constantly increased in favor in England, which consumes nine tenths of our exports in this commodity. The factory system has secured a uniformity in quality and has steadily increased the quality until the noted Hamburg cheese has been compelled to yield the palm. American cheese commands the highest price of any cheese in the European market to-day. To exemplify this fact one cheese seller in .Chesterfield, Derbyshire, states that he sells thirty tons of American cheese to one ton of Derbyshire. From the report of Agricul ture for 1869 I find that Great Britian alone from May 1, 1869 to Jan. 1, 1870 consumed 140,000 boxes, an increase of twenty per cent. more than for a like period the previous year. From these facts, and the fact that there is a steady increase in the number of the cheese factories, I conclude it will not be difficult to convince any one that it will pay. The American Dairymen's Association reported in 1868, 803 factories, and in 1869, 1,066, of which Michigan has seventeen, showing that it has become a success even in our own State. The amount of milk for a pound of cheese, as reported by an average taken from the reports of forty-three principal factories, is 9.62 pounds. Perhaps a safe estimate would be ten pounds. I find that in some dairies one gallon of milk makes a pound of cheese, while in others it takes one and a fourth gallons. Now taking the highest estimate for a pound, one and a fourth gallons, a good cow ought to give for 150 days two and a half gallons per day; this would give two pounds of cheese per day; for 150 days would make 300 pounds, and when sold at the average price which cheese has brought for several years, viz. fifteen cents per pound, would give an income per cow of $45. Now I think this a safe estimate, as I find that the New York dairies average over $60 per cow, while some dairies under more judicious management have produced a net profit of $80 per cow. Now I think, Mr. President, that we could safely count upon a net profit of $40 per cow for the cheese season. There is hardly a farmer but what could keep at least ten cows which would give him a net profit, on cheese alone, of $400. No small item, not to speak of the advantage which would accrue to the farm in the extra amount of manure as well as what could be made from the cows for the balance of the factory depends upon circumstances, viz., the cost of material and location, etc. I find that factories in the East are frequently made with a capacity of from 500 to 700 cows for $2,500. And for one of 1,000 cows $4,000 would be ample. With regard to the location, one would be suitable which year, which I think would more than pay all expenses. The cost of the would be convenient to transportation, with access to pure water, and as nearly central in the region where the milk would be produced as possible. I find by referring to dairy statistics that milk is frequently drawn from five to seven miles. Now our proximity to Chicago, one of the best markets in the world, makes success in this undertaking doubly sure; and I have not the least doubt that the capital stock might be secured without much trouble, for I have heard many farmers of means, in my neighborhood so

It is evident if impure air be respired our blood which depends on this atmospheric reservoir for its support will become vitiated, the lungs diseased, the bones soft and brittle, the five hundred muscles will lose their elasticity, and the vitality of the whole system will be impaired. Physiologists assert that ten cubic feet of air is required for a person to breathe each minute, hence a school room thirty by thirty-six feet, and twelve feet high, contains about 13,000 cubic feet of air. This room will seat sixty pupils and allowing ten cubic feet to each pupil per minute, the air in the room will be unfit for respiration in about twenty minutes. For this reason workshops, school-rooms, dwelling houses, churches, concert-halls, and all places where crowds collect for any length of time should be amply ventilated. The physiologist Birnan says, air that contains three and a half per cent. of carbonic acid should not be taken in the lungs, and, as air once respired contains eight and a half per cent of this substance it clearly shows that it should not be breathed again. We can plainly see that pure air is indispensible, even of greater importance than the warming of the apartments which we occupy from day to day, for an extra garment or muscular exercise will compensate for a stove, but neither garment, exercise, nor food, will fill the vacancy of pure air. The ventilation of our apartment should consist of a double process, first, the introduction of fresh air from without, and the discharge of vitiated air from within. This can be attained by constructing two ventilating flues, one in the ceiling, the other at or near the floor. This will allow fresh air to pass completely through the room, and thus remove every vestige of foul atmosphere. The draught of air can be regulated by well adjusted registers, suitable to the number of air consumers. However, this draught should at all times admit to the room as much pure air as its occupants vitiate at overy respiration. Faraday has roughly estimated that the whole amount of oxygen in the atmosphere is equal to about 1,178,158 thousand millions of tons, and the amount required daily to supply the lungs of the human race, to be at least one thousand millions of pounds. The supply at the present

It is an evident fact that generally men have no greater interest in anything not directly pertaining to their own business than in their home paper. This is especially so with merchants and professional men. We are of the opinion that our own village would feel the worth of the above were the RECORD to discontinue publication. Fifty-two times every year does the RECORD carry news that is of particular interest to Buchanan, to over five thousand readers residing in different parts of the country. SURPRISE. - One of the best parties of the season was the leap year surprise party of Tuesday evening, gotten up by the wives of the members of Buchanan Lodge No. 75, I. O. O. F. Near the time for closing the Lodge, it was ascertained that the ante-room was full of ladies, and the members, not having any suspicion of the nature of this visit, hastily closed the Lodge and opened the doors, when the ladies, to the number of about forty, entered the room, and each taking a partner, marched him to the residence of Mr. J. Brown, on Main street, where everything had been prepared for a general good time, and of course they had it. The supper was a splendid one, after which came music, plays, &c., until a late, or rather very early hour, when everybody went home feeling well pleased with themselves, each other, "and the rest of mankind," and acknowledging that the "Rebekah's" of Buchanan "can keep a secret." Young & Son, of Dayton, are The Tremont House was entered and the money drawer taken out. The thieves only got about one dollar there. An entrance was effected into the Post Office, and through that into Rogers and Woods, and Roe's store and Jewelry shop. In the Post Office some pennies were taken, but stamps were left untouched. The letters were not disturbed. From Roger & Woods and J. H. Roe, there was taken in jewelry, money, watches, and other goods, about soap of Smith & Sons you will never a hundred dollars worth. The fruit is good from January to June, and the flavor is equal to the best varieties of winter apples. The size is medium, about that of the Spitzenburg. We predict that not many years hence the Burrus apple will be one of the most popular apples in the country. Mr. B. himself is so well satisfied with the fruit that, in his own orchard, last year, he put in some 500 grafts. THAT WOOD CHUCK. DEAR EDITORS:-

works. Who will answer? A Beautiful Woman. The perceptive faculty of women is usually keener than the same phenological organ in men. Women know that beauty rather than genius is worshipped by the sterner sex. A man may talk of the latter to his lady love, but the keenness of the woman knows that he is thinking of the former. Women are fond of admiration; hence one of their longings is to be beautiful. The grand secret of female beauty is health, the power to eat, digest and assimilate a proper quantity of wholesome food. Take Vinzgar Bitters. It will cleause the stomach, tone the vital organs, give a perfect digestion, purify the blood, clear up the complexion and produce a state of mental and physical electricity, which gives symmetry of form, bright eyes, white skin, glossy hair and a genuine type of female loveliness, which no cosmetic can produce.

I have not forgotten the time when I was put through the hole you refer to, but for that act I have forgiven you, as I never lay up ill feelings against one destitute of reason. I also remember of the peremptory fine, and for the above reasons I forgive you for that. You are not responsible for your acts. From Pond Valley.

So here goes. Facts are below par with us, and flowery talk of the beau-ties of cloud land, and the weary majestic march of starry hosts, is not just the material to work up into a letter of information. Any new or startling occurence is as rare in this quiet little dell, as is a glimpse of blue in the frowning sky of this stormy winter. The immense quantity of ice in the Pond has stopped the wheels of the two mills of the Valley at present, and doubtless the mists of "sleepy hollow" would have settled hopelessly over us, but for the pig trade carried on by the Ingleright Bros., who braved the fiercest winds and wildest storms, and trotted their porkers along to the merry music of

EDITORS RECORD :- It is with much sorrow that I write you of the severe illness of our little Wolverine. The Old Chief was over and called on him a short time since, he was not very well at that time. The Chief refused to sign the peace treaty, until Wolver-ine satisfied the payment of those Railroad bonds, and he has been fail-ing ever since. He was so low last week that he was obliged to employ A. L. Drew, to write to the RECORD for him. I see he refers to the chief's beating him in every battle, he says he admits it, and then compares the chief to the Devil. I was going to say that I thought the comparison was very ungentlemanly, but I do not know that I ought to blame him for making such an expression, he has been ill so long, and his system being very much reduced, he has become very nervous and easily excited, and very likely if the truth was known. A. L. Drew put him up to make the comparison. Wolverine is not a bad fellow if you will let him have his own way in everything. Just notice how gracefully and how gentlemanly he asks the Old Chief in his last let-

HOME AND FRIENDS. O, there's power to make each hour As sweet as heaven designed it; Nor need we roam to bring it home, Though few there be that find it.
We seek too high for things close by,
And lose what nature found us; For life hath here no friends so dear

We oft destroy the present— For future hopes—and praise them, While flowers as sweet bloom at our feet, If we'd but stoop to raise theur; For things after still sweeter are When youth's bright spell hath bound us;
But soon we're taught that earth hath naught

As home and friends around us.

The friends that speed in time of need When hope's last reed is shaken, Do show as still that, come what will, We are not quite forsaken.

Though all were night, if but the light From friendship's altar crowned us, 'Twould prove the bliss of earth was this; Our home and friends around us,

Like home and friends around us.

"Looking Unto Josus."

Jesus Christ is the foundation of every true Christian's hope; hence that faith in Him of which inspiration assures us He is the "Author and Finisher" is a natural but inevitable outgrowth of that hope, and the Christtan's growth in grace will be in proportion to the liveliness of his hope and the activity of his faith. Jesus is the Christian's Spiritual Magnet, attracting him to Himself by his glorious attributes of infinite mercy, goodness and purity. Thus He awakens in his heart a constantly increasing desire to become like Himself. for the nearer he by faith approaches his divine Master, the more carnest and sincere will be his aspirations for a still greater assimilation to Him in spirit and in life. His whole Christian course should be one of a constant "Looking unto Jesus," a constant seeking for that grace through which he will be enabled to overcome the evil tendencies of his nature, and gain all of those Christian graces, the possession of which tends to the development of a higher Christian life.

The boy looked up at me and smiled. "I am not afraid," said he, "for you would get the worst of it, ma'am." "Get the worst of it!" I said. "What do you mean?"

tempted in any way to cheat another. How often do we hear persons pity any one who has had his property sto-len from him. Yet, though a man lose all, and keeps honest, he is rich indeed compared with the man who had robbed him .- Winning Words.

The Habit of Hating.

It is astonishing how some men can hate. There seems to be but little difference among a certain class of haters as to what was the original cause of their ill-feeling—a misunder-standing, a crossing of opinion, an injury, fancied or real, small or greatsomething arouses their indignation, and soon they seem to lose the control of its fiery dartings; from detesting the thing, they soon grow to hating the person who has caused their first disturbance, and from "nursing their wrath to keep it warm," they find, ere long, that it has grown to such a heat as to keep them most uncomfortably warm for long periods of time. How pitiable, how miserable a condition must such a man be in! Peace remains not in his heart, sweet temper cannot stay in such an atmosphere;humility flees before engorged pride, love avoids the presence of hatred and the wretched man strives vainly to subdue the wild discord which one jarring element has awakened through all his soul. In such a state of mind he works constantly under great disadvantage. Does his labor lie in a direction where it is his aim to exercise Christian forbearance, (for into this condition a good man may fall by unintentioned petting of a favorite) how can he fail to see the weakness brought by passion? No man can draw pure water from a perturbed fountain. It is out of the abundance of the heart that the mouth speaketh; and it matters little what one's avocation in life may be, it is impossible for a Christian to follow Christ in the spirit of "all uncharitableness."-

> i i Prayer for Editors.

"S. G." has often heard editors roundly scolded, but rarely heard them prayed for. He writes:

Examiner and Chronicle

We know a saintly minded woman (no matter if it be her son who writes of it) who loved truth so well she had little patience with worn-out error. One Sabbath, coming out of church, as she passed the pulpit stair, receiving the warm grasp of her pastor's hand, she frankly told him that she did not believe a word of his sermon that day. With a calm smile of sweet benignant dignity, such as might have graced the countenance of St. John himself, he made her this reply, "Madam, then you must pray for me!" If prayer be indeed what the church claims for it, then let the church unceasingly pray for the men who sit in those mysterious seats of power, where the mighty pulsation steam press keeps time to the vital pulsations of their ty of this valuable Hair Preparation; which is due to merit alone. We can assure our old patrons that it is kept fully up to its high standard; and it is the only reliable and perfected preparation for restoring GRAY OR FADED HARR to its youthful color, making it soft, lustrous, and silken. The scalp, by its use, becomes white and clean. It removes all eruptions and dandruff, and, by its tonic properties, prevents the hair from falling out, as it stimulates and nourishes the hair-glands. By its use, the hair grows thicker and stronger. In baldness, it restores the capillary glands to their normal vigor, and will create a new growth, except in extreme old age. It is the most economical HAIR DRESSING ever used, as it requires fewer applications, and gives the hair a splendid, glossy appearance. A. A.
