Poetry.

SOLD AGAIN. We had lingered out the season,
Far into the cooler days,
And the votaries of Fashion
All had flown their different ways.

Ours had been no light flirtation,

But in earnest love-creation,

Laying every barrier low

I had felt my pulses beating

Such as watering-places know,

At the warm touch of her hand; I had followed in her footsteps—

With her lovely violet eyes. Glist'ning at the words I whispered,

We had wandered down the sea-beach

Near the ocean's obb and flowing, While the blushes of the sunset On the waves were redly glowing.

To-morrow we must part forever; For, my darling, I am-married !"

"Married!" I exclaimed, unstarting;

"Married!" murmured with a sigh;

ENCOUNTER

BY W. C. R.

Three years after the opening of a certain well-known line of railway in the south-west of Ireland, there occurred upon it one of the most tragical incidents the annals of crime have

A young English gentleman of in-dependent means, about twenty-six years old, took if into his head to make tour through that portion of the isle in which our story lies. There was nothing very remarkable in his appearance. He was gentlemanly looking; with brown hair and whiskers, an aquiline nose, bright, intelligent eyes,

After some weeks of rambling about our young friend reached the town of D-, intending to take the train the most glorious in that part of Ireland.

Fairfax was delighted with it. In all his excursions he had found nothing to approach its beauties. He resolved to prolong his stay there until he should grow tired of the scene, and day after day wandered among the mountains,

or reclined, watching the wild glories that nature on all sides unfolded to window of his hotel, shortly after breakfast, pondering the direction he should take that day for a walk. The street he looked into was a quiet one.

Some mean looking houses confronted him; a little way up some squalid children were playing; further yet a priest was sunning himself in the ge-

Presently a man came down the street, a fellow dressed in the garb of an Irish peasant, with very broad shoulders and brawny arms. His face was pale, a pallor almost corpse-like.

His lips were thin, and being tightly compressed, made a mere line of his mouth. His eyes were small, black and brilliant, illuminated by a ray singularly sinister and malignant.

Fairfax could hardly help taking particular notice of him, for as he left, and began to explore for new bits of scenery in a portion of the country he had not yet traversed. On return ing leisurely, at about half-past one, he entered a narrow defile that led through some frowning rocks to the shores of the lake. He was whistling pretty merrily, when he suddenly psused, for turning the angle of a cliff, he came right upon a young men and aigirl, seated in a very love-like attitude on a fragment of a reck. The girl's head was upon the wung man's shoulder,

He was good-natured enough to unlerstand the wickedness of spoiling this kind of sport, and strode on after cealing a brief glance at the young couple, who, on seeing him, instantly abandoned their amorous posture, and sät stiffly upright....

The young girl was singularly beautiful; he hardly wanted to inspect her long to see that. She was a pure type of the Irish woman, with great black eves pale cheeks, red lips; and masses of black hair which she wore piled upon her head in a beautiful though artistic confusion. But what beauty of the girl, wand which would

With the moonlight o'er us straying;

Listened to the night wind's whisper; Wondered what the waves were saying!

"Ah! too long we both have tarried;

"Then is this indeed a parting, For—my darling—so am I !"

Dreamed I was in fairy-land.

If the adventure on one side of the lake had surprised him, he was doomed to be more than surprised by an adventure on the other side of the lake. He was pausing for a moment to take breath, for the ascent was very steep and laborious, when the sharp report of a gun rang out, and his hat fell to the ground. Fearfully startled he looked hurriedly around him. About sixty or seventy paces off he saw a small white cloud of smoke rising above a rock that stood like a giant boulder stone against the hill. He picked up his hat, which he saw was pierced through with a hole into which he might have stuck his little finger, and clapping it on his head, pushed up the pathway with the utmost rapidity, fearful every second of hearing a second report, and of feeling himself rang the bell and summoned the landlord. "I find," he said, "that a train leaves this place for Dublin to-morrow morning. I regret to tell you it is my intention to take it. I am sorry, for I like this place, and would probably have continued here another fortnight,

"I have done my best to plaze you, sir," answered the landlord. "I hope shot at half an hour ago by some dastardly ruffian, who, had he taken aim two inches lower, would have killed me. I had heard of this sort of thing being practiced in this country, but I have always been unwilling to believe that you have among you such cowardly scoundrels as you are represented to have. I have no doubt now. I came here to enjoy myself, not to be buried. My enjoyment now is at an end. It is absurd to suppose I should ever trust myself again among your mountains. So, Mr. Landlord, let me have your bill."

Fairfax did not leave the hotel again but amused himself with reading the papers in the coffee room. Once during the evening, in casting his eyes toward the window, he saw the man who had inspected him so narrowly that morning in earnest conversation with the servants of the hotel. He rather wondered who this fellow could be, but forebore to make inquiries.

The train for Dublin left D twenty minutes past ten. While cating his breakfast he again saw the man of the preceding day on the pavement opposite, watching him. He asked the waiter who he was, and was told that his name was Daniel Terry, generally supposed to have been concerned in the murder of the agent of Lord Ormsdown, but that he had been aclowed by the porter who carried his portmanteau, walked leisurely to the station, and procuring a first-class ticket, was shown into a carriage.

The platform was singularly vacant of passengers. He was not sure, indeed, that he was not the only traveler. He mentioned this to the guard who told him that the train stopped at W-, where they would probably pick up a full cargo. To W--- the Fairfax had uttered an exclamation on seeing who his fellow passenger was. He had made no change in his at tire. His clothes were of the coarsest his hair was rough and wild. He screwed himself into the corner of the compartment opposite the one occupied by Fairfax, and with frowning brow look ed sullenly out of the window.

. What was this man's object? Fairfax could not tell. If it was a murderous one he had him in his power now; for the young fellow was unarmed; nor did he feel himself to be a match for those broad shoulders, and great muscular arms, and hands, of granite, which he saw by the man eves could be directed by a spirit as lawless and terrible as that of the ti-

The dread of death, the love of life, the unutterable horror of the situation were strong in Fairfax. He struggled with the fury of a madman, but the iron arms of his assailant were too powerful; and step by step he felt himself dragged to the door, through which, it was plain, the man intended to drag him and hurl him on the rails.

He believed death to be certain but in that extreme hour of mortal anguish grew the fiery resolution that, if he was to die, the cowardly wretch he struggled with should die too.

Amid the thunders awakened by the passage of the train through the tunnel, the two men wrestled. The door dashed open; the man had his foot on Fairfax's throat, Fairfax had his hand entwined in the handkerchief around the other's neck. The train, taking a sharp curve, keeled over, and the two men fell out.

The man was underneath; this probably saved Fairfax's life. The fall had either stunned or killed him, for he lay quiet—his hand had relinquished Fairfax's throat.

It approached—and passed with a deafenng roar and a mighty wind, the red furnace in the engine throwing a weird light upon the reeking walls of the artificial cavern. He strode forward vigorously now, and gaining the extremity of the tunnel, he clambered up the bank and looked around him.

one time his life was despaired of; but those who tended him, from certain letters they had found on him, had been able to communicate with his friends, and through their instrumentality his life was saved.

um, the police had investigated the affair, and the following narrative was communicated to him:-It seems that his assailant, Terry had been betrothed to a girl whom he loved with the vengeful and jealous passion that is peculiar to his race. But one day he had found her in company with a young man. He did not reproach her-he pretended, indeed, not to care; but in reality he took a solemn oath to murder his rival. That rival and the young girl, Fairfax had come upon during the walk he had taken on the last morning of his stay at D Terry had mistaken him!

The jealous man Anding his shot ineffectual, hung about the hotel, with the design of following Fairfax and murdering him when he should again take one of his lonely walks, but, hearing from the boots that it was the young Englishman's intention to leave D the next morning, he conceived the extraordinary idea of entering the railway carriage with him, and throwing him out in the middle of the

. The tunnel was searched that afternoon, and in the place where the murderous struggle had taken place, they found the remains of Terry, literally cut to fragments by the train that had passed Fairfax as he was making his way out.

Now she gives advice, so gravely, If her older brother chance, For some little fault, to linger 'Neath his father's serious glance. She is full of dainty graces, Very conscious of them, too; If she kisses you while scolding What on earth are you to do Sweet, bewitching little woman!

Be as roguish as you will; Long watch for me at the window, And my heart with sunshine fill. Surely mother cannot mean it, When she says, amid your noise, That "one little girl's more trouble Than a dozen little boys."

Buttons.

In this vicinity the women wear them of all sizes, from a sauce-plate to a platter. Their growth is so rapid that, according to the law that has governed other eccentricities, buttons will have a short and brilliant reign. Mrs. Smithy lives on the same street with Mrs. Greeney. These two women are not unlike any other two women. Their sole aim is to out-dress each other. They were once the best of friends, but now they are deadly foes.

The cause? Buttons!

Mr. Smithy was a tinker, and Mr Greeney a cobbler—two very honora ble professions, and, by-the-by, very necessary in a country town. Smithy hammered away and Greeney stitched away a life-time in hopes of liquidating the "little bill at the dry-goods store on the corner;" but the more they hammered and the more they stitched, farther were they from making both ends meet.

Mrs. Greeney had a new dress, and it was just what she had been wanting ever since she was first married—a green silk. The village dressmaker made it, and it was trimmed off with a row of buttons about the size of sauceplates. Mrs. Greeney put on her new dress; viewed herself in her doublereflecting mirror until she was satisfied that it was a splendid 'splay of buttons; then called on Mrs. Smithy. Mrs. Greeney was welcome, of course. How beautiful she looked, and how richly the buttons set off her new

Mrs. Greeney took particular pains to tell that her buttons were the largest in town.

That was enough about buttons. Mrs. Smithy gave "dear" Smithy no peace until he took her to Chicago to see the Exposition; but the build ing crammed with the beauties of nature and art had no charms for her.

It was buttons she was after. And buttons she was bound to have and buttons she got. It might be a figure of speech to say that they were as large as breakfast plates, but they were better suited, as far as size was concerned, for plates than buttons. She had them put on her olive green suit, and went over to see Mrs. Greeney, to tell her all about the Exposi tion and — buttons. Mrs. Greeney was glad she had such magnificent but-

She certainly would have fainted, had she not hit upon a plan to eclipse Old Mother Smithy's buttons:" That night, contrary to custom, Old Greenev was sent down town. He came home late, with an armful of flour-barrel heads. He was kept busy during the night removing the flour and splinters from them. The next morning Mrs. Greeney had them made into buttons. She put one on her breast and two on her skirt, and one on behind. They gave her a very war-like appearance. She looked like a Dutch schooner loaded with lager beer. She waddled past pressing down upon it, had become thoroughly amalgamated with the shoddy of the pants—in fact, the cane bottoms of the chairs, the wax and the pantaloons became a sort of inseparable trinity. The time for the crisis was close at hand. It came. Each one of the bachelors found himself glued to his seat, and no amount of pulling and tugging effected a release. If they arose the chairs followed. At first they tried to look upon the matter as a joke, but after a full halfhour's struggle to free themselves from their embarrassing predicament, they begun to think they had got into a serious scrape. The lady suggested that they build up a rousing fire in the stove, and then each man backing up as near the heat as possible, "melt the darned stuff off," as she said. This method was tried, but didn't work, as, with the chairs fastened to them, they couldn't get near enough to the fire. After they had sweat in the heated room for about an hour to no purpose, the wax retaining its relentless grip and connection, they saw no way out of their awkward dilemma except to engage in a surgical operation. It was getting along toward morning, and daylight was close at hand. They realized that whatever was to be done must be done quickly. Their jack-knives were brought into requisition, and in a few minutes each fellow was released from his uncomfortable position. They left the young lady and the house in a hasty and unceremonious manner, with a cane patch on the rear of their unmentionables about the size of a full moon. Freeze-out games are not as do in this county, a christian gentleman by the name of Boice, a member of the Methodist church. His friends sent word to the minister of that persuasion who resides at Lakeport, and asked him to officiate at the funeral. The good man only knew of one man by the name of Boice in the vicinity, and he is a confirmed Spiritualist. This the reverend gentleman stated to the congregation, expressing his sur-prise that he had been called, as he said he understood that Spiritualists did not believe anything, and he did not see why the friends of one should desire to have him buried by a representative of the Church of Christ. It may have occurred to him that an opportunity for repentance might have been improved and left the sinner meet for the Kingdom of Heaven, but that thought did not appear to strike him. Nevertheless, he went to the funeral, but the strangeness of the affair still kept its hold upon his thoughts, and in his remarks over the deceased, he recurred to his supposed Spiritualistic vagaries, and said again that he was surprised to be called to conduct. the burial service of a man of that belief, and before any one could explain he had concluded, and a good Methodist was buried in a Spiritualist's grave. The man whose obsequies he thought he was conducting is alive and well, and a favorite query of his is: "Have you heard that I was dead and buried, and that a Methodist minister preached my funeral sermon?" And the question which agitates the Methodist is, "How will it fare with our brother who was

THE MESSAGE AND WHAT IT CON-TAINED.

We do not mean by the heading in a brief article to tell all that President Grant's Message to Congress contained, but to note and perhaps discuss some of the items referred to in that document. In the opening he briefly enumerates three great events that have transpired since his last annual Message. These items are in the President's own words: "In the midst of great national prosperity, a financial crisis has brought low fortunes of great proportions; political partisanship has almost ceased to exist, especially in the agricultural region; and finally the capture upon the high seas of a vessel bearing our flag, has for a time threatened the most serious consequences.' In discussing the first of these items, the financial crisis, the President thinks one long step has been taken toward specie payments, and that we cannot have permanent prosperity till a specie basis is reached. This basis he thinks cannot be reached and maintained until our exports, exclusive of gold, pay for our imports, interest due abroad, and other specie obligations. This may be true, but we cannot sec any great good to the country coming through the financial disaster. The facts seem patent to our mind that there never was so much material prosperity as at the very time when gold was even as high as thirty and forty per cent. premium. The shrinkage of and Vice President of the United values cannot be seen from our standpoint as any great benefit, but rathe as a disaster. A country is prosperous so long as there is a market for her products, and her people are kept busy at remunerative employment, whether gold be at a premium of ten or fifty cents on the dollar. If specie payment is to be reached through the closing of our factories, the throwing out of employment of thousands of men and women, dependent upon their labor for a support, we say let it long be delayed. While we would be glad to see specie payments resumed, we would not desire this result brought about at the sacrifice of the millions of laborers.. Whenever labor is remunerative, then is the country prosperous, and whenever labor is unremunerative, then comes financial distress and great suffering. The great object then is to take such a course in the legislation of the country as shall best secure a proper remuneration for labor and the products of labor. The idea then of the President, that specie payments cannot be resumed and permanently maintained till our exports shall at least equal our imports, is evidently wise, and founded upon the very nature of events. Equalize our exports and imports without paying a balance of gold, and the yearly increase of our mines would constantly augment the volume of gold, so that the result of specie payment would be inevitable. President Grant's idea of the effect of an increase in the bank issue is also wise, and acceptable to the great mass of the Western people. That sufficient currency is required to keep all the industries of the country employed. If this is not done prosperity cannot be the result, and hence there would be nothing to export with which to balance our imports, and thus hasten specie payments. Many of the contractionists maintain that if the bank currency should be increased, that a step would thereby necessarily be taken away from specie payments. There must be, and the President wisely comprehends the situation, sufficient currency to keep in active operation all the industries of the country, without being so much as to cause an undue inflation of

The important fact is recognized by the President, that at certain seasons of the year greater quantities of currency are needed than at other periods. In order to meet this recognized want of the business interests of the country, the Message recommends Congress to provide a system whereby elasticity may be secured. The system, suggested by the President, to accomplish this desideratum, is about as follows: Let the Secretary of the Treasury issue to National banks, say forty per cent. additional of their currency, on their depositing with the Secretary of the Treasury, bonds to amount of the currency required. Thus, if a National bank had $100,000 currency in circulation, and desires more, upon the deposit of $40,000 worth of bonds the Secretary of the Treasury would issue to such bank $40,000 in its own bills. These bonds would then be held as security for this additional appear to us to be a better plan to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to issue greenbacks to any party, be he merchant, manufacturer, farmer or banker, who would deposit U. S. bonds of a certain authorized class, amounting in the aggregate to say two or three hundred millions of dollars, allowing the party so depositing these bonds to withdraw the same within twelve months, on the presentation of the amount of the face thereof, in greenbacks. During the time that these bonds should be so deposited, the government. The true state of the case is clearly stated by the President when he says, "I do not believe there is too much (currency) now for the dullest period of the year." This being true, as it no doubt is, and as the West have long believed, it becomes Congress to promptly adopt measures of relief.

With the plan suggested by the President of issuing additional bills to National banks, or issuing greenbacks on deposit of U.S. bonds, as above advocated, together with free banking authorized on the same basis and security as National banks, we believe the problem of the currency question would be satisfactorily solved, and that the volume of circulating medium would regulate itself. The President is not blind to the great political indications of the hour when he says: "Political partisanship has almost ceased to exist, especially in the agricultural region." The great agricultural interest of the West are rising up to assert her rights, and in order to accomplish the object sought, if necessary, political parti-sanship will be ignored. There is no use shutting our eyes to the fact. Indeed it is wisdom in the President and Congress to hasten to see what can be done to relieve the agriculturists of the West from the fearful impositions of the great railroad and other monopolies. If the Republican party would retain its hold upon the hearts of the Western people it must act promptly in this matter. Delays will be dangerous, and ere we are aware of it the opposition will have led thousands away from the Republican fold. The President's brief suggestion on this point contains much for the reflection of the majority in Congress, and, if wisely heeded, will accomplish much for the permanence of Republican principles and the Republican

THE PRESIDENT'S PROPOSED CON-

STITUTIONAL AMENDMENT. In his message President Grant recommends two Amendments to the Constitution, in connection with the one to be reported by the Congressional Committee, looking to the provision of a better method of electing President

States. The first Amendment suggested by the President proposes to authorize the Executive to approve so much of any measure passing both Houses of Congress as his judgment may dictate, without approving the whole, the disapproved portion or portions to be subjected to the same rules as now, to wit: to be referred back to the House in which the measure originated, and if passed by two-thirds vote of the two Houses, then to become a law without the approval of the President.' While such an Amendment might in many instances be the means of preventing objectionable features of legislation becoming laws, we can see how it might, in the hands of a President opposed to the majority in Congress, be used to defeat the principal objects of needed and judicious legislation. It of course would defeat many of the compromise portions of measures enacted by Congress, and thus place the minority more than ever at the mercy of the majority, if the President should happen to be in sympathy with that majority. If however, he should sympathize with the minority, the influence of that minority might be unduly increased. This might be the case to such an extent as in frequent instances to elevate the portion of a bill approved by the minority into a law, and at the same time defeat that portion approved by the majority. If the United States were always certain of a President like the present one, such an Amendment might be of great service, but with a man like Andy Johnson in the Presidential chair, we can see great evil possible with the power that such an Amendment would confer. From our stand point we must question the wisdom of Congress adopting any such Amendment tor submission to the several State Legislatures. We are decidedly of the faith that as a general rule the liberties and best interests of the people are safer in the hands of Congress than in the hands of the Executive. This may not always be the case, yet it will prove true generally, and it will be approved by a majority of the American people, who look with jealous eye towards any increase of the power of he Executive. The second Amendment recommended by President Grant is to "provide when an extra session of Congress is convened by the Executive, legislation during the continuance of such extra session shall be confined to such subjects as the Executive may bring before it from time to time in writing." To such an Amendment there would perhaps be no very serious objection offered, but we imagine that Congress will be slow to adopt any amendment that will in any way circumscribe its powers. The reasons however, offered in favor of this Amendment, in the message, are of force and strike our mind as worthy the consideration of Congress. We can see no evil that would be likely to grow out of such a provision in the fundamental law of the country, but on the other hand much good might result therefrom. Good Advice.—A good advertisewould desire to redeem them by the is the best of all possible salesmen. It of the affirmative. AMOS B. MERRILL, THE RECEIVER OF THE $1,200. We deem it almost, if not wholly, unnecessary to refer again to the Oakes Ames "S. C." $1,200 check which Ex Vice President Colfax was said to have received, so well satisfied are the public generally that he never saw it, much less received the money. If however, there are any doubting minds, the following letter of Mr. John T. Drew will forever set the matter at rest. Mr. Drow, in his statement last summer, affirmed that he saw Oakes Ames draw the money on the "S. C." check and pay it to some person to him unknown. That person has now been discovered as the following letter explains:

SHERMAN HOUSE, Chicago, Ill., November 7, 1873. To the editor of Chicago Avening Journal. DEAR SIR: Your note of the 15th is received. In reply I have to say that the money drawn on the $1.200 S. C. check," June 22, 1868, by Hon. Oakes Ames, at 4 o'clock in the afternoon, was paid to Amos B. Merrill, Esq., an attorney at that time in the employ of Mr. Ames, to look after his "Southern cotton" speculations. The books of the late Mr. Merrill, who died some time before Mr. Ames, will show the honorable nature of their associations, and also the fact of the fee of $1,200 paid him June 22d,

1868, "on account of services in the Rob Roy cotton claim." It was through the legal acumen and astuteness of Mr. Merrill that Mr. Ames was saved $132,648.09 in that one

In the multiplicity of his transactions, Mr. Ames very naturally relied much on brief memoranda, such as the "S: C." on the check in question, and long after, when harrassed by his associates and badgered by the investigations carried on in "Credit Mobilier," he forgot the original use of the $1,200, and concluded it belonged among the "dividend checks," while in reality it went to pay an honorable debt due a deserving counsel. This brief statement of the facts within my knowledge will go as far as a long story with those who are willing to do Mr. Colfax and Mr. Ames justice, and nothing should be added in the hope of convincing their chronic enemies, on the principle of a trite Eastern maxim that "He who scrubs an ass' head wastes his soap.'

the purpose of entering into a definite agreement, respecting the case of the steamer Virginius, which, while under the flag of the United States, was, on the 21st day of October last, captured on the high seas by the Spanish manof-war Toronado, have reached the following conclusions:

"Spain, on her part, stipulates to estore forthwith the vessel referred to. and the survivors of her passengers and crew, and on the 25th day of December next to salute the flag of the Inited States.

If, however, before that date Spain should prove to the satisfaction of the Government of the United States that the Virginius was not entitled to carry the flag of the United States, and was carrying it at the time of her capture without right and improperly, the salute will be spontaneously dispensed with, in such a case it not being requirable, but the United States will expect, in such case, a disclaimer of intent of indignity to its flag in the act which was committed. Furthermore, if on or before the 25th of December, 1873, it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the United States that the Virginius did not rightfully carry the American flag, and was not entitled to American papers, the United States will institute inquiry and adopt legal proceed ings against the vessel, if it be found that she has violated any laws of the United States; and against any of the persons who may appear to have been guilty of illegal actc in connection therewith. It is understood that Spain will proceed, according to the second proposition made to Gen. Sickles, and communicated in his telegram read to Admiral Pelo, on the 27th inst., to investigate the conduct of those authorities who have infringed the Spanish laws and will arraign them before competent courts and inflict punishment upon those who may have offended, other reciprocal reclamations to be subbetween the two governments and, in case of no agreement, to be the sub-assent of the Senate of the United States to be given thereto. .It is further stipulated that the time, manner and place for the surrender of the Virginius and the survivors of those who were on board of her at the time of her capture, and also the time, manner and place for the salute of the flag of the United States, if there should be occasion for such salute, shall be subject to arrangement | State of Michigan. - A petition was pre-

Rufus Bishop, a boy about fifteen years old, son of Samuel Bishop of this town, committed suicide yesterday by taking strychnine. As we are informed, his mother corrected him for some fault, and made the remark that he was a great deal of trouble to her. He replied that he would bestill more trouble before night, and have it all over. No attention was paid to the remark, and he found some strychnine that was kept in the house, and took a dose. Shortly afterwards he informed the family of what he had done, and remedies were applied and medical aid summoned, but without avail. He died in a short time.

As an item of interest, it may be stated that a remarkable person has constantly resided in this vilage some years past, who is now slout 17 years of age, who is a goduate from college, perfect masor of the mention dere. This is given solely on the chority of his own statement to company of stage passengers, a few lays since, on his triumphant return from a short lecturing tour. This lage, a short time since, at his earnest request, and to his profound satisfaction with all the degrees taken according to the ritual of the Lodge, and which initiation was performed with gravity and decorum, as is the custom of the Order. This renowned young man did not complain of "indignities, decency forbids revealing," nor were any such enacted should he thus complain. The "widowed mother" and 'widow's son' are in good health and cheerful up to the present writing, and it is thought they will recover; but "Virtutes Amose" is still down with his chronic complaint, and it is generally believed that he will never come out of his comatose state. If, as he says, "every phase of vice prevails among our leading citizens" be true, it must have been well known before he wrote it down; and if it be a vicious slander, he deserves the sympathy and prayers of all christian

KIND FRIENDS:

THE WORLD AND I. BY NELLIE M. HUTCHISON. Whether my life be glad or no, The summers come, the summers go. The lanes grow dark with dying leaves;

Sunday Reading.

Icicles hang beneath the caves; The asters wither to the snow; Thus doth the summer end and go, Whether my life be glad or no. Whether my life be sad or no,
The winters come, the winters go,
The sunshine plays with baby leaves;
Swallows build about the caves;
The lovely wind-flowers bend and blow;
Thus doth the winter end and go,
Whether my life be sad or no.

Yet Mother Nature gives to me

A fond and patient sympathy;
In my own heart I find the charm
To make her tender, near, and warm;
Through summer sunshine, winter snow,
She clasps me, sad or glad, or no.

The Treasures of the Wicked. Every man is treasuring up stores for eternity; the good are laying up "treasures in heaven, where moth doth not corrupt;" the evil and impenitent are treasuring up "wrath against the day of wrath." What an idea is this!

Treasures of wrath! Whatever the impenitent man is doing, he is treasuring up wrath. He may be getting fame; but he is treasuring up wrath. ing through the hands of agents. My He may be getting wealth; but he is treasuring up wrath. He may be ing through the hands of only one is also treasuring up wrath. Every and are consequently from ten to day adds something to the heap. Every cents a pound cheaper than at ery oath the swearer utters, there is any other place in town. All I ask something gone to the heap of wrath. Every lie the liar tells, there is some-Every licentious act the lewd man commits, there is something gone to the treasures of wrath. Every day he lives in sin, the book of God's remembrance records it against him. The impenitent man has a weightier treasure of wrath to-day than he had yes-terday; he will have a weightier tomorrow than he has to day. When he lies down at night, he is richer in vengeance than when he rose in the morning. He is continually deepening and darkening his eternal portion. Every neglected Sabbath increases his store of wrath; every forgotten sermon adds something to the weight of pun-ishment. All the checks of conscience, all the remonstrances of friends, all the advice and prayers of parents will be taken into the account, and all will tend to increase the treasures of wrath laid up against the day of wrath.-Rev. J. A. James.

The Lights in the Tunnel.

I was traveling upon a road which I had never passed over before. There was a long train of cars crowded with passengers. In the afternoon, while there yet remained an hour of daylight, I noticed the lamps were being lighted. We journeyed on, and I watched their faint glimmering flames; scarcely could they be distinguished in the bright light of day. I wondered why they were lighted so early. Suddenly we passed into darkness. Then the light shone with a strong, steady ray. All through the tunnel they burned brilliantly. How dependent were we upon them. Could it be possible they were the same flames which a few minutes before burned so dimly? Yes, they were the very same, only brought into view by the surrounding gloom. How like God's promises, I thought. When the sun of prosperity shines up-on us, we may greatly undervalue them. But when adversity and afflic-tion enclose us with the thick shades of night, our faith bursts into a strong and steady flame, and chases away the darkness and gloom of despair. We feel how weak and feeble we are. We cannot take one step without the light which comes from above to guide our wandering feet. Our souls rest upon God's promises as our only hope. Without them we should be in the deepest night. Let us have true and living faith, and we may rest secure that when we need its cheering ray it will not desert us, but become a burning and shining light to guide us on our journey to the promised haven of rest.—Christian at Work

How Scholars are Made.

Costly aparatus and splendid cabinets have no magical power to make scholars. In all circumstances, as a man is, under God, the master of his own mind. The Creator has constituted the human intellect that it can only grow by its own action; and by its own action and free will, it will certainly and necessarily grow. Every man must, therefore, educate himself. His book and teacher are but helps; the work is his. A man is not educated until he has the ability to summon, in an emergency, all his mental powers in vigorous exercise to affect its proposed object. It is not the man who has seen most, or read most, who can do this; such an one is in danger of being borne down like a beast of burden, by an overloaded mass of other men's thoughts. Nor is it in the man who can boast of native vigor and capacity. The greatest of all warriors in the seige of Troy had not the pre-eminence because na-ture had given him strength and he carried the longest bow, but because self-discipline had taught him to bend it .- Daniel Webster.

The Loved and Lost.

The loved ones whose loss I lament are still in existence; they are living with me at this very time; they are living with me at this very time; they are like myself dwelling in the parental mansion of God; they still belong to me as I to them. As they are ever in my thoughts, so, perhaps, am I in theirs. As I mourn for their loss, perhaps they rejoice in anticipation of our reunion. What to me is still dark, they see clearly. Why do I grieve because I can no longer enjoy their pleasant society? During their lifetime I was not discontented because I could not always have them! around me. If a journey took them F. M. Hungerford & Co., from me, I was not therefore unhappy. And why is it different now? They have gone on a journey. Whether they are living on earth in a far distant city, or in some higher world in the infinite universe of God, what is that! Are we not still in the same house of the Father, like loving brothers who inhabit separate rooms? Have we therefore ceased to be broth-which will, we hope, give it many thousands more, are briefly as follows:

It is a first-rate newspaper. All the news of the day will be found in it, condensed when unimportant, at full length when of moment, and always presented in a clear, intelligible, and interesting manner.

It is a first-rate family paper, full of interesting and instructive reading of every kind, but containing nothing that can offend the most delicate and scrupulous taste. It is a first-rate story paper. The best tales and romances of current literature are carefully selected and leading united in its nager. It has no lear of knaves, and asso no markets supporters.

It reports the fashions for the ladies and the markets for the men, especially the cattle-markets, to which it pays particular attention.

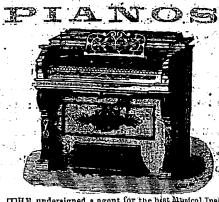

Finally, it is the cheapost paper published. One dollar a year will secure it for any subscriber. It is not necessary to get up a club in order to have THE WEEKLY. SUN atthis rate. Any one who sends a single dollar will get the paper for a year.

The reputation Dr. Price has acquired by candid, honest dealing, and years of successful practice has induced unprincipled persons, to copy and imitate him as far as they dare, in order to deceive. Let it be remembered that no person in the west is treating. Ohronic Diseases similar to Dr. Price—that his practice is not one of experiments, but founded on the laws of Nature with years of experience and evidence to sustain it. That, it does not tear down to build up—make sick to make well—no harsh treatment, no trifling, ou flattering. We know the cause and the remedy needed, no guess work, but knowledge gained by years of experience in the treatment of these diseases exclusively; no encouragement without a prospect. Candid in our opinion, reasonable in our charges, claim not to know everything, or to cure every body, but do claim to reason and common sense. We invite the sick, no matter what their allment, to call, investigate before they abandon hope, make interrogations and decide for themselves. It will cost nothing, as consultation is free.
