RY MARIE OLIVER. If we knew the sore temptations

Poetry.

IF WE RNEW.

Surging in our neighbor's breast— If we knew his anxious longings After quietness and rest—

If we knew the daily crosses
Placed upon his shoulders bowed—

If we knew the thoughts which often Through his heart's best sanctum, crowd

Would we then, in wretched blindness, Seek to lead his steps astray? Or with ignorance assuming Place a block within his way? Some there are about us groaning,
Overcome with grief and sin;
Longing for that heavenly morning,
Which will let the sunshine in.

Their faint sons are sore oppressed. Yet we never, in our blindness,

Consolation give, or rest.
Others stagger wildly onward,
Looking for a helping hand—
We in sellishness and grieving,
Cease to think of how they stand.

If we knew, alas! how often
Would a little pity bring
Balm to hearts all bruised and broken,
And teach lips long shut to sing. If we knew, alas! how often
Is that sad and weary strain
Echoing through my soul's dim chambers
Working thoughts to life again.

In the years which have rolled onward,
I have pondered long on this,
Wondering how it is, that friendship
Oft brings pain instead of bliss.
For, could I examine closely All that in my neighbor lies, Feel some pity for the longings After ruined hopes and ties.

Then methinks sweet consolation Sure would fill each aching breast. Then would vanished be temptations And the seeker taste of rest; If we knew, alas! how often Does that sad and weary strain Echo through my soul's still chamber, And wake dreams to life again.

HELEN'S AMBITION.

BY W. D.

The balmy September sunshine, yellow with the full maturity of the pened year, was flooding the western porch floor-the asters and golden rods, nodding along the edge of the hazel copses, and maple swamp, silently wrote the epitaph of the dead and gone summer-and Helen Doty, slowly climbing the hill, when the apple tree leaned toward the east, felt the sweet, drowsy influences of the season, without fairly comprehending

DEFAULT having been made in the payment of a certain indenture of Mortgago bearing date the first day of February, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-three, made and executed by Wilkerson Colvin and Elizabeth Colvin, his wife, of the County of Berrieu and State of Michigan, to David Rough of said County and State, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of said Gounty, on the 25th day of February, A. D. 1873, in Liber 7 of Mortgages, on page 91, on which said Mortgage of the result and tree date of this notice the sum of five hundred and twenty-six and fity-three one hundred the dollars ($252.51), and no suitant law or proceedings in equity having been instituted to recover the same or any part thereof—notice is therefore hereby given, that by virtue of a power of sale contained in said Mortgage, and now become operative, and in pursuance of the stantial is such case made and provided, the land descrived in said Mortgage, to-wit: The north ten (10) acres of the south-east quarter of the northeast quarter of Section four (4), and the north ten (10) acres of the south west quarter of the north-east quarter of section number four (4), and the north end quarter of section number four (4), and the north ten (10) acres of the south-west quarter of section number three (3) all in Township number seven (7) south, of range number eighteen (18) west, in the County of Berrien and State of Michigan, will be sold at public auction or vendue, at the front door of the Court House, in the village of Berrien Spriogs, in said County of Berrien. She was pretty rather than beautiful, with an oval face, deep brown eyes, and curls bronzed with gleams of brightness, while the peach-like bloom upon her cheeks betokened the presence of perfect health, and a certain little elasticity of movement was present in all her graceful gait and

Farmer Doty sat in his easy chair on the piazza, nodding over the last week's county paper, as Helen's step

"Hugh must look out for somebody else," said Nelly, contracting her pretty brows. "I'm not going out to work in any one's house as a common servant girl."

Farmer Doty stared. "But it ain't like a servant, Nell! Mrs. Martin is poorly, and everyone knows you are to be married to Hugh when--'

"Every one knows nothing of the abruptly.

"I may as well tell you my plans first as last," said Helen, with the roses burning deeply on her cheeks. "I have determined to go to London."

"What for, in the name of all creation?" demanded the farmer, his breath fairly taken away by the unexpected

"To cultivate my voice. Mr. Fordyce Glenville says—" "Mr. Fordyce Glenville," repeated the farmer, bitterly. "Yes, that explains it all! She could not muster the courage to tell her father all that Mr. \ the Signor. Fordyce Glenville had whispered to her in the purple-dark of these selfsame "stupid evenings," as he escorted her from the country hotel to the

Mr. Doty uttered a low groan. "Helen, you are doing a mad, foolish thing, and I can't seem to make ident relief. you think better of it." Helen laughed triumphantly.

"I have taken my resolution!" was her quiet answer. Nor were Hugh Martin's entreaties of any more avail. Helen treated him with a sort of lofty, quiet scorn, as if he belonged to quite another sphere from the one she was about to enter. "Things are so different now from what they once were," she answered calmly to all his arguments. "Our engagement was foolish, Hugh, made before we were ablefairly to know our "Ye own minds. Let us forget all the non-sense that is past, and begin the world very pale.

"It's of no use," he said to her father, after he had passed out from her presence. "She has broken our engagement."

"Are you Mrs. Reuben Doty?"
Helen, with her little carpet bag in her hand, walked up to the vinegarfaced female who sat making buttonholes beside her husband's counter, for Mr. Reuben Doty was that ninth part of a man yelept a tailor, and had a little shop, so small that it seemed to be nothing but door and window.
"Yes, I am," Mrs. Doty answered, biting off a stray end of a thread, as she sharply surveyed the new comer through her spectacles. "I am Helen-Ebenezer Doty's daughter," the girl answered, "and I have come to stay with you.' "It ain't very convenient for us to entertain company," said Mrs. Doty, after a moment or two of rigid

Helen thought of the goodly hampers, stocked with turkeys and vegetables, and links of home made sausages, and red-cheeked apples which Farmer Doty had sent to her far away cousins at Christmas and Easter every year-was this all the remembrance they had of it?

"It will be but a day or two;" she lay down on the hard little bed in the windowless closet, which Mrs. Reuben Doty called her "spare room." morrow I will go to see Liglinardi-it will be so nice to come to Mrs. Glenville with the stamp of his approval as regards my voice.

sparkled like black beads. "And you wis' for mine opinion, he said, cutting her short in the speech she had been studying up ever since daylight.

"Yes, sir, that is--" "Five guineas is mine consulting fee," he interrupted. And with a sinking heart Helen took from her purse the sum she had fancied would last her so long, and put it

The September sunshine lay on the mown grass as brightly as if not an hour had passed since headstrong girl had left the old farm-house when she came back. Ebenezer Doty was in the sitting room, his back to the door, and Hugh Martin stood opposite as Helen walked

"Father!" The old man turned with a sudden "Nelly! My Nelly! Come back again?"

"Yes, father, back again-for good and all !" He folded her silently in his arms -and he was wise enough not to torment her with useless questions, while Hugh stretched out a warm, welcoming hand.

"It's good for sore eyes to see' you here again," was his unpolished but sincere greeting. "You're just in time to help me talk him over, my girl, said the farmer: "He's talkin of goin' to Californy."

And Helen Martin, in the manifold occupations of wife and mother, has long since forgotten the mad dream of her girlhood. Forgotten it, save to be thankful it was never realized.

Don't tell the little one, who may be slightly willful, that "the black man will come out of the dark cellar and carry it off if it does not mind.' Don't create a needless fear to go with the child through all the stages of its existence. Don't tell the little five-year-old Jimmy that "the school-ma'am will cut off his ears-pull out his teethtie him up," or any of the horrible stories that are commonly presented to the childish imagination. Think you the little one will believe anything you tell him after he becomes acquaint ed with the gentle teacher who hasn't the least idea of putting those threats into execution? Don't tell the children they must not drink tea because it will make them black, while you continue the use of it daily. Your example is more to them than precept; and while your face is as fair as a June morning they will scarcely credit the oft-told tale. Either give up the use of the pleasant beverage, or give your children better reasons for not using it. Don't tell them they must not eat sugar or sweetmeats because it will rot their teeth. Pure sugar does not cause the teeth to decay, and sugar with fruits is nutritious and healthy, notwithstanding the "old saw" to the contrary. The case of city children is often cited; the cause of their pale faces and slight constitutions being charged to an over amount of sweet meats with their diet, when the actual cause is want of pure air and proper exercise. Don't tell the sick one that the medicine is not bad to take, when you can hardly keep your own stomach from turning inside out at the smell of it. Better by far tell him the simple truth, that it is disagreeable but necessary for his health, and you desire him to take it at once. Ten to one he will swallow it with half the trouble of coaxing and worry of words, and love you better for your firm, decided manner. Don't teach the children by example to tell white lies to each other and to their neighbors. Guard lips and bridle tongue if you desire to have the coming generation truthful. Truthfulness is one of the foundation stones of heaven. Remember, the old, old Book says that no liar shall enter within the gates of the beautiful city. There is no distinction between white lies and those of a darker hue. A falsehood is an untruth whether the Miscellaneous.

WHEN YOU'RE DOWN.

What legion of "friends" always bless us When golden success lights our way! How they smile as they softly address us, So cordial, good humored and gay. But oh! when the sun of prosperity
Hath set, then how quickly they frown,
And cry out, in tones of severity, Kick the man! don't you see he is down

What though when you knew not a sorrow Your heart was as open as day, And your "friends" when they wanted to borrow,

You'd oblige—and ne'er ask them to pay?
What though not a soul you e'er slighted,
As you meandered about through the town? Your friends become very near sighted, And don't seem to see you when down!

When you're "up," you are loudly exalted, And traders all sing out your praise; When you're down, you have greatly defaulted,

And they really "don't fancy your ways."
Your style was "tip top" when you'd money,
So sings every sucker and clown;
But now, 'tis exceedingly funny,
Things are altered, because you're down! Oh, give me the heart that forever Is free from the world's selfish rust, And the soul whose high, noble endeavor Is to raise fallen men from the dust;

A victim is likely to drown,
All hail to the friend whose devotion
Will lift up a man when he's down!

And when, in adversity's ocean,

The Nobility of Labor. There is a very common but pernicious, and not unfrequently in its consequences fatal, error among parents -a solicitude to give their children what they term an accomplished education instead of one solid and useful

Their design is to qualify them for soaring above what they consider the ignoble herd, and assuming an enviable position among those whom they are pleased to regard as the noble and great—that is, those who belong to the learned professions. or those who move in the gay circles of fashion, in a word, those who stand out in some sort of relief from the

There are some midst of prosperity, and even when surrounded by the parade and ceremonial attendant upon exalted station, can never be prevailed upon to deviate from the requirements of moral rectitude, or be led to fancy themselves something more than men; who despise alike the oringing, sycophantic fool, and the insolence of wealth and power; in whose breasts reside the generous sympathies of humanity, and who, towards their fellow-men, are, on all occasions, frank, courteous and accessible; those, in a word, who under all circumstances press right onward in the path of conscious duty, unterrified by frowns, and unbought by flatteries; exhibiting in their whole integrity, defying the rage of the malicious, and charming even the envious with admiration. And who are the truly noble? We answer, they are those who, by persevering labor, wring a bounteous tribute from the unfriendly soil—upon whose sunburnt brow and furrowed cheek we read the evidence of manly worth as well as hardy toil; whose brawny arms fell the sturdy monarchs of the forest, and upheave the massive rocks; whose skill and industry cause the barren heath to smile with kindly herbage, and wave in the rich bloom of a luxuriant harvest; who cause the bleating of flocks and the lowing of herds, the sound of the swinging flail and the creaking of the burdened team to enliven the scenes where lately solitude reigned undisturbed; and whose evening song of gladness and gratitude floats upon the breeze where formerly no sound broke the death like stillness save the howl of the ravenous wolf, or the fierce yell of the prowling panther. Who are the true nobility? They

Perils of Photography. The tender feeling is not confined to people of one race or degree. To show that it prevails even among the, Mexicans, the Post and Mail adduces the following in evidence: Francisco. Casanova was a taker of pictures in the picturesque city of Guanajuata. He was a very successful transformer of the fleeting shadow to permanent place on paper cards. So that the name of F. Casanova was a guarantee that the carte or cabinet-size family picture was all right, and about as perfect as photography could make it. Among those who came to his art gallery was a beautiful dark-eyed, raven-tressed Castilian maiden, named Inez Romero. She was fair to look upon and although only thirteen summers had shone upon her raven tresses, Francisco saw and loved. So did the maid. But the twain could not be made happy, on account of the law's decrees, and the presence of Senora and the little Casanovas at Guanajuato. So Francisco and his and beautiful. Finally they resolved to fly, and together they hied them off. Now Mrs. Casanova's in distress, and the gallery has no master, but worst of all old Juan Romero has lost his lovely daughter, and offers a reward of $5,000 for the capture of her lover. Don Juan is rich and belongs to the hidalgo class, so that the freak of Inez has set all Castilia in Guanajuato in a flutter of excitement. But Francisco and his tender darling are gone out into the broad world-no one knows where—together.

One of the clerks will become zen; one of the apprentices wil become will live like a patriarch—but which one is the lucky individual? Lucky? There is no luck about it. The thing is almost as certain as the rule of three. The young fellow who will distance his competitors is he who masters his business, who preserves his integrity, who lives cleanly and purely, who devotes his leisure to the acquisition of knowledge, who gains ways to fortune shorter than this old, dusty highway; but the staunch men of the community, the men who achieve something really worth having, good fortune, good name, and serene old, age, all go in this hard, dir-

Frome.

Often have we heard it repeated with emphasis, that "there is no place like home." This is one of those bold and popular declarations that must be received with a grain of allowance. If the place where some people spend their existence, be their home, surely it is not true that there is no place like it, in the sense that is the most comfortable place on earth. Evidently, and beyond all contradiction, the homes of many have nothing about them either externally or internally, sighing Strephania met and talked say, is the character of a large number of the homes of the farmers Inez went to have her face photo- of our country. Not only in the rural districts, but in the vilin the rural districts, but in the villages and cities has this custom been in certain offenses, where white perintroduced and favored as an innocent and profitable exercise. We read that spelling matches were once as popular as now, but were abandoned, not so much because the people did not take an interest in them, as their carelessness and neglect in this branch of their education, and their unwillingness to make public their defects in this par-Titicular. We now see men from all the different professions and walks of life participating in these spelling matches. This is a healthy indication, but the fact is very patent that the number of good spellers is very small. It does not require a very close observance of the correspondence and writings of * our most active and influential business nien to convince any person that or-thography is one of the 'lost arts.' ' LICENSE LAW.

The extra session of the Indiana Legislature has adjourned after passing the compromise temperance bill. The, new law repeals the "Baxter bill' passed two years ago, and is practically a license law. The license for the sale of beer and wine is fixed at $50 and of whisky at $100. The repeal of the local option system will be regretted by many. It was virtually prohibition in those counties of the duties belonging to it, than that of Circuit Judge. True, the Supreme where it was accepted—a prohibition that depended upon the wishes and opinion of the public. Next to total prohibition we favor a local option law and can see no reason why such a system cannot be strictly enforced and good result from it... The new law of Indiana fixes the license entirely too low. Tt could be improved by making the license at least double what it is at present To

The charge, how-ever, is without foundation and utterthe bar and the people, not only in this district, but wherever he has been ly untrue. To show its untruth, it is only necessary to glance at what has been done during the past six years in which the Republicans have had the Presidency. The four years immediately succeeding the close of the war cannot be taken into consideration. They were years of delay and attempted retrogression. In that time

Andrew Johnson attempted the reconstruction of the Southern States upon a quasi slavery basis, these Southern States meanwhile enacting the most malignant and cruel statutes relative to the colored race which would have reduced them to a worse type of slavery, in some respects, than that which existed before the war, if it had not been checked by the Republican Congress. North Carolina enacted that a colored person could not be a witness against a white person; that in apprenticing them the old masters were sons were punishable only with impris-onment, the colored offender should suffer death. Mississippi enacted similar statutes, and also provided for the hiring of colored convicts, and prevented colored men from renting or leasing lands. Georgia and Alabama made similar laws, providing, however, still severer penalties. South Carolina made the colored offender liable to capital punishment for several offenses for which the white offender was: of November to work upon. Their only imprisoned. Mississippi, Louisiana, and South Carolina, all the States have reverted into the hands of the same white men who took them out of the Union Their representation in the Senate is complete with the exception of one member from Louisiana, (Pinchback) with the probability that his seat will be given to a Conservative. In the House, the Southern representation is not only complete, but it has the control of the Democratic caucus, and thereby can dictate the legislation of the House next winter. Peace has been restored throughout the South, the last act of the Republican Congress being to prevent turmoil in Arkansas, to settle distracting Louisiana questions, and to strangle the Butler Force bill which was intended to put a dangerous political power into the hands of the President; and to give hotheaded partisans upon each side an opportunity to inflame the popular passions, and bring about a renewal of civil strife.

In view of these facts, the charge that the Republican party has made a failure of reconstruction is simply an absurdity. So far from being failure, the work accomplished has been absolutely gigantic. In six years of time the Republican party has accomplished what would have taken fifty years in the Old World. . It has overthrown a servile system two centuries old, which was almost inseparably grafted upon the habits, the spirit and the very life of the South, and it has done it with comparatively little shock, and has put masters and slaves upon terms of equality, and re-established the ante-bellum Governments of the late slave States. The only just criticism which can be made upon the action of the Republican party is that it has performed the mighty work of reconstruction too fast. It has been too eager to complete it. The headlong, impulsive manner of doing business, characterrien County; and F. J. Atwell, of stic of the American people is responsible, however; for this haste. : The Republican party, however, is now practically out of power. Nevertheless, there is still a great work which it can do in connection with reconstruction. The future hope, not | 1616. only of the negro but of the South, is the division of its people into two great parties, Conservative and progressive, and the division of the colored vote between these two. The neas against the whites. Divided, however, between these two natural parties, they would receive a two-fold protection. The establishment of these two parties will not only settle the negro question in the most satisfactory and permanent manner, but it wil eliminate the whole pack of carpetbaggers, adventurers, place-hunters, political knaves, and fire-eating White

Now that the dust and smoke of the battle in New Hampshire have cleared away, it is possible to ascertain results and see how the two parties stand. The Democrats have elected two of the three Congressmen, -numerically a gain of one, but practically of no importance, considing the majority the Democrats have already in the House, this one having been gained owing to the personal, not political, unpopularity of his op-ponent. The Republicans have secured the joint ballot in the Legislature and the Governor, and the Democratic majority of last year of 1,500 votes has been wiped out. This results shows that the Democratic current has come to a stand-still, and that the party has had a set-back: It is substantially a Republican victory. There was no reason, why the Democracy should not have achieved a decisive victory in New Hampshire, -a victory as extensive as those which occured in of the compiled laws of 1871;

Sunday Reading.

There is a region lother far Than suges know or poets sing— Brighter than summer's beauties are, And softer than the tints of spring.

There is a world with blessings blest, Beyond what prophets ere foretold; Nor might the tengue of angel guest A picture of that world unfold.

It is all hely and screne! The land of glory and repose! No darkness dims the radiant scene, Nor sorrow's tear within it flows.

It is not fanned by summer's gale, Tis not refreshed by vernal shower; It nover need the moonbeams pale, Nor are there known the evening hours.

No-vo! that world is ever bright With azure radiance of its own! The streams of uncreated light Flow round the great eternal throne.

There, forms that mortal may not see, Too glorious for the eye to trace, And clad in peerless majesty, Nove forward with unaltered grace.

in vain the philosophic eye
May seek to view the full abode,
Or find it in the curtained sky.
It is the dwelling-place of God.

Radicalism in Religion.

Frederick Hinckley, of Washington, says Radicalism in religion is no ruthless destroyer. It is no reakless image-breaker. It is essentially and eminently constructed. It digs deep that it may lay strong foundations. It destroys that it may build better. It discriminates between the essential and permanent life of religion in man, and its outward, temporary forms. It distinguishes reality from semblance, the true from the false, the natural from the artificial. It seeks and nourishes the root for the sake of the larger and richer life that shall flow forth from it. Radicalism is necessary to reserve the truthfulness and purity of religion. It is necessary for the advancement of religious thought and life. It is necessary to find the present good and to obtain more Radicalism is even a necessity to that conversation whose business it is to hold fast the good once found.

Carlyle says that nine-tenths of the miseries and vices of manhood proceed from idleness; with men of quick minds, to whom it is especially pernicious, this habit is commonly the fruit of many disappointments and schemes oft baffled; and men fail in their schemes, not so much from the want of strength, as from the ill direction of it. The weakest living creature, by concentrating his powers upon a thing; the strongest, by dispersing his over many, may fail to accomplish

Enjoy the blessings of this day if God sends them, and the evils bear patiently and sweetly.

There never was any party, faction, sect, or cabal whatsoever, in which the most ignorant were not the most violent; for a bee is not a busier animal than a blockhead.

It is a mistake to imagine that only the violent passions, such as ambition and love, can triumph over the rest. Idleness, languid as she is, often musters them all; she, indeed, influences all our designs and actions, and insensibly consumes and destroys both passions and virtues.

Who is wise? He that is teachable. Who is mighty? He that conquers himself. Who is rich? He that is contented. Who is honored? He that honoreth others.

Generosity during life is a very diferent thing from generosity in the hour of death. One proceeds from genuine liberality and benevolence, the other from pride or fear.

Say nothing respecting yourself, either good, bad, or indifferent—nothing good, for that is vanity; nothing bad, for that is affectation; nothing indifferent, for that is silly. -

As nothing truly valuable can be attained without industry, so there can be no persevering industry without a deep sense of the value of time.

It is an excellent rule to be observed in all disputes, that men should give soft words and hard arguments; that they should not so much strive to vex as to convince an opponent.

It is easy, in the world, to live after the world's opinion; it is easy in solitude to live after your own; but the great man is he who, in the midst of the crowd, keeps with perfect sweet-ness the independence of solitude.—
