> Story. DOOMED BY NEMO.

Chapter I, "Miss Golden, is your answer irre vocable?' The woman thus addressed turned her deep, blue eyes, flashing with indignation, upon the speaker, and scornfully said: "James Plummer, you know me well enough to save you do. You have my answer: can never be your wife. As he received this reply, all the gentle feeling he had resumed for the occasion vanished in an instant, and he revealed a countenance that an arch-fiend might have envied. Gazing at her a moment, with clenched fist that we have no room to tell and closely shut teeth, he hissed: you of all bought to sell | "Miss Golden, you have seen fit to Henceforth I live only for revenge.

> grave. After uttering this fearful threat he turned on his heel and left the apartment. When Miss Golden was left alone, her nerves, which had been strained to their highest tension, gave way, and throwing herself upon the sofa, she sobbed as if her heart would break. While she is thus relieving her overcharged feelings, let us look at a chain of events which happened prior to the above scene, and have an important connection with our story. George Golden, a promising young merchant, married, in his twentyseventh year, the daughter of the village pastor in the town of Bwhere he then resided. He was high ly esteemed by all who knew him, and when he asked permission to win the heart of the clergyman's only daughter, he received the old gentleman's best wishes for success in his suit, and the answer of the young lady was all that could be desired. They were married that autumn in a quiet manner, and at once commenced housekeeping. They lived together in the highth of domestic felicity for twelve years, and at the end of that time a daughter was born to them. The constitution of Mrs. Golden, which was. never robust, received a shock at the birth of her daughter from which it could not recover, and she died before little Florence was a year old. After the death of his wife, it was a long time before George Golden became himself again. When time had, in a measure, removed the poignancy of his grief, he removed to the beautiful city of C-, again entered the business world, and gave his whole energy to building up a comfortable fortune for his daughter. He succeeded beyond his sanguine expectations, and when Florence had attained her twentieth year she held an independent fortune in her own name. Besides her wealth, she was possessed in all the arts which make women bewitching. At this time another actor appeared on the stage, the James Plummer to whom the reader has already been presented. Struck with Florence's beauty, and also having deep plans for securing her fortune, he entered the arena without a thought of failure. In person he was handsome, with regular features and long, curly hair, but his eyes caused many to shun the man. There was a restless, sinister look about them that made the beholder involuntarily shudder when he encountered their gaze. It is no wonder that the gentle, innocent Florence Golden felt a strong dislike to him, when he pressed his snit, he thinking the horrible events of the morning had made her ill. He was shown to the fatal room and left alone. He examined the body very carefully, but failed to discover any clue. He next turned his attention to objects in the room. One thing, in particular attracted his attention, and that was the old-fashioned secretary where Mr. Golden had been at work the night before. He saw that the papers were crumbled and disarranged, as if looked over in a great flashed like lightning through her hurry by some person, while hunting brain, she covered her face with her for some particular document. He examines it more closely, and sees it is a piece of steel. He digs it out and finds that it is a point of a knife, and it must have been placed in the wall recently, as there is no rust upon it. At last the detective has a clue, and he thanks God for the sunlight, at the moment he was about to abandon the case. But his work is not yet done. As Frank was passing from the room, he saw in another apartment, a young man in conversation with Florence. She was very pale, and just at this moment she arose and left the room with indignation and disgust stamped upon every feature. Barkwill was about to person, when the young man's maner caused him to pause a moment.

James Plummer, for he it was, had made a final effort to obtain Florence's a slender young man at the end of hand, thinking she, in her loneliness the room, bend forward and listen; and grief, would readily yield to his hand, thinking she, in her loneliness intently. Taking the missing point from his pocket, Frank placed it upon the broken end of the knife, and it fitted exactly. Replacing the knife and the point in his pocket, he laid his hand upon Plummer's shoulder, and sternly said;

"I arrest you for the murder of George Golden.' Plummer turned desay pale, but managed to gasp!

"The proof! what proof have you that it was I?" Barkwill pulled the knife from his pocket, and placed the broken point on the end. Plummer saw there was no escape, and suffered himself to be handcuffed without resistance. He was immediately lodged in jail. At his trial he made a full confessien. He had climbed in the window, murdered Mr. Golden, and then proceeded to hunt for the merchant's will. Finding the knife retarded his motions, he struck it into the wall above the secretary, and, in pulling it out, the slender point was broken off. He had not noticed this, because he had not opened the knife after the murder.

It is doubtful if he would have been discovered, but for the threat that he uttered, when refused for the second time by Florence. It was then that, smarting with mortification at her refusal, he uttered the words that placed the young detective upon his track, and eventually sealed his doom.

The faithfulness, perseverance, and untiring zeal of Frank Barkwill in behalf of the beautiful Florence were amply rewarded, a year later, when he led his blushing bride to the alter, and there pledged his vows which made her his forever. Five years after the marriage, the still beautiful Mrs. Barkwill would take two lovely children, one on each' knee, and repeat the story of "The Tell-tale Knife Point."

Frank Plummer paid the penalty of his crime upon the gallows.

Longevity. The London Times of March 3 has the following: "The inability of the aged of both sexes to withstand the effects of the present inclement weather is showing daily in the obituary of the Times, but particularly so yesterday, the 2d inst., when the deaths of thirty persons were recorded whose ages ranged from seventy to ninetynine years. There were just half a score of ladies whose united ages amounted to 875 years, giving an average of eighty-seven years and exing were their respective ages, viz: Eighty, eighty-two, two at eighty-five, eighty seven, three at eighty-nine, ninety, and ninety-nine years. There are also half a score of septuagenarians whose ages ranged from seventy to seventy-nine. Their united ages amounted to 750 years, giving an average of exactly seventy-five years to each. The same obituary recorded the deaths of another half-score of gentlemen whose united ages amount ed to 761 years, giving an average of exactly seventy-six years to each; the youngest was seventy and the oldest eighty-four years of age. The British Medical Journal states that at the last Prussian census there were found to be living in Berlin 12,251 persons who were born before the end of the last century. Among them, three men and six women were ninety-one years old; four men and nine women, ninety-two years; one man and five women, ninety-three years; ten persons were ninety-four years of age; four women were ninety-six years old; two men and two women, ninety-seven; one man ninety-eight; one woman ninety-nine, and another woman, 101. Of the persons between ninety and 100 years of age, five were unmarried, five married, fifty-seven widowed and one divorced. A widow named Najelsky died on the 10th of February at Kamionken, near Lotzon, at the age of 103. She is said to have been extraordinarily active in her hundredth

About the Hair.

Men become bald! Why? Be-Wemen are never bald. Sometimes. from long-continued headache, heat in the scalp, bad hairdressing and some other causes, women may have bare spots here and there; but with all these combined, you never see a woman with a bare, shiny, bald head. And you never see a man lose a hair below where the hat touches his skull. It will take it off as clean as you can. shave it down to exactly that line, but never a hair below, not if he has beenbald fifty years. The common black stiff hat, as impervious as sheet iron, retains the heat and perspiration. The little hair glands, which bear the same relation to the hair that the seed wheat does to the plant above ground, become weak from the presence of the moisture and heat, and finally become of making so many work-hours and too weak to sustain the hair. It falls out, and baldness exists. A fur cap we have known to produce complete baldness in a single winter. A man with a good head of hair needs very little protection where the hair grows. Women who live much within doors. and who are therefore susceptible to the cold, oil their hair and plaster it down hard and flat upon their skulls, so as to destroy nine-tenths of its power as a non-conductor, have worn for years postage stamps of bonnets stuck on the back of their skulls, and then going out of furnace heated parlors, have ridden for hours in a very cold temperature without taking sold and without complaint.

Man with his greater vigor and habits of outdoor life, and with his hair not plastered dawn, but thrown up loose and light, could no doubt go to the north pole, so far as that part of his person is concerned, without any artificial covering. And yet we men wear immensely thick fur caps, and do not dare to step out into a chilly atmosphere a moment lest we take cold. It is a silly, weak, and really a serious error. The Creator knew what he was about when he covered a man's skull with hair. It has a very important function in protecting the brain. Baldness is a serious misfortune. It will never occur in any man who will wear a common black high the hatter will do that for you when you purchase your hat. There is greater activity, more enterprise, an almost insane hurry, and a consequent loss of that ease and serenity of mind which have always been regarded by the wise as the best rewards of virtue and industry.

John Jacob Astor's remark that a man with three hundred thousand dollars is as well off as if he be rich notwithstanding its humorous exag eration, is full of true philosophy The point is, that beyond a certain sum, money ceases to afford any substantial advantage to the possessor, and the absorbing pursuit of it is pure

In reality, the possession of wealth is a source of anxiety. The great end to be reached is a certain, regular income which will supply the necessaries and comforts of life, and a healthful amount of leisure.

No possessor of wealth cares to have it about him. His chief desire is to invest it where it will yield a sure income. It is the custom in many countries to buy annuities, terminable with the death of the purchaser, by the present payment of a certain amount.

As it is possible for only a few to secure a certain income in any way, the great majority must face the risks which threaten all who are not thus indépendent. This requires courage, and the great need of all modern communities is courage to face the real and possible difficulties and dangers of life. Courage will assist us to take the risks and bear the ills of life with serenity. What is really needed in society is the dissemination of a greater security of the means of living among these who live by daily labor, upon wages: while the great mass of people are living upon the border of possible poverty and want, the feeling of security is impossible. Farm and Household.

Labor and Rest in Harvest. During the busy days of haying and harvesting there often occurs the temptation to prosecute the labor of the day far into the night, and with but a modicum of the sleep required. arise again and continue the work. There are catching times during this season of the year, when it seems absolutely necessary to overdo in order that the crops may be secured in prime condition. But we wish to utter a word of caution against the practice taxing the system so severely, simply because it is harvest time. When a farmer must work both early and late to bring his business about, and must require the same amount of labor from his help, continuing the practice from year to year, we do not hesitate in saying that there is grave mismanagement somewhere, and a little good head-work would save a good deal of wear and tear of muscles. If our frames were made to last forever, and did not become fatigued with exertion, we need make no limit to the hours of work; but it is the experience of all the best observers of long experience in handling men, that beyond a certain number of hours per day there is no profit in their employment. There is a limit to the amount of labor a day is found to be all that is profitable on the average. But with the farmer we often observe a far different practice. At four o'clock in the morning he is up and his men are called to their work which is to be continued with small intervals of cessation until eight at night. The human system is incapable of withstanding such fatigue for any length of time and accomplish quickly and deftly the processes of labor; hence the prevailing of slow movements of farm hands. In mansilk hat with five hundred holes through I ufacturing the help is so arranged as the top, so that there shall be more to have a good division of labor and hole than hat. This costs nothing; the individuals become expert at practical branches of the business. They are continued at it and a great be combed back the wrong way, and amount of work issues out of their -after the holes are made it be combed hands in a short time. It is more the right way, no one will observe the difficult to carry out this practice peculiarity. The hat will wear quite upon the farm, but it is possible by a as long—the hatters say considerably | proper division of labor to so arrange longer-because A is dry instead of our plans as to make more experts moist; in brief, there is not a single of the employees and thus be enabled exertion a man can endure contin-

uouously, and ten hours of busy hours in ten hours. There are many advantages that follow the system of regular hours upon the farm, and having their number limited to a fair requirement. The farmer and his men are more vigorous and can take hold of work with force and strength. They have sufficient rest and arise each mornearnest. Again in the employment of help there is a better feeling existing between the farmer and his men. The latter knowing they have an employer who looks after their welfare as well as his own, are willing and ready to please him in case of necessity to rush work with extra strength for a time. The matter of interesting men in the work of the employer is of wonderful importance, and nothing will destroy interest so quickly as to make machines of men from daylight to dark. We would enter an earnest appeal to farmers for definite hours of work, more sleep, less drudgery and better labor.—S. Q. LENT.

A Remedy for Flies.

Course netting on doors and windows will pretty effectually exclude flies, unless the room is lighted on more than one side. In this case the netting must be finer, or some of the windows-those on all but one side-be darken with shutters or thick curtains. Fly poisons in the house, with their accompanying fly carcasses, are doubltless more revolting than the living flies themselves. But Dr. Har-ris suggestion to place a plateful of strong green tea, well sweetened, in some outer apartment to which flies can have easy access, is a good one. This attracts the flies from us and then kills them. When, with our vigilence, some will healthily run our carefully guarded blockades, the remedy of trying to frighten them away is almost as intolerable as the annoyance we wish to obviate. But they can be very easily dispatched after dark, when they have retired on the wall for the night, by the steam from a dish of hot water.

A good looking farm will sell quick-er and at a better price than a badlooking farm. Ornamental trees, vines. shrubs and fences may not yield any money to the owner while he has them in his possession, but they will bring many times their cost when the farm comes into market. In the early days of Chicago a gentleman planted many thousand evergreens and other ornamental trees on a large tract of land near the city, which he intended for his future home. He never relaized his desire of living on it; but the place was sold. It was put on the market at the same time an adjoining place was which was unimproved, and brought over twice as much money.

PLATFORMS. If political conventions that have been held recently, and sentiments of t'ie platforms adopted are true indicatons, the Republican party will be better united, and act more in harmony together at the coming Presidential campaign than ever before. The enlock is very encouraging, and if the same wisdom and prudence are exercised throughout that have characterized the proceedings thus far that have an influence in the approaching contest, we expect the party to achieve the most triumphant victory that has ever yet been won. We have already given the platforms adopted by the Republicans of Pennsylvania, Ohio, and California. That a lopted by the Republicans of Iowa is after the same order, plain and explicit. On the currency, question gold and silver are declared as the true standard of value, and demands a gradual attainment of a currency convertible into coin. There will be more of a division among Republicans on this subject than on any other. All, however, favor a return to specie payment as soon as the condition of the country will permit it. On the tariff question the platforms favor a tariff for revenue adjusted in such a manner as will encourage home industry. Protesting against further land grants to corporations is another general plank. If there was any possible excuse on the grounds of policy or expediency for the large land grants already made (although this is questionable), there is no reason why the government should be so profligate with the public lands in the future, but should hold them in reserve for actual. settlers. "The patent laws should be so revised as to relieve industry from the oppression of monopolies." This is the language of the platform adopted at the Republican State convention of Iowa, and the same sentiment is declared by Republicans of every State. The party has always labored for this. Inventive genius should be encouraged and suitably rewarded. patent laws should be generous. But the public should be protected against the plunder of monied monopolies by a law forbidding any extensions or renewals. What the people demand is the issuing of but one patent to the inventor, to run for a fixed time and never to be extended or renewed under any circumstances. Thus we might go through and enumerate and compare each resolution and principle adopted and declared by Republicans of different States in State Conventions, and we see a striking similarity and agreement on all important issues and also find that the same creed of doctrines is heartily endorsed by the masses of the people.

It is already charged that the Republican party is pursuing a course in its declared political proclivities in conventions that is intended for the consumption of the people, courting the good will of the masses and to "catch votes". No possible damage can be done to the party by charges of this kind. It is a good indication when a political organization begins to respect public opinion, and the interests and wishes of the masses. This course is far better than for the party to cater to the interests of political rings and monied corporations. If the Republican party will only continue in all that is said and done, to echo the sentiments and do the will of the people, its future success can be safely guaranteed. Vice President Wilson has said that the grounds the Republican party should occupy are such as will not only cement together those now in the party, but offer sufficient inducement to persuade those who have become dissatisfied and take no part in politics or who co-operating with other political organizations, to come back into the fold and help to form a strong united band to battle for pure Republican principles, and take the lead in every advanced measure of reform that the good of the country demands. An honest effort on the part of political parties to "tickle the ear" as it is sometimes termed, of the people, is worthy of all praise, and the fulfillment of whatever the popular sentiment of the people dictates is a principle that lies at the very base of our republican institutions. If this principle were strictly observed the next decade would witness some very important and essential revolutions in the management of the affairs of this government.

FUNDING THE PUBLIC DEBT. The United States have not been fortunate in the selection of the gentlemen who have been at the head of the Treasury Department since the close of the war. We do not question their integrity nor their patriotism, but it is a matter of regret that they were not better fitted by education, experience and habit of thought for the important duty of managing the re-adjustment of the public debt. We refer more particularly to Mr. Boutwell and his successor, Mr. Richardson. In 1870 the time had arrived for placing the national debt in some form that would enable a reduction of interest. Congress was prepared to enact any measure that the Government might propose for that purpose. There was an annual surplus of ten millions of dollars, and there was seeming prosperity. Mr. Boutwell then submitted his scheme. which was enacted by Congress, and is known as the Funding Act of 1870. The bonded debt of the United States at the close of 1869 was a fraction over two thousand millions of dollars, of which eighteen hundred millions was in six per cents. The funding law authorized the issue, in place of outstanding sixes, of two hundred millions of fives, three hundred million of four and a half per cents, and a thousand millions of four per cents. The number of fives was subsequently incresed to five hundred millions of dispose of its six per cent bonds. The amount disposed of up to June 1. 1875, was four hundred and five millions, and fifteen other millions have been contracted to be taken by the 15th of August.

At the date of this act there were about two hundred and twenty milbeen canvassing the world trying to but the Texan has no pride to see lamp-lighter for the ensuing year.

Mr. Boutwell's plan was to take up fifteen hundred millions of sixes by substituting five, four and a half, and four per cents; and thus reduce the annual interest twenty-seven millions. Instead of accomplishing this, the treasury during the whole five years has been able only to dispose of four hundred and twenty millions of fives and none of the others. The saving of interest hereafter will be but four million two hundred thousand dollars

An important fact in this funding business has been, that many millions five-twenties have been surrendered by those who have refused to purchase the new fives. They surrendered the sixes because they were called, and refused to take fives because they were subject to calls at short dates. Short bonds are not desirable for investments. The sixes were issued payable in twenty years, or at any time after five years at the option of the Government. Practically they were five-year bonds. The new five per cents are redeemable at the pleasure of the Government at any time after ten years from their date in 1871, Even the four and a half per cents may be called in 1886, and the four per cents in 1901. The Treasury Department has persistently been forcing the five per cent short bonds on the market, and has never offered the four per cent long bonds. The funding bill has been in operation long enough to show that the great mistake or failure of the Funding Act of 1870 which the Tribune pointed out at the time, was that the bonds were made with the options to short. The Secretary of the Treasury at that date, had a vision of paying off the whole bonded debt of $2,000, 000.000 in twenty or thirty years. He could not see the excessive torture of taxing the country annually to purchase $100,000,000 of bonds which were not pressing for payment. He expected to pay half the debt during his own term of office, and to see the whole paid in his lifetime. He was ambitious to be the grand paymaster of the debt, and could not see that his policy of excessive taxation must of necessity break down within a short time, and that deficiency would take the place of surplus. The catastrophe overtook the country within three years of the Funding bill, and in the ive years that have followed that bill there have been less than five hunderd millions of the short fives sold. The time has come for a change in this law. The Government, profiting by the experience and failure of the last five year's efforts to fund the debt might now try a new policy. Let the remainder of the fives be made payable at the pleasure of the Government say twenty-five years hence; the four and a half per cent bonds at forty years or fifty; and the four per cents seventy-five years or even longer; and there would be no difficulty in having them taken by the capitalists of the world, who just now are earnestly seeking long and certain investments for capital not at present emoloyed, and are willing to accept very ow rates of interest on such securi ties. The Government can always buy its bonds at the market price.

RICE, TEXAS, June 28, 1875. EDITORS RECORD:-I became at tached to your valuable paper when receiving it in exchange for the Mich igan State Advance. This is my apology for addressing you from this remote region.

I removed here with my family the 27th of last September; but after leaving Michigan I resided in Nebraska just long enough to learn that the storms there were so much worse and so much more dangerous than those of Michigan, that I could not secure there what I sought, to wit: a warmer climate. It only required three years to learn that. I found Nebraska to be settled with a good class of citizens, but governed by the very worst official corruption. The soil is quite good, but no timber, whilst the storms were simply fearful. Hence I concluded to travel in Texas last Summer. I reached the State through the Indian nation; traveled it from the north line to the Gulf, and from the east line to the outskirts of civilization. Taken all in all. I consider Texas one of the best States, for both stock and agriculture in the world. Taken together there is plenty of timber for fuel and fence, whilst in the east part of the State are dense forests of pine, which is fast being worked up to supply the rich and fertile country west. The land is the richest I ever saw: It is several feet deep, jet black, either waxey or sandy, in some parts red, but fertile.

I find that people live easy here, but many of them poorly. No plastered houses are found or needed. I have not seen a frame barn in the State, but every well regulated plantation has several tenant houses, formerly used for the slaves.

The table during the entire winter contains greens and bacon, but never without corn bread. Butter is never seen on a table, either at a private house or hotel at noon, but sour milk or clabber supplies its place.

The climate is most delightful—in the winter very mild and in the summer never as oppressively warm as in Michigan. Up to the present time butter has not become so soft as to be unpleasant to handle in the hottest part of the day, which, for the past week, has been about 92° to 96° with a lovely bracing Gulf breeze constant-

The Michigan Central.

At the annual election of the stock holders of the Michigan Central Rail-Road, held at Detroit yesterday, the following Directors were elected: James F. Joy, Detroit; J. W. Brooks, Boston; Sidney Bartlett, Boston; H H. Hunewell, Boston; Nathaniel Thayer, Boston; Moses Taylor, New York; J. J. Astor, New York; W. F. Tallman, New York; Isaac Sloan,

New York. The meeting was entirely harmonious, and only one ticket was in the field. The name of Mr. Isaac Sloan, of New York, was substituted in place of that of Mr. Erastus Corning, of New York. This was the only change made. The newly-elected Directors will meet at Boston in a few days for the purpose of electing officers for the ensuing year. As previously stated in The Tribune, Mr. J. F. Joy has withdrawn his resignation, and is again a candidate for re-election. There is not the least doubt that he will be unanimously re-clected, everything having being settled beforehand. It is fortunate for the Michigan Central that Mr. Joy will continue to control it. He is the only Western man on the Board, and his energy and abilities have always been directed towards developing the Western country. The changes he has lately made in the management of the road have shown his predilections in this direction. All his new officers are Western men of the highest ability, who know the wants and peculiarities of this section much better than eastern men would. In spite of the disastrous railroad war the road has greatly improved since Mr. Strong became General Superintendent, Mr. Wheeler General Freight-Agent, and Mr. Wentworth General Passenger and Ticket Agent. They are making immense efforts to restore the road to its former prosperity, and a change at this time would have been disastrous. The financial exhibit of the road is not yet ready, but will be submitted to the Directors at their first meeting at Boston. It is stated that the report will be fur more satisfactory than has been generally supposed .- Chicago Tribune.

A curious lawsuit is pending before the United States Court at Springfield, Ill. The heirs of Stephen Griffith, who died at the age of 86, seek to set aside certain conveyances of land made to various religious societies, made in fulfillment of a vow, registered by Griffith many years ago, cially, that if he got out of it safely he should give the Lord the full credit, and donate all his wealth to the cause of religion. He did come through all right, and made his will according to promise, but his heirs, believing that good luck and early rising had more to do with it than the Lord, take the ground that the property was conveyed without a quid-pro quo, and that the conveyance is therefore void. The defendants are prepared to maintain that Griffith's prosperity was due to divine interposition, and in behalf of the Lord will insist that the bargain be carried out. It will remain for the Court to decide, first, whether the result was due to a supernatural agency, and, if so, whether the religious societies are authorized to collect the Lord's claims. The question of Griffith's sanity is also involved .- Chicago Tribune.

International Postage.

A General Postal Union has been formed, which embraces nearly the whole of Christendom. Within its area, letters weighing 15 grammes (about 53 per cent. of an onnce) can be sent for 5 cents after July 1. The countries included in the Union are Germany, Austria, Belgium, Denmark, Turkey, Egypt, Spain, Great Britian, Portugal, Russia, Greece, Italy, Norway, Sweden, Switzerland, and the United States. The new rates apply not only to them, but to their colonies everywhere, so that a five-cent stamp will carry a letter from Chicago to Iceland, or to Hindostan, or to Northern Africa, or, in fact, to about any point where a letter could be received and read. Jan. 1, 1876, France will come into the Postal Union, and its rates will then apply on her territory, too. Postal cards can be sent for 2 cents, and newspapers of not more than 4 ounces in weight will cost no more. The Saturday issue of the Tribune can therefor be sent to the Cape of Good Hope for just half the cost of sending it to Riverside. Reflection on this fact will increase the popular gratitude to Senators Ramsey and Hamlin and the express companies for their kind offices in doubling the domestic postage on third-class mail matter.

The adoption of these low rates of postage will doubtless result in a marked increase in the number of letters exchanged between the Old World and the New. The advantages of this increased intercommunication will be great, from commercial, political, asthetic and social points of view. The development of business will be slow, perhaps, but sure, and it will involve certain important consequences. M. Chevalier ascribes the friendship which has replaced the old-time hostility between France and England to the commercial intercourse caused by several reforms, of which cheap postage was one. It is certain that the constant exchange of ideas between men of different nationalities will lead to the dissipation of national prejudices and the encouragement of national good-will. It is not improbable that the reform will trade: And, if it does none of these great things, it will at least save a mint of money every year to the letter

David S. Miller, one of the oldest residents in South Bend, is to be city

The Republicans of Maine have nominated for Governor General Selden Conner. The platform adopted is a good one and explicit on the issues now before the people. General Conner has a splendid war record, and is well known throughout the State as a man of unimpeachable integrity. With such a standard bearer, we may reasonably expect a sweeping victory for the Republican party in Maine.

Mr. A. E. Dunham, superintendent of a line refrigerator cars, discovered, on the Canadian side of the Niagara river, an inscription on a rock, which had evidently been scratched by a rough stone, dated May 28th, stating that the writer had run away from home, and was going to drown himself, and requested the finder to write to Peter Relch, of New Buffalo. Mr. Dunham did so, and the answer received confirms the statement so far as his leaving home is concerned, but nobody has been found that answers to his description, and so far no satisfactory solution of the mystery has been arrived at.

Intemperance.

The Hon. Schuyler Colfax, in a letter to the recent National Temperance Convention, after saying "that the cause of Temperance was always near his heart," thus characterizes the cumulative evils of intemperance, and indicates the uncompromising spirit requisite to deal with them : "Every year's observation only strengthens my conviction that the foe against which you war so unselfishly is the most insatiable and most ruthless enemy of mankind and womankind, and especially of the poor; that it is the cause of more wretchedness, destitution, unhappiness, pauperism; insanity, and crime than the triple furies of War, Pestilence and Famine combined; that its banishment or extirpation would fill the world with indescribable happiness: rags, was taken from the door steps of the county house, having been and that every restraint that is put upon it carries joy and peace, and hope to many agonized hearts and tempted victims.'

A Philadelphia editor thus relieves his mind on a subject familiar to all newspaper offices, the inevitable pub. "We owe our thanks to Judge Kelley for the latest patent office reports. We already have sixteen hundred of these interesting volumes in our little library, but they have been read and re-read so many times that we know every page of them by heart. This new volume came opportunely and gratefully on Christmas morning, and that night we gathered our little family around the fire, and read it through to them. The affecting tale entitled, 'Improvement in Monkey Wrenches' seemed to touch every heart, and when we came to the climax of the little story about "Reversible Picboards," there was not a dry eye between the front door and the stable. During the reading of the piteous narrative entitled 'Gum washers for Carriage Axles,' the whole family gave expression to boisterous emotion, and the hired girl was so much excited that she lost her presence of mind, and went around to her mother's inadvertently with six pounds of sugar and a butter kettle full of flour, and came home at midnight intoxicated. We can never sufficiently thank Judge Kelley for the innocent enjoyment thus furnished us. The memory of that happy evening will linger in our minds very much longer than the hired girl ever lingers when she lights on a lot of substance which she thinks will

A MERCHANT once thought he had hit a great idea, and was doing a good thing by going around to get all the merchants in his town to give up advertising and stop simultaneously. "Then," said he, "we will all be on a fair and even basis and save ourselves a heavy expense." But one wise old merchant nipped this enterprise in the bud. "Let us, then," said he, "give up our signs, our store windows, our stock, stores and all-that will make us all the more even. But will it be better? No! I would rather be uneven and do more business and more advertising than you dare do."-Re-

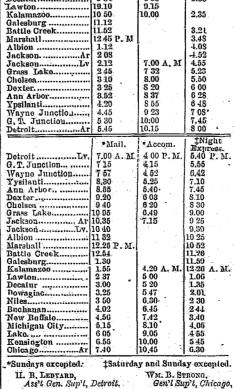

Every man has a code of honor by which he lives and by which he judges others. Thieves are above begging, and beggars are too proud or too cowardly to steal. The man who cheats his neighbor by a sharp trade is too moral to steal or beg; and the man who gets trusted without knowing positively his ability to pay, feels himself high above the man who cheats, or begs, or steals, yet he is often called the meanest who by underhanded treachery betrays the confidence of friends.

ABOUT TOWN ON THE 3d. The morning sun arose as usual, only obscured by the clouds, thus dampening the ardor of our juveniles who had to remain at home. At eight o'clock in the morning the torpedoes and fire crackers were opened and pedestrians looked well to their footing. At 9.20 constable Jordan brought in from the woods of Galien a son of Africa, accused of felonously appropriating a certain horse said to be the property of one Sanford Smith of this place, and as his ponderous form moved amid the multitude of curiosity seekers, the clouds seemed governed thereby, and in a short time after, he was "calaboosed" for farther operations. At one o'clock p. m., the clouds aforesaid opened, the rain fell in torrents, and in such torrents as the oldest inhabitants had not seen for years, until 11.30, when there came cessation of hostilities, boys hopeful, teams sorrowful, parents thankful, and everybody joyful, thinking now they could "go it all day." About then a solitary "verdant" could have been seen on the steps of one of our torpedo venders, thoughtfully and leisurely tossing his "pedoes" on the walk while passers-by wondered how he could get any compensation out of so small a compass. His answer was, "Oh! thars a heap of fun in seeing them pop." And there he sat alone in his glory until his last "pedo" was gone from out a whole bunch, when he quietly walked home seemingly pleased and wonderfully satisfied. Next came the examination of the "cullud" man who gave his name as

Those that remained opened on fire crackers and lager, until evening when "Hod" picked up a few collaterals and bought out a firm dealing in the wherewith to make fun and fire, and proceeded to open under head of fire

THE NILES Democrat says: We notice among the prominent speakers who are to be present and address the citizens of Jackson, on the occasion of the Emancipation Proclamation celebration, Aug. 2, the name of Geo. Curtis, of this city.The eighteenth annual commencement of the Niles High School occurred on Friday evening of last week, at Peak Hall. The class this year numbered sixteen - four gentlemen, and twelve ladies, and is the largest ever graduated from the school. The essays and orations were all able efforts and were attentively listened to by the crowded audiences. Music, both vocal and instrumental, was interspersed at appropriate periods, and the calasthenic class afforded much amusement to those assembled.

THE NILES Republican says: Two thousand dollars were paid into the City Treasury, on Friday last, for liquor license. George Welling had one of his hands pretty badly used up in a drilling machine on Tuesday. Patrick Kelley, a Michigan Central employee, had his foot somewhat crushed in working the turn table on Friday last.....Sterne Reed, a young man at work on the roof of Mr. Hick's barn, on the prairie east of here, on Friday last, fell to the ground and broke his jaw. Dr. Williams of Edwardsburg gave him medical attention. On Monday, when standing upon a step ladder measuring the ceiling of Larmore & Dean's Drug Store, for the purpose of frescoing, William Drake fell to the floor and cut and bruised his head and shoulders. It was at first feared that he was considerably injured, but he was laid up for repairs only a day or two..... Cholwell Knox returned from Denver yesterday, in improved health. He thinks Denver a fine place, but prices out there open his eyes to the cost of living. Potatoes sell at $6 per bushel; tomatoes at 35 cents per pound, or about $17 per bushel; onions 10 cents a piece; and cabbage 8 cents per pound. The Denverites pay $600 per car for freight from San Francisco. $800 per car from New York.

Henry Feather, of this town, had five acres of strawberries: and he shipped 321 crates to Chicago this week, on Friday evening it was estimated that there were 25 bushels of berries on the vines, unpicked, that he offered to give away on Saturday for the good of the vines, it being impossible to get pickers to pick them.Some months ago the sporting men of St. Joseph and Benton Harhor formed an organization for the protection of game and fish; notifying the sporting men of this place of head of Cranberry Meadow, in Lake their organization, &c., and offering a reward of $5, for evidence sufficient to convict any party of a violation of the order of their agreement. The Sunday Reading.

Who is hy krighten Thy neighbor? It is he who then Hist power to aid and bless; Whose aching heart or burning brow Thy soothing hand may press.

Thy neighbor? The the fainting peer Whose eye with want is dim; Whom hunger sends from deer to deer—Go thou and succes him!

Thy neighbor? 'Tis that weary man Whose years are at their brim; Bent low with sickness, cares and pain, Go thou and comfort him !

There are such dutiful children; men whose highest ambition seems to be the promotion of their fathers and mothers. They watch over them with unwearied care-supply all their wants, and by their devotion and kindness remove all care and sorrow from their hearts. On the contrary there are others who seem to never bestow a thought upon their parents, and to care but little whether they are situated comfortably or not. By their conduct they increase their cares, embitter their lives and bring their gray hairs with sorrow to the grave. Sel-fishness has steeled their hearts to the whispers of affection, and avaries denies to their parents those favors which would materially assist them in the downhill of life. Others, too, by a course of profligacy and vice, have drained to the very dregs their parents' cup of happiness and made them anxious for death to release them from their sufferings. Oh! how fearful must be the doom of those children who have thus embittered the lives of their best earthly friends. If there is a "world of woe beyond the presints of the tomb," surely they cannot escape its horrors. There can be no happier reflection than that derived from the thought of having contributed all in our power to the comfort and happiness of our parents. When care smoothed their declining days, so that they departed in comfort and peace. If we were otherwise, if we denied them what their circumstances and necessities required, and our hearts did not become like the nether milistone, our remorse must prove a thorn in our fiesh, piercing us sharply, and filling our days with sorrow and sense of sorrow I ever knew was upon the death of my father, at which time I was not quite five years of age; but was rather amazed at what all the house meant, than possessed with a real understanding why nobody was willing to play with me. I remember I went into the room where his body lay, and my mother sat weeping alone by it. I had my battle-dore in my hand, and fell to beating the coffin and calling papa; for, I know not why, I had some slight idea that he was locked up there. My mother caught me in her arms, and, transported beyond all patience of the silent grief she was before in, she almost smothered me in her embrace, and told me, in a flood of tears, "papa could not hear me, and would play with me no more, for they were going to put him under the ground, whence he could never come to see us again." She was a very beautiful woman, of a noble spirit, and there was dignity in her grief amid all the wildness of her transport, which, me-thought, struck me with an instinct of sorrow, which, before I was sensible of what it was to grieve, sezed my very soul, and has made pity the weakness of my heart ever since. The mind in infancy is, methinks, like the body in embryo; and receives impressions so forcible that they are as hard to be removed by reason, as any mark, with which a child is born, to be taken away by any future applica-tion. Hence it is, that good nature in me is no merit; but, having been so frequently overwhelmed with her tears before I knew the cause of her affliction; or could draw defenses from my own judgment, I imbibed commiseration, remorse, and an unmanly gentleness of mind, which has since ensuared me into ten thousand calamities; and from whence I can reep no advantage, except it be, that, in such a humor as I am now in, I can the better indulge myself in the softness of humanity, and enjoy that aweet anxiety which arises from the memory of past afflictions.

Ministering.
Pure religion and undefiled is "ministering," not the other thing, "being ministered unto." It is handing over the morning paper to another for first perusal. It is vacating a pleasant seat by the fire for one who comes in chilled. It is giving up the most restful arm-chair or sofa corner for one who is weary. It is moving up in the pew to let the new comer sit down by the entrance. It is rising from your place to darken the blind when the sun's ray streams in too brightly upon some face in the circle. It is giving your own comfort for the comfort of another. This is at once true courtesy and real Christianity: If we mean to copy the spirit of the Master, we must be ready in every relation of life, and at every hour of the day, to give up being waited upon, and to practice this self-sacrificing, beneficent and "ministering" graciousness of spirit and conduct.

The best rule that has been discovered yet, for a long life, is to live well; many a man dies old at 30, and many a one has died young at 90

Our Parents.

Respect to aged persons is one of the virtues. There is no period in life when our parents do not claim our attention, love, and warmest affection. From youth to manhood, from middle to riper years, if our honored parents survive, it should be our constant study how we can best promote their welfare and happiness, and smoothe the pillow of their declining years.

Nothing better recommends an individual than his attention to his parents.

Just published, a new edition of Dr. Culverwell's Celebrated Essay on the radical cure (without medicine) of Spermarorrhea or Seminal Weakness, Involuntary Seminal Losses, Important, Mental and Physical Incapacity. Impediments to Marriago, etc.; also, Consumption, Epilipsia and Fits, induced by self-indulgence or sexual extravagance, &c.

Marrice, in a sealed envelope, only eix cents.

The ceiebrated author, in this admirable Essay, clearly demonstrates, from a thirty years' successful practice, that the alarming consequences of self-abuse may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicine or the application of the knife; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by meaus of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately, and radically.

Marrice should be in the hands of every youth and every man in the land.

My practice, not one of experiment, but founded on the laws of Nature, with airs of experience and evidence to sustain it, does not tear down, makesick to make well; no harsh treatment, no trilling, no flattering. We know the cause and the remedy needed, no gross work, but knowledge gained by years of experience in the treatment of Chronic diseases exclusively; no encouragement without a prospect. Candid in our opinion, reasonable in our charges, claim not to know everything, or to cure everybody, but do claim to reason and common sonse. We invite the sick, no matter what their allment, to call, investigate before they abandon hope, make interrogations and decide for thomselves. It will cost nothing, as consultation is tree.
