AS MOTHER DID. Little girl, what will you do When you have older grown? Dollies then will not be new As they are now, my own.
Then the pretty plays you play—
Of these you will get rid."
"Oh," the red lips sweetly say,
"I'll do as mother did!"

"School-days then will come in turn, And other changes great; Will my darling love to learn, With spelling book and slate?"
Pretty pouting lips replied,
While drooped each pearly lid;
"Oh, the world is very wide—
I'll do as mother did!"

"Sweetest pattern you could find To follow little one! But suppose a lover kind This little heart had won? Will you speak him answer fair?"
The dark blue eyes were hid;
"Ah, I neither know nor sare—
I'll do as mother did!"

"Lightning express, gentleman! All aboard!" shouted a voice in the station at Rochester, at 11 o'clock at Right before my eyes hung a white, shapely hand, with a dark seal-ring upon the third finger. It took me a minute or two to collect my scattered senses enough to discover that it belonged to the occupant of the upper berth, dropped carelessly from his found at the foot of Main quarters to my own, in the heavy abandonment of sleep.

I lay and looked at it,—a white, shapely hand as I have said, -unmarred or unglorified - choose the word for yourself—by the seams and callous of manual labor. The fin-**E & A. M. He held a newspaper in the hand. I recognized it at once. He lifted his eyes long enough to salute me with a courteous bow as I took the opposite seat, and then resumed his reading. I opened my paper also, but the attempt to engross myself with its contents was a vain one. My eyes and my thoughts continually wandering to my vis-a-vis. Describe him? Not an easy matter. Neither is it easy to account for the fascination that he wore as an invisible mantal. I might tell you that he was tall and slight; that his complexion was clear and dark; that his black, crisp locks curled closely round his well-shaped head; that his eyes were large and liquid; that his moustache was a light and graceful penciling upon the firm, thin lip, and his imperial was above reproach. He was at once reticent and communicative,-reticent in all that was purely personal and related to his inner self; communicative as to his plans and projects. I soon discovered that he was on his way to San Francisco, -- so much farther off then than now. "But what a circuitous route!" 1 exclained, "You are going around

The hours flew on silver wings. All day long we floated on the tide of talk, sometimes sparkling with wit and humor, sometimes taking a deeper tone as we touched upon themes that gave each passing glimpses of the soul of the other. It seemed to me that there was little worth knowing that my companion did not know: little worth seeing that he had not seen; little worth thinking that he had not thought. Yet I learned little of his personal history, save that he had spent much time in South America, and that he had large interests in the pearl fisheries at Lima, on business connected with which he was going to San Francisco.

We had said nothing in any way relating to the war, its causes, or its results. But suddenly my friend turned to me.

warmly. My reticent Northern nature stirred within me.

"I trust so, I hope so." I responded. "But the world is wide. I shall never forget you, M. L'Estrange." "Ah! you are young," he said, with a slow shake of the head, "you are young, and the young have short memories. But stay, hold! I shall give you a sign-a token. So shall you keep one in your heart."

Taking from his pocket a tin box, he unlocked it with a key attached to his watchguard. A number of pearls gleamed and shimmered in the sunlight. He selected four of remarkable size and purity.

"You shall wear these for my sake," he said, placing them in my hand.

But I demurred, saying it was too costly a gift. "Are we not friends," he cried, his lip curling with a supurb scorn. "How talk of cost?" Two, then, to be mounted as sleeve buttons? Still I shook my head, and still he persisted. "Here, you, mon ami," he said, at last. "If you shall not have two you shall have one;" and, taking my hand, he placed one large, pure, lustrous pearl in the palm and closed my fingers over it. "It shall be mounted like this," drawing a sign on the lid of the box, and you shall wear it for "As we are to be section-mates for a sign. Then, you see, I shall have again. Ah, I know it? Certainly, or I should not have thought it worth while to tell you this: I returned to New York in a few weeks, had my pearl mounted precisely as L'Estrange had directed, and wore it, at first with a half-super-Cruz. How about a steamer across stitutious feeling that it was truly a link between us, and would one day draw us together. It was, indeed, as he had said, a sign, a token. It kept fresh and green to my memory what else might have gradually faded away

I never wore it without seeing, as a vision, the dark soul-lit eyes that had looked up at me from the photograph, the pure, calm brow, the tender, wistful mouth of my friend's "Marguerite." Not his wife, but doubtless his betrothed. What other meaning could I give to the sudden light than had illuminated his face as he exclaimed, in that last hurried moment, "It is my Marguerite-my

Last summer I was in Paris. Early one morning I went to the Madelene, and leaning against one of the fluted columns, watching the worshippers as they came and went. The sun shot yellow rays through the grained windows in the roof; the chanting of a hidden choir sounded far off and dream-like; the sculptured Magdalen of the high alter looked strangely real in the weird, uncertain light, and the whole atmosphere of the place was bewildering. As I stood near one of the great bronze doors a lady, veiled, and gathering the folds of her mantle closely about her throat, passed me with a light step. The figure was exquisitely graceful, and I watched her with man's idle curiosity as she knelt to her prayers, wondering if her face was worthy to her form. As she rose, a fresh breeze from an opening door blew back her veil, and I caught a passing glimpse of her features. All the blood in my veins rushed madly to my heart. Surely it was diverge, never in all probability, to the face of my dreams—the face of cross again. In vain M. that I saw her no more. I went to Switzerland, lingering for a month among its mountain passes; made a short run into Italy, and came back. I was loitering along the Champs Elysses one evening in a fit of home-sickness, half inclined to take the next steamer from Havre, and to end this roving life, when I became aware of being watched-watched by a dark figure under the shadow of the opposite trees. The red sunset-light fell full and strong where I was standing, but it was twilight all about me. I changed my position hurriedly, and

But in a moment I heard a quick footstep behind me, then a run and a shout. An arm fell across my shoulder, a hand clasped mine, and a well remembered voice cried:

"It is you! I have found you! Ah! mon ami! mon ami! But it was the pearl, even as I told you so in that wild Calumet." And Hippolyte L'Estrange pointed to the scarf-pin I wore that day!. Why had he not written to me? Simply because he had lost my address-"only this and nothing more." It would take too long to tell of our delightful journey, and I pass on rapidly to the hour when the towers of Strasbourg rose before us, and the lofty spire of her cathedral pierced the clouds.

My friend's chateau was outside the walls of the city, on rising ground.
"See!" he said, with a sweep of his hand, as the carriage rolled along, "this is not so grand, so fresh, as your great New World; yet it is a fair picture.

We are to live in Arcadia for a whole enchanted month, and, as fitting, we are to be to each other Marguerite, the kind Fates proved that we are kin, and told you years ago? Why else have they brought us together?"

I bowed low above the lady's hand; but I did not call her "Marguerite." Neither did I call her "Madam L'Estrange."-Some subtile undefinable feeling prevented that. I compromised by not calling her anything.

A determination that I made known to M. L'Estrange the next morning. "But you are not going!" he said.

must stay!" "No," I answered; "your friend must go. Do not make it too hard for him to leave you." He looked at me narrowly. "Has anything gone wrong?" he asked, in a low tone. "Tell me my friend! I had thought-I had dreamed-is there anything amiss with you and-Marguerite?"

He spoke in his own tongue now as he always did when any strong emotion stirred him. I answered in mine, my cheeks white and cold, but my eyes ablaze: "Amiss! anything amiss, M. L'Estrange? Do I hear you aright? You are speaking of the lady who is your wife, and of one who would fain be an honorable man! Anything amiss, Monsieur?"

He looked at me for an instant as if he thought I had gone mad. Then a sudden light broke over his face, and to my anger and astonishment, he laughed a genuine hearty laugh. But before I could speak, his mood changed, and he caught me impulsively in his arms. "O my poor boy!" he cried, "I see

She put him in his little bed, And bade him ge to rest, "You bet," the lambkin said, "I'll do my level best."

Mary had a little lamb, And snow white was its skin;
But when it followed her to school,

Who could endure?" First Use Of the Handkerchief.

Until the reign of the Empress Josephine, a handkerchief was thought in France so shocking an object that a lady would never have dared to use it before any one. The word was even carefully avoided in refined conversation. An actor who would have used a handkerchief on the stage, even in the most tearful moments of the play, would have been hissed; and it was only in the beginning of the present century that a celebrated actress, Mile. Duchesnoise, dared to appear with a handkêrchief in her hand. A few years later, a translation of one of Shakespeare's plays having been act-ed, the word handkerchief was used for the first time on the stage, amid I dared not look at him. The gen of the house. The Chinese are said to produce curious dwarf fruit-trees by ringing a fruit-bearing branch and placing over the spot a flower-pot with earth in which roots are developed, so that it may then be detached from the parent tree and cultivated independently. The Italians propagate the fig-tree in a similar manner, and this process may be made very useful in securing the certain growth of a spouting branch of any woody plant, or of the branches of species with spongy or pithy wood which will not root from cuttings. It is a well known fact that the ringing of a branch of a vine or a tree will tend to increase the size of the fruit the following season, because the plant is thereby gorged with elaborated material for which there is no outlet, and some persons habitually adopt this mode of improving their fruit.

In the town of Southborough, Mass. is an apple orchard of healthy trees, from twelve to sixteen inches in diameter, which were all girdled by the owner, Mr. Trowbridge Brigham, in the Spring of 1870, for the purpose of inducing fruitfulness. The desired result is said to have been obtained, and the trees seemed to have suffered no material injury, owing to the imperfect-manner in which the operation was performed. At the time when the trees were in full blossom, a narrow belt of bark, usually less than an inch in width, was removed from the trunks, about two feet from the ground: This did not peel freely in all cases, and there were many crevices where it was retained. By means of these connecting links, the commu-nication between the leaves and the root was imperfectly preserved, and during the season new wood and bark were developed upon these places. In addition to this, in many cases, the new wood from the upper side of the girdled spot was sufficiently abundant to reach across and form a connection with the living bark below. Upon one of these trees was a branch some four inches in diameter, which had been girdled in 1870, and, although no connection had existed between the branch of the limb and that of the trunk, it had grown every year till March 1874, when it was cut. The buds upon it were poorly developed, but alive, and the ends of the branches were dead. It apparently could not have survived more than a year or two longer, and the reason was obvious upon making a longitudinal section through the gir-dled part. The limb was nearly horizontal, and the ring of bark removed was only a few inches from the trunk. New layers had formed each year up to the denuded place, but the enlargement was more above this than below it. The material to form new wood and bark below came from the other parts of the tree, and yet, owing apparently to the poor scirculation, was deficient in quantity. The crude sap with some materials from other portions of the tree ascended to the buds and leaves, and so an unhealthy growth was continued. The wood through which the sap must ascend was gradually dying, and thus the channel of communication was constantly becoming more and more obstructed. On the whole, this method of treating orchards cannot be recommended for general usa .- Pres. Clark's Address

When you receive a bouquet, sprinde it with fresh water; then put it into a vessel containing some soapsuds which nourish the roots and keep the flowers as good as new. Take the bouquet out of the suds every morning, and put it in fresh water: keep it there a minute or two, then take it out and sprinkle the flowers lightly by the hand with pure water. Replace the bouquet in soapsuds, and the flowers will bloom as fresh as when gathered. The soapsuds needs to be changed every third day. By observing these rules, a bouquet may be kept bright and beautiful for at least one month, and will last longer in a very passable state; but the attention to the fair but frail creatures, as directed above, must be strictly observed, or "the last rose of summer" will not be "left blooming alone," but will per-

THE Chicago Tribune does not pay the Police Department of that city a very high complement. A citizen in New York, some weeks ago, lost $12.00 in a thieve's der, on Thirty Seventh street. He was soon after an proached by two detectives who promised to get his money for him for $2.00. The victim appealed to the Captain of the Police, but he would do nothing. The Captain is an intimate friend of one of the detectives. After two months spent in vain attempts to get redress, a third detective presented himself and said he could get his money but would not do so "because he didn't interfere with other people's business." The Trib une says that all this happened in

New York but it might have happened in Chicago as "the Police Department of both these cities are run as political and money making machines. The men appointed to prevent crimes being committed, and those appointed to detect or punish the criminal encourage the first and protect the second.

THE recent suspension of the old and popular banking house of New York city, Duncan, Sherman & Co., does not create such a commotion in general business as was at first appre-hended. If the suspension of an establishment doing such wide spread business, had occurred when times were good, it would have resulted in more serious damage to other business firms of the country. Business is now being conducted with such caution that the losses in this case will not be felt in financial circles.

From the Detroit Tribune. The Elections of 1875.

The campaign for the fall elections is already being organized in the States which elect during the remainder of this year. In many of them the State conventions of the various parties have been held and the tickets put in the field. The first of the elections is that of Kentucky, for Governor, State officers, and a legislature which will elect a United States Senator in place of Mr. Stephenson, which occurs on Aug. 2d. Of course in this heavily Democratic State there is no hope for a Republican victory, but the Republican organization is active and energetic. General Harlan. who has several times led the Republican forlorn hope, is again the nominee, and is making a gallant canvass. The State last year polled a Republican vote of 53,504, while the Democrats numbered 114,348. We expect that the Democratic majority will be considerably reduced, but will still remain an overwhelming one. The legislature will of course be Democratic, and will probably elect ex-Congressman James B. Beck to the Sen-

California comes next, holding her election on September Ist. Three tickets are in the field, headed by the following candidates for Governor: Republican, T. G. Phelps; Democratic, William Irwin; Independent, John Bidwell. Four Congressmen are also to be chosen. The result of the campaign is somewhat doubtful, as this is the first popular eletion in which the Independents have run a separate ticket, and there are therefore no data for comparison as to their strength or the proportion of votors which they have drawn from the other two parties. It seems probable, however, that the Republicans will carry the State by a plurality of the popular vote. The last general election was that for President in 1872, when Grant had 54,020 to 40,718 for Greeley, a Republican pajority of 13,302.

The election in Maine occurs one week later, on the 8th of September. A Governor, State officers and legislature are to be chosen. The Republican candidate for Governor is General Selden Connor, the Democratic, General Chas. K. Roberts. The canvass is by no means a lively one, and will probably result in a light vote and the usual Republican majority. Maine never polls her full vote except in Presidential years, when she doubles ner in which the law is defended be- large was followed by the Senatorial the Republican majority of the intervening elections; but even in "off years" our margin is ample. weeks before the general State elections, which occur on the first Tuesday of November, have made its campaigns matters of national interest. This is increased this year by the fact that the Democracy have boldly declared in favor of an irredeemable paper currency, while the Republican for two terms, from 1867 to 1871, platform on the financial question is a compromise one. The Republican candidate for Governor is Gen. Rutherford B. Hayes, who held the office and is universally popular and respected. His opponent, Gov. Allen, was elected in 1873 by a plurality of 817. Last year the Democrats carried the State by a majority of 17,202, polling 238,406 votes; while the Reoublican ticket received 221,204. This year, however, everything looks encouraging for the Republicans. The Democratic legislature of the last two years has been so partisan. corrupt and incompetent as thoroughly to disgust the people. The subserviency of the Democracy to the Catholics, and the warfare of the latter upon the common schools of the State, has also aroused the Protestent feeling and caused a reaction in favor of the Republican party. The Germans, who voted with the Democrats almost en masse in 1874, are now preparing to support the Republican ticket. The inflation resolution of the Democracy may catch some votes, and some ultrainflationists of the Republican party, like William D. Kelley, have been giving aid and comfort to the Democtive of the "poor whites" of the racy by making inflation speeches in affection. All things point to a decided Republican victory. Iowa holds her election on the same day with Ohio, chosing Governor, State officers, and a legislature which will elect a United States Senator in place of George G. Wright. Ex-Governor S. J. Kirkwood, the war governor, has been forced from his retirement to become the Republican standard-bearer, while Shepherd Leffler, a Copperhend of the war times, is the nominee of the Opposition party, which is without a name, having declined to call itself Democratic, and not having adopted any other style and title. Iowa is certainly Republican. She gave a Republican majority of 34,671 in 1874, the vote standing 106,831 Republican to 72,160 Democratic; and she will increase that majority this fall if the vote polled is as full as that of a year ago. Of course a light vote will reduce somewhat our ascendancy.

The campaigns in the States which elect in November have not progressed far enough to give any indication of probable results. In Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Wisconsin and Minnesota, Governors are to be chosen; in New York, New Jersey, Kansas, and Texas, only minor State officers are voted for, and in Mississippi Congressmen are to be elected. The general outlook in all these States is hopeful. The Republicans in all of them are united, harmonious, and energetic. The lessons of the reverses of 1874 have not been unheeded. The prejudice against a third term no longer weighs down the Republican party. It has "unloaded" a good many heavy weights. We confidently look for Republican gains upon the vote of 1874 in every State which holds elections during the remainder of this year, and for handsome Republican victories in most of them.

The Decision On the Liquor Law, Judge Cochrane, of the Superior Court which has concurrent jurisdiction with the Circuit Court, has decided the new State law taxing the business of liquor-selling to be constitutional, * * * Briefly he decides that the tax law is not a license law. A license law restricts the sale of liquor to certain parties thus favored by the law. The tax law makes no restrictions. The business is open to all. It has no limitations. It taxes all who are in the business. There is no restrictive permission. It is no more of a license law than any revenue law. On this ground it connot be adjudged unconstitutional. Is it unconstitutional because being a specific tax it is not devoted to the educational funds of the State? Not necessarily, because while the -constitution declares that all specific State taxes shall be devoted to that purpose, it does not forbid the levying of specific taxes which are not State taxes. It is held that it is a specific tax not laid for State purposes, but a specific tax only; in regard to the disposition of which the constitution is silent. Nor is it strictly a local tax, because it is not local but general, imposed upon a few, not upon every person in a certain locality in proportion to his property. Hence it does not conflict with the decision of the Supreme Court, which makes the imposition of a local tax without the consent of the people of the locality unconstitutional. المعادية الم

Judge Cochrane concludes with a well-deserved rebuke of the feeble manner in which the law has been defended in his court.

This decision probably fixes the future policy of the State on the question of liquor dealing. It will require three of the four judges of the Supreme Courts to set it aside; a ratio not likely to be obtained. If it is affirmed it will remain the law of the State. We are much disposed to rejoice at the conclusion of this matter, although the advocates of free trade in liquor on one hand and the impracticable prohibitionists on the other will not admire it. Judge Cochrane's suggestion, that the law will have more friends after it has successfully passed its judicial ordeal, is probably true. -It is to be hoped that the judges of the Supreme Court will have no reason to complain of the inefficient man- date for the seat of Congressman-atfore their tribunal. . andrew Johnson.

The seventeenth President of th United States, who died very suddenly on Saturday at a Tennessee firm with a last request that the flag of the republic might constitute his winding sheet, was certainly a remarkable man. He was not in any proper sense great, nor was the element of benificence in any manner prominent in the record of his long and curious public career. But there was in him a gnarled and rugged virtue, neither choice in fibre, nor refined in texture, which raised him to eminent positions from the very substrata of American civilization, and which enabled him at times to render to the nation public service of no small value. It would only be empty mockery, even by the side of the open grave, to feign forgetfulness of the much that was coarse in the man, of his frequent and inexcusable disregard of the proprieties of high station, of the bitterness and obstinaer of his prejudices, and of the incrdinate egotism that so inflamed and complicated a public conflict which almost attained the magnitude of a public calamity. But there is no reason why the most uncompromising of his political enemies should not with sincerity lay upon his bier trib utes to a capacity that was strong if not cultured, to a courage that grew as demands were made upon it, to a clear personal incorruptibility, and to undisputed honesty of intention. Andrew Johnson was the represent-

South among the Presidents. No other chief magistrate from that section rose from such utter obscurity, and Mr. Lincoln was the only one of his predecessors whose origin was equalv humble. He was born in North Carolina, and from early boyhood was compelled to labor constantly. As an apprentice and a journeyman at the tailor's trade he visited various towns in the Carolinas and Tennessee, finaly settling at Greenville in the latter State, where he married and then learned from his wife the simplest lessons of rudimentary education, the ability to read constituting the only mental acquirement he had been able to gain in his youth. But his energy, his shrewdness, and his natural gift of rough oratory made him conspicuous in that new community, and he was elected alderman while yet a minor, was re-elected twice, was made Mayor while yet but twenty-two, and was sent to the Legislature when only twenty-seven. The "politics" of that frontier country was of the coarse grained and hardy order, full of vim, rough speech, personal animosity, and hard drinking. Andrew Johnson became at once prominent as "a man of the people," and no politician in that region represented the masses as article. perfectly and as ably. ocratic member of the Twenty-eighth Congress from the First Tennessee District, and served for five continuous terms, not distinguishing himself in any national sense, but by industry and unremitting labor increasing his home strength. In 1853 he received the Democratic nomination for Governor, securing an election over G. A. Henry by 2,258 majority, the State having given small whig majorities during several preceeding years. In 1855 he was re-elected by 2,167 majority over the well known Meredith P. Gentry, who had received both the Whig and Knownothing nominations. In 1857 he succeeded John P. Jones (Whig) in the Senate, his colleague being John Bell and subsequently A. O. P. Nicholson. As a Senator Mr. Johnson became conspicuous as the representative of Southern Unionmen, and his bold speeches and patriotic course in the days of secession conventions and amid the defiant resignations of Southern Congressmen won for him a National reputation. Duriug the war he sustained the cause of the Republic with characteristic vigor, and rendered very important services as Military Governor of Tennessec. In 1864, the Republican National Convention placed him upon its ticket for Vice-President, as being the most conspicuous among the loyal men of the rebellious States, and he

We have no disposition to review at this time the excited controversies of Mr. Johnson's Presidential term. His inauguration as Vice President was made shameful by his partial intoxication, and his accession to the Presidency was followed by violent utterances against Southern treason, ending in practical efforts to secure a plan of reconstruction, which would have lodged the entire political power of the conquered States in the hands of the disloyal elements in their population. The rupture with his party friends and with Congress followed, and the delicate work of readjusting the relations of those communities to the Union on a basis that should be just and safe for all classes was greatly deranged by his obduracy and the passions which it stimulated. The "swinging around the circle" with its many mortifying episodes and the abortive impeachment trial were among the fruits of this rancorous controversy, and in the end Mr. Johnson retired from the White House, defeated in his plans and with a more meagre personal following than any Inflation vs. Resumption. To hear Kelly and other advocates of inflation talk, one would be led to suppose that, through the machinery of the Government, all national currency which the Secretary of the Treasury could possess himself of was handed over to the Treasurer, and by that functionary destroyed or hermeti cally scaled from vision or touch, much to the detriment of the business interests of the country. The contrary is true. In 1866 there was outstand ing m national bank notes and legal tender notes $648,886,000, against $724,536,866, in 1875, counting the 1st of April in each year, being an expansion of $76,000,000, or nearly 12 per cent increase.

As before set forth in these pages, currency was scarcely ever so easily and cheaply attainable as at present, and all this hue and cry about the dull and hard times, through which the country is passing, being attribu-table to a scarcity of currency, is the sheerest bosh. Currency may truly be said to be going around begging for takers at 6 per cent. Bankers' vaults are full of paper money, and surely it is not to the interest of money-lenders to hold it.

Judge Kelly attributes the depression in business avenues to the policy of contraction, which, at best, is but a suggested policy, and not one of experiment. The design of those who shaped our present monetary system was to so manipulate the currency as to issue sufficient for business purposes, keeping in view the practicability and feasibility of resuming specie payment in 1879—not, as the expansionists would have their adherents believe, to withdraw currency altogether, as a circulating medium, and substitute therefor coin, but to render coin and paper relatively valuable.

We might properly add in this connection that the value of national currency is 20 per cent. higher this year than it was in 1866, thus expanding the volume of currency in value as well as in amount, as set forth in the figures in the first paragraph of this

> Michigan Central Railroad Company Mr. President J. F. Joy, of the Michigan Central Railroad Company, in his able report of the business of the road for the year just closed, considers the exhibit as very unsatisfactory, and this result he attributes to the enforced reduction of rates caused by the competive struggle for business begun by the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, and in which they were afterward involved. To the general public we question whether the figures showing the earnings and business of the road will appear so unsatisfactory as they seem to Mr. Joy, who looks at them as a Director and a stockholder.

> The earnings of the Company for the year, as compared with 1874, are given as follows: Gross earnings Miscellaneous..... not given 335,449 $7,102,286 Operating expenses.... 5,523,642

Net earnings ......$2,110,440 $2,034,198
Falling off in net earnings, only. $76,252 While the gross earnings have fallen off $531,795, the operating expenses have declined $455,545, giving as the net loss in earnings $76,252. The complaint of Mr. Joy is, that the rates of transportation have been reduced, and yet he states the important fact that the receipts from through passengers where the fares were so largely reduced increased about $35 .-000; while the receipts from local travel where the rates were not reduced showed a loss of $44,000. Mr. Joy states that the tonnage moved on the Michigan Central Road for several years was as follows :

In 1870. . $23,770 tons | In 1873 1,416,792 tons In 1871 1,105,875 tons | In 1874 1,593,954 tons In 1872 1,288,818 tons | In 1875 1,641,280 tons He states that the rates per ton per mile were, in 1865, 3 6-100 cents; in 1866 it was 2 60-100; in 1858 it was 2 9-100; in 1870 it was 1 98-100; in 1872 it was 1 56-100; in 1874 it was 1 30-100; and in 1875 it was 1 16-100 cents per ton per mile. Evidently with some feelings of regret he enters into an elaborate estimate to show that if the Company could have collected in 1874-5 the rate of freight collected in 1865, the earnings would have been $6,000,000 greater, and would have been equal to no less than seven dividends of 5 per cent each, which he puts down as "lost." He makes the same estimate of the earnings which the Company would have received on the tonnage of 1874-5 had the Company been able to collect the rates of 1870 or the rates of '73. Mr. Joy in making this estimate, overlooks the very important considcration that the great increase in the tonnage moved, which has doubled since 1870, is mainly due to the reduction in the rates of transportation; and that, had the rates not been reduced, his tonnage moved would have remained where it was in 1870. It is a question whether the stockholder would have been better pleased with moving 800,000 tons at 1 98-100 per ton per mile, as in 1870, or 1,650,000 tons at 1 16-100 per ton per mile, as in 1875. All he has to do. however. is to restore the rates of 1870, and the amount of tonnage will probably recede to what it was in that year. The Michigan Central Railroad Com-

among its owners; and this allows a pretty fair dividend on the watered stock of a railroad owning and operating about 700 miles of railway. That Company has had a good thing for several years. Its owners have no reason to complain. In 1864-5 it had a capital stock of $6,500,000; in 1874-5 it has a capital stock of $18,500,000. While increasing its capital stock 200 per cent in ten years, it has, between 1868 and 1873, paid cash dividends amounting to 53 per cent. If, in a season of panic and depression, the net earnings only reach

11 per cent on stock which in ten years has increased from six to eighteen millions, the situation is not so deplorable and disheartening nor the calamity so distressing as it might have been, particularly as Mr. Joy looks forward to an early increase of the rates of transporting freight and passengers, when the Company can have the golden privilege of doing the least possible business for the largest possible receipts. Mr. Joy sighs for the good old rates of 1865, when he got over 3 cents per ton per mile for nioving freight, and had less than 500,000 tons to move; and laments the fact that now when he moves three times the amount of tonnage he is not permitted to collect the same rate per mile. The public who furnish the business and patronage of the road, will not be apt to sympathize very ardently in his aspirations.—Chicago to reach the shore alive, we would be led to conclude that they were mad with raging insanity. No rational being would thus deprive themselves of life. O what can be said of those who recklessly throw themselves upon the foaming waves of intemperance? Intelligent and beautiful persons, who might have been worthy of our highest festeem, have thrown themselves away by the use of the intoxicating liquor. We are often carried beyond the sorrows of life by the thrilling words of some renowned orator. We fancy we are above the cares of time and are drinking of the joys of untold bliss as he unfolds some great mystery. But the terrible crash as the thought comes to us that the thrilling words, the graceful gestures, and flashing expression are due to the contents of the wine cup. Self-pride is a terrible thing if carried to excess, but it is still more dreadful when self-pride is entirely lost. Where is the pride for one's self when men boast of their flourishing liquor establishments; where is self-pride when a man will condescend to write his name as proprietor in glowing colors upon the loors and windows of a darkened den. Is he worthy to be called a true citizen? If the truth were displayed, he is not. But often he is ranked as one of the first. Ah! often are the pure brought under his authority. Down the River. Among the events incident to human life, are events that are more incidental than some other events not so incidental as events more incidental than some other events; hence, the following:

A few days since, two young gentlemen from this village, (one of whom, by the way, was enjoying remarkably poor health), concluded to rest, rusticate and recuperate, in the event of a trip down the St. Joe River. Accordingly they procured a boat, and casting off from the shore drifted fearlessly down among the hidden rocks and shoals of Moccasin Riffle into the deep smooth water beyond. It was a beautiful day, and our two excursionists, with nothing to mar the pleasure and happiness of the occasion—barring illhealth—drank in the beauteous scen ery with artistic ardor, determined to profit by the afternoon's experience upon the St. Joe.

Passing a lovely, fertile spot they disembarked, and one of the twain being of a botanical turn of mind they series of meetings in the vicinity of rambled far and long, searching for beautiful flowers, and herbs of medicinal qualities, of which one of the party, say, Bangs, so much needed. How long they rambled, they alone know, and one other thing they know and that is, they did not know where their craft was, for upon their return to the river it was gone! Now commenced a race, and in that race fun enough for-several. Down the river bank they started pell mell over rocks, fallen trees, stumps, mud, corn-fields, barnyards, etc., for a few miles, when Lo! in the distance floated the boat, as quietly as though our adventurers were not somewhat heated, and properly excited. Another short run, a long swim, and the boat was captured. Finding themselves, at this time in such close proximity to Berrien, our friends by a long float and a short row made a timely arrival at the latter place in a very lamentable condidition, namely: Bangs, strange to relate, left his wallet that morning upon the piano forte, while Briggs had the misfortune to leave his portmonnaie on the escritoire, thus placing before them the only alternative of footing it home, which they performed in a manover by all hands in the RECORD ner that astonished the window-gazers as long as daylight lasted. We are not informed of the amount paid the young man, who, the next morning drove straight to Berrien after that boat, but conclude it was a liberal sum. Hoping that the trip proved benficial to the young gents, we leave them with our best wishes, and also, > the River." LEGENDS OF MICHIGAN AND THE OLD NORTHWEST, by Judge F. J. Littlejohn, comprises a cluster of amusing and thrilling sketches, gathered from the wilderness homes of the red men, and based upon their traditional lore. The fruits of persistent inquiry and extended search are embodied in these waifs gleaned along the uncertain misty line dividing prehistoric from historic times. The characters brought prominently for-ward are of actual personages participating in the affairs of their respective tribes and frequently in the border wars of the period. The style of the work both descriptive and narrative, assumes the pleasing form of romance, being derived purely from aboriginal traditions, and designed to supplement and illustrate whatever facts appear in any authentic history embracing the same era and region. These waifs of Legendary lore snatched from oblivion by the venerable Old Trailer cannot fail to be appreciated by a discerning public. The author of this work is one of the most profound thinkers, jurists and classcal scholars of the age; and is undoubtedly the most able man now living to write up such a work. It contains a fund of

"What Constitutes Hell ?"

Says Rev. Wm. T. Clark, "What constitues hell? Simply what would make a hell, and we know what hell consists of in this life by experience. A free human spirit has before it a choice. If it choose obedience to law it will be happy. If it choose disobedience it will be miserable. Virtue builds heaven. Vice builds hell. Love for God will clothe a soul with glowing peace. A refusal to admit the Holy Spirit will fill the soul with increasing darkness. A man may begin a heaven anywhere. He may lay the foundation of a hell anywhere. There is not a soul in the universe out of accord with God that is not out of accord with all things else, and therefore in misery. And as soon as any soul has gone on in the choice of sin, in the practice of wrong far enough, he has surrounded himself with all the materials of hell. The very law of evil within blights and mildews all around it. It defiles the body; it delights in the corruption of others; it destroys everywhere the beautiful despises and abuses the good; it turns flowers into weeds; it develops discord, hate, lust and crime. The bell to fear is the fire a man may kindle within himself. He may go so far in his love of evil and hatred of good that all the universe is transformed into a hell. Heaven would be the worse hell to him, and seems to be successful, but let him go about with a crestfallen air, and the very dogs in the street will set upon him. We must all have losses. Late frosts will nip the fruit in the bud, banks will break, investments will prove worthless, valuable horses will die and china vases will break, but all these calamities do not come together. The wise course to pursue, when one plan fails, is to form another; when one prop is knocked from under us, to fill its place with a substitute, and evermore count what is left rather than what is taken. When the final reckoning is made, if it appears that we have not lost the consciousness of our internal rectitude; if we have kept charity toward all men; if, by the various discipline of life, we have been freed from follies and confirmed in virtues, whatever we have lost, the great balance sheet will be in your

The Christian at Work says:-"We want no more doll-babies in the pulpit, priding themselves on their lily-white fingers and pale cheeks, and dying glances through the rim of gold spectacles, but we want stalwart men. We know in the ministry of the Presbyterian church a clergyman who carries his cat with him when he goes off to spend the summer vacation. He cannot bear to leave the poor creature behind. His over fond congregation have stroked all the vigor out of him, and now he in turn strokes his cat. There is nothing more revolting to us than religious namby-pambyism.

Rev. Dr. Fallows, paster of St. Paul's Episcopal church, of Chicago, thinks skeptics have more rights which believers are bound to respect. He says: "Condemn no man for not thinking as you think. Let every one enjoy the full and free liberty of thinking for himself. Let every man use his own judgement, since every man must give an account of himself to Gud. Abhor every approach in any kind or degree to the spirit of persecution. If you cannot reason or persuade a man into the truth, never attempt to force him into it."

There is even an irrational rever-ence for the Almighty Father of us all. We can, and many of us do, place Him so far away from us in His inaccessible majesty, we clothe Him with such attributes, we mingle so much fear with our love, that we lose sight entirely of our filial rale. lose sight entirely of our filial relation to Him—lose sight of the tender, loving, sympathetic, Fatherly Being, whom the Master has revealed to us. -Dr. Holland.

There are 380 places of worship in New York city, with an average seating capacity of 700, while the actual average attendance from Sunday to Sunday, in each church is only between 300 and 400. There is therefore church accomodation for barely one-fourth of the population, while, but little more than one-eighth are regular church goers.

If a civil word or two will render a man happy, he must be wretched in-deed who will not give them, to him. Such a disposition is like lighting another man's candle by one's own, which losses none of its brilliancy by what the other gains.

Golden Words.

The habit of looking on the bright side is invaluable. Men and women who are evermore reckoning up what they want rather than what they have counting the difficulties in the way, instead of contriving means to overcome them—are almost certain to live on corn bread, fat pork and salt fish, and sink to unmarked graves. The world is sure to smile upon a man who seems to be successful, but let him go said Mortgage as lying and being in the county of Berrien and State of Michigan, being the undivided three fiths (8-5) of the south-west quarter of the south-east quarter of section number fitteen (15) and the north half of the north half of the north west quarter of the north half of the north west quarter of section number twenty-two (22), all in township number seven (7) south, and range number eighteen (18) west, and containing fifty acres, will be sold at public auction or vendue, at the front door of the Court House, in the village of Berrien Springs, in said County of Berrien.

Sometime ago a man was charged in the Glascow Police Court with steal ing a herring barrel. After the charge had been proven, the principal accuser addressed the magistrate: "Deed Bailie, the man at the bar is a great rogue; the stealing of the barrel is nothing to some of his tricks. "He stole my signboard last week; and what does your honor think he did wi't?" "That would be hard for me to say." "Well, sir, I'll tell ye. He brought it into my ain shop, wi' my ain name on't, and offered to sell me't, and he said he thought it wad be of

While stopping over night at a farm house out West, a traveller was astonished to see his hostess walk up to her husband every fifteen minutes and box his ears and give his hair a pult. In the morning the guest, seeing the wo-man alone, asked an explanation of her strange conduct, and her reply was: "You see stranger, the old man and me's been fightin' for ten years to see who shall boss this 'ereranch, and I have just got him cowed, but if I should let up on him for a day he would turn on me again, and my work would all be for nothing."

A boy of five years was "playing railroad" with his sister of two and a half. Drawing her upon a footstool, he imagined himself both the engine and the conductor. After imitating the puffing of the steam, he stopped and called out "New York," and in a moment after "Patterson," and then "Philadelphia," His knowledge of towns was now exhausted, and the next place he cried "Heaven." His little sister said eagerly, "Tom, I des I'll det out here.'
