Poetry. A STRANGE FANCY.

BY EBEN E. REXFORD There's a strange old superstition, Which the years have handed down; No matter where you are going,
In by way, or busy town—
If you feel a shiver, more chilly
Than the Winter's breath e'er gave,

Somebody's feet are treading On the spot where'll be your grave. Yesterday, in the bustle Of the busy, crowded street,
A shiver, a strange, cold shiver,
Went over me, head to feet!
And I thought of that old, old fancy,
And paused in the crowded way,
To wonder whose feet were treading
Over my grave that day.

My grave ! I stood still in the bustle Of the crowd that went and came, And fancied I saw, deep carved
On a grave's white stone my name! The grass grew all about it,
And the sun, like the kiss of God,

Touched all the little white daisies That grew on my grave's green sod. "Of what are you thinking 2" I started
At the voice of the friend who spoke,
And his words, from the world about me,
The spell of dreaming broke!
I answered him, smiling softly,

To see the start he gave, At my answer to his question, "I am thinking about my grave!" Where will it be, I wonder?
On the stone at its head,
What year and day will be carved,

To tell when I joined the dead? The thought has come over and over, To haunt me, since yesterday, And it runs like a minor cadence, Through all the words I say.

Story.

THE TORY'S WARD.

CHAPTER I. Bright and early one hazy morning in the brown leaf month, October, 1777, a courier drew rein before General Howe's headquarters in Philadelphia. The coal black courser which he strode was reeking with foam, and the man drow a breath of relief as he sprang to the ground and tossed the lines to a sable groom who made his appearance. Entering the grand old colonial mansion, over which waved the flag of St. George, the bearer of the dispatchcs found Howe conversing with several generals, and at the same time dictating orders to his private secretary who wrote at a handsome marble table.

"Well," began the commander, suddenly starting toward the courier, whose face declared him the bearer of startling tidings: "What brings you thither so early in the day?"

"I come from Saratoga," answered the messenger, respectfully saluting the general, "and I have the regret to report that General Burgoyne and his army are prisoners of war." Howe started back and an oath fell from his lips. "This is an unlooked for disaster." remarked one of the officers. "It must be remedied and that speedily."

"By Jove! it shall," cried Howe, like a man suddenly and fully aroused from a lethargy. If we can keep our own secrets, and effectually bar this city against the rebel spies, we can retrieve our fortunes, and put a speedy end to this rebellion." "But, general, can we keep their spies out of Philadelphia?" meekly asked his adjutant general, a handsome, smooth faced young man of six and twenty.

"We can if we will," answered Howe assuredly, and then his voice dropped to a lower tone. "We must strike at once to inspire confidence among the troops. I will now teach our city rebels what it is to secrete rebel spies. They are doing it every day, and that before our very eyes. Hereafter we will not correspond with the enemy on the capture of a spy. We will pull him up and acquaint Washington of his death. Gentlemen, I summon you to a council of war to be held in this room to-night. I would have you all here by eight; do not fail to act promptly. We must wipe out the disgrace at Saratoga, and that, as Knyphausen has said, speedily." A few minutes later the general officers had departed, and Howe was closeted with the fatigued courier. Major Wollern, the adjutant general, lighted a cigarette and enveloped in a cloud of snowy smoke, strolled leisurely from the room. "I wonder where Emma is this morning?" he murmur-ed, glancing about, as he stepped upon an elegant veranda. "No doubt she is dreaming of her brilliant victory last night. Never before played I euchre so poorly: Had I been playing for hearts, I would have lost."

"Perhaps Major Wollern played for hearts after all, last night." The silvery voice caused the soldier to start, and a deep blush crimsoned his temples. He did not dream that his words could reach ears save his own. He looked quickly, therefore, and beheld a lovely young girl gathering honeysuckle seeds at the further end of the porch. She did not appear to notice him; but there was a mischievous smile about her deep, red lips, which grew broader as he advanced towards her. "So Miss Emma, you would taunt me with my defeat," he said pleasantly, pausing at her side and looking into her laughing eyes. "Well, I argue that I played miserably last night, honce your victory."

"However well Major Wollern plays, can euchre him," she answered boastingly. No doubt Burgoyne played

"Then you have heard the news," he said, interrupting her. "Yes, this morning. "Yes; we had expected much from Burgoyne, and Clinton was marching to his aid. Miss Emma, we are not going to smart under defeat long,' continued the Major, growing excited; "to-night we mature plans that will

"And at the head of an army."

"True, Miss Emma, I am not going" to prophesy again; but the rebellion will terminate before St. Valentine's" "Not going to prophesy again, major, ha! ha! ha!" and her clear laugh rang out melodiously on the bracing autumn air.

"The final triumph of Gonfalon, of St. George, is but a question of time. But you will not play to-night?" "Regretfully I say I cannot," he answered. "Heaven knows I would rather serve Venus than Mars." She did not reply, but returned to the frosted vines again, and for several minutes he aided her honeysuckle harvest. Howe suddenly called his adjutant from the beauty's side.

"Major, can you remain a moment from that girl's side?" said the general, putting on a stern face. "I brought you here from England to serve Mars, not Cupid; our king prefers fighting to love making; and besides, the girl isn't as true as steel." Major Argent Wollern, who was looking at the floor, and crimsoning under the general's reprimand, started at the last words, and the pallor of indignation drove the blushes away.

"If every soul in Philadelphia was as loyal as hers, your excellency, we would not fear for treason in the camp," he cried. "Her heart is as true as the steel in this blade," and the youthful adjutant drew his trusty Damascus I cannot sword, and bent it until the glistening speak?" point touched the jeweled hilt. "I know Emma Hunter; you know her guardian; he would have no traitors bout him." "Forgive me, my dear Wollern," said Howe, relaxing his stern expression, and smiling as he came forward. "I was merely trying your good nature. I do not doubt Miss Hunter's loyalty, nor her guardian's. But I have use for you. Here, sit down and listen to dictations.' The young man sheathed his sword and a moment later was writing busily at the table. Howe paced the room, dictating to the adjutant, who, ever and anon glanced through the window and afar to the south, lightningat Emma Hunter, half concealed by strange sight for autumn-was flashthe dying climbers. By entered Philadelphia, old Monjoy Hall was the first to fling open his doors wide to its generals, and Howe rewarded his loyalty by making his noble Washington's late occupation of the Quaker City, the Tory had given the Americans much uneasiness by his fearless devotion to the king and his boisterous tongue. Washington at last got tired of the Tory, and expelled him from the city; but with the British troops he returned, and lived in the element he loved, fearless and independent. "So Burgoyne has surrendered," murmured Emma Hunter, as she sat in her chamber assorting the pretty black seed she had gathered. "At last a northern wind has blown some hearts some good, and the cause of liberty is striking toward success. God speed the day of Washington's great triumph. But I must look to my papers; really I have forgotten to lock my drawers.'' She started forward suddenly and paused before an antique and elaborately carved escritoire. Her face was pale as ashes; but the color returned when she opened the tiny drawer, and put her hand on a pack of yellowish papers. Carefully she unbound them and looked them over. One read thus: "Admit the bearer, a true patriot, in our lines. GEORGE WASHINGTON." These brief words were enough to hang the Tory's ward, and her life would be worth but little, if she was caught with these papers in her possession.

CHAPTER II.

At the time of which I write, Indian summer clothed the city of Brotherly Love in her beautiful robes, and the soft gleaming caused the poetic the trees, and the stately Delaware reflected like a mirror the keels of many boats. The spacious gardens attached to the Hall mansion looked upon the river, and when the beautiful gloaming came, Major Wollern found himself seated on a rustic settee in a delightful arbor. He was looking into the face of the Tory's ward, who was straining cerulean eyes over a piece of delicate embroidery. "What are you thinking about. Miss Emma?" he asked, smiling. She started and looked up.

He rose to his feet. "It shall wave there soon," he said with determination. "I will place it there with my own hands, and I will, please heaven,

A minute later they deserted the arbor and re-entered the mansion, where they separated. Major Wollern sought General Howe's room, where the council had already assembled. Emma Hunter glided to the stables, and with her own fair hand caparisoned a black horse which snorted to be free. The sky was dark overhead, the room below, but could catch no intelligible sounds. The council lasted until ten o'clock, and when the girl

Half an hour later the Tory's lovely ward, attired in a close fitting suit of black, swept like a specter to the stables, and led the sable horse through the garden to a narrow road that led down the river bank. Without assistance she mounted the saddle, and spoke gently to the steed, which started forward like a thunderbolt. Never a word the heroic girl breathed as she rode away, but she listened for the storn "Halt!" or the whiz of a bullet in the dark. Fortune favored her.

Emma Hunter turned away, sick at beart, when she learned the gallant fellow's fate. She loved him—she could not deny it now; but he was gone. But time brought wondrous changes in Philadelphia. On the 8th of June in the following year, the British evacuated the city; and when the young soldier who accompanied our heroine from Fort Mercer marched down its streets, flushed with victory, she gave him her hand. Howe never knew that his headquarters sheltered a lover of liberty, and when peace came to America's blood-drenched soil, Washington acknowledged, in fitting testimonials, the aid rendered him during the patriot struggle by the Tory's Ward.

THE KISS. The singing school had been dismissed,
And at the vestry door
I offered her my arm that night;
I had not dared before.

Her small, white hand upon my sleeve, Oh! I can feel it still; It sent through every nerve and vein
A sweet electric thrill.

We hurrisd not, we loitered on, Of love we never spoke.
But through the trifles which we talked
Love's undertone unbroke.

We stopped before her father's gate,

Her brown curls on her breast; One hand was gently clasped in mine, Her form I closely pressed. Her upturned face—sweet confidence— The lovelight in her eyes

Shone chaste and pure, and brighter than
The moonlight from the skies. And as I looked my shame dissolved, Our lips met—and, oh! bliss! Immortal love's ecstatic flame

Had focus in that kiss! Evil and few that patriarch's days, Yet he was old and gray; But I had touched eternal joy Though I had died next day.

Don't Quarrel,

People talk of lover's quarrels as ather pleasant episodes—probably be cause they are not quarrels at all. She pouts; he kisses. He frowns; she coaxes. It is half play, and they know it. Matrimonial quarrels are another thing. I doubt seriously if married people ever truly forgive each gloss it over; they kiss and make up; the wound apparently heals, but only, as some of those horrible wounds given in battle do, to break out again at some unexpected moment. The man who has sneered and said cruel things to a sensitive woman never has her whole heart again. The woman who has uttered reproaches to a man can never be taken to his bosom with the same tenderness as before those words were spoken. The two people who must never quarrel are husband and wife. One may fall out with kinsmen, and make up, and be friends again. The tie of blood is a strong one, and affection may return after it has flown away; but love, once banished, is a dead buried thing. The heart may ache, but it is with hopelessness. It may be impossible to love anybody else, but is more impossible to restore the old idol to its empty niche. For wits, for a moment's self assertion, two people have often been made miserable for life. For, whatever there may be before, there are no lover's quarrels after marriage. Comical Errors. Mr. Washington Moon has written work on bad English. Some of the errors which he singles out are decidedly amusing. For instance:

A furrier lamenting, in an advertisement, the tricks played on the pub lic by unprincipled men in his own trade, "earnestly requests ladies to Psalm. The middle verse is the Sth bring to him their skins, which he verse of the 118th Psalm. The 21th promises shall be converted into muffs and boas." Another advertisement ran thus: "Two sisters want washing." Here must have been a strange long tail." Better, more amusing, more instruc-tive, and more credible is the following illustration of the inevitable ambiguities involved in accurate language. One gentleman observed to another: "I have a wife and six children in New York, and I never saw I understand you to say that you had a wife and six children living in New York, and you had never seen one of them?" "Yes; such is the fact." Here followed a still longer pause in the conversation, when the interroga-

It is the wearisome music lesson, toiled over by the scholar with neither taste nor ear; the drudgery of committing to memory long lists of names, which to the learner are only names; the prosing geo graphical lesson, where the most interesting scenes call up no pictures for the imagination to dwell upon; the historical lecture, where, instead of living and breathing men and women, the student is cheated with the mere dry bones of some historical epitome. The Portland Oregonian tells this ghastly story: "Yesterday, while Chief Lappens was walking leisurely up Alder street, in the vicinity of some Chinese quarters, he was surprised to observe the somewhat ghastly spectacle of a pair of human hands dangling by a string from the second story window of a Chinese tenement. The officer entered the building and ordered the occupant to take the hands in out of the gaze of the public. He then demanded an explanation of the affair, and was told that the hands belonged to the body of a Chinaman who died some time ago at Lewiston. According to an established custom, the body was sent down to Portland for the purpose of shipping it back to China. When the body reached here it became necessary to cut it up into pieces to-day, so that it might occupy the least possible space. The hands, after being severed from the arms at the wrists, were hung up in the sun to dry."

Feeding Horses With Bits in Their Mouths.

Dr. E. B. Middlebrook, Veterinary Surgeon, in reply to a communication from the President of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, says: "Put a string, or a bit of wire in your own mouth, and after securing it there, attempt to cut even the most simple food. It will interfere with the proper flow of the saliva, which acts on the food during the process of chewing; it will interfere with the proper separation of the food before it enters the stomach; the constant friction of the bit while the animal is feeding, acts slowly but surely on the enamel of the teeth, and thus causes the horse to lose the use of his teeth long before nature fixes the limit, and thus makes him old before his time, and man loses his valuable services years before there is any necessity for it. You are aware that men or animals die when deprived of the use of the tongue; now a horse with the bit in his mouth, while feeding, is like an animal with only a piece of his tongue. It is true he can chew and feed, but this is only done partially, imperfectly and inefficiently. It is therefore cruel, inhuman, and should be stopped by the strong arm of the law of your society. If the bridle is short, the bit comes in contact with the Bicuspids, and not only destroys mastication, but eventually the enamel of the teeth, if long, the bit may pass between the incisors and the molars, and allows mastication, but only of an impartial nature. I may be told that spirited animals are frightened by removing the bridle while in harness. The remedy is very simple; unbuckle the bridle on one side, and drop the at Indianapolis recently, the appeal of Fayette Lodge, of Jonesville, vs. the Grand Lodge of Michigan, was taken up and decided. It will be remembered by all the members of the Order that the Grand Lodge of Michgan enacted a law that all the lodges in the State should pay the Grand Lodge the sum of 50 cents per capita, semi-annually, for the purpose of building the institute at Lansing. Fa-yette Lodge refused to pay the assessment, declaring the act unconstitu-tional. For this the Grand Master took their charter and effects away from them. On appeal to the Grand Lodge of this State, the Grand Master was sustained in his action. The lodge then took an appeal from the decision of the Grand Lodge of this State to the Grand Lodge of the United States, which body has reversed the decision of the State Lodge and ordered that the Grand Master shall return their charter and effects; and it is further ordered that the G. L. of Michigan be restrained from collecting the said assessment from all lodges, but all lodges can pay what they wish voluntarily. This will be a bad blow to the friends of the institute. but what exact effect it will have will not be known until February next.

Almost a Massacre. There has been a narrow escape from a repetition of the Modoc massacre, only on a much vaster scale, pending the negotiation between the United States Commissioners and the Sioux Indians for the sale or lease of the Black Hills territory. There is little doubt that a deliberate plan was formed for the massacre of all the whites, including the two companies of United States troops engaged in this negotiation, and that it only failed of execution through the heroic action of one of the Chiefs called Young-Man-Afraid-of-His-Horses. This young man may be afraid of his horses, but he was evidently not afraid of the great mass of Indian devils who had determined to massacre in cold blood a number of peaceful men who had come to treat with them as if they were intelligent human beings. While it is not likely that the intend-F. M. Burson, station agent at the ed massacre was premeditated by all gotiations, it is very certain that they would have permitted it except for the intervention of this single Chief. The various tribes must have been informed of the purpose of the treacherous few hundred who had undertaken the job; for all refused to complete the usual circle in which such negotiations are conducted, and persistently declined to occupy the segment which had been left open for the raid upon the Commissioners. Even the inter preters and half-breeds seem to have been warned of the purpose, for they also withdrew from the opening and left the way free for the treacherous savages to pounce upon their victims. The hostile Indians began their operations by crowding out the two companies of troops, and it was intended, upon a preconcerted signal, to shoot them down as a preliminary to the massacre of the unarmed whites. Had a single shot been fired, it is almost certain that the sight of the white men's blood would have maddened the many thousands of Indians present, and led to a general massacre, from which not one white man would have escaped. This frightful tragedy was only averted by the exceptional honor and accidental popularity of one young > his warriors as a special police. This, all but tragic incident of the Black Hills negotiation, developed a species of treachery blacker and more nfamous than that of the red men who planned the massacre—the treachery of the Indian traders. They are a class of vampires who are mainly responsible for the indignities and frauds practiced upon the red men, and consequently for the intense hatred which the Indians continue to cherish against the whites in spite of the kindest treatment from the Government. The statement is made that these Indian traders in the Sioux country dealt out ammunition among the hostile Indians the very day before the confer: ence at which the massacre was to take place, thus rendering possible and encouraging the treachery that had been planned. These fellows are worse than the harpies that follow armies to plunder the dead and rob the dying. They are the men who exchange whisky for blankets, fire-arms for bounties, and bullets for annuities. and thrive and make their money by pandering to the worst passions of the savage nature. The plan of the Black Hills massacre shows that these Indian traders will not postpone their money-making greed even to save the lives of men engaged in serving the Government. Their conduct is infinitely more revolting than that of the Indians, for the latter are savages, while the traders pretend to be civilized. There is but one way to rid the Indian service of these harpies, and that is by transferring the control of Indian affairs to the War Department. where it properly belongs. There are mere traces of gold so far, and not enough to warrant any further negotiations in view of the unheard-of demands of the Indians. It is simply ridiculous that the sum of $70,000,000, in addition to other annual bounties of food, stock, houses, furniture, etc., should be even mentioned as a price for the barren hills from which the Indians are asked to retire. The best thing the Government can do is to spare all further expense, retire from the negotiation, and let the Indians have their barren Eldorado. - Chicago Tribune.

Yesterday had been appointed by the Catholics of Toronto as the closing day of a series of religious observances commemorative of events inimical to the interests and opinions of Orangemen and Young Britons. It had been apprehended that the part of these observances consisting in jubilant journeyings from church to church would elicit violent and contumctious demonstrations from certain of the populace, and these apprehensions were verified. As the procession moved it was greeted with volleys of stones and some pistolfiring at every corner. A number of people were killed, and many were wounded, the faithful and courageous police of the city being reckoned most numerously among the latter, but the attendance on a paralled street of a large body of troops curbed the rabble, and did much to minimize the deplorable results of disgraceful exhi-Chief, who was brave enough to use bition of ignorant intolerance. - Chi-

Detroit, Mich., Oct. 4.-A large public meeting was held to-night at the Opera House, attended by leading citizens and business men, without distinction of party or creed, which was intended as a demonstration against the effort to permit the openng of saloons in this city on Sunday. It was addressed by a large number of citizens, and adopted resolutions declaring that its members would support no man for office not opposed to Sunday desceration, and that if existing parties did not put up suitable candidates they would put independent nominees in the field on this issue. It adjourned after appointing an executive committee of nine to act in the

He expressed a belief in the genuineness of the pictures, and, what will seem surprising in a man so shrewd and well acquainted with the tricks and humbugs of the world, declared he could not see how spirits could be photographed if they were not genuine. Another witness testified that Ward had repeatedly expressed his belief in spirits to him. and that he had shown him flowers in member of his family. One son was not included among the flowers, and Ward imputed illegitimacy to the child because the medium had not included him in this remarkable flower-piece. A third witness, who was not only a medium but a clairvoyant, testified that Ward came to see her and consulted the spirit of Jacob M. Origin of Chronic Diseases. BY DRS. PRICE & BREWER.

It needs no argument to show that blood is continually forming from the food we eat, and that the blood thus formed is constantly being expended to form muscle, bone, cartilage, &c., and all the solids comprising the Human Body, and that these solids are as constantly decomposing and wasting away, the most common observer daily witnesses this fact. Hence it necessarily follows that if the blood be not in good condition, it is utterly impossible for the blood to produce healthy solids, and consequently diseased action of the muscular and nervous system are the result. If the sap of a tree be not good it cannot produce healthy foliage and fruit. We unequivocally declare, that all dis-

If you enquire of an individual why he does not do something for his complaint, the most invariable reply will be: "I don't know what to do; I have tried everything; I am discouraged; I think I can never regain my health." This experience, though dearly bought, should not be lost; it should cause deep reflection, and ardent thought. Many that have tried all the various systems of treating disease, and almost the whole list of Advertised Medicines, have found the means of restoration to health, and now live in the blest enjoyment of it.

Diseases of the Lungs, Throat, Liver, Heart, Kidneys, Scrofula, and all other complaints must necessarily yield where a medicine properly prepared and adapted to the care is employed, of which we daily have the most incontestable proofs. The successful mode of treatment in the curability of disease, and the anti-poisonous character of our medicines, composed entirely from articles from the Vegetable Kingdom, have been the means of restoring many to their lost health. Our practice has been before the nublic for many years. We treat exclusively Ohronic Diseases, and invite the sick to call upon us; our advice in all cases will be gratuitously given, our opinions unbiused; no expense incurred without there s reasonable hopes of a cure.

We shall make our visits regularly for rears, and will be for consultation upon all liseases of the lungs, throat, heart, nerves, blood, etc., on our next visit, at Niles, Reading House, Saturday and Sunday, the 30th and 31st of October.

The new clerk of the St. Joseph hotel walked off with the loose change and the keys of the house Wednesday night and the irresistable conclusion is that he had decamped. He came to the hotel a week ago last Sunday, registering as H. Morgan, of Hartford Conn. He stated that he was an old hotel man, that he was out of money, and would be glad of employment. Needing assistance, Mr. Galloway set him at work, and he seemed to understand so thoroughly what required to be done, and made himself so generally useful in a quiet way, that he won the good opinion of all about the place. On leaving with the hunting party on Monday, Mr. Galloway intrusted him with the keys and the management of the hotel, subject to supervision of Mrs Galloway. All went well until last night, when he left saying that he would go up to the 3 o'clock train and note the arrivals. He was among the departures. He carried off the money from the cigar drawer, receipts from the house not paid over, and $5 given him by Mrs. Galloway during the day with which to pay for supplies, probably altogether $25. The man was well dressed, about fifty years of age, with gray hair and a heavy gray moustache, and in manner appeared altogether trust-worthy.

A direct issue on the question of sectarian schools has been made in New Haven, Connecticut. The former Board of Education, at the demand of the Catholic members, struck out a paragraph in their annual report praising the public school system. The Catholic members declared that this was a reflection on the parochial schools. The question was taken into the election of the new school board. and the public school ticket won by a vote of two to one in a total vote of over four thousand. In all probability this majority was obtained by the aid of liberal Catholics who believe in the public school system; who are enlightened and patriotic citizens, and who owe and acknowledge an allegiance to the governments of this country and not to a foreign potentate. This is likely to be the result wherever this public school issue is thrust upon the public, and the Roman Catholic hierarchy are therefore foolish in challenging public sentiment on this subject .- Detroit Post.

WE have forborne for some time past, mentioning the trouble in School District No. 6, but as the recent complications are about to be disentangled by a division of said District, we thought best to bring some things to the surface.

The

Soon after the burning of the school house, a violent and bitter strife arose in relation to the division of the District, and the contention was carried to such an extent that it became a personal matter in many instances, where crimination and recrimination were resorted to as a subterfuge for the several positions taken by prominent parties of both factions. Throughout the summer this warfare has been waged with a spirit of stubbornness by both sides, meanwhile converts were won from one side to the other, and back again. Finding that the contest would be protracted, another school meeting was held and the sum of $800 was voted for the purpose of erecting a school house. and at the same time the division party proceeded by subscription, to erect a neat, substantial brick building on the river road. Failing to decide upon a site for the new District School House, the School Board were notified, and on Friday, Sept. 24th, the Board visited and located the site for the new school house, on a lot adjoining the land of Marcus Carpenter. A final netition has now been presented to the Board, action upon which will probably be taken on Saturday, Oct. 9th, at which time the District will undoubtedly be divided. This, we hope, will end the matter. While we do not advocate the division of the District. as the precedent may be a bad one for some of the neighboring Districts, who, for supposed or real grievances may cultivate the spirit of secession, and at any time lay claim to similar excuses, as presented by District No. 6, still we say that the division party have done their duty when they joined in the vote to raise money for the house in the place of the one burned, and a fine of from $25 to $100, with im- | will have exonerated themselves from prisonment, if not paid, for ten to nine- the strife when said house is completed and paid for.

Fortunately by the aid of telegrams and detectives the same was returned to him next morning, but too late to make close observations. Several changes have taken place lately. At the Wolverine Handle

Factory, Mr. Montross has concluded to carry on his business alone. Mr. Smith has therefore stepped down and out. It is a source of congratulation to all here that Mr. Montross remains with his capital and enterprise and business qualifications. He will continue the business which he has hitherto so successfully conducted. His absence would be a sad event for Galien. Another separation has taken place. AMONG THE TOMBS. Buchanan, Oct. 4th, 1875. EDITOR RECORD :- Being in Niles to-day, with an hour or two leisure, I concluded to take a look at the cemetery. It is located in a quiet, secluded place, just east of the old fair grounds, and is covered with scattering white oak and hickory trees of considerable size. A small-stream of water runs across the south-east corner of the cemetery, which is used, in a dry time, to water the lots that are situated on much higher ground. The stream is damned up so as to form a beautiful, circular pond of water, some fifty or sixty feet in diameter. From this pond the water is conducted to a to a reservoir that stands up a piece from the ground on a hill. From this reservoir the water is, or may be, conducted in gas pipes all over the

In the more modern portion of the cemetery the lots are laid out with considerable taste, and the old sexton was busy with scythe and rake, trying to slick up and make things look attractive. The poor lost wretch from a drunkard's grave. Ah, yes! he is drunk, but I pity him so, For the is friendless, and poor, and old; It is warm, the ram will not chill, I know— "Twere the same if freezing cold.

I look at his foul and bloated lips, §
At his hands—! shameful, and sad to see Then down to the little white hand I hold, At the little white feet on my knee. I know that a mother tender and true, Blest the lost one's life, when a baby, too.

See him lying prone and helpless there, The beating rain on his long white hair.

My fingers twine in my darling's hair,
While the summer rain falls soft and still;
I look at the poor old wanderer there, And weep despite my will.

I weep for the mother who bared her breast To lull that form to its childish rest.

I know the fingers were tender as mine,
That toyed, like mine, with his golden hair—
It once was golden, I see the shine
Of the faded spleudor there,
Ah! where is the hand and dear white breast
That soothed him once at his infant rest?

Dear little eyes so blue and deep,
Soft little hands, so plump and fair—
Let me close the one to a dreamless sleep,
And fold the others where
They never shall move on earth again,

Than see them with such shameful stain

Mothers of earth, when we rear our sons.
With such loving and tender pride,
How little we know where feet will stray In the paths of the world so wide. Tis a merciful hand that holds the screen 'Twixt the baby days, and life's closing scene.

Men Crusading.

We rejoice in the good works of our brothers as given in the following from the Uhristian Standard: As one hundred and fifty of the delegates of the Y. M. C. A. were on their way to Richmond, the following circular was received by them, from the hands of a young man passing through the cars, just as they were nearing the Milford Station, Va.: "LOOK OUT FOR THE MILFORD SALOON, situated at the Milford Depot, on the R. F. & P. R. R., forty miles from Richmond, forty-two miles from Quantico, and twenty-two miles from Fredricksburg. It is furnished with BEST WINES, LIQUORS, Cigars, Confectionaries, Soda-water, Lemonade, Canned fruits, Pickles, etc. Passengers have ample time to refresh themselves at the Milford Station. Also, Liquors and Wines bottled to suit the travelers.

JHON W. GILL, Prop'r." One of the delegates, upon receiving it immediately arose and followed him through the cars, giving to Christians a little Dublin tract, entitled, "A word to Christians," and to the unconverted, one intitled, "I have got it:" The conductor receiving it, replied, "I wish I had!" Several were spoken with, and urged to attend to the matter now. At the Milford drinking saloon several of the delegates engaged in efforts to counteract the influence of this respectable drink ing den; also gave the printed page to those behind the counter.

Upon the return trip the same cir-cular was distributed to passengers, announcing the approach to the Mil ford rum-shop, and one of our Philadelphia delegates said to him: "We'll go into competition with you to-day!" and followed him through the train, requested the delegates to join in singing in front of the Milford saloon.

Over one hundred delegates were upon the platform, and immediately struck up the beautiful hymn:

"Jesus the water of Life will give, Freely, freely, freely; Jesus the water of Life will give, Freely to them that ask Him. Then was sung with spirit: "Hold the Fort, for I am coming." Followed by the new song:

"'Tis the message of God, full salvation to give,
Unto him who on Jesus His Son will believe;
Hallelujah, 'tis done, I believe on the Son,
I am saved by the blood of the Crucified One."

At this point the train started. A few little books were given to the crowd, and the train moved away 'midst the singing of the words:
"There's a part in that chorus for you and me And the theme of our praises forever shall be Hallelujah, 'tis done, etc.

- Woman's Temperance Union.

Intemperance. Intemperance destroys not only the health, but inflicts ruin upon the innocent and helpless, for it invades the family and social circle, and spreads we and sorrow all around; it cuts down youth in all its vigor, manhood in its strength, and age in its weakness; it breaks the father's heart, bereaves the doting mother, extinguishes natural affections, erases conjugal love, blots out filial attachment, blights parental hope, and brings down mourning age in sorrow to the grave. It produces weakness not strength, sickness not health, death not life. It makes wives widows, children orphans, fathers friendless.

and all of these at last beggars. It produces fevers, feeds rheumatism, nurses the gout, welcomes epidemics, consumptions, cherishes dyspepsia, and encourages apoplexy and paralytic affections. It covers the land with idleness and poverty, disease and crime; it fills our jails, supplies our alms-houses, and furnishes subjects for our asylums; it engenders controversies, fosters quarrels, and cherishes riots; it condemns law, spurns order; it crowds peniten-tiaries, and furnishes the victims for the scaffold; it is the life-blood of the gambler, the food of the counterfeiter, the prop of the highwayman, and the support of the midnight incendiary and assassin, the friend and com-panion of the brothel. It counte-nances the liar, respects the thief, and osteems the blasphemer; it violates obligations, reverences fraud, and honors infamy; it defames benevolence, hates love, scorns virtue, and slanders innocence; it incites the father to butcher his innocent children, helps the husband to kill his wife, and aids the child to grind the parricidal ax: It burns man, comsumes woman, detests life, curses God and despises heaven; it suborns, witnesses, nurses perjury, defiles the jury-box, and stains the judicial ermine; it bribes votes, corrupts elections, poisons our institutions, and endangers our government; it degrades the legislature, and dishonors the statesman. It brings shame not honor, terror not safety; ness; and now; as with the maleyo. I Buchanan, Mich.

lence of a fiend, it calmly surveys its frightful desolation, and insatiate with havoc, it poisons felicity, kills peace, ruins morals, blights confidence, slays reputation and wipes out national honor; then curses the world, and laughs at the ruin it has inflicted upon the human race.
