THE undersigned return their sincere thanks to their many friends who were assembled and represented at their house on Tuesday evening of this week. We regard such gatherings and gifts not only in the light of a personal compliment, but as expressive of the interest of our friends in those great spiritual truths and principles which we represent. Such kindly congratulations and offerings inspire the heart of every pastor with new zeal and devotion in his great work. They honor the Master, and their influence is most happy, not only on those immediately concerned, but on society at large. Of the rich delicacies provided, there was "enough and to spare," thus illustrating the fullness of those provisions which the great Giver has made for all, and which, with loving open hands, he holds out to all. In addition to everything else that was pleasant and desirable, our friends left behind them for every forty dollars in money. May the Lord deal with them both now and forever as they have dealt with us.

LIGHTNING.—Lightning struck a wire clothes line at Mrs. Vanderhoff's place, on Portage Prairie, during the storm last Friday night. The line was about one hundred feet in length, with one end attached to one of the posts of the porch and the other to a Lombardy poplar tree, both of which were somewhat shattered. The most peculiar part of the whole affair is that about sixty feet of the wire is nowhere to be found. Whether it was melted or entirely consumed by the current is not known. A few lights of glass were broken, but otherwise no serious damage was done.

COUNTY PRESS.

[St. Joseph Republican.] For stealing grapes from Robt. Van Brunt, a Niles road fruit grower, the Niles Police, of this place, were taken before his Honor, the village Justice, on Monday, and fined $5 and costs. Last Saturday evening Mrs. Kate Helyar and her sister, Jennie Duncan, both of this place, were taken before and assaulted on the street by two Pipe-stone roustabouts, who afterward gave their names as Harlow Babcock and Lorenzo D. Pope. They were arrested and at the examination told the Court that they meant no harm. The Court didn't see it in, that light and fined them $50 each and costs.

[Niles Mirror.] The worst loss that has come to our knowledge was that of Anton Miller, residing about six miles east of this city. His barn was struck about 10 o'clock Friday night and set on fire. Five milk cows, three calves, one horse and a spring cow, 12 tons of hay, a set of harness, forks shovels, &c. were consumed by the flames, besides an oat straw stack. The total as follows: Five cows, $125; calves, $20; horse and colt, $10; hay, $24; shovels, $10; harness, $15; straw, $10; barn, $200. Total, $374. Insured in Berrien County Mutual for $300. At the depot lightning danced upon the wires connecting Westons and Rose, for a time off of connection with the instruments, the three were totally destroyed, and the building fired three times. There was a constant blaze of lightning and the operator was fearfully shocked many times yet he did not desert his post.

A Sleeping-Car Incident.

Indianapolis Journal. An amusing affair occurred on the Bee-Line train. The sleeping-car conductor and porter started from different ends of the train, and the conductor, running toward each other and the second which came from one of the middle berths. A woman was found sitting on the edge of her berth, half-dressed, and having just fully awakened. As soon as she could collect her senses she informed the conductor that a man had tried to get into her apartment. By the voice she had heard she recognized the man who had got on at Cleveland, and who had been trying to make himself agreeable to her in the evening, with indifferent success. The man in question was dragged from the car by the impatient passengers, who by that time had taken in the situation. He explained that he had been up after a drink, and that on returning the motion of the car had pitched him into the berth. The passengers thought his explanation rather thin, and the young lady was evidently of the same opinion, for she reached back under her pillow and drew a silver-mounted revolver, which she held in her hand full of her head. "Now," she said, "do you or I will blow your brains out. I carry this revolver for such dirty, low-down fellows as you. Now, if that fellow couldn't get down on his knees too quick, and right there in the aisle he made an abject apology for his attempted outrage, promising to write to the lady's father next. Louis as an additional penance. The picture of the young woman pointing a revolver at the kneeling figure in a night-shirt, in front of her nervously shivering neighbor, with a dozen or more persons standing around, and as many heads thrust from adjacent berths, would have afforded a study for an artist. The practical conductor, fearing that he would shoot the man, stepped out and pointed the weapon up. The apology still went on, however, and the low wretch was kept on his knees for full five minutes. He then crawled into a forward car as quickly as he could. The young lady proved to be the daughter of a wealthy St. Louisian, and the man carried off as you have seen. It is impossible to learn the name of either. The lady took breakfast here, and the "wretch" sneaked out of sight in the crowd at the Union depot.

Dog and Badger Fight.

Reading Eagle. A highly-excited "badger match" took place near Shandonah, Schuyler county, N. Y. The match was between a bull terrier and a badger. The dog had to pull the badger out of an empty barrel to win. The dog weighed 21 pounds, but the badger tipped the scale at 17. The novelty of the match caused a great deal of interest. According to the arrangement, the dog should "draw" the badger in less than an hour. Neither of the animals were to be hurt, while they were together. The dog was looked on as a certain winner. The badger was a weak and insignificant-looking little animal, but his eyes gleamed maliciously and his long, pointed teeth snapped. He was placed on the ground. The badger, waddled contentedly into a barrel that was fastened on its side in one corner. When the dog was unchained he approached the barrel and sniffed at it suspiciously, but the badger's teeth snapped defiantly, and in a second "Dan" had entered and they were at it. The badger's tough hide and sharp teeth were his great assets, and as he used his teeth and braced himself firmly against the side of the barrel "Dan's" efforts to "draw" him did not meet with much success. After three or four minutes' desperate fighting the dog's teeth slipped and he fell outside of the barrel. Time being called against the dog bolted into the barrel like a shot, and after a brief struggle he was plucked almost to the mouth; but by a sudden wrench the courageous little animal freed itself and got back over "Dan" could prevent it. It was now a matter of time before the badger would defeat his resolute little opponent, and they were separated. The dog was allowed to breathe freely during the remaining fifteen minutes, and each time he approached pluckily to the fray; but when the time expired he was still struggling in the barrel, and the badger was no nearer "drawn" than he was when the struggle began. Five or six minutes more time was allowed the dog, but he failed to defeat his resolute little opponent, and they were separated. The dog was pretty badly handled and received much more punishment than he gets.

A Bone Cave.

The bone cave at Shandon, near Dungenway, in the county of Waterford, Ireland, was discovered about twenty years ago by the first Irish cave which produced animal remains of the pleistocene period. In it were found remains of the mammoth, horse, bear, wolf and reindeer. Another cave, recently discovered near Cappoquin, at a distance of about seven miles from the Shandon cave. This new cavern is of large size, and appears to have been occupied at a very remote period by bears and other animals. The skeletons are to be met with in the lower deposits of the floor. But the chief interest in this discovery rests in the fact that remains of the great Irish Megaceros, a deer of enormous size, were found in it, in conjunction with the bones of other deer and bears, and along with a polished greenstone celt (neolithic) and several stone rubbers. There were also some remains of a large deer, the results were as follows: There are persons who are capable of accurately distinguishing all principal tastes with the tongue alone; others perceive with the majority of the organs of the mouth, saltiness, acidity, but less distinctly bitterness. Others, again, can only with great difficulty distinguish tastes with the tip of the tongue; and, finally, there are individuals who cannot do this in the least.

How Bees Find their Location.

As early as the year 1857, while handling some bees in an incident came under my notice, which led me to believe that they are gifted with a faculty of knowing the exact direction to fly to reach the hive, writes L. J. Ames in American Bee Journal. When I was in the habit of carrying bees, it appears as an absolute necessity that they be enclosed with, for being urged on by an intense passion for the honey, they would fly in any direction, and in all directions, crossing and recrossing their line of flight, rambling for miles if be in its course, but as the satisfactory location then it rises thinking of home, and making one or more circles in the air "strikes a bee-line," and that course followed leads to the hive for sure. A great deal has been said about painting the hives various colors, so as to enable bees and particularly the queens, to know their hives. I am satisfied this is an assumption that will not be verified by fair experiments. It is the place or situation the hive is in that guides them in this matter. If anyone wishes to satisfy himself about it, let him when he wishes to obtain queen cells select the brightest colored hive he can find, and place it in an empty hive of an opposite color, and remove two to four frames of brood and bees, and after having arranged them and closed up the hives, connect the two hives by a narrow passage to either side and place the new one where it stood. If this is done in the middle of the day, as it should be, by evening he will find most of the gathering bees in the new hive. Reversing the hives next day will change these things again, and by a little practice can regulate the division of the working force almost as he wishes.

Close Quarters.

Hens seldom have too much room, but are often kept in such small quarters that they become unhealthy and unprofitable to their owners, says the Farm and Garden. Every house could be thoroughly cleaned every day, many more could be kept in the same building than if the droppings are allowed to accumulate till the air is so impure that it is necessary to have a room ten feet square is small enough for a dozen hens, and one twice as large would be better. A dozen hens are enough for a single flock, but if the space is small, and the droppings are not removed, the birds will be unhealthy and unprofitable. Breeding lots should not exceed fifteen or twenty, and only one cock should be allowed, in a poultry house. On dry land, a building with a roof of such a height that a bird partly underground, to make it warm in winter; but if the soil is damp do not sink the building into the soil. The small breeds, Leghorn and Game, are better for laying if eggs alone are the object, although, if winter layers are wanted, the larger breeds may do quite as well, while the chickens are worth much more in market. The best place we have ever used for laying hens in winter is a good, dry, warm, and well lighted cellar. The slight heat from the manure under the stables softens the severity of the temperature. Cover the floor with straw, and the hay chaff gives employment for the fowls in scratching. We have kept a hundred hens in such a cellar, 36x30 feet, with good success.

A Crowd Instructed.

A traveling tramp was yesterday trying to sell toothache-drops and corn-salve to a small crowd of people in the market square. As sales were slow, he thought to flatter the crowd by saying: "Gentlemen, I have traveled over 25,000 miles in this country, and I have seen all sorts of people, and I can tell you that you are the most intelligent and well-to-do people I have ever seen." He then proceeded to sell his wares, and the crowd was much amused by his remarks. The doctor had pressing business to visit Indianapolis street.
