LIFE AND WORK OF GARFIELD: Embracing an Account of His Struggles in Childhood; His Career as a Soldier; His Success as a Statesman; His Elevation to the Presidency: His Dastardly Assassination. By John Clark Ridpath, LL.D. J. CHILTON & CO., Detroit, State Agents for Michigan.

The preparation for this memorial olume was well and wisely committed the hands of Professor Ridpath. Himself an accomplished scholar, of severe and delicate taste, and a love of research which no difficulty can daund he is just the man of all others to find the facts and make up the record of the scholar and statesman whose memory now occupies the first place in the earts of his countrymen. It may be truthfully said of Dr. Ridpath that he has "an elevated and pure discretion, sound and steady judgment; that he has seen and heard and read many and divers books and writings; and what is more, he has the skill and the practice of turning all this rich and varied knowledge to the best account." He stands in the front rank of living historians, and his contributions to standard literature are not only voluminous, but well-judged, scholary and finished. He cannot make an uninteresting book upon the subject. With Garfield as his theme, his pen has acquired a new inspiration and a degree of eloquence which clothes his periods in the most fascinating garb imaginable. He investigates and composes at the instigation of pure love for the great soul erewhile translated "to the other shore;" and, although his first care is to find the truth and write it, his determination to make the recguided the youthful steps of him whom | ord in every respect worthy of the sub-

would be a far more profitable line than the one to St. Joseph, and the people there don't appear to care very much which way it goes. The company can do no better than to run their road to South Haven, striking several of the small towns along the line, and going through a heavy timbered section that will furnish lumber for our factories and a good business for the road, besides bringing it nearer the lumber and iron regions of the North. Fooling with St. Joseph is having the appearance of a waste of time.

Flearing Mills. The difference between the mills new used for the manufacture of flour and those of har a century ago are as marked as those between the modern woolen mill and the old fashioned loom in which homesputh cloth was manufactured for the purpose of providing stout and ser-viceable garments to clothe the hard-working farmer and his sons. In an-cient times wheaten bread was the ex-ception; the daily bread of the rural household was made of rye and Indian corn. Two or three bushels of wheat was regarded as a sufficient allowance for a moderate family, and that ground for a moderate family, and that ground for a moderate family, and that ground into fiour was kept for such state occa-sions as quiltings, weddings, Thanks-giving and other holidays, when the good wife was wont to exercise her culi-nary skill in compounding shortcake to grace the bountifully-spread table. It was also considered the proper thing to have a loaf or two of wheat bread on hand in the house should the clergyman hand in the house should the clergyman or other respected visitor come to take tea. The grinding of the wheat was usually a matter of considerable solicitude on the part of the owner of the grist. A bushel or two was measured up in a bag and thrown across the back of a In a bag and thrown across the back of a gentle and trusty farm-horse, and the owner would wend his way to the grist mill, where, while waiting for it to be ground, he would have an opportunity to indulge in a little social gossip with the dusty-coated miller, who was gen-erally well posted in all the local news. The miller, having satisfied the farmer that the run of stone was perfectly clean and that there was no danger of an adand that there was no hanger of all are mixture of rye flour or corn meal, the wheat would be transferred to the hop-per and ground; and, when finished, the farmer would joyfully wend his way homeward, knowing that the good wife would test the flour on his arrival and that his chances were favorable for an excellent supper of shortcake and golden butter. This was the grist mill of early days. The modern flouring mill is a huge structure, employing many men, and the wheat is turned into flour by the freight train loaded daily. One of the monster mills in Minneapolis, Minn., covers an area of 380 by 80 feet, and is several stories in height. Its capacity is 4,200 bushels of wheat, or fifty car-loads, to keep the mill in operation. It does not depend upon the old-fashioned burr millstones to convert the wheat into flour, but the process of manufacture is to first run the whest through a brushing ma-chine, the old-fashioned smut machines having been discarded. After the wheat has been cleaned by being run through the brush machine, it is run through corrugated iron rollers, which split the crease of the berry open, thus liberating the dust which lies in the crease, so that it can be removed by bolting. A very small percentage of low-grade flour is made during this first reduction. The grain then passes through a process technically known as a scalping reel, to remove the dirt and flour, after which it passes through a second set of corrugated rollers, by which it is further broken. Then it is passed through a second reel, which removes the flour and middlings. This operation is repeated successively until the flour portion of the berry is entirely removed from the bran, the necessary separations being made after each reduction, sometimes requiring five or six. The middlings from the several operations are reduced to floar, after being run through the purifiers, by successive reductions, on smooth iron or porcelain rollers. One of the principal objects sought by this system of grind-ing is to avoid all bruising of the grain; another, to extract all the dirt from the crease of the berry; and a third, to thoroughly free the bran from the flour, in n es larca a vi ble.—Albany Evening Times.

The women were particu-larly neat, and not a few of them were exceedingly comely. They were mod-est in demeanor and shrank from the gaze of the spectators, with whom the garden was crowded. They were mosily under twenty-five years of age, and had been maids-of-all-work in London, Glas-gow and Berlin. She has known the domestic cares of the matron, and even for the veteran campaigner, whose arms have not yet secured the matrimonial laurel, she abounds in experiences which always sound new and often prove invaluable, sound new and otten prove invaluable, for she is regarded, rightly or wrongly, as disinterested. But there are widows and widows. Addison said that in his experience "widows did not mourn the loss of husband, but for the want of one," In such cases the woods...st a distance In such cases the weeds-at a distance a flag of distress-often resolve themselves, on nearer acquaintance, into the defiant symbol of the roving privateer. It is not for want of warning that weak humanity falls a victim. Mr. Weller spoke with the feeling of a long-suffering experience in warning his son to "bewar-of widows." As the widow unattachemay work infinite good as an angel light, she may do still greater mischi in the opposite character. Her words have weight and her example authority which carry conviction to the hearts of those among whom she lives and moves. ---New Yord Star.

Husbands and Wives.

A good husband makes a good wife. Some men can neither do without wives nor with them; they are wretched alone in what is called single blessedness, and they make their homes miserable when they get married; they are like Tomp-kins' dog, which could not bear to be loose, and howled when it was tied up. Happy bachelors are likely to be happy husbands, and a happy husband is the happiest of men. A well-matched couple carry a joyful life between them, as the two spies carried the cluster of Eshcol. They are a brace of birds of Paradise. They multiply their joys by sharing them, and lessen their troubles by dividing them. This is fine arithmetic. The wagon of care rolls lightly along as they pull to-gether; and when it drags a little heavily, or there is a hitch anywhere, they love each other all the more, and so lighten the labor.—John Ploughman.

"In what condition was the patriarch Job at the end of his life?" asked a Sunday-school teacher of a quiet-looking boy at the foot of the class. "Dead," calmly replied the boy.

Old Inhabitants on the Weather.

"Some folks seem to think this is warm weather," observed old Daddy Wotherspoon to old Uncle Linkinboth-am, as the two old inhabitants stood, last Thursday, before a thermometer that registered 90 deg. in the shade. "Pears to me 'twas worse than this in the May of '28, wasn't it?"

"A heap worse," assented old Uncle Linkinbotham; "but that wasn't as as bad as May of '22. You remember how the tin roofs melted and run off the houses, and we had to carry wrought steel umbrellas through the streets?" "'Deed I do," rejoined old Daddy Wotherspoon, mopping his visage with some anxiety. "I was out hunting that spring, and we had to carry our powder in buckets of water to keep it from going off prematurely. Wasn't that the spring the hams fried on live hogs and the bills melted off the snow birds?"

"The same spring," said old Uncle Linkinbotham. "I know I was off fish-ing in Long Island sound, and the heat generated the water into steam so as to blow our boat clear over into the woods. That month was pretty warm, for I rec-ollect how the forest out back of East New York melted down, and I had a stream of liquid kindlings running right through my farm. One of my boys took a swig of it one day by mistake, and when he died in the fall we found him chock full of splinters. Killed him." "Yes, yes," murmured old Daddy Wotherspoon, streaming at every pore.

"We used to hang meat and vegetables down my well, and they were cooked in ten minutes by the watch," and the an-cient gentleman regarded his antagonist with some triumph. "We tried that," said old Uncle Linkinbotham, "but the heat melted the wires the grub was hung on and the works of the clock run all over the floor, so we couldn't tell how long it did take to cook, and we used ice-water to do our biling with."

"Where'd you get your ice?" de-manded old Daddy Wotherspoon, tying a handkerchief around his head to keep his ears warm.

"We just poured water on the fire and the fire was so much cooler than the stmosphere that the water froze in a minute. That's how we got so much ice. Don't you want to go and drink

"If we can get a little good old bran-dy, I'd like it," replied old Daddy Woth-erspoon, with pale lips and elenched fist. "I'll take some proof brandy."

"Come along, then," retorted old Un-cle Linkinbotham, contemptuously. "You may be able to stir your blood with that tipple, but this weather and the recollections of May, '22, makes me want some hot, spiced rum and a fur

The Elder Booth.

The elder Booth was at times the victim of strange fancies. Once he took the fancy to be an absolute vegetarian, and while possessed of this idea he was raveling on a Western steamboat, and happened to be placed at table opposite a solemn Quaker, who had been attracted by the eloquent conversation of the great actor. The benevolent old Quaker, observing the lack of viands on Booth's plate, kindly said: "Friend, shall I not help thee to the breast of this chicken?" "No, I thank you, friend," replied the actor,

"Then shall I not cut thes a slice of the ham?" "No, friend, not any."

"Then thee must tate a piece of the mutton; thy plate is empty," persisted the good old Quaker. "Friend," said Booth, in those deep, stentorian tones whose volume and pow-er had so often electrified crowded audiences-"friend, I never eat any flesh but human flesh, and I prefer that raw." The old Quaker was speechless, and his seat was changed to another table at the next meal 500,000 bushels to 1,303,000,000 bushels. These figures speak more than words for the marvelous richness of the quality of the soil in the great Northwest. A recent writer is not far out of the way when he says that it is of the same nature as that of the most fertile plains of Asia or Europe. True it is that there is no forest to subdue, no scrub to sprout; the whole is one vast plain, more or less fertile, which, we have shown by the wonderful increase during the past decade, can be converted into corn-fields cade, can be converted into corn-fields by the simple operation of two shallow plowings. This vast region was called, we think, by the Royal Agricultural Commissioners, "the wheat and corn granary of the world," and the attention of the young, vigorous and courageous Englishmen, who cannot get a comforta-ble living in England, was called to it by the Commissioners, who said "It of the Commissioners, who said: "It of-fers a home that will soon provide all the necessaries of life, and in a few years of steady but well-directed toil will probably insure a competency, and pos sibly a moderate fortune."
