BARGAINS.

"Going, going, gone!" criedithe auc-

I was proud of my bargain. The chairs were new, of walnut, and covered with crimson plush. The price, too, was ridiculously low. At least, I thought so then. Nor had I secured my chairs without a struggle. Mrs. Jerome had particularly bidden steadily against me. Mrs. Jerome was a sort of rival of mine.

She was always striving to outshine me. If I bought a new bonnet, or appeared in a new wrap, the next Sunday she was sure to have a new bonnet also, or a new cloak, both prettier than mine. On this occasion she bid against me till Miss Almira Smith, an old maid whom I cordially disliked, and who, I believe, disliked me as heartily, went to her and whispered in her ear. After that she stopped bidding, and the chairs were knocked down to me, as I have

I was leaving the auction-room, elated with my victory, when Mrs. Jerome came up.

"Good morning, Mrs. Spencer," she said, with ill-concealed triumph in her "I wish you joy of your bargain. The chairs, as the auctioneer says, are very cheap. I only hope they haven't moths in them, as Miss Smith says."

She curtsied, and passed on, before I could reply. I went home not quite so elated as before. What if the chairs really had moths in them! But the idea was too provoking to entertain, so I dismissed it summarily. "You old cat," said I, apostrophizing Miss Smith, "it's only a bit of your malice."

When the chairs came home, all my

When the chairs came home, all my exultation returned. Their gay covering brightened up the parlor like spring sunshine. I had never had walnut chairs before, and was naturally proud of my acquisition. My husband came home to tea while I was admiring my furniture.

"Hum!" he said. "A new toy. Looks like auction-work," he added, as he turned one of the chairs critically Now this nettled me. Not only because he called the chairs "a new toy," but because his tone was disparaging to auction work. So I replied, a little "I don't see why you call them toys. Gracious knows we've wanted new chairs ever so long! I've bought them out of my savings." "It wasn't that, my dear," he added, coming up and kissing me. "I'd have given them to you in a moment, if I'd known they would have pleased you. The truth is, we men care so little for these things," he continued, apologetically, "that we don't always realize how much pleasure they afford our darling little wives."

This molified me a good deal; but I was not quite conciliated yet. So I said, with a pout:
"I don't think you're fair, when you sneer at them as auction-work. Why shouldn't things that are sold at auction be as good as things sold in shops? "Why shouldn't they?" he answered; and now he put his arm around my waist, and drew me to him. "I'm sure can't tell, only they never, or rarely,

are. I've a dim idea," he continued looking laughingly into my eyes, "that auction-work is made to sell, not to use, and hence that show is substituted for strength. But let us hope that our chairs will be paragons of usefulness as well as beauty. Meanwhile, what has my little wife got for supper?" By this time I was quite restored to good humor. The truth is that Harry is always so kind that I can afford now and then, to let him banter me a

On the whole, as time went by, I considered I had achieved a triumph.

Everybody admired my pretty chairs, and acknowledged that they were surprisingly cheap also. One day Mr. Staples came in. Now he was a heavy man, and awkward also.

"I've hearn you have some new chairs," he said. "Darter Jane, she said they were 'mazing fine, and cheap as dirt. They don't look like dirt, though," he said, laughing at what he thought a joke; "they look contrarywise, too pretty to sit on."

"Not at all, not at all," said I, hos pitably. "Pray try one of them." He accordingly sat down. "I declare," he said, "they're power ful nice. Soft and easy as a feather-bed, ma'am; and rest the back so comfortably. As he spoke, he tilted back on the hind legs of his chair, a feat which I have noticed fat men are addicted to, when lo! the supports gave way, and he sprawled on the floor. Between mirth at his ludicrous ap pearance, and anger at the mishap to my chair, I hardly knew whether to laugh or cry. The amazed look of the victim, and his evident inability to get up without assistance, turned the scale in favor of the former. I gave him a helping hand, smiling as I tugged at his heavy bulk. "Don't think of apologizing," I said, grets. "It was the fault of the chair altogether." By this time he was on his feet, and was examining the broken legs. "Well, I dunno," he said, "but what you're right. Seems to me it's auction-work now that I come to look at the cheer.' The hideous old hippopotamus When he left, I flung myself on the sofa, and had a cry. My husband, coming in to dinner, found me wiping my eyes and ruefully contemplating the broken chair. He listened sympathizingly to my story and then said:

"Never mind, Mary. We'll have the chair mended, and it will be as good as new. Staples weighs as much as an elephant, anyhow, and would break down a chair of marble. For my part, I think he ought to sit on a stump, and carry it about with him wherever he

The picture of Mr. Staples carrying a large stump of a tree about with him when he went visiting was so ludicrous that I burst ont laughing, and so forgot my annovance.

The weather now began to get warm. One day, while dusting the parlor, I was startled by the sight of a moth fly, a thing, up to that time, unknown in our neat household. The next day there were two or three. I remembered with dismay Miss Smith's assertion, and began immediately to examine my new purchase. A blow or two on the chair seats raised swarms of the destructive insects. The stuffing was alive with moths.

I tried everything, for many weary weeks, to get rid of the pests. But all was in vain. The moths had evidently been in the chairs when I bought them; and Miss Smith's prying eyes had discovered them just in time to make a victim of me instead of Mrs. Jerome. Very soon it came to be a question, not of keeping my chairs, but of preserving the rest of my furniture; and in self-defence I had to send my chairs to a cabinet maker, where the stuffing was taken out, the wood cleaned, and new horse hair substituted. By the

put on, my chairs cost me, as the phrase goes, "a pretty penny."

My husband, however, behaved beautifully. He did not then, nor has he since, uttered a word of reproach, or even a reminder, about the chairs. The subject is a scaled book between us. But other people are not so forbear-

time this was done, and fresh plush

ing. The other day I met Mrs. Jerome in the street. "You didn't have such a bargain in those chairs, after all," she said, with a hypocritical politeness. "I saw them last week, at the cabinet maker's, and knew them at once. I suppose, now, that with new hair, and new plush, and new varnishing, they've cost you half as much again as if you bought a good set at first; he said they had, at least, and he ought to know."

Marriage and Divorce in Japan.

Marriage in Japan is an institution unknown as a religious sacrament, or as a legal contract, pronounced or ratified by any civil officer or court. It is the simplest form of matrimonial union that can be conceived under the name of marriage. It is simply this: When the child is born and named in Japan it is registered in the official register of the ken or district where the parents live. If at any time the person removes to another ken or province he takes his registration from where he is leaving and is registered at his new home. There is no Japanese living unregistered. When the man wishes to take a wife, and the consent of the selected one is obtained, or that of her parents, the husband that is to be appears at the kencho, or office of the registration, and there registers the name of the woman as his wife, and the woman is then known and considered as his sacred property, to have and to hold so long as he likes, and no longer. If the man wishes for more female companionship than his wife affords him, he contracts for and registers another woman as his mistress, and she is thus known and regarded as a member of his household. The manner of divorce is just as easy as the marriage; that is, if the man so desires, as he only can divorce. All that is done is for the man to give the woman what is known as the "three lines and a half paper," stating to her that she is no longer considered by him as his wife. She is then unmarried and can take her maiden name. The registry is made to show this fact, that the two are "quits." On the other hand, there is no power that can divorce the husband from the wife-the woman is powerless to act as against the man. Divorce is the prerogative of the husband, uncontrolled by any power whatever; he alone binds, and he alone can

The Oak at Morat.

Within a bow shot of the town gate of Morat, in Switzerland, stands a venerable oak more than five hundred years old. It was a full grown tree on the eve of the famous battle of Morat, when Charles the Bold held conference with his generals under the shade of its wide-spreading branches. Twenty-four hours later the leaders of the Swiss gathered around this self-same tree, and there offered up thanks to heaven for their signal victory. They dispatched a messenger to Freiburg with the tidings, and, in conformity with a foregone arrangement, confided him a token by which the federalists of that city might recognize him as a duly accredited envoy. This token was a leafy branch cut from the oak in question. Its bearer put forth such speed in executing his mission that when he reached Freiburg he had but just strength enough left to gasp out his message and then fell dead on the ground, grasping his oak branch to the last. He was buried where he fell, and the branch, planted on his grave, is at present one of the largest, and stateliest trees in Europe, having com-pleted its four hundred and fifth year.

The State line between Pennsylvania and Ohio has recently been surveyed, and is now being marked by stone monuments which project one foot above the ground. They are set four feet deep, and are dressed to a point and appropriately inscribed.

For the Berrien County Record. The Mother's Thanksgiving.

"Mother, what are we to have for our Thanksgiving dinner?" "Poor children, we cannot have much to-day, for your papa drinks!" These words fell from the pale, thin ips of the sad-hearted wife and mother, as the children, in thin, scanty and ragged apparel, gathered about that parent in the cheerless home of a drunkerd.

But a few years ago this sad and neglected wife (like many others gone before) was a light-hearted and happy maiden, dwelling under the parental roof, where want was not known, little dreaming of what lay in store for her in the near future. But those bright dreams of happy girlhood days are now forever ended, and a sad, hopeless, and a disappointed life of want, sorrow and tears stretches out before her with only the cheerless roof of a drunkard's home to shelter her from the pitiless storms of life. Mothers of earth, when you rear your child With such loving and tender pride. How little you know where feet will stray,

In the paths of the world so wide." "Your papa drinks!" How much of sadness and want are carried with these few words. How many lives have been blasted, homes ruined, fortunes spent, and bright hopes of future prospects forever blighted by the sad fact that som ϵ father drank. This young life, with all its hopes of future joys and heart's best and truest affection, only a few years ago was placed in the keeping of him who promised to provide and protect while life should last. Although she knew that at times he partook of the "social glass," yet she trusted that after marriage, with loving and kind words she would call him back from those wild ways into which he had wandered. But ah! too soon has she learned (as have thousands of other trusting hearts before her) that this task was a difficult one, and one but seldom accomplished. and another trusting and loving wife is added to those disappointed ones who fondly dreamed of reclaiming the husband after marriage. But in hope's brightest morn, while they are endeavoring to heal the bite of the "scrpent," too often the "sting of the adder" is felt, for which no remedy was ever found, and another victim goes down to fill a drunkard's grave. Daughters of earth, dream not of converting loved ones to sober habits after marriage, for it has too often been proven to be but a dream. If you deem your future happiness as possible, and valuable to you, have nothing to do with that young man who in the least degree indulges in liquor drinking. This is the only safe rule for you to follow. That little red ribbon pinned on his vest, or fastened on a flaming watch chain, is not a sure evidence of sober habits, or a sure preventative from drunkenness. It is all well enough to show our loyalty to the temperance cause by such a badge, but do not place too much confidence in it. But when we, from day to day and year to year, weave in all life's habits temperate principles, it is not likely we will be trust in the little red Daughters of earth, it is not beyond a possibility for you to learn the habits of those with whom you associate. Yea, it is your privilege and duty to know their "manner of life." When you learn that the young man with whom you associate, and who talks so loudly of temperance, goes in at the back door of the saloon for his accustomed drink, beware of him. But when you find one of industrious habits, and one with his temperance badge worn upon his principles of life, it may be safe to trust your life's destiny with his,

with a full prospect of future years of happiness and prosperity. "Women of America, put your foot on this liquor traffic. You can trample it out of existence. Never smile on a young man who is not a tetotaler. Tell him that you don't care to cultivate, or have your daughters cultivate, the acquaintance of those who indulge in intoxicating drink, because you believe the habit is debasing and those who indulge in it are in danger of becoming ensnared by it to the disgrace of themselves and friends. Be firm in adherence to this rule and the bar-room will close for lack of patronage, and station houses and jails will by and by have vacant cells, and alms houses will have more spare room," and many more homes would spring up with smiling faces of rejoicing wives and happy childred to greet with joy the return of that husband and father that does not drink. Should such an era as this dawn upon the homesteads of earth, the hearth-stone of many a home would burn with a bright light where to-day want, sorrow and tears sit enthroned because of rum. L. S. Bronson.

How They Come Down Hill at A Quebec telegram says that about 5 o'clock on Wednesday afternoon last, as a farmer was descending the Cote des Peres at Lewis with a load of wood, the sleigh slid sideways, and striking violently against the railing at the end of the precipice, which is here about 60 feet high, carried it away, and horse, sleigh, wood and man went over. Fortunately, no injury occurred to either man or beast, and even the sleigh was not injured. The brave habitant, when he recovered from the surprise naturally attendant on the accident, proceeded to reload his wood and went on his way. -

Bears are passionately fond of honey, and when in one of the wind districts Bruin of a Thanksgiving dinner at our house hears the humming of the wires he follows the sound to the post where it is londest, and begins to tear away the stones heaped around the poles in rocky soil to steady them, in order to get at the hive which he imagines to be there. In his disappointment and disgust he usually leaves savage marks in the wood. Nor is he the only victim of the wires. In the electric exhibition at Paris they show the top of a thick pine telegraph pole through which a wood-pecker has drilled a hole several inches in diameter. The bird had apparently perched on the pole and taken the humming of the wires for the buzzing of a nest of insects in the wood and had set himself manfully-or bird-fully—to dig them out. Wolves will not stay in Norway where a telegraph line has been built It was formerly the custom to protect farms by planting poles around them strung with cords something like rab-bit snares, and gradually the wolves came to respect the precautions so that a line stretched across the neck of a veninsula would protect the whole district. The wolves take the telegraph poles for a new and improved snare, and promptly leave the country where the line is built. On our treeless plains the buffalo hails the telegraph pole as an ingenious contrivance for his own benefit. Like all cattle he delights in cratching himself, and he goes through the performance so energetically that he knocks down the post. An early builder of telegraph lines undertook to protect the posts by inserting bradawls into the wood, but the thick-skinned buffalo found the bradawl an improvement, as affording him a new sensathan ever.

tion, and scratched down more poles . In Sumatra the elephants are systematically opposed to telegraph lines, and at least twenty times a year make raids on them. In May, 1876, the elephants tore down the poles a distance of several furlongs, and hid the wires and insulators in the cane jungles, and for three nights in succession they repeated the performance as regularly as the repairers rebuilt the line during the day. The monkeys and apes are about as formidable enemies, as they use the wires for swinging and trapezes, and carry off the glass insulators as valuable prizes, then when the repairer goes to correct the mischief, he may be pounced upon by a tiger or be driven up the post by a mad buffalo. In Japan the special enemies of the telegraph are the spiders, which grow to an immense size and avail themselves of the wires as excellent frameworks of their webs. So thick are the cords the Japanese spiders spin that often, especially when they are covered with dew, they serve to connect the wires with each other or the ground, and so to stop them from working. In the sea the wires are not any safer, as a small worm has developed itself since cables came into fashion which bores it's way through iron wire and gutta percha, lets in the water and thus destroys a line worth millions of dollars. When a great storm comes on in the centre of the ocean, and the cable breaks while it is being laid, or threatens to break, no one is alarmed. They fasten the cable to a lmoy and come back afterward and pick it up; or if it is at the bottom of the sea. they drop a dredge, with a mile or so of rope, and fish out the precious shred as large as one of your fingers, almost as easily as you could fish a penny from a tub of water with the tongs. But the little worm is more formidable than the elephant on shore or the hurricane at sea.—Youth and Pleasure.

Taking Things For Granted. The Golden Rule says that half the failures in life result from the habit so many people have of taking things for granted. The business man as sumes that his credits are good; he takes it for granted that his wife knows what style of living his income will warrant; until the logic of addition, subtraction and multiplication proves too much for him, and down comes his business in ruin. The young professional man takes it for granted that vencering, instead of solid acquirements, will enable him to succeed, because there are so many notorious examples of men's rising and maintaining themselves in public life through pure audacity, native wit, and an utter lack of concience. He will find, too late, that it won't do to plan and risk a career by the exceptions rather than the rule. The farmer keeps no accounts-crops his farm ac cording to the season, or last year's markets, or his neighbor's successtakes it for granted that the laws of nature and of trade will accommodate themselves to his necessities, and sinks deeper into debt, and wonders why farming doesen't pay. And so on to the end; men everywhere want success without paying its price in thorough preparation, honest hard work, intelligent calculation and foresight, patient attention to details. They take for granted things which it is their business to know, and trust that to fortune which common sense and experi-have failed to have perceptible effect upon the legislature of Georgia, and until lately this fact has justly been a cause for wonderment, since it is admitted that were it not for the plethora of dogs, sheep-raising would become marvellously profitable in that State. The problem has just been solved, however, by the dog show in Atlanta. The result of that exhibition convinces the reader of the fact that an ordinary, bob-tailed, brindle cur, whose pedigree can be traced down a lane and across a nasture, is worth more than 20 common sheep; while a pointer, with the ability to forage around and bring home a chicken occasionally, is of inestimable value; and a setter that "sets" in the back yard and howls at the moon, is worth more than the Sunday 'breast pin of a hotel clerk. The dogs in that show were valued above all the sheep in Georgia. One canine family sold for enough to buy an improved farm of 500 acres and 1,200 sheep. A man with two liver-colored pointers and a bench-legged whiffet is a millionaire, while even a colored citizen with a single-barreled shotgun and a bobtailed

How One Man Prospered.

J. F. Rogers, a farmer near this city, engaged four years ago for a period of six weeks in the novel pursuit of hunting opossum and other small varmints then plentiful in this vicinity. Now for the result. The meat and pelts of that hunt were carefully sold, and when brought together aggregated $95. This amount was invested in twelve calves, which at the end of two years were sold and reinvested in 100 calves, which now, at the end of four years from the first investment, are held at $40 each, making a net value of $4,000.—Pilot Point (Texas) Pilot.

Marriage in France.

What I say generally of France I say particularly of this place and all country plates—marriages are made as business partnerships are made, with a due regard to business arrangements on all sides, and without any reference whatsoever to the empulses of the heart. Only a few days ago one of our handsomest young fellows gave up one of the prettiest girls, whose parents are rich, because the sum of hard cash to be handed over to him on the day of the marriage was not equal to his demands. He will now, of course, look for another wife as he would look for a farm, with a sole regard to its income-bringing prospects.—The Argosy.

Nebraska Humor. Some of the people out in Nebraska has a ghastly idea of fun. Recently Mr. Ulety, the postmaster at Nebraska City, went to Washington on official business, while there found himself an object of much attention on the part of the police, and was only saved from arrest by the intercession of influen tial friends. On investigation he found that some of his friends at home had written a letter to the chief of Washington police, inclosing one of his photographs and stating that he was a dangerous "crank," who had gone to Washington with the avowed intention of shooting lawyer Scoville and putting an end to the Guiteau trial.

On our way from Mobile to New Orleans, we fully realize that we are beyond the reach of what we call cold weather. Mother earth is carpeted with green, flowers are blooming, orange, magnolia and pecan trees are seen, and hundreds of acres of the palm, from which fans are made. The principal timber is pine, and we occasionally see a saw-mill and turpentine camp and manufactory, but the principal business, as we get nearer New Or-

We were through an ice manufactory to-day, where they can make four hundred thousand tons per month, at a cost not exceeding the price it has usually cost me to put up ice in a small way. We find a large proportion of the business here done out doors. In going three blocks, Saturday, Woods and I counted four repair shops, like Joe. Emigrant Sharks. The poor emigrant is not forgotten b the swindler. Every device is tried fleece him out of the few dollars he ha brought with him to a new home. In some cases they are coaxed to give up small sums of money on the pretense of procuring employment. The sharpers get their money and then send them to some factory in the suburbs, where the emigrants are told positions are open for them. On application at the plac mentioned the parties in charge say that they do not need any hands, and the emigrants have to return to Castle Garden minus their traveling expenses. Emigrants intending to go inland are also imposed upon by these sharks, who give them rolls of copper coin in exchange for our paper money or the gold coin of European countries. They dupe their victims by a gold piece put on top of each roll, which generally contains English coppers.

The "bogus Custom-house officer" i another swindle which is carried on to a great extent. It consists in the assumption of the duties and rights of Custom-house officers by a number of rascals, who, to work their ends more easily, wear bogus badges, precise imitations of those worn by the regular inspectors. They follow an unsuspecting passenger who may be leaving the ship with some small package which has escaped the attention of the regular Cusom-house officer, and when he is clear of the dock the swindler approaches him and demands to know what he has got. If objection is made he shows his badge. This scares the would-be-smuggler; the goods are delivered up, and that is the last heard of them. passenger claims them at the Customhouse, but to no purpose.

Among the many mean swindlers are parties who offer employment to poor men in other cities, especially in the South, at good wages, on condition that they pay down a small sum of money. In all cases when the time for departure comes the swindler has vanished, and some idea of the sufferings entailed upon the victims may be formed from the fact that many of them had broken up their humble homes and laid out their little means in purchasing necessaries for the voyage.—New York Herald.

Nihilism in Russia.

The Nihilistic faction in Russia organized under the influence of the philoso phy of Bakunin, who, in 1848, preached For Sale.—80 acres "number one" the doctrine of destruction. His theory was that society, as it existed, was in be-lief, impulse, and habit, all wrong, and that reform was possible only after the existing state of things had been annihi He argued that all governments and all churches should be overthrown and that society should be reconstructed on communistic principles. Under cover of this agitation the Nihilists entered politics, using assassination and menace to accomplish their ends. The extremists of this party are responsible for the assassination of the Czar and other acts connected therewith. They are known as "Terrorists," and aim at the destruction of all Government. They are said to be comparatively few in num ber. The main body of the so-called Nihilists aim at a peaceful revolution which will make away with Czardom and establish a republic. Opposite to these two factions are the Russophiles, uncompromisingly in favor of the present form of government; the Slavophiles, who favor the ancient Russian government when the Czar governed according to the counsels of the Assembly of Land Representatives; the Liberal party, represented by the late Czar and General Melikoff, and the German and Polish parties. All of these are, as has been said, opposed to the Nihilists, and are practically united against them.

Smart Children.

A child of 3 years of age with a book in its infant hands is a fearful sight. It is too often the death warrant, such as the condemned stupidly looks at—fatal, yet beyond his comprehension. What should a child 3 years old—nay, 5 or 6 years old—be taught? Strong meats for weak digestions make not bodily strength. Let there be nursery tales and nursery rhymes. I would say to every parent, especially to every mother, sing to your children, tell them pleasantstories; if in the country, be not too careful lest they get a little dirt upon their hands and clothes; earth is very akin to us all, and, in children's out-of-door plays, soils them not inwardly. There is in it a kind of consanguinity between all creatures; by it we touch upon the sympathy of our first substance, and begetakindness for our poor relations, the brutes. Let children have a free, open air sport, and fear not though they make acquaintance with the pigs, the donkeys and the chickens-they may form worse friendship with wiser-looking ones; encourage a familiarity with all that love to court them; dumb animals love children, and children love them. There is a language among them which the world's language obliterates in the elders. It is of more importance that you should make your children loving than that you should make them wise. Above all things, if you become old and poor, these will be better than friends that will never neglect yon. Children brought up lovingly at your knees will never shut their doors upon you, and point where they would have you go -The Housekeeper.

Getting Your Photograph. The best way to come is to come nat-That's why actresses take such excellent pictures. They allow you to posture them as you please. If you twist a lady's head she gets mad; while an actress will allow herself to be twisted and turned and poised and arranged as much as you please. Its a pleasure to take them, for you are always sure of a good picture. But deliver me from ministers! They are never satisfied. They are stiff and disagreeable, and their photos never suit. Ladies come in with their hair done up in the most outlandish styles, and then complain and ask for another sitting, because their hair is not done the way they are accustomed to. As if we did up their hair! Then, when we ask them to stand up a little, they complain, 'I never stand up so straight;' and next day when they see the proof, they say, 'Oh! how humpbacked you have made me. Its no use to tell them you told them to stand straight; they only asswer, did not know I was stooping so. amount of retouching of the negative will straighten up these."—Baltimore Photographer.

Revolutionary Women.

In the early part of February, 1770, the women of Boston publicly pledged themselves to abstain from the use of tea. On Feb. 9, three nunarea manners had become members of this league, Three days after the young women fol-lowed the example of their mothers by signing the following document: "We, the daughters of those patriots who have and do now appear for the.

public interest, and in that principally regard their prosperity, as such do with pleasure engage with them in denying ourselves the drinking of foreign tea, in hopes to frustrate a plan which tends to deprive the whole community of all that s valuable in life."

Rescued From Death.

William J. Coughlin, of Somerville, Mass. says: "In the fall of 1876 I was taken with a violent bleeding of the lungs, followed by a severe cough. I was so weak at one time that I could not leave my bed. In the summer of 1877 I was admitted to the City Hospital. While there the doctors said I had a nole in my left lung as big as a half dollar I was so far gone at one time a report went around that I was dead. I gave up hope, but a friend told me of Dr. Wm. Hall's Balsam for the lungs. I got a bottle, when to my surprise and gratification, I commenced to feel better, and to-day I feel in better pirits than I have in the past three years. THE Colored Church Choir company gave an entertainment in Rough's Opera House, Saturday evening, and considering the meagreness of the advertising had a good house. ONCE more the great usefulness and sagacious worth of the canine family is brought to mind. A two cent dog belonging to Fred Smith, and one belonging to Henry Barber, of Dayton, killed 21 sheep for Curtis Lamb, last Friday night. We shall expect to hear of just such raids as long as the State law in regard to keeping dogs remains as it is, and everybody keeps a miserable cur about him. As the owners of the dogs refused to have them killed Mr. Ed. Plimpron took a tack in Mr. Lamb has had them arrested for keeping sheep-killing dogs, for which his course, and instead of going to Chithey will have a trial before Justice

Cogshall, with a nickel platwhen the Hon. E. M. Plimpton, in a few chosen remarks, presented the pastor and wife with an elegant decorated china tea set, silver pickle castor and majolica bread tray. The contributing members were few, as the amount necessary was raised before all could be seen by Mr. Plimpton, through whom the purchase was effected.

> MR. JOHN M. ROUGH has furnished the RECORD with some interesting literature relative to the graveyard insurance swindles of Pennsylvania that have for the past few months been draining a goodly number of the citizens of this vicinity of their ready cash. Mr. Rough was in that part of the country most afflicted with these insurance (?) companies and learned somewhat of their workings to satisfy him that the small amount of faith he had previously entertained for them was far more than the merits of the institution warranted, and we judge he is about right now.

FIFTEENTH ANNIVERSARY .- Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Carothers celebrated the fifteenth anniversary of their wedding day, last Thursday, Dec. 29, by calling together a number of their friends for a social party. The friends in turn left with them of the substantials of the country, as follows:

Mr. and Mrs. Levi Binns, glass cake stand; Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Whitmore of South Bend, card receiver; Mr. Byron Smith, pair vases; H. J. Hudson, mounted celery dish; Mr. J. W. Morris and Mr. Morris Lyon, arctic water set; Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Cornwall of South Bend, card receiver; Mr. and Mrs. S. E. Cadwell, glass set; Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Crandall, pair vases; Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Glover, mounted pickle dish; Mrs. E. of Niles, set of goblets: Mr. and Mrs. J. Crocker Brown of Niles, glass fruit dish; Mr. and Mrs. John Perkins of Niles, glass set; Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Eaton, glass measure; Mr. and Mrs. A. G. Barr, Mr. and Mrs. F. J. Barr and Mr. John Barr, china tea set.

It was a pleasant gathering. To Mr. Wm. H. Smith, agent for the Michigan Central railroad at this place, we are indebted for the following statement of the business of that company at this place for the year just passed. There will be seen a slight falling off in the amount of grain shipped, and of lumber, and a consequent falling off in the total tonnage. The grain shipments are less about in proportion as the crop throughout the country is less than that of last year. It will also be remembered that in the total tonnage of last year was included the material and rolling stock for the narrow gauge railroad, which amounted to several tons. The amount received for tickets in December, 1880, was $470.10, and for the corresponding month in 1881 to $889.70, which shows a healty increase, and it will be seen a good increase in total receipts for tickets, notwithstanding the great reduc-

TELEPHONE.—The following bit of news, that is of interest in this place, we find in the Kalamazoo Telegraph of Jan. 4:

"Arrangements have now been fully completed for the exchange at Niles comprising nearly fifty subscribers, and the lines will be constructed as soon as material can be procured, which will probably be by the 15th of January. and the subscribers are very anxious to have the exchange working by the first of February. The rates charged are the same as in Kalamazoo, and are the lowest given by any company, and are reduced to where there is very little profit, so that no reduc tions will be given under any circum stances. The line will also be extended from Niles to Berrien Springs at once, and as soon as completed an effort will be made to continue it to St. Joseph, taking in all the smaller towns on the route. The endeavor is still being made to connect Kalamazoo with Galesburg, Plainwell and other adjacent towns, but our people do not seem to get awake to the advantages of such a system or to their own inter-is a new feature and one that has just been made feasible." The telephone company has offered Buchanan a most liberal chance to become connected with this system of telephones, asking only that we guarantee to the company $400 worth of business from this place. Of this amount $325 have been subscribed, and for the remaining $75, it looks as if the attempt were to be a failure. Buchanan cannot afford to let this opportunity go by unnoticed, and there are many here who will see the folly of doing so when too late. The railroad company between this place and St. Joseph will use such a line a dozen times the amount asked of the whole town, and business men will find more use for it than they now think. Gentlemen, will you allow this line to go around you for the paltry sum asked?

RECEPTION. The friends of Mr. and Mrs. Albert D. Niles met at the residence of his father, Mr. Geo. F. Niles, on Thursday evening, Dec. 29, and enjoyed a social evening with the young couple. The following list of presents were left on dish; Melvin Fancher, cake stand; Will Niles, nickle clock; Treat & Redden, set brown cups and saucers: Mr. Parks, set sauce dishes; Jerome Beistle, glass set; Jo. Beistle, set of salts; J. Frank Smith, picture frame; Mrs. Metzgar, Mrs. Noble, pair towels; Ruth Hathaway, one-half dozen napkins; Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Aikin and Mrs. Green, pair towels; Mrs. Chas. Bates, set sauce dishes; Mr. and Mrs. B. H. Spencer and Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Barnes, order for one finished bedstead; G F. and Frank D. Niles, set chairs; Mr. and Mrs. Brown and Mr. and Mrs. Birdsell, lamp stand; Mr. and Mrs Clifton O. Hamilton, celery dish; Fred. H. Weisgerber, pair picture frames; father and mother of bride, full set dishes; Mr. and Mrs. Carpenter, class set; Frank Enos, majolica pitcher; Frank Carpenter, autograph album.

DATTON ITEMS. Christmas was observed in the M. E. church with as fine a display of pres ents as one need wish to see. W. H. TALBOT, Topmast High.

I have often wondered, in reading that magnificent description of a giddy height of cliff in "King Lear," how the great master would have described a view from the mast-head of a lofty vessel. Say what you will of a survey from a mountain-top or from the edge of towering cliffs; in my humble judgment the most thrilling impression that great elevations can produce is (leaving of course the balloon car out of the question) to be obtained from the slender yard of a tall ship in the middle of the

For here you get an element of isolation that, in spite of the lonesomeness of traggy land, is qualified, if not extinguished, when surveying a scene from any sort of height ashore, not only by the sight of land all around you, but by land being under your-feet. But at the mast-head of a ship you stand upon a slender rope or bestride a spar that looks no stouter than a knitting-needle from the deck, and you gaze around upon a mighty surface of water, for the narrow and familiar horizon beheld from the deck is magnified into an immense ocean, and a whole hemisphere of heaven leans away into the prodigious distance, while below is the narrow shape of the hull on whose surface the seamen crawl in size no bigger than flies, and you are amazed that so slender and tapering a fabric should support the sky-searching height of mast and canvas from the sum-mit of which you look down. Here, I say, a man gets that sense of isolation which no land eminence yields, and it is complete enough even when the seas bask brightly and calmly around, when bask brightly and calmly around, when the sails are gently drawing, when the sweet winds blow softly, and the blue sky looks blandly upon the deep in whose bosom it pictures its azure beauty. But it is supreme when the tempest is around you, when the heavens are full of sooty clouds, whirling in convolutions like the smoke of a newly-fed furnace crowding in black, fat volumes from a factory chimney; when the torn sea spreads like a vast surface of wool for leagues and leagues, and the huge surges plash in sheets of blinding spray over the streak of hull that races, far over the streak of hull that races, far beneath you, like a shadow through the white haze of storm-driven spume, and reels under the shocks with a quivering that sets the mast on which you are poised trembling like an old man's hand; when the gale is roaring in thunder out of the strip of sail stretched upon the yards a long distance below you, and the din of clashing seas, and the yelling of the tempest in the sky perfect through Insanity. An American writer on special diseases in a recent paper on insanity asserts that it is largely increasing, and avers that we know next to nothing of its pathology. It is thought to be "a disease of physical degeneration rather than one of civilization (as stated by Esquirol); but the causes of mental disease, its course and its methods of oure, are regarded as yet remaining undiscovered. It is estimated from statistics that one in thirty of all persons reaching the age of 20 may be expected to become insane in the older States of the Union. and profuse perspiration.

It is a startling fact, that quinine, arsenic and other poisonous minerals, form the basis of most of the "Fever and Ague Preparations," "Specifics," "Syrups," and "Tonics," in the market. The preparations made from these mineral poisons, although they are palatable, and may break the chill, do not cure, but leave the malarial and their own drug poison in the system, producing quinism, dizziness, ringing in the ears, headache, vertigo, and other disorders more formidable than the disease they were intended to cure. AYER'S AGUE CURE thoroughly eradicates these noxious poisons from the system, and always cures the severest cases. It contains no quinine, mineral, or any thing that could injure the most delicate patient; and its crowning excellence, above its certainty to cure, is that it leaves the system as free from disease as before the attack.

For Liver Complaints, Aven's Ague Cure, by direct action on the liver and biliary apparatus, drives out the poisons which produce these complaints, and stimulates the system to a vigorous, healthy Koumiss. Economy of Time. The Tartars and some other equestrian The old adage, "Take care of the rence and the pounds will take care of tribes, from time immemorial it is said have practiced the art of brewing a sor "Take care of the minutes and the days of beer from mare's milk; and in later times they have learned how to distill will take care of themselves." If the this beer and procure from it a very pominutes were counted that are daily tent brandy. Koumiss is the native name of the mare's milk beer, and rack or racky of the koumiss brandy. This koumiss has at times become celebrated wasted in idle revery or still idler talk, in thinking of setting about a task that is not relished, and in looking for things .tlat should not have been misplaced among enlightened people as a health reviver—a fact, by the way, not at all extraordinary, and not necessarily dependent upon any good quality of the koumiss. The regular doctors and the standard medicines fail us so often that they would soon amount to hours, and prove sufficient for the acquisition of elegant art or the study of some n-classification. Almost all young per-sons have something in view of which they would like to do, if they had time to so it; and by scrutinizing their appro-

A pref scional gentleman of rare attainment, and one who added to the labority and one who added to the labority and one who added to the labority. quacks and the outlandish devices of the barbarians.

The following account of the preparation of koumiss by the Tartars is on the authority of a memoir by Dr. Grieve, in 1788, to the Royal Society of Edinburgh. Take any quantity of mare's milk, dilute it with a sixth of water, pour it into a wooden vessel, and add as a ferment about one-eighth of very sour milk, or better, of old koumiss, cover the vessel with a thick cloth and keep it at a moderate temperature. After standing twenons daties of his calling a great variety of learning, much scientific research and heavy elegant accomplishments, was that by a young lady how he found the for all that he did. He replied: of greatuse, and therefore recommend sel with a thick cloth and keep it at a moderate temperature. After standing twenty-four hours, a thick coagulum rises to the top, which must be well mixed in by beating and churning. After reposing for another day, it is again stirred till it becomes quite homogeneous, and in this state it forms the new koumiss, which has an agreeable sweetish accept taste. Koumiss keeps well, and like other beers and wines, with proper care, improves with age in taste and becomes more alcoholic. the year, and that is, always do small the year, such as writing a letter, copying out some short piece, making a sketch, which a review, etc., in small portions at time, and reserve a whole day of letter for some long and important whit. It is often preserved and transported n bottles made from horse-skin; a complete bottle is made from the skin of the hind-quarter, the leg forming the neck of the bottle. We understand that it is the practice of some of the tribes to prepare koumiss in the skin-bottles by simply filling up the bottle with fresh milk as fast as the koumiss is consumed. If the rate of using and filling up be prop-erly regulated, a pretty uniform product would be secured, but of course it would be a sort of "'alf and 'alf."

It is to be understood that mare's milk is the basis of the genuine kou miss, and no doubt genuine koumiss has a taste and odor peculiar to and charac-teristic of mare's milk. But as to chem-ical constitution, there is very little difference between mare's milk and that of other large mammals, and any kind of milk will produce koumiss closely resembling the genuine. The Tartars use mare's milk because of the abundance of horses in comparison with other available milk-giving animals. Horses and Tartars have been constant com-panions for ages, and thus it has come about that Tartars became experts in the difficult art of milking mares and then invented koumiss. The ancient Scotch made a fermented drink out of milk, but not mare's milk, which it is proper to allude to here. The basis of

has been on sale in some of the saloons of this city, which is prepared from a recipe substantially as follows: To one quart of milk add one table-spoonful of sugar and the same of brewer's yeast, when sufficiently fermented, preserve in strong bottles. Wine whey, and innumerable punches, and Tom and Jerries, which contain milk as an essential ingredient, also are related to koumiss. And there are those, constantly increasing in number, who do not allow that milk can be improved to the contains the state of the contains the contains the state of the contains the co for any useful purpose by the addition of alcohol.—Scientific American.

> Dr. Price's reputation has been acquired candid, honest dealing and years of successful practice.
> My practice, not one of experiment, but founded on the laws of Nature, with years of experience and evidence to sustain it, does not tear down, make sick to make well; no harsh treatment, no trifling, no flattering. We know the cause and the remedy needed, no guess work, but knowledge gained by years of experience in the treatment of Chronic dis eases exclusively; no encouragement without a prospect. Candid in our opinion, reasonable in our charges, claim not to know everything, or to cure everybody, but do claim to reason and common sense. We invite the sick, no matter what their ailment, to call, investigate before they abandon hope, make interrogation and decide forthemselves. It will cost nothing, as consultation is free. Visits made regularly.

reformers that the tobacco chewing habit indulged by men is too vile to be practiced by beasts, no known animal ever having yet placed tobacco chewing among his bad habits. A Norwich horse has essayed to put a stop to this sort of talk by forming the tobacco-chewing habit. The animal loves the weed, and not only teases his owner for the stuff, but noses about the pockets of people who come near him to see if he can get the odor, when he at once begins to manifest his desire for a chew. Upon presentation of a plug he will take a chew that would astonish a mariner, but with all his rolling of the dainty morsel beneath his tongue he never yet has learned to squirt the juice or to hang out his sign on his lips. He chews clean, and can give old tobacco chewers points.

-Norwich Bulletin. Among the many performances for the acquirement of fame or fortune, or both, nothing is more ludicrous than that of the man who is rewriting the Bible in rhyme. He has got pretty well into his work, and now offers one-half of the copyright to anybody who will furnish the funds to publish the book. He is perfectly satisfied as to his own ability, and challenges a comparison of his poetry with that of any poet, living or dead. He is ready to enter into a poetical contest with anybody to paraphrase into rhyme the chapter beginning: "Now these are the generations of the sons of Noah." For a taste of his quality, here are the opening verses of the book. The rythmical smoothness and the sweet poetic spirit that pervades them will, no doubt, find him a ready partner:

God in the beginning made heaven and earth; The earth had no form and was void at the first. The darkness then on the great deep did behoove The spirit of God on the waters to move. Then God ordered light and it instantly came, From infinite region it flashed o'er the main; God called the light day and the darkness called night

And the evening and morn were the first day and night.

It is asserted that the common black ant is largely cultivated by the leading orchardists of Italy and Southern Germany. They believe the insect to be the fruit-grower's best friend. They establish ant hills in their orchards, and leave the trees in the exclusive care of the tiny colonists, whose time is devoted to climbing the stems of the fruit trees and cleansing their bark and leaves of all malefactors, mature as well as embryotic. The spoils thus secured are brought to the ground, and consumed or safely stowed away. They never meddle with sound fruit, but invade only such apples, pears and plums as have already been penetrated by the canker, which they remorselessly pursue to its fastnesses within the very heart of the fruit. No where are apple and pear trees so free from blight and destructive
