WHICH WILL IT BE? One of us, love, must stand Wher, the waves are breaking on death's dark strand,

And watch the boat from the silent land Bear the other away. Which will it be?

One of us, love must bear The heavy burden that may share; And stand, all lone and desolute, where We stood in life fair day.

Joyous and free. One-either you or I-Must hear the mandate, "Thy friend must die!" And bend with agonizing cry That only God can heav. Which will it be?

And one must close the eyes Of the other-the tender, loving eyes-And kiss the dead face before us lies!

The face so calm, so dear-Oh! agony! one, when the other is gone, Will lean on the cold memorial stone

And brokenly sob, "Alone, alone!" And th winds will sigh Over you or me.

And one-grown old and gray, Perchace-will walk still earth's toilsome way And dream of the love that lives for aye.

As the years roll by. Which will it be?

We were up in the garret of the old Batterslev house, where I still kept my easel and paints, and lay-fingers and things, although it was more than a year since the agent had warned us that Battersley was no longer our property, and compelled us to move into the cottage on the salt marshes. "I wonder at your lack of spirit, child," mamma had said, plaintively.

"Oh, what is the use of having spirit?" I retorted recklessly. "I must have a studio. And there isn't a room in this little beehive that has a good north light! Wasn't I born and brought up at Battersley? And why shouldn't I keep my studio in the garret, as long as there is nobody else there but the rats and ghosts? that I could not even tell whether my great-grand-aunt's eyes were watching me or not. There was a "glimmering square' where the hall window was, a moan ably in the history of Iowa Legislation, the House yesterday noon reached an emphatic decision on the Prohibition question-ordering the engrossing of the Kennedy Bill by a vote of 51 to 48 -a strict party vote, with the Republicans all voting for it-Curtis being a fund to defray the necessary ex-absent, ill-and the Democrats and penses. Greenbackers voting solidly for it. The bill is the same as the Donnan bill with the word "now"-in speaking of the penalty statutes-left out.

At a firemen's meeting recently held in Battle Creek it was decided to hold no more State tournaments, owing to the bad blood they engender. A sensible resolution.

To reach this there had been a fore-noon of brilliant and exciting action, filled up with sensational and supreme moments. The opposition felt they were on the last possible line of success, and fought with desparation and also consummate ability. They resorted to every possible parliamentary maneuvre, and taxed the Republican lines with its bare majority to the utmost of its brain and mettle. But under the splendid Republican leadership, with Speaker Wolf's clear head and master hand to guide the way through the many artful and tangled points to which the oppositon resorted to involve and trap them, as they came to the line of victory—clearing away one after an-other all the stumbling blocks set in their way-they ordered the bill to engrossment. A man not of the strongest mould in the chair, or inferior leadership on the floor, would have lost the day to the Republican and temperance side-and the people of Iowa can never express the full measure of gratitude that they owe to those true and strong men who led, and the true and strong men who followed as with the impulse and courage of one man, in winning this memorable victory of vesterday. It was a fever of alternate hope and fear on both sides. But the balance of success was steadily settling, as question after question was disposed of, to the Republican side. The perliminaries of votes on license and substitute bills were gone through with, and managed with such consummate Republican skill as to leave the party nearer victory each step. The Greenbackers, all professed Prohibitionists, and with Prohibition in their party-platform, were driv-en by General Weaver, who was on the floor, as a team of so many tame posure of all the Weaver-Greenback cry of prohibition in their platform and campaign last year, and leaves the Greenback party in the light—and in the records of the State—as being the most abject and discreditable of all the servants of the saloon. Yesterday proved that the saloon was indeed the connecting link in the bargain last year made between the Democrats and the Greenbackers. The deluded temperance people who were then deluded by Weaver and used by the saloons, may now see the perfidy of their leaders in all its deformity."

"Col. A. H. Morrison, the veteran Republican politician of Berrien county, is in the city to-day. He expresses himself as confident of Republican success this fall, both in the state and nation. He regards Luce as a growing candidate for Governor. "I know him well," said Col. Morrison, "and he is a capital man. He would poll an immense vote, and can be elected." Of Presidential candidates Gen. Grant is his first choice and John A. Logan second. He believes, however, that Bob Lincoln is more likely to be nominated than any of the leading candidates at present."

A few of the great features of Forepaugh's supurb and indescribable grand gorgeous and costly free street parade are: Twenty-five royal elephants in line, 300 plumed horses, 40 magnificent chariots, 22 elegantly-caparisoned stallions, troupe of Arabs and Arab band, black and white camels, the pageant of "Lalla Rookh departing from Delhi," in which is seen the "Handsomest Woman in the United States," and all the wealth of an Eastern Monarch's vote was put on record during the day, which was not placed to the betrayal of prohibition. It is a humiliating ex-posure of all the Weaver Creater tigers performed,carnival scenes,jubilee singers, all nationalities, giants, dwarfs, Calliopes, droves of ponies, historical national, patriotic and moral tableaux, and more variety, grandeur and splendor than ever was seen in any parade anywhere on earth. ## OUT OF PITY.

[Cassell's Magazine]

She was just 17; the very youngest little bride that any one remembered ever coming to reign at Arntown Towers; the sweetest, daintest little Lady Fielding that the country had ever welcomed. To herself it was like a dream, it had come so fast; it seemed as if all her life had lived it elf in those six months, the leaving her English school and going out to her father's plantation in Ceylon, so proud to be his housekeeper and companion; the strange, brief life on the up-country coffee estate. Then the young English stranger who passed through Lindcola, in his rather vague wanderings for adventure's sake, and who was received and entertained at Holme Harcourt with the delightful open-handed hospitality of the colonies. And then the awful night when the sudden terrible stroke of cholera left her fatherless, and life scemed a great black void; and the chaplain's wife had been good to her, and kept her from dying in despair; and Sir Harry Fielding had been still more good; and then -and then she was resting her poor little orphaned head on a heart that was kind and true as her own father's, and a strong arm was close around her slender waist, and the voice she liked alone to hear, of all the voices around her, was telling her she should never know another sorrow he could guard her from. He seemed the only real thing in all that disam-time; the sad rast, and the present that was so happy, but just as unlike reality. Was it really herself, simple fittle Nesia Harcourt, that people were fussing over and petting and welcoming home as if she had been a royal prin es ? Perhaps it was as well she could not realize it, or her head might have been turned. Why, had not the whole week Harry and she were spending with his sister, Mrs. Mostyn, to present Nest1 to the country-side, been one round of festivities, of which she was the queen? This evening they had all driven to a grand concert in the country town, to hear a famons singer; and Nesta, in her wonderful golden satin gown, rich with embroidery and lace, with her eyes out-shining the diamond; on her white neck, and her cheek flushed with its pretty shy pink, had been an attraction only second to the queen of song herself. She felt a little weary with the excitement and the happiness now that they had reached home and were having supper in the great hall, for the concert had forced them to dine rather earlier than usual.

The house was crowded with guests, and they were all vehemently declaring that the night was hardly begun yet, and they meant to finish it with a few games. The furniture in the blue drawing-room was being hastily moved, and Nesta's heart sank at the thought of further exertion; her head ached and she was worn out. She would slip away quietly to bed, and leave Harry to make her excuses to Eleanor. Where was Harry, by the way? She had not seen him since they sat down to supper, and he and that beautiful Miss Trafford were talking in the doorway. A hasty search through the nearest rooms had no result, and Nesta stopped by an open door to glance in at the half-cleared drawing-room. Two portly dowagers were deep in conversation, their heads bent together behind their fans; but their voices rose above the music Eleanor was playing, and Nesta could not help hearing what they said.

"Gladys Trafford; yes, indeed!" cried the black velvet gown to the pur-ple brocade. "A very, very old love affair that, my dear. He and she were eparable, and a most suitperfectly i

"What shall I sign it?" she said; "I am not his wife any more, for only love really makes a marriage." Her eyes fell on her little wedding-rit g, its brightness s.arcely tarnished yet. She stooped and pressed her lips to it gently, sclemnly. "Oh, Harry, my Harry," she whis-pered, "if it had only been love, not pit."

and She rose and slipped off the golden gown and put on a dark, warm dress instead. "I must even go away from him in the things he gave me," she said, as she fastened her long fur cloak with its sil-ver clas s. "I haven't a single gown that was mine before I knew him. I e has even dressed me out of charity. His pity has been more generous than other people's love."

She opened the French window in her dressing room and stepped out on the balcony, whence a flight of steps led down to the terrace below. She glanced back at the pretty room, with its Japanese cabinets, and blue-andwhite china, and the ebony table where the letter to Harry lay, with the light full upon it, so that he could not miss it. Then she shut the casement sharply behind her, and resolutely turned away.

The moon was bright with a fitful brightness—now almost as light as day, now hidden behind hurrying clouds— and it was bitterly cold. Nesta drew her cloak tighter around her, and tried to wa'k fast, but she was desperately weary, and could only stumble along. Somehow the way to the little gate had never seemed so incomprehensibly long. Surely she could not have missed her way? The moon and the clouds were playing such pranks that one could not be sure, and her heart had been too full to notice all the turns. It was as black as Erebus now; a darkness that might be felt. Nesta took a few steps forward, then stopped short, by some mysterious instinct, just as the moon shone out clear and bright once more, its golden sparkle reflected as by a thousand broken mirrors in the water of the lake which slumbered at her feet. A strange, sharp pain shot through her heart as she saw the very rushes Harry and she had been gathering yesterday. Yesterday? A thousand years ago, when she was happy.

A wild thought flashed across her brain; she had wished to die; would it not be better for Harry and for herself, yes, and for that other woman, if she were lying under those cold, smiling waters in a dreamless sleep? It was only a moment, her soul was too white and too brave for more; she recoiled with a start of horror; but, ah! the bank was worn smooth; her little feet slip; ed on the edge, she threw out her hands to stop herself, but the frozen grass slid through her fingers; there was one short sharp cry, and a pale face lay still among the rushes in the silent moonlight. * *

It was dark and warm and deliciously restful when she knew anything again. She heard Harry's low voice before eve: she opened her eyes; and felt his class on her hand-Harry's hand-clasp, there was no other like it anywhere-and thought it must be heaven, and was glad she had done with earth, since this was so much better. And so she slept aga'n.

And when next she wole she knew that the clouds that she seemed to lie on, clouds soft and billowy, were har own bed, nothing more ethereal, and she was aware it must be earth still, but felt it did not matter since it could be so like heaven, for Harry's voice and Farry's hand were still there: and she slept again, smiling gently.

But the next time she woke the hand and voice were missing, and only was visible

JUST RECEIVED! THE PRINCE OF FILIBUSTERS

The World-Wide Deeds of Gen. Henningsen, an Englishman.

[Ben: Perley Poore.] The prince of filibusters, so far as they were seen at Washington, was Gen. Henningsen. He was an English man by birth, and, after having received a military education, he left for Spain, when 19 years of age, to serve in the forces of Don Carlos, as a staff officer of the part'san chief Zumalacarrequi. After many acts of reckless heroism he was captured, and on the death of the partisan returned to England in 1835. Two volumes from the youthful officer's pen tell his story of a "Twelve Months' Campaign with Zumalacarrequi." He did not let his sword rust long in idle-ness. Schamyl, the prophet of Circassia, had unfurled the banner of rebellion in the Caucasus, and young Henningsen promptly repaired to his ranks. From the sunny vales of Spain to the snows of Russia was a strange translation, but it was sufficient for him that a weak side needed a brave sword. Henningsen's life in Russia furnished the mate rial for half a dozen volumes, published at various periods when peace drove him to enforced retirement. Such occasions were rare, how ver. The Hungarian revolution of 1848 and 1849 found him serving with distinction under Kossuth, and he was appointed governor of Comoon. Henningsen achieved a European reputation in the d'sastrous struggle and was lionized on his return to England. Young, handsome, with great literary talent, honored with the fr endship of Wellington, he still yearned for fresh fields of adventure. He followed Kossuth to America, where his reputation had preceded him, and society welcomed him everywhere. He married a southern widow lady, Mrs. Conelly, of Burke county, Ceorgia, a niece of Senator Berrien, a devoted and cultivated woman. For a while he devoted himself to literary work, and published some once popular books of travel and fiction. But the fingers, crampel by a pen, were itching to grasp a sword-hilt, and the opportunity soon presented it-self. The exploits of William Walker

SUNDAY NIGHT IN CHINATOWN.

Things in Mott Street Which Strike the Stranger as Enigmatic.

New York Sun.] One of the liveliest places in New York on a Sunday evening is the lower part of Mott s'reet, from Chatham up to Park. It is lively with a life that is an enigma to the stranger.

From nightfall till nearly midnight the sidewalks, the stoops, and the steps leading to the basemen's swarm with Chinamen. It seems as though all the in Central America were astounding the world, and attracting to his side the brave and adventurous of every land. Yever since the days of Cortez had the world seen such a career as that of the once "immortal" fifty-six who sailed from ('alifornia in a little vessel to conquer an empire and imperil the peace Henningsen threw himself into the ranks of the American phalan : with his n un enthusiasm. His fortune and his life were freely riked, and although he lost the one and exposed the other on a soore of well-fought fields, he ne.er regretted his experience with the so-called "rilibusters." "I feel proud of having been one of them," he wrote me, "and qu'etly glory in my retirement at having been able to command and control, besides securing their personal devotion and attachment." His comrades he considered the best soldiers the world ever saw. and Lis experience entitled his opinion to respect. They were mostly California is. "California was the pick of be endured. the world, and they we:e the pick of California." With only 276 fighting men epposed to 4,000 allied Central Americans, and encumberel with 200 or 400 non-combatants, Henningsen held the Fliza of Granada for seventeen days and nights of incessant fighting. They were poorly sheltered or not at all, disease and death were daily and hourly thinning their ranks, but from leader or men there came not whisper of surrender. Relief, rid culously small in number. but invincible cf courage, came at last. hundred of those paladins whom

Chinese in the city were gather d there. The buildings on each side of the s'reet are occupied almost exclusively by Chinese tenants, who are shy of in juisitive sight ears, and keep their blinds and shades pretty closely drawn. The street is never bright with lights, but its neurest approach to brightness is on Sunday evenings. Then it has a kind of holiday appearance. 'i here are two or three buildings in the upper storie of which festivities of some kind appear to legoing on. Strange no s is come from the windows -noises like the clashing of cracked cymbals, the piping of toy files, and the clatter of unstrung snare drums. For all that can be heard in the streets, these rd culous noises are made solemply and for some grave purpose; no ound of the human voice reaches the ear. The rooms in which these things are going on are brightly lighted. All the stores are open and rows of Chinamen, standing around, line the walls. 'The stranger can look through the window of a basement and see a Chinese barber shaving one of his countrymen. The victim winces, but takes his punishment as something which must Almost without except on the China-men are Cantonese. Nine-tenths of them wear the dress of their native country. Square-crowned felt hats seem to be considered the correct thing. In some of the stores the mer-chants are so different from the other Chinamen that they seem like representatives of another race. They are the solid men of Chinatown. They look as the mandarins on tea chests would look if draped in the less elaborate garb of commercial life. Their clothing is of fine texture, and it was rident ago the Chinese abolished buttonholes the world calls "filibasters" disem-- the tailor's friend, as the moth is the furrier's friend. A curiously constructed "frog" and catch serve as but:onhole and button. Fashions do not change, cloth fabrics are lasting, and the rich Chinese merchant's outer garment endures for years upon years. These autocrats of Chinatown are seldom seen outside their pla es of business. An agreeable combination of spicy odors pervades the atmosphere of their stores. The Chinamen who make a holiday of Sunday night seem to be very much occupied. The swarms around the doors are engaged in interested talk. The men hurry out of basenents and disappear in the entrances f om stoops. Evidence of the Chinese ad-miration for labyrinth ne arrangement is shown at nearly every basement door which leads not into any room, but into a narrow passage that runs parallel with the sidewalk. Within the door the view is cut off by a torn in the pas-sage. Some of these places are gam-bling rooms or of ium resorts, or both combined. There isn't another place in New York where half as many persons can be seen about on a Sunday evening, where it is not 1 ossible to find the side entrance to a bar-room ajar not far away. The stranger naturally fails to conjecturing what the attraction can be that thus draws so many Chinamen to Chinatown, and occupies them till mid-

What made Nesta's heart give such a leap, and her feet feel spell-bound to the spot where she stood? Arnwood Towers was the only place near the Traffords. It was as if her whole being were strained to hear the rest; she never thought of eaves-dropping, poor child; it was life-and-death work with her.

"And why didn't it come about?" asked the purple brocade. "Heaven knows! A lovers' tiff, I suppose, or some such rubbish. It's a thousand pities! a Lady Fielding has always been at the head of the county society, and Gladys Trafford is just made for the position, with her beauty and cleverness and talents. She has always been immensely popular." "And who is the girl he has married?

She seems a nice little thing enough." "Oh, a harmless sort of creature; pink-and-white prettiness, nothing more. She was a planter's daughter in Ceylon, or somewhere; and he was staying with them when the father died. She was left quite friendless and destitute, and he married her out of pity. He was always a Quixotic goose, Harry Fielding." The spell was off now; and Nesta, white as death, was hurrying up the stairs to her room. There was a little sofa in a sheltered nook in the corridor, and there sat Harry-the missing Harry-and the woman he should have married. *

Nesta sped past, but as she fled she saw Harry bend his head to kiss the beautiful hand he was holding, and she heard his low murmur--

"If I had only known years ago, things might have been so different!" On, on, till her own door closed behind her, and she gazed wildly round at the pretty crnaments that strewed her bower, as if she had never seen them before. She flung the diamonds from her throat and wrists as if they hurt her, and sank into a chair beside the quaint old ebony table, leaning her head, with its tangle of crisp, brown hair, down on her folded arms. She did he couldn't help this; it wasn't his foult; he had meant to do right; he had married her "out of pity" when he loved another woman. It must be her own fault, not his; yes, because she was pink-and-white, and nothing more; and she ought to have known pity wasn't school-mistress; she would go to her and beg her to take her in, and let her teach the little children. And, perhaps, she might die soon, and Harry cou'd be happy with the woman he had always loved. Nesta felt as if death wouldn't be long in coming, she felt so ill now. She got up to fetch a time-table. Yes, the mail-train passed through Middle hampton at 1 o'clock; it was only 12 now, and, though she couldn't very well beyond, as she raised herself on her pillows. And as she rose she caught sight of herself in the long Psyche glass opposite, and started at the reflection. For all her tangle of brown hair was cut short, and there was no pink-and-white prettiness now, only great dark eyes and a small white face. And as she fell back on her pillow, half from surprise and half from weak-ness. for she was very feeble, the bells burst out clear and sweet and mystical, in a perfect carol of exultant joy. "Christmas bells! is it Christmas?" she said, "Why, it was November when I died!"

And as Harry turned and hurried to her side, she smiled up at him and asked again—

"Christmas? ; it really Christmas, Harry?" but he only bent to catch her in his arms. She yieldel to his kisses; then suddenly she tried to push him from her.

"Harry, you must not -- you must not!" she said. He saw the troubled look in her eyes, anl knew that memory was coming back. "Yes, I must," he said, "my little darling, my blessing, my life! The doctor says I may tell you all about it, for the worry will hurt you more than the talking; and oh! how I have waited for this moment to come! It has been one long nightmare since the minute I heard you scream, and ran up just in time to see you sink."

"Then it was you who found me? Oh, Harry !"

"Yes, you must hear it all. I came to your room five minutes after you must have left it, and there was the timetable open and your little note, bless it! and so I just set of for the station as hard as I could go. I had almost reached the park gate when the cry came--off to the right-and I turned just in time." His voice broke and he bent his head down to hers.

"Ne ta, it was all a lie -a vile, inramous lie, whoever told it. Gladys Trafford and I were always dear old boy-and-girl friends, nothing more. I knew my consin Wilfred loved her, and I always thought she had something to

I am a bald-headed man, myself, and I think that feller casts reflections on every man in the house." It was with difficulty that he was quieted, but finally he sat down. it may be stated the number of persons afflicted is very large, and appears to be increasing; at least 15,000 new cases of skin disease occur in this city yearly among the poor, while there is no proper hospital for their care. In the matter of cancer the needs of the city are still more painfully evident. The malady is reported by the registrar general to be on the increase in Great Britain, and the mortality from it has increased in New York of late years, according to the returns of the board of
