"JACK." . BY EUGENE J. HALL. He wore a pair of tattered pants,

A ragged round-about, And through the torn part of his hat A lock of hair stuck out; He had no shoes mon his feet. No shirt upon his back; His home was on the friendless street,

His name was "Little Jack." One day a toddling baby boy, With head of curly bair Escaped his loving mother's eyes, Who, busy with her care, Forgot the little one, who crept Upon the railroad near To play with the pebbles there, Without a thought of fear.

But see! around a curve there comes A swiitly flying train-It rattles, roars! the whistle shricks With all its might and main The mother sees her child but stands Transfixed with sudden fright! The baby claps his little hands And laughs with loud delight.

Look! look! a tattered figure files Adown the railroad track! His hat is gone! his feet are bare! Tis ragged "Little Jack!" He grasps the child, and from the track The babe is safely tossed-A slip! a cry! the train rolls by -

They found his mangled ' ody there Just where he slipped and tell-And strong men wept who never cared For him when he was well. If there be starry crowns in Heaven

The star in "Little Jack's" shall shine

Brave "Lit le Jack" is lost.

TWO MEN.

As bright as any there!

A beautiful woman held Colonel Egberd's card in her hand listlessly, and looked out upon the street with troubled blue eyes. "I wonder what is best?" she queried.
"I want to do right, and do not know what is right." Very few women under the circumstances, would have hesitated long. Knowing the most wealthy and respected bachelor of their list of acquaintance swaiting in the parlor below to lay an offer of heart and for-tune at their feet, together with so-cial accomplishments, they would not long have tarried looking out upon the dreary street, wondering what "was

But Agatha Redwing was a woman-ly woman, and a romantic woman, with a heart. There was another man in the case, or rather the memory of a man; a memory that had imbittered her life for three years; a memory that rose up strong and defiant now, when she wanted most to put it away and begin a new life, But there it stood at the gateway of this new life that looked so fair and full of promises, and barred the entrance with its shadowy arms, and

"Do not enter, for I will haunt your footsteps and blight the fairest blossom in your Eden with longing and re-A slight sound disturbed her trancelike reverie, and with a sigh she turned toward the door.

I must go down," she said; "and when he speaks I will tell him the whole story. I will leave the rest with him. It is the only way. "So when Colonal Egbert took her hand and led her to a seat, and sitting down beside ber told her of his love and reverence, and asked her to be his wife, she said, frankly:

"I thank you sincerely, Colonel Egbert, for what you have honored me by bestowing-a man's love and homage. But before I answer I want you to listen to the one romance of my life. Let me tell you of my past." Colonel Egbert made an impatient gesture with the hand.

"Your past is nothing to me," said; "it is your present and your future 1 ask for." It was a manly answer, but it did not spring from, wholly unselfish sources. He was intuitive enough to know that what she had to tell related to some other man, and that in his heart he was braced enough to be satisfied with her present and future, knowing that there had been a past, he shrank from hearing the details of that past, in which he had no "But I insist upon telling you," she "Let there be no stumbling blocks to trip over in our future." The word "our," as it fell from her lips, thrilled him with such hope that he felt almost blinded by joy for a moment, and sick with happiness. For this man was terribly in earnest, terribly in love for the first time in his thirty-years of life, and, like all strong emotions which come late in life, if had a mighty hold upon him. "Go on," he said, simply, as she began: "Six years ago, when I was but eighteen; I was not, as now, a teacher in the public schools; I was the loved and petted child of ambitious parents. My home was pleasant, and there was every appearance of prosperity and plenty. I never paused to question whether the appearance was deceitful or not. I took the beautiful wardrobe my mother supplied me with, and went into society and danced away the long sweet nights, and exulted in my youth and happiness. I was sought after and admired, as are all bright, joyous hearted girls in my position, and among the crowd of admirers was one lover. Guy Wilson became my accepted suitor soon after my nineteenth birthday. He was the son of a proud mother, the last of a proud race, and as elegant in appearance and manners as a Chesterfield. For one year we were constantly together, and then he left me for a European tour. After he went away strange things occurred. I saw my father harassed and worn, my mother worried and alarmed. I I looked about me to discover that my father's finances were in a helpless condition, and bankruptcy imminent. Distressed at the thought of my own extravagance. I sought to make amends by earning something through my own efforts, and all the avenues of labor seemed over crowded. At last I succeeded in obtaining an agency for pictures. I never shall forget the terrible struggle with my pride before I accepted the work. But I conquered it, and for weeks I walked the streets I had so lately trod in pride, peddling my wares from door to door, at the very houses where I had a few months before been the queens of balls and receptions. It was a cruel and bitter esson, but I counted it to the end. People were kind in a money way, and I earned enough to support the family during my father's illness. Then he died, and my mother soon followed. and I found the old home unbearable, and left all behind me, and came here to the work that was proffered. All this time Guy Wilson was in Europe. His letters was full of tenderness and love, yet tinged with wounded pride at the thought of my changed position and labors. I ought to have been consider-ate and bore them all, knowing how he was reared, and what an influence his mother, who was with him, had upon him. But I felt hurt and wounded, and one day, in a moment of anger, wrote him a note, saying simply, 'Under the circumstances, you must desire your freedom, which is granted you,' and sent it to him. From that day to this I have heard no word from or of him. I know not if he is living or dead; but to forget him, or the love I bore him, is utterly impossible. He came first into my life, and I must keep the place he once held sacred to his memory," "And if he should come to you today and ask to be reinstated in favor again, what then?" asked Colonel Egbert, quietly, looking not at her, but beyond her. "I would not listen to him," she answered, quickly. "He never even replied to my note; he was glad of his freedom, and I could never trust or believe in him again. I must always love him, yet I respect you greatly, Colonel Egbert. I am tired of battling with life, and if you want me, knowing all this——"

"I want your love," he said; "but if I cannot have that, I want you without it. I have never loved any woman, never desired any woman for my wife before; and I would rather know I should never see the sun rise again than to know I should never hope to win you for my own. This sounds foolish and wild, but it is true, Agatha. God knows I would do anything, risk anything, to make you love me ever so little. But if you cannot love me, I will be content with knowing I may love you. And so you will be my wife, Agatha?"

"I will be your wife, Colonel Eg-And that was their betrothal. Watching him down the street, she wondered in her own heart why she did not love him. Strong and grand of form, manly of face and carriage, he might well be a true woman's ideal of a noble lover.

"If only this miserable past was forgotten," she murmured; "but true first love is a tree whose roots never die. Oh, Guy, Guy!" The announcement of the betrothal of Agatha Redwing, teacher, to Colonel Egbert, banker, caused no little excitement. Mammas and daughters who had managed and angled, looked and expressed their disapproval, but at last agreed with the public at large that the bride elect would weil adorn the station to which her marriage would exalt her, and that she would be a very desirable acquaintance. There was very little love-making done by the lovers. Colonel Egbert was wise enough to know that, under the circumstances, ardent wooing was not advisable, and so he restrained the passion that was almost consuming his heart, and was the same kind friend Agatha had known before the betrothal. And yet to him Agatha's calm, quiet, manner was almost maddening. If she would but press his hand, or touch his cheek with her lips, or blush beneath his glance, he would have willingly died the next hour. For weeks he watched her with an agony of suspense, to see if any slightest change in her manner toward him indicated hope. "Love begets love," he said, "and the passion of my heart must awaken some warmth in her own. Oh, God! grant that she may love me!" But Agatha showed not the least evidence of any increased regard. She grew to depend upon him more and more, to tell him all her trials, and leave all her matters in his hands. She looked up to him, she leaned upon his strength for support, but she did not love him. Once he went to her, after days of suspense and agony of which she did not dream. "Agatha," he said, "I have been thinking it will be a torture to you-a life of misery-to marry a man you cannot love. If you will accept it. I will settle one-half of my fortune upon you, and go away and not ask you to fulfill your promise to me." She looked up with startled eyes. "Oh, don't!" she cried; "I could not do without you, Charles!"

She had never before called him by his name, and it thrilled him with a wordless ecstasy. "Then you do care for me a little?" he aueried. "I like you very much" she made answer, "and I need your tenderness and protection.' "But you don't love me, Agatha?" "True love never dies." she said, sad ly, "and I loyed one man truly once: I can never love another one. I can b a true, good wife to you Charles." "But, Agatha, if that man were to come back to you to morrow and explain all, and ask to be taken back, what then?" "If he could explain it all, and do away with all this doubt and dead faith, why then, Charles, I would leave the end with you. But he will not come; he could not explain. We shall never be so tried, my friend. Let us never talk of him again. I will try to make you happy, Charles, in spite of this old memory that steals like a ghost through my life." And then she nearly crazed her lover by pressing a kiss as light as the fall of a rose leaf upon his hand. He turned and left her so suddenly that she was full of wonderment if she had offended him by her caress. Offended him! Why, he was almost beside himself, and rushed away, lest he should take her in his arms and shower such caresses upon her that she would shrink from him in actual

"He is so strange!" she murmured. "If he were only more polished, more composed, like Guy! Guy never showed any change of manner; he was so elegant always, and oh, so handsome!" You see, after all, this woman was only a girl at heart, and a very romantic girl at that. The days sped by and the autumn neared, when Agatha had promised to

he was called to London to attend to important business matters. In October the marriage was to take place. It was toward the latter part of September when he took return passage for New York. The voyage was rough and he was very ill for days. When at last he was able to crawl out on deck one bright day, he found himself tete-a-tete with an elegant American—a man much younger than himself, whose pale, aristocratic face possessed some subtile attraction which first to speak. "You have been ill, I see," he said "Is it your first ocean voyage?" Then they fell to talking, and Colonel Egbert spoke the name of Grevville in the course of conversation. "Greyville!" repeated his companion; "I have known people who used to reside in Greyville. There was a friend of mine who used to speak of a lady who lived there. Miss Redwing—

Agatha Redwing—do you know her?"
"Yes, I am personally acquainted fell from his lips as live coals migh with the lady." Colonel Egbert's voice was low, and is face looked seaward. The stranger also was gazing out across the waste of waters watching a ship in the distance.

"She is still unmarried." "That is strange," mused the gentleman. "From what I have heard of Miss Redwing, I fancied she would make a brilliant marriage ere this." "Miss Redwing is certainly beautiful enough and rare enough to be sought after by the most desirable suitors." responded Colonel Egbert, quietly: but I believe she is soon to be married-it is so rumored-to one who, if he is not a brilliant parti, is at least most devotedly attached to her." "Indeed."

There was much expression in this one word, as it fell in the well-bred tones of the stranger's voice. "Then Miss Redwing is still beautiful, not at all passee, and still sought

"She is one of the most beautiful woman I ever saw; years have perfected her face, and yield her the palm of beauty and womanliness. He is considered a most fortunate man who has her promise of marriage."

"He will be more fortunate than my friend, if she keeps her promise." "Then your friend won a similar promise from her, I am to understand?" "He did; but being called abroad, partly for pleasure and partly on bus-iness, and detained there, many changes occurred. Her own family fortunes became embarassed, and the fortunes of my friend, for a time, seemed lost in business speculation. Just after the news of this catastrophe reached him, there came a letter from Miss Red-wing, saying: 'Under the circumstances, you must desire your freedom, which is granted.' It was a hard blow, but he survived it. Of course she was justified; becoming poor herself, she could not well contemplate a marriage with a poor man. It was her duty as a woman of the world to look out for a better prospect; but my friend found it hard to reconcile the matter with his former estimate of the lady's character. He has known nothing of her from that time, but supposed she would be well married ere this.' Every particle of color had left Colonel Egbert's face during this recital, and it was with an effort he asked the

"Is your friend still unmarried?" "He is still unmarried, and, thanks to Providence, once more in possession of his fortune. I believe he contemplates a reture to his native land soon. He has been abroad all these years." "I think I will retire to my berth: I feel quite ill. I wish you would be so kind as to grant me an interview before we reach New York. I have some information I think your friend should be in possession of.'

And without waiting for any response, Colonel Egbert went below. But he did not appear again until New York was visible. Then he simply handed his acquaintance a letter, remarking: "This is for your friend. You are at liberty to read it yourself, and see that it reaches your friend by the first steamer. The happiness of two lives depends upon it." Alone in his stateroom the stranger read these words: "If you desire a reconciliation with the woman von once loved, come at once to Greyville. She has promised her hand to another, but he knows her heart is yours. There has been a terrible mistake. She believed you desired your freedom because of her loss of fortune and position, and is grieving her life away. Come at once and re store the happiness of her life and of complication.

These were thoughts that flitted hoty through the tired brain of Colonel Egbert, as he greeted his new friend. "And I am the man who has the promise of Miss Redwing's hand, but has never been able to win her heart,' he said, with something like the spectre of a smile upon his face. "Confessions and surprises seem to be the order of the hour. I propose we complete them by taking Miss Redwing by surprise and confessing to her our situations. I am ready to assign her to your hands. She has told me she loves you still, but, believing you unworthy of her love, she was willing to become my wife. Now that you are justified by an explanation, I cannot longer consider her' promise to me binding, and therefore set her free. Come with me at once and let us make an end of this

An hour later, what was the astonishment of Agatha Redwing to see into her presence two men-Colonel Egbert, her betrothed husband, whom she had not seen for two months, and Guy Wilson, her old lover, whom she had not seen for four years! The one strong, brave-eyed, muscular, full of fire, and courage, and nobility; the other tall lithe, elegant, but effeminate and languid. Colonel Egbert was the first to speak. He crossed the room hurriedly, and be-the silence now, the voice she had so loved, so longed to hear. "Agatha, have you no word of welcome for one who has been a wanderer for your sake?"

The blonde head lifted, the blue eyes . rested upon his handsome face. Why was it that pretty face had no charm for her? Perhaps she read his soul and knew that it lacked the essence of true manhood. At all events, she was conscious that the ideal hero of her dreams was swiftly vanishing, fading, dissolving into the real man before her—the effeminate man whose elegance and immaculateness offended her, whose perfectly modulated tones annoved her because they lacked the ring of strong manhood, and whose woful weakness ot character seemed stamped upon every classic feature.

Was this the man she had wasted her heart's love upon? Love? No, only her dreams. She had loved him only in imagination, and now that he stood before her again, and scales fell from her eyes, and she felt for him a sense almost of repulsion. Her eyes turned toward Colonel Egbert, and rested there hungrily. Through all his pallor and haggardness, the strong, grand face stood out like a rock in the mist. His breadth of shoulder and might of arm impressed her anew with power and protection. His passionate love and strength of control thrilled her like a word of electricity.

She felt her heart swell with a new sense of longing and love. Was this man going out of her life? Was he putting her away from him? Robbing her of the rock upon which she leaned, and leaving her but a reed? She felt her heart dying within her at the thought. She forgot everything, forgot the presence of Guy Wilson, and gliding across the record and, gliding across the room, clasped her arms about Colonel Egbert's neck. "Oh, Charles!" she cried, "do not leave me, or I shall die! I love you— you, Charles, and no other! It was all a mistake. I know my heart now for

Like a wise man, Guy Wilson took his hat and his departure without waiting for farewells. The first train bore him back to New York. It was bitter defeat and a humiliating experience, but he deserved it. He had been a weak coward in the hour of Agatha Redwing's greatest need. Colonel Egbert folded her to his heart as the door closed upon Guy Wilson, with such rapture as only strong men do who, after long waiting, gain the woman of their worship. "God bless you!" he cried, in a shak-

A Shower of Blood. A few weeks ago there was a shower of some red liquid in Chatham. The We are glad to learn that the authorities in this city have commenced criminal proceedings against the most insiduous and dangerous form of the lottery business yet devised for the purpose of swindling honest country people. We refer to the scheme adopted by several manufacturers of cheap and inferior goods by which prizes or tickets are given entitling purchasers to "a gift" if they chance to get a lucky number with the package bought. It is somewhat refreshing, however, to learn that recently the manufacturer of a laundry soap, and also a spice dealer, who in this way offered gifts to purchasers of their packages, have been arrested upon indictments of the United States Grand Jury for lottery swindling and are now awaiting trial in this city. The latest candidate for criminal prosecution in this direction is the manufacturer of a baking powder, who is endeavoring by a similar lottery trick, to palm off upon servant girls and unsuspecting housekeepers an article called baking powder, but which really is an alum compound of a corrosive nature and detrimental to health. It is, therefore, really a source of congratulation that the authorities have taken the matter in hand; for while

Hot water.-Every worm visible upon the cabbages may be killed by the use of water at the temperature of 120 degrees Fahrenheit or 55 degrees Centigrade. The water may be boiling hot when put in the watering can, but it will not be too hot when it reaches the cabbage leaves. The thick, fleshy nature of the leaves enables them to withstand considerable heat with very little injury. The sacrifice of a few heads of cabbage will soon teach an experimenter how far he can go with the hot water. It may be sprinkled over the plants from a fine-rose watering can or poured on with the sprinkler removed. If it is very hot it will color some of the leaves, but even where the cabbage is considerably scorched it will

Other preparations are made by boiling leaves of the elderberry, smart-weed, or other pungent or fetid plants in the water, but the effect of these in killing the worms seems to be no greater than that of the water

A Hot Region.

One of the hottest regions of the little or no rain falls. At Babrin the arid shore has no fresh water, yet a comparatively numerous population contrives to live there, thanks to the copious springs which burst forth from the bottom of the sea. The fresh water is got by diving. The diver, sitting in his boat, winds a great goat-skin bag around his left arm, the hand grasping its mouth; then he takes in his hand a heavy stone, to which is at-tached a strong line, and, thus equipped, he plunges in and quickly reaches the bottom. Instantly opening the bag over the strong jet of fresh water, he springs up the ascending current, at the same time closing the bag, and is helped on board. The stone is then hauled up, and the diver, after taking breath, plunges in again. The source of these copious submarine springs is thought to be in the green hills of Osman, some 500 or 600 miles distant

What Will Burst a Gue.

In bravado a young man placed the muzzle of his fowling-piece under the water and fired the charge. The result was the bursting of the barrel near the breech and the mutilation of his hand. Another placed and held the muzzle of his piece square against a piece of plate window-glass, and fired the charge—powder and a bullet. The glass was shattered, so was the gun the first time. I know now what love an experimenter who had heard that a candle could be fired from the barrel of a gun through an inch board. He drove a candle into the muzzle of the gun, fired, and the explosion split the barrel almost its entire length, and did not even drive the candle from the muzzle. Still another burst of a gun barrel was caused by the use of wet grass for a wad, well rammed over a charge of shot. But perhaps one of the most singular exhibitions in this line was a Colt's navy revolver, which some years ago was sent to the factory in Hartford, Conn. This was before the adaptation of these pistols to the metallic cartridges, and it is probable that in loading with open powder and ball only a small amount of powder got into the chamber, and the bullet was not propelled with sufficient force to drive it from the muzzle; at least the bullet did not go out, but lodged. As the shooter did not know whether the bullet escaped or not, he kept on firing until the barrel burst or bulged. and when the barrel was sawed in two longitudinally there were found 14 bullets wedged one into the other .-

place where the phenomenon was seen is in New Hope Township. The fall came from a cloudless sky when the wind was so light as to be almost imperceptible. The position of the drops seen on the fence indicated a very slight wind from the south or southwest, across some plowed land. A woman was standing on this plowed land near a fence along which small pine bushes were growing. She noticed something falling between her and the ground, saw it leave a red splash on the sand, heard a pattering like rain around her, looked up, but it was all over and she could see nothing. She was a good deal frightened and affected, taking it as a portent of death or evil of some kind. S. A. Holleman visited the spot the next morning (the fall took place about mid-day) and has kindly given the following facts ob-served: The space covered was about fifty by seventy feet and nearly in a rectangular form. The drops were of sizes varying from that of a small pea to that of a man's finger, and averaged about one to the square foot. Smaller drops were instantly absorbed; large ones, with those on the wood, coagulated. Some fell in the bushes and coagulated upon the limbs. Dr. Robinson living near, collected some of the freshy fallen material and made certain simple tests, which satisfied him that it was blood. It even had the smell, Peele was officially declared elected by a majority of 87 and has held the seat up to this time. The first vote resulted in favor of Peele. A motion was made to reconsider, and before a vote could be taken another was made to adjourn, which was carried. This gave English renior a chance to get in his work, and upon reassembling a number of the Democratic members, including Mr. Eldridge, from this State, had found some influence to change their minds and voted exactly the opposite to what they did the day before. THE Benton Harbor Palladium contains the following suggestion that is worthy of consideration:

In every case when we have heard the question discussed of who was to be the nominee for congress in this district on the Republican ticket in the ensuing election, we have heard Berrien county mentioned as entitled to the candidate; and it was freely asserted by men of other sections that any one of the more prominent men of this county could be nominated if the Republicans would unite on any one in reply to the bitter attact of the Sturgis Journal against Mr. Burrows, while the Palladium will heartly support any one who has yet been announc ed as a candidate, we are first in favor of a man from Berrien county. Messrs. Chamberlain, Van Riper, Morrison, Fife, Clapp, Coolidge, and others, have been urged as worthy of the honor; and it is said some one of these can readily secure the nomination if the county will unite on one of them. Now, the Palladium suggests that the leadmen of the party in this co hold a conference and firmly agree to stand together in favor of the one who may be named by the majority, and that, whoever he may be, every effort be made to secure his nomination and election. For many years the western portion of the district has furnished the votes to elect nominees from the eastern counties. It is now but fair that some man from Berrien county receive the nomination.

We notice that some of our exchanges urge the name of Hon. J. J. Wood man of Van Buren county. We know Mr. Woodman is a man in every way worthy of this high honor; and we believe he would be a very strong candidate. That he would conscientiously discharge the duties there is no question. If a Berrien county man cannot be nominated, and the opposition to Mr. Burrows is persisted in, the Palladium will cheerfully support Mr. Wood man, or any other good man from Van Buren county.

A Michigan Farmer Figures. Mr. J. M. Ferguson, of Coopersville, Ottowa county, this State, in a letter to the Chicago Inter Ocean, gives the following figures concerning imports and exports: "In 1870 and 1872 the tariff was considerably reduced, and in 1875 it was was placed back where it was before the reduction of 1870. During these four years of tariff reduction our imports were $2,337,000,000 against $1,-588,000,000 the four previous years. In the next four years, after the tariff was restored, we imported only $1,747,000,-000 against $2,237,000,000 the four previous years. You may say that we had a great financial crash in 1873 and 1874, so that our people were not able to purchase so freely. Very well; how could we expect anything but a financial crash when we reduced the tariff and encreased our imports nearly two hundred million dollars a year, and bought fifty to one hundred million more than we sold. Now let us see how it was after the tariff was restored in 1875. Our imports for the next four vears amounted to only $1.747.000.000. but we exported $2,641,000,000, or in other words we sold to foreign countries $897,000,000 more than we bought of them; but you will say how is it that under the high protective tariff for the last four years our imports were $540,000,000 larger than for the four years of tariff reduction. It is plain enough; the restoring of the tariff in in 1875 soon placed us in a proper condition again, and by 1880 we he had wiped out the disastrous effects caused by the reduction of the tariff of 1870 and 1872, and we were once more on our feet with increased capacity to purchase, and we did buy $540,000,000 more than we did for the four years of tariff reduction; but we also sold $1,-215,000,000 more at the same time thereby scoring up a balance in our favor of $675,000,000, a pretty good four years' work for a country with a high productive tariff; something no nation ever did under free-trade. Since 1790 we have had twenty-one years in which real protection has had a chance to show itself, and during that time we sold foreign countries $1,-515,000,000 more than we bought of them, but during seventy-three years of unsatisfactory tariff we bought of them $1,077,000,000 more than we sold to them. Now, I am a farmer, and when I sell more than I buy year after year, and score up a nice balance to my credit, it pleases me, and I have always supposed it to be a good policy for a nation to sell more than they buy. which we always do under protection. Our free-trade friends seem to think that their doctrine is strong with the farmers, but in this section there is no

Big Rapids attracts the attention of the Inter Ocean of Saturday to the extent of over four columns.

The Cass county pioneers will picnic at Cassopolis June 18, and have engaged Ex-Governor Blair to talk to them. There lies buried in the Sault Ste. Marie cemetery the body of a man having shackles and handcuffs on the legs and arms.—Evening News.

The Michigan Mutual life insurance company of Detroit, has paid the $10,-000 insurances on the life of the late Andrew R. Allen, a talented young attorney of Muskegon, who recently suicided.—Evening News.

A "deaf mute" peddler tried to sell his wares to Mayor Belknap, Grand Rapids. The Mayor asked him by signs if he had a license, and learning that had none told him he must get one or be arrested. This caused the dumb to speak.

Mrs. John Kidder, living three miles east of Decatur, while returning home from town Saturday noon with a horse and buggy, and attempting to cross the track ahead of the western-bound train, was struck and instantly killed. The body was terribly crushed and mangled. Nearly every bone was broken and both feet were cut off. Her face was completely torn away. The horse man who shot his wife on the ferry boat in the Canada part of Detroit river, made every effort to have his sentence changed, but without avail, and he will hang on June 17, according to previous arrangement. The annual meeting of the State Press Association will be held in Bay

City June 24. A number of interesting exercises are on the programme, chief mong which is an excursion to Marquette by way of Macinac and the Macinac and Marquettte railroad through the Upper Peninsula.

The small French farmers about Mt. Clemens are making an extensive industry of straw braid. During eight months no less than 2,250,000 yards are manufactured, and probably 2,500,000 in the year. An expert braider can make 75 yards a day and some families make as much as $25 a week from that source alone. The Monitor thinks a hat factory employing 100might be established there.—Evening Journal.

The Crouch family, at Jackson, proves to be one of the most beautfully mixed of any in this state. A Mrs. Wheeler now appears and claims to be the child of Jacob D. Crouch by his first wife, who is still living and undivorced, and consequently she is the sole heir to his immense estate, and the other members of the family illegitimate children.

A new dodge was successfully practiced by three thieves on a night train on the Michigan Central Friday morning. When nearing Jackson, and doubtless posted as to proximity of the conductor, they entered the car, pretending to be train men, and ordered everybody out to the rear car, claiming that the car was wanted at Jackson for emigrants. The passengers sleepily obeyed orders, and while crowded on the platforms of the cars the thieves plundered their pockets. One man is said to have lost $100. Two men have been arrested, but no money was found on them.

Making a Railroad.

When the war closed, one of the Georgia railroads hadn't a depot or freight-house on its line, and its rolling-stock consisted of two old locomotives and four flat cars. These couldn't roll until new ties and rails were laid, and the outlook was dubious enough. However, the president called a meeting of the board to see what could be done. When he had stated the coudition of the track and equipment, he added that the company hadn't a dollar in cash, and no collateral to borrow money on. He then asked whatshould

"I move we declare a dividend of ten per cent," boldly replied one of the di-It was a thunderclap which knocked 'em all down; but he followed it up by offering to loan the company $32,000 to make the dividend, and a dividend was declared. The stock at once leaped from thirty-four to ninety cents, and in a year it was held at 108 and paying dividends on that.

The Pest of Flies.

An Iowa lady writes to an exchange: "For three years I have lived in town, and during that time my sitting-room has been free from flies, three only walking about, my breaktast table, while all my neighbors' rooms are crowded. I often congratulate myself on my escape, but never knew the reason of it until a few days ago. I then had occasion to remove my goods to another house, while I remained on for a few days longer. Among other things removed were the boxes of geraniums and calcolarias, which stood in my window, being open to its full extent, top and bottom. The boxes were not gone half an hour when my room was as full of flies as those of my neighbors around me. This, to me, vas a new discovery, and perhaps it may serve to encourage others in that which is always a source of pleasure, namely, window gardening. Mignon-ette, planted in long, shallow boxes, placed on the window-sill, will be found excellent for this purpose."

A Good Year for Whales.

Capt. Tharsen of the bark Aurora, now lying at Dickinson street wharf, Philadelphia, reports that the vessel ran into a school of whales while on the passage from Hamburg to Phila-delphia. Early in the morning of April 11, to the westward of Newfoundland Banks, several large black objects were seen projecting above the water. They resembled rocks, and the crew expected every minute that the vessel would strike, believing they vere near a stony coast. The objects were soon seen to be whales of immense size. As the craft moved along the whales made scarcely any effort to get out of the way. Capt. Tharsen, who has been master of a vessel for years, states that he never saw whales so numerous as during the present year.—Philadelphia Record.

Training the Memory. "Dr. Zukertort, why is it that many good chess-players not only cannot play blindfolded, but are unable to comprehend how another man does it?" a little shrug, the Doctor replied: "I suppose it is a difference in the powers memory. My memory has a peculiar ining. When I was 7 years old, and before I could read or write, I was able to demonstrate such a problem as the square of the hypothenuse, or to work out a simple equation entirely from memory. My godfather was a professor of mathematics, and he had great faith in the value of training the memory. I myself believe that the memory may be trained in the same way that we can train our bodies. My memory is good in other lines than Whatever I read a few times I commit to memory. I have not read Roman history since I was in the university; but I am ready to stand an examination in Roman history to day. I believe I have forgotten none of the dates. I can play over now in my mind the games of chess that I played in the London tournament. MR. AND MRS. A. C. DAY and Mr. J. M. Matthews started for Sedan, Kan. yesterday morning. This trip is taken with a view of benefiting Mr. Day's health, which has been very poor for several months. All his old friends will wish him a splendid visit and a full restoration to health. Mr. Matthews has, during his stay here, succeeded in causing considerable property to change hands and a number of crooked quarrels to be settled, all of which have been of good account to

THE Marshal of Niles, Zwergel by name, evidently wants to get all he can out of his office. Monday, when Lou. Hoffman left, he took with him his cornet, which was "in soak" here for $12.50, and when one of the boys who had the claim against it went to look after his interests he hunted up this bright officer and had him get the cornet away from Lou., but not knowing enough to give it up to the party who had satisfied him his claim was just, proposed to keep it for further developments. When Deputy Sheriff Palmer went over to arrest Lou. he asked the aforesaid b. o. for the instrument, and had to pay him $1.50 for his friends might be able to find him, as it is doubtful if he would know enough

ARRANGEMENTS have now been completed for the extension of the St. Joseph Valley railroad to St. Joseph and South Bend, and there is a most excellent prospect that the work will be done immediately. The expectation now is that the work will be commenced at once and completed in about ninety days. There is still a small doubt regarding the time in which the work is to be done, but that it will be done, at a not very distant day, is assured. That it cannot be done too soon is a part of the question that the public can vouch for.

MONDAY the band loys discovered that their teacher, Lou. Hoffman, had gone to Niles and taken, their music with him. They sent Deputy Sheriff Palmer after him just in time to learn that he had sold their music to Charley Harter for the Niles band. Since the boys came in possession of the music the Niles boys have been working every scheme they could invent to get hold of it, and the means they employed, although not of a criminal nature, are not more commendable than that of Hoffman in selling what does not belong to him. He was fined $5 and costs, which was paid by some members of the band, and be allowed to go

W. A. SEVERSON

[Boston Globe.] "Turn around, Jim, and let them see the Crucifixion.' Two men, seated on chairs, sat facing each other in a room on North street. One of them was dressed in a navy uniform. His name was Elmer E. Getchell. The other was a Boston citizen named James Burke, and he was dressed in a light and airy costume of a pair of trunks. There was nothing more upon him in the way of clothing, but he had more decoration on his body than any man in the state. He was tattooed from his neck down to his toe-nails, with all kinds of figures of men, beasts, flowers, ships and shapes of every kind. His thighs were covered with idols. etc., placed there when he was in Burmah, eight years ago. All the rest of the work was new and has been put on within a few weeks by Mr. Getchell. The figures were blue and red, and the various figures were drawn in a skillful and artistic style. As the tattooed man turned around, his back showed the commencement of a picture of the Crucifixion, copied after the large steel engraving by Hilton. I have a good deal to do on this man yet. That picture will cover all of the back and extend around to the sides. You see only the three figures on the crosses now, but I will work in all the other figures that are in the picture, and show the City of Jerusalem in the distance."

"How long does it take to tattoo a man, and what does it cost?" 'I did Frank Hadley in eight weeks, but the length of time depends on the length of the sittings each day. The cost depends a good deal on the size of the man. It is less work to cover a little man than one who tips the beam at 300 pounds. I have been at this business for the last five years, and have tattooed thousands of people. I charge all the way from 25 cents up to $500, according to the quantity and nature of the work."

"Is the operation a painful one?" "Not at all. This pencil has nine fine needles in it. I stretch the skin tight and prick it-this way. It makes only a slight itching. I never draw blood. Just see how it feels." He pricked the reporter's hand. The sensation was not painful. Then he resumed his work on the man before him, and remarked: "I use the best of Chinese ink. It costs $2 an ounce. For red I use pure vermillion. I frequently cover up old designs with new work. There is no danger of taking cold or of any bad effects at any season of the year. Some men almost faint when I go to work on them, but that is all imagination. There is no pain. This man is being tattooed for exhibition in a dime museum. Hadley has done well since I finished him, and gets $60 a week in Cincinnati, besides what he makes from the sale of his pictures.

"Children, too, are tattooed. They are brought by their parents to have initials and other marks put on them. so that they may be identified if lost. Ladies bring pet dogs to have marks put on the inside of their ears for the same purpose. The oddest work I ever did was the tattooing of the noses of two bull dogs. Their noses were black with the exception of one or two spots, and as these would bar them from prizes at a show they were brought to me to have the spots colored. I did a good job, and they bore it like Christians. It's a queer business, isn't it? but it pays well, and I have all I can do the year round. There is a good deal of art in getting the figures correctly drawn in the skin, but once it is donc. picture on a child and he grows to be a large man, the picture grows with him and the lines remain as true as at first. There are a good many who make bad tattoo work because they are bad

Lunacy Caused by War.

[Paris Figaro.] Dr. Legrand du Saulle, a distinguished authority on the subject of insanity, recently delivered an interesting lecture in the Salpetriere on the influence of the siege of Paris in the production of mental disease. For a few days after the declaration of war there was a notable dimunition in the number of these cases; but as soon as it became known that the Prussians were marching on Paris the anxiety and alarm felt by the suburban population culminated in many instances in madness of a curious and rarely observed type-extreme melancholy, accompanied with stupor and dazed condition of the faculties. Three hundred and fifty thousand suburban residents had to take refuge in Paris, where they found no other shelter than that afforded by the railway carriages at the termini, which soon became densely crowded.

Hunger and inanition swelled the statistics of insanity during the siege all the more that wine was to be had in abundance, and the men of the National Guard spent the greater part of the 30 sous allowed them daily on drink, on which, in fact, they and many others lived during the last few days of the siege. The "mania of inventions" became very common at the same time. Gen. Trochu was constantly pestered with lunatics, who came to lay before him all manner of wild contrivances of their invention for the total and instantaneous annihilation of the

Camphor for Cholera. [Medical Journal.]

Dr. Dudgeon, the famous homeopathist physician of London, recalls the fact—apropos of Koch's investigations into the nature of the cholera germthat Hahnemann in 1831 suggested that the contagious matter of cholera consisted of "excessively minute invisible living creatures," and accordingly advised the free use of camphor, which he held to be a potent cholera bacilicideto the efficacy of which treatment, adds Dr. Dudgeon, the statistics of every epidemic in Europe testify.

Wood as Food.

[Popular Science Monthly.] Certain animals have a remarkable power of digesting ligneous tissue. The beaver is an example of this. The whole of its stomach, and more especially that secondary stomach, the cecum, is often found crammed or plugged with fragments of wood and bark. I have opened the crops of several Norwegian ptarmigans, and found them filled with no other food than the needles of pines, upon which they evidently feed during the winter. The birds, when cooked, were scarcely eatable on account of the strong resinous flavor of their flesh. I may here, by the way, correct the commonly accepted version of a popular story. We are told that when Marie Antoinette was informed of a famine in the neighborhood of the Tyrol, and of the starving of some of the peasants there, she replied: "I would rather eat pie-crust" (some of the story-tellers say "pastry") "than starve." Thereupon the courtiers giggled at the ignorance of the pampered princess who supposed that starving peasants had such an alternative food as pastry. The ignorance, however, was all on the side of the courtiers and those who repeat the story in its ordinary form. The princess was the only person in the court who really understood the habits of the peasants of the particular district in question. They cook their meat, chiefly young veal, by rolling it in a kind of dough made of sawdust, mixed with as little coarse flour as will hold it together; then place this in an oven or in wood embers until the dough is hardened to a tough crust, and the meat raised throughout to the cooking point. Marie Antoinette said that she would rather eat croutins than starve, knowing that these croutins, or meat pie-crusts, were given to the pigs; that the pigs digested them, and were nourished by them in spite of the wood saw-dust.

IMITATION OYSTERS. ATraveler's Tale of Oyster Factories

in Paris. New York Sun. "The most singular thing that I saw in Paris," said a gentleman just resarned from Europe, "was artificial cysters; not what you call mock oysters, that is, meat done up in a patty or a rotpie, but an imitation of the real bivalve and fit to serve raw. And as far as their looks go, you would say at once that they were genuine American oysters, but when you came to eat one the difference would be perceptible at once. How they are made and what is used in their manufacture is a mystery I did not solve, but it is certain that a great deal of money is made by the producers. The usual price is 5 cents each, and sometimes in the second-class eating houses they are to be had for 3 cents, though they are not apt to be fresh at that You order a plate on the half price. You order a plate on the han shell, and when the waiter brings them to you they look just as nice as those you get in the best New York places. If you are not a good judge of oysters you will eat them with your wine and go away without asking any questions.

"The only thing genuine about them is the shells. The manufacturers buy second-hand shells from restaurant keepers at a small expense, and with a sort of paste, fasten the spurious oyster in its place. Only one-half a shell is used for the purpose, and in that shape the fraud oysters are packed on shelves in boxes. Others, to be served without the shell are put up in cans containing twenty-five or 100. lealers in real oysters urge the saloonkeepers to break up their shells as fast as their contents are consumed, and even pay the cooks and waiters to pound them to pieces. "Do we have any manufactured oysters in this country?" a reporter inquired of a Fulton market oysterman.

"Yes, sir," he replied; "the Standard Oil company and several other similar concerns are manufacturing oysters into lamp wicks, warranted to burn oil or amps, and I think it's an infernal—" "Hold on," exclaimed the reporter, that is not what I mean. What I want to know is, do they make an imitation oyster that could be sold as the real

"Not that I know of. I do not think they have come to that yet. What is more, I do not think it would pay, that is, just at present; but we cannot tell what we will come to if any more oil is dumped in the bay and rivers. At present the finest oysters are 2 or 3 cents apiece, and I should say they could not be imitated and sold for that

He Kissed the Governor's Wife.

["Carp" in Cleveland Leader.] A most villainous picture is being published in all the country papers purporting to be a likeness of Senator Vance, of North Carolina. It is a libel on one of the finest looking men in public life. Senator Vance is a tall, broad-shouldered, handsome man of 54 years. He has a large, pleasant, open face, a bright, fun-loving eye, and lux-uriant hair and mustache of iron-gray. He is a very popular man among his fellow senators, and he can tell more good stories than any of them. He likes a joke, and North Carolina is full of the evidences of his propensitie; in this direction.

One day when he was governor of the state it is said that he was riding on horseback along a road about ten miles from the capital, when a stranger overtook him. The two men fell into conversation, and the stranger told Vance he had been to Raleigh to see the governor, and that he had called a his house, but that he was not at home. "Did you see the governor's wife?" said Vance. "Yes." was the reply.

"And did you not kiss her?" The man, very much astonished, replied, "No, but she was very pretty, and I should have liked nothing better."
"Well, I've kissed her," continued Vance, "and I never meet her but that I do so." And, thereupon, after enjoying the man's astonishment for a moment, he told him that he was the

the last month: A stocking said to have been worn by Cleopatra on the day of her death. It is just a fit for Giveadam Jones, and he wears a No. 11 boot. A coonskin cap supposed to have belonged to Daniel Boone. One who sees the cap cannot blame the Indians for wanting to kill Daniel. A pistol said to have been worn by Lord Cornwallis when he surrendered. A general who would lug such a weapon around could only expect to come to some bad end.

When Beecher Fasts.

[Health.] It is said that when Henry Ward Beecher expects to make an unusual effort in public, he postpones a meal, if it comes near the hour of his lecture, and waits until he is rested afterward before he eats anything; and he has every prospect of being a hale old man.

[New York Sun.] Situated in the desert, about a quarter of a mile from the western gate of the City of Jeddah, is an object of interest to Christian and Mussulman alike—the grave of Eve, or as she is called in Arabic, "Sittna Hawwa," the mother of mankind. It is difficult to trace the origin of the legend that allots to Eve this desert tomb as her last resting-place, and it is doubtful whether it is of any great antiquity. However this may be, the tomb is regarded with great veneration by the numerous pil-grims who visit Jeddah, and iew fail to worship at the shrine.

Advantages of Roughing It. [Exchange.]

A new feature, or rather experiment in the training of lads, has become of late popular in some of our middle states. It is to send the young man fresh from college, perhaps, and elated with scholastic or athletic honors, to herd sheep or cattle for a year on a western ranch. At first thought, this treatment seems rough, almost brutal. But it usually proves wholesome, as a cold douche to an enervated body.

A lad subjected to this treatment for a year, tried daily only by the courage, common-sense shrewdness and downright force that is in him, comes back with "much of the nonsense taken out of him." and with a broad outlook over the world, and a firm comprehension of reality and of conventional falsities, which years of town life would not give

Added to all this is the thorough strengthening of his physical forces in the pure air and hard out-door work. Many a petted, weakly stripling might be saved from death, or an inefficient, sickly life, by a year of exile on the prairies.

Comfort, Economy and Speed

The time when the seeker of a new home in the far West and his wearied family were required to suffer the fatique and discomfort of a long journey in a regular day coach, with no beds but the seats, has long since passed by: a great majority of such passengers being unable to provide their families with the luxuries of Pullman Palace Sleeping cars, on account of the expense. The Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe R. R. Co. began, several years ago, to equip its lines with sleeping cars which would afford comfortable sitting room for its passengers by day. and agreeable sleeping apartments at night, and to open these accommodations without extra charge to all persons traveling, even on the low fares uniformly furnished to seekers of homes in the new country now opening along the line of the road, as well as to the Pacific coast. These sleeping cars are not upholstered, but are finished on the interior in hard woods. and after each trip are thoroughly washed, and made as clean as when they first came from the builder's hands. These cars are also well lighted and ventilated, provided with closets and lavatories, and are liberally supplied with water and fuel, so as to make them comfortable at all seasons of the year. The Agent of the Company at Kansas City will take especial pains to locate passengers of the same nationality together, and classify passengers with some consideration of accommodation and congeniality, so as to make their trip as companionable and enjoyable as possible. The train men are also instructed to look carefully after the comfort of these passengers. Assignment of berths are made at Kansas City, by which passengers may be assured of retaining their places through to the Pacific coast if desired.

These cars form a part of the express trains between Kansas City and The Needles, and Kansas City and Deming, and passengers thus have all the privileges of these comfortable cars at the extreme low rates of fare, and arrive at their destination as promptly as if traveling in Pullman Palace Sleeping

THE TERRIBLE ABATTIS. Works Which 500 Men Can Hold

Against 5,000. [M. Quad's Letter.] Let a regiment move out of the shelter of a piece of woods to charge a breastwork defended by infantry and artillery, and one man out of every ten will be killed or wounded by shell or round-shot while the lines are forming. Within one minute from the time the learest man comes within range of the musketry and grape forty men will drop. During the rush at least twenty more will go down, and as the troops reach the works they will meet with such a fire as will break up all organization. One time in forty the works will be carried. Thirty-nine times out of forty the attacking troops are driven back with a loss of from 200 to 450 men. Take that same breastwork, having a head-log to fire under, and run an abattis along its front and it is nothing short of murder to send men against it. Let the abattis be simply a winrow of small trees and brush, and no column can pass it without a halt. Men must lay down their muskets and drag at the obstruction and the broken lines must be reformed, and that within thirty feet of the muskets having a dead rest. Make the abattis of sharpened stakes, with their butt ends driven deep into the earth and the center firmly fastened to a rail running parallel with the works, and 500 men behind the works can hold them against 5,000. Let telegraph wires be strung from tree to tree or post to post, as was sometimes done, and unless the attacking party bring axes their dead will be piled up three feet deep all along the wire fences.

At Spottsylvania there was a slashing in froat of that point on Lee's lines called the Horseshoe. The butts of the fallen trees were towards the workstheir sharpened limbs towards Grant. Confederates stationed in this Horseshoe killed an average of ten Federals each. An abattis near Lost Mountain, during Sherman's Georgia campaign aided a force of 600 Confederates to defeat a movement made by a Federal force of 4,400 men. At Fredericksburg the stone walls were an abattis and could not be passed. At Gettysburg Hancock's position was made impreg-nable by such walls. At second Bull Run every position on either side cov-cred by walls or fences was held to the last. A creek five feet wide and six inches deep would not stop the wanderings of a child, but it has more than once halted a division and held it under such a fire that whole companies were wiped out.

The Plain Old Lady.

[Chicago Tribuna.] It is related that when Lady Dufferin first went to St. Petersburg it was necessary for her to be received in audi ence by the empress. At the time appointed she arrived and was ushered in the room. There she found a lady very plainly dressed, who approached and asked her: "Did you see my daughter before you left England?" "Excuse me," said Lady Dufferin, "but who is your daughter?" "My daughter is the duchess of Edinburg," said the plain lady, who was none other than the empress.

The Unconscious Flirt.

(W. M. Donnelly in Texas Siftings.) The unconscious flirt is a frank, generous, warm-learted girl; young, impulsive, and with little knowledge of the world. If she likes you, she lets you see it very plainly. She does not love you, nor has it ever entered her head to marry you. You are a man of the world, and at once, not understanding the girl's simple nature, you conclude that she has either fallen in love with you, or is a most consummate flirt. So she is a flirt, but one of the unconscious kind.

Another unconscious flirt is the girl who wants to convert you. She is so earnest, so pleading; her soft blue eyes look so tenderly into yours, as she lays her hand upon your arm and urges her cause, that, if your heart is free, it is in serious danger. A third variety of the unconscious fiirt is she who blushes and looks down when she meets you. She draws her hand from yours hurriedly. Her voice falters when she speaks to you, and if left alone with you by any chance, she makes some excuse to get away. And yet you sometimes catch a tender expression in her eyes as she looks at you, that proves it is not dislike that causes avoidance. You draw your own conclusions, and are perhaps led to love the girl unawares. Then comes a pro-posal, followed by refusal, bitterness of heart, and disappointment; and for ever after you regard the girl as a flirt. The simple fact was, she had been told, or in some was led to believe, that you were in love with her. She liked you, but would not marry you, and hence her avoidance and the pity you mistook for love.

His First Offense.

[Texas Stitings.] "Guilty or not gullty?" asked an Austin justice of the peace of a colored culprit, who was accused of stealing a whole line full of linen. "Dat ar 'pends on you, jedge. Hit's for you to say."

"You must either plead guilty or not guilty. I have nothing to do with it."

"Yes, you has. If you is gwineter let me off with nuffin but a reprimand, like you did las' time-" "Well, suppose I do let you off with a reprimand, as I did last time?"

"In dat case I pleads guilty to six shirts, foah pilly slips, and about a dozen udder pieces." "But I'm not going to let you off so "Den, ef yer is gwineter sock it ter me, I'll gib a li'ar one ob de shirts, and we will try this case by a jury."

"All right. I'll enter a plea of not This did not seem to suit the culprit very well, for he spoke up:
"I say, boss, I don't keer to put de court and de sheriff to trouble on my account. Jess lemme off ag'in wid a repriman', as you did las' week, on account ob hit being my fust offense, and I'll plead guilty ter five chickens I pulled las' week, an' a hog I stole las' winter, an' a pair ob shoes from de store, and a wood-pile I'se gwineter haul off to-night."

Europe's Slow "Pauper Labor." [St. Louis Republican.]

A man will accomplish twice as much n an average lifetime, in this country, as anywhere in the Old World—and this is true of men in all positions, the lawyer in his office, the physician in his chaise, the mechanic in his shop, and the operative in the mill. An American workingman who re cently returned to Pittsburg from a visit to England expresses his surprise at the comparatively small amount of work done by laborers in that country. They move slowly and leisurely, they take their time about everything and seem never in a hurry—all in striking contrast with the fierce, unsparing vehemence with which men pursue their vocations in this country. There is no doubt that Americans overdo themselves. They accomplish as much inside of 50 mars of agest Furnment in side of 50 years of age as Europeans accomplish inside of 70; and if life were measured by the amount of work done. our people are the longest lived in the world. One reason for this is the immense amount of work to be done in this country, and the comparatively small number of skilled persons to do it.

—[New Orleans Times-Democrat.

[Chicago Tribune.] A tall woman leading a child by the hand alighted from a Western train three days ago at the Union depot on Canal street. Her complexion was

brown, her cheeks were high and projecting, and her hair was jet black. She was plainly dres ed, and probably the most expensive article of attire she wore was her large, brown varnished straw hat surrounded by a purple feather. As she looked around the station wonderingly, and her little boy at her side clung half frightened to her dress, it was easy to see she was a stranger to Chicago. Approaching one of the men around the depot, she asked several questions, shook her head gravely once or twice, and then with downward head, as if she were in tears. led her boy slowly up the stairway to Canal street, where she stood for a few minutes gating alternately to all points of the compass.
"That seems to be a kind of hard ease," said the depot-hand whom she had been questioning. "She has come with her boy all the way from Pawnee City, Neb., and if it hadn't been for the kindness of the other passengers on the cars she would have been dropped somewhere on the road long before she reached Chicago, because she started without money or ticket, and, I dare say, for that matter the pair hadn't a morsel of grub between them. You see, how it is. She is a half-breed Indiau, and married a white man-a laborer on the railroad. When the man's job was finished he deserted her and her child and left her penniless. She learned from some of the other laborers that he had gone off to Chicago, and without knowing anything about Chicago, except that it was a pretty big village somewhere in the east, she silently went home, dressed herself and ber boy, and boarded the first train to this c.ty. "The conductor was telling me all about her. When he asked her for her ticket she looked scared and said she hadn't any, but if he wouldn't take her along to Chicago she and the boy would just step out and walk-walk, mind you, to Chicago from Nebraska. Well, this kind of staggered the conductor, who began to question her. She sad she was going to find her husband. whose name was Thomas, and that she didn't expect there would be any difficulty in finding him, as he would probably be wo.king among the other aborers on the new track at Chicago. You : ee, she thought Chicago was some v.llage where the railroad was going to Le laid for the first time. Well, the conductor, a kind-hearted fellow, didn't like to turn her off the cars and he went among the other passengers and told them how the squaw, as he called her, was going to take a walk to the 'village of Chito take a walk to the 'village of cago' to find her husband, who had skipped out and left her alone with a boy. The word was passed around and in half an hour Mrs. Thomas had not on'y her fare paid, but a few dollars over to get her food on the trip and still leave her some money to get along with in Chicago for a day or so anyhow. For two days she sat in the car, speaking to nobody and staring blank in front of her, and it wasn't until the third that she ventured to ask the conductor if she wasn't going out of her way and mightn't have passed Mr. Thomas on the road. There goes the 'squaw' and 'papoose' now, along side the fence up there," concluded the depot man, "and I expect they'll have a time of it before they chance upon Mr. Thomas in the streets of Chicago."

The same night the guests of a small

hotel on South Canal street were thrown into consternation by singular awakenings, and at breakfast next morning they exchanged stories about their experiences towards the witching hour of midnight. One said that he was sound a leep in bed when he found himself grabbed by the feet. By the dim light he thought he beheld a giant-tugging at the bedclothes and heard a sepulchral voice saying: "You are my husband; you come with me." Another said that in his room there were three fellows sleeping, when all of a sudden they were awakened by being pushed and hauled about. They sat up simultaneously and asked, "What in thunder is the matter?" and a voice replied, "Which of you mans is my husband?" All in turn condemned the specter roundly for its in rusion, and it glided away with a kind of grunt; but a few seconds afterwards they heard a series of yells, and the clerk of the hotel came tearing down the corridor with a wildlooking woman at his heels. He was in his night clothes. She caught him by the hair and he yelled again. She pulled him under the kerosene light. He begged wildly for mercy. Gazing steadily into his face for a few moments she pushed him away from her with a gesture of disgust and said, "You aint no the man I want." By this time the whole hotel had been aroused, and a crowd of half-dressed people came out of their rooms into the halls to see what the matter was. The tall woman with phenomenal strides swept past them all until she came opposite a stout-built, middle-sized man with shaggy black whiskers and a pair of Canton cotton drawers, who was standing in one of the doorways. Clutching him frantically around the neck, and then sliding down to the ground until she caught him by the knees, she called out: "Oh, Thomas, I got you! I knowed I'd get you, Thomas! Oh, Thomas, don't never leave your poor wife and baby no more
—your poor baby, Thomas—your poor little baby, Thomas!"

In the meanwhile the man addressed as Mr. Thomas recovered from his first astonishment, gave a whistle, and then said in a tone of the most ineffable disgust, "Wal, I'll be doggoned! Shoot me if 'taint the squaw!"

Next day Mr. Thomas and his wife and child took tickets back to Pawnee City. It appears that after leaving the Union depot Mrs. Thomas wandered southward a long distance, asking peoole here and there whether they could tell her where Mr. Thomas was. She happened to meet an elderly man to whom she told, in pathctic broken English, the story of her desertion; and he though impressed with the apparent lopelessness of her search, resolved to accompany her to some of the hotels in the neighborhood, as he knew the locality to be a great resort for railroad men. He examined hotel-book after hotelbook for the name of Thomas, and at last he found one which did contain that signature. After asking the clerk some questions about Mr. Thomas and communicating the results to Mrs. Thomas she never said a word nor moved a muscle, but went up to the desk and engaged a room for the night. Shaking hands with her friend, she and her child went to the room she had paid for and remained there so quietly that the clerk had forgotten all about her until he was roused at midnight and chased down the corridor by a woman whom he took to be a veritable maniac. The halfbreed lady from the west had taken the usual method of cornering her husband by arousing every man in the house until she found the one she wanted. In her simple way she had argued that Mr. Thomas, caught with his day-clothes on, might run away and leave her again, but that Mr. Thomas, cornered in his night-clothes, would be a very different person to deal with; and she was right, for he neither attempted to run away nor to deny that he was the missing husband and
