

BUCHANAN RECORD.

JOHN J. HOLMES, Editor.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 20, 1885.

Small-pox seems to have taken possession of Montreal, Canada, 1,500 cases being now reported.

Cholera still rages, and is frightfully on the increase in Spain and other countries of Europe. The death rate is also alarmingly large, from one-third to one-half of all who are attacked die. The deaths in Spain alone are about" 1,500 every day.

Maxwell, the alleged murderer of Preller, has arrived at St. Louis, the scene of the tragedy. He was met at the depot by 10,000 or 12,000 people, nearly all of whom were whooping and yelling, and it was feared at one time that he would be taken away from the officers and lynched, but he was safely lodged behind the bars. He proclaims his innocence.

Michigan will come out this year as the banner wheat raising State in the country. The average yield throughout the State is placed by the State agricultural department at 18 bushels per acre, but 20 would probably be nearer correct. At the former figure it is estimated that the total product of the State will be about 26,500,000 bushels.

It has been figured out by the Lumberman's Gazette that the strike in the Saginaw valley has been a very losing investment for the workingmen. The loss in wages is computed at $200,000, while the advance in the price of salt and lumber has been $200,000 and $400,000 respectively. The extra cost caused by this strike is borne principally by the workingmen, either directly or indirectly, while the owners of salt blocks and saw mills have been benefited financially by the advance in price of their products.

To show how much lager beer is drank in this country we give the figures of one city, which is only one of many that might be given like it: In Milwaukee the aggregate value of the real estate and machinery owned by the brewing companies of that city, exclusive of one of the largest which refused to give any figures, is $3,140,133, and of their stock and fixtures, $2,918,-186. During the past year 902,220 barrels of beer were made, representing a value of $6,054,339. To operate these breweries 1,405 men were employed. and the wages they received amounted to $729,632.27.

The question of removing the remains of General Grant from New York to Washington is being discussed. and it is not unlikely that Congress will move in the matter when it assembles next>December. It was understood that as a condition of the burial of Gen. Grant in New York the representatives of that city were to raise one million dollars with which to erect a suitable monument over his remains, but thus far not over $50,000 has been subscribed, and interest in the matter seems to be waning. It was a great mistake when a pleasure park of New York City was decided upon as a sepulchre, yet it is not too late now to remedy the mistake, and the sooner it is done the better the American people will be pleased.

nate dwelling and temple of worship, may well attest the universal grief. Before that dread, invisible power we call death we humbly bow and confess that God only is great! "The boast of heraldry, the pomp of power, And all that beanty, all that wealth e're gave, Await alike the inevitable hour; The paths of glory lead but to the grave."

We are met for the purpose of giving expression, in a formal service, to the worth and virtues of General U.S. Grant, who was yesterday laid in his last resting place by loving hands, in the presence of the greatest concourse of people that ever witnessed the buri-al of an American citizen. The nature of this service forbids any extended review of the life and services of such a man. His career as a soldier must be left to the treatment of military men. His merits as a statesman will be recognized by those familiar with that high profession. Ilis place in history will be assigned him by generous men who love to chronicle great actions. The thoughts of this hour, modified by the felt presence of death, the associations of the Sabbath and the high themes which that day renders appropriate, lead us into a different, and may say, a higher field.

No presentation of the life and character of such a man as General Grant can be complete that omits his relation to the Unseen Powers. The Christian who is familiar with Bible history, or the history of the men and movements of any age, cannot fail to see in that wonderful man a child of Providence. And this you will perceive gives a dignity and grandeur to his career such as no merely earthly consideration can afford. It brings our line of thought and feeling into connection with the God of battles, the Lord of Hosts and the Ruler of Nations. This thought is in harmony with the solemn declaration of Grant himself. When he received from President Lincoln's own hand his commission as Lieutenant General, he said: "I feel the full weight of the responsibility, * * I know that if it is met it will be due to those armies, and above all to the favor of that Providence who leads both armies and nations." Here is a recognition of a power behind the skill and valor of men. Again, in the first words of the preface to his book General Grant says: "Man pro-poses and God disposes." Then follows this significant sentence, "There are but few important events in the affairs of men brought about by their own choice." If this be so, we must regard General Grant as a servant of God raised up for a specified work. If we rejoice in the work, if we honor the hero, shall we not thank God who gave him? Allow me, therefore, to speak of the debt of gratitude we owe to God for raising up the right man for the hour of peril. It is impossible at this day to reproduce in your minds that sense of our country's dire necessity which was so profoundly felt before the deliveren appeared. Our nation had sown to the wind and was reaping the whirlwind. The fathers of the Republic, with all their virtues, were but men. Like men they sinned. Protesting against oppression, they became oppressors. Freeing themselves from servitude, they made slaves of others. Appealing to God for the justice of their cause, they braved his justice by setting at defiance God's "Woe unto him that buildeth a town with blood."

The Creator of the universe has so made things that sin brings suffering. National sins are bound to national sufferings by stronger than adamantine chains. There is no escape from the punishment, no evasion, no mitigation of the penalty. All this we had begun to realize, for the long gathering storm had burst upon us. Cruel, fratricidal

Trouble has been anticipated between the Knights of Labor and the Wabash railroad system for several days. A general strike was ordered to take effect at all the shops of the system on Tuesday noon. Several proclamations had been issued by the leaders of the order, and the men thus worked upon, but when the hour for stopping work arrived it found nearly all of them in their places. The trouble seems to have grown out of the fact that since the strike of last April the officers of the system have refused to employ men belonging to that organization in some of their shops unless they would agree to let the Order alone. Yet many members remained why had not been in the strike and more obtained employment afterwards, and this move on the part of the Knights is to make the companies come down from their resolve. How the matter well terminate is yet to be seen. So far the victory has been for the corporation. It was expected that large numbers of men would quit work, but at the Moberly, Mo., shops only twentyfive went out; at Springfield, three or four; at Decutur, Ill., out of 300 men in the shops, none went out, though it was thought some would go out yesterday; at Fort Wayne, Ind., no strike or demonstration of any kind was made; at Stanberry, Mo., all the men went out; at Houston, Texas, and Chicago, Ill., all were at work, but the end has not yet been reached, and how the matter may turn out cannot yet be determined The corporation anticipate no stop of their shops or trains, and many of the men affected who wish to retain their situation may be worked upon to lose them, though they claim to be satisfied, yet they think the orders of the Boss Knights must be obeyed even if it brings suffering to themselves and families. Perhaps the organization is a good thing, but we think it should more properly be named the Knights of Discord.

Rev. H. V. Warren's Address.

The following is the address of Rev. H. V. Warren, delivered at the memorial meeting held in Rough's Opera House on Sunday evening, Aug. 9:

Members of the Grand Army of the Republic, Fellow Citizens and Friends:

I am to speak to night in commemo ration of the greatest soldier, not only of our own, but of all time. The silent hero has passed on into the deeper silence of the mysterious hereafter.

When death enters our dwelling we feel the hush of a supernatural presence. The necessary household duties are carried on with unwonted quiet had come! It came with disaster and defeat. Jealousy and distrust in camp was followed by delay and incompetence in the field. There was a Babel of counselors. Every town and village had its statesmen and generals who could shape policies, plan campaigns, lead armies and win battles, in words, but in neither the high places of the nation or the low had a man appeared who had proved equal to the occasion. Questions growing out of the causes of the war and its proper conduct perplexed civilian and soldier. Intemperate radicalism said: "Let the march of the army be a crusade for freedom." Conservatism said, "Hands off." Suspicion and recrimination drove men asunder who should have stood together as one. We needed a man to grasp the situation and treat the war in a military way; a man who knew men and could wisely employ them; a man who could handle great armies: a man able to conquer difficulties; fertile in resources, persistent in effort, keeping his own counsels while moving right on to the objective point of absolute success We needed a man of action, fruitful in great deeds, and God gave us General Gran!!

Silent and calm in manner, quick to decide and prompt to execute, relent-less in the push and vigor of an irre-sistible will, he seemed the embodiment of the forces that had been so signally lacking in camp and field. In all this Grant was the providential man!

Our debt of gratitude to God appears in his raising up a man who possessed those qualities which win confidence and enthusiasm.

In all human affairs which call for united action, where masses of men must act as one, some commanding spirit must head the movement Knowledge, skill, experience, bravery avail nothing if a man has not a personal power in the minds and hearts of men. Powers of any kind, without leadership are but forces of confusion and destruction. It took Rome 500 years to die. Could she have had competent leaders she would never have died!

With this mysterious force of lead ership, one dominant will draws with it bodies of men as the engine draws the train to which it is coupled. One man becomes the embodiment of the will and power of thousands. An army, in a true leader's hands, becomes irre sistible, and a nation invincible! Long ago it passed into a proverb that some men are born to command Like all other powers of the soul this is a talent God-given. God raises up men endowed with the requisite qualities and then gives them their oppor tunity. When the Israelites needed a leader to deliver them from Egypt Moses, ripe with the discipline of SO years, was ready. When he died the well trained Joshua succeeded him. David had a like experience. When Cyrus was called to great military achievements, God said by his prophet: "Thus saith the Lord to Cyrus whose right hand I have holden." That touch of the right hand of God gave him his power. This is God's way in all times and ages. He gives his chosen ones favor in the sight of the people by first giving his leaders those qualities which enlist favor.

It was of immeasurable importance to us that God raised up a leader who could unite an army and the people weakened, diccouraged and divided by jealousies, rivalries and distrust, and infuse confidence, courage and conse quent strength into all. Rendered cautious by our almost to tal collapse of leadership, the country was slow to trust implicitly the rising hero. But from Belmont to Appomat tox their confidence grew. Thank God, it was not misplaced! With gratitude to-day we recite the fact! There was a Divine Providence in the production world. of such a man at such a time.

Our debt of gratitude to God appears in His giving us a commanding General so magnanimous in the hour of vic-

Dincers of government are exterminat ed by midnight murder, who will guide the Ship of State? And then the jealous men, the disappointed men, and the ambitious men, will not they seize their opportunity? What of the disaffected populations that welcome commotion? What of disloyal men, mad-dened by defeat and on fire to ruin if they cannot rule? These, and a thousand other questions voiced the suspense and anguish of a stunned and bewildered nation.

Then we remembered Grant! "The army will stand by their victorious general," all were sure. And Grant is as true as steel! While we trembled for his safety, we believed that, if living, he would, under God, prove the sheet anchor of our hope in the terrible stress of the cyclone that was on us.

No man has yet measured the peril of that hour, or gauged the degree of safety we owe to him. Now we see, as then we could not, that the desperation of defeat was quelled by the thought of Grant and his 500,000 loyal veterans, while to patriotic men the same thought was an inspiration. Well was it for us that the providential man held that station of power! Let it excite our thanksgiving to-night.

Our debt of gratitude to God appears in his giving us a military leader who could introduce Christian methods in the management of national affairs. General Grant's Presidential career was signalized by two events, each of which is worthy of our profoundest satisfaction.

The first was the settlement of inter national difficulties by arbitration. I need not describe at length the attitude of England toward us in our life and death struggle. We may sum up all by saying, all the moral influence, aid and comfort which that government could afford the rebellion she freely gave. Yea. more; her money, her factories and foundrys, her docks and ship yards, and her blockade runners were the main source of rebel supply during the entire rebellion. Yea, more From her ship-yards had gone forth the confederate cruisers that had lit the sea with the fires of burning vessels, the property of the citizens of a country with which she had had treat ies of peace and amity for fifty years. Great was the provocation of Eng-land! Great was the nation's opportunity for demanding a redress of the greivence in the style of England in the Mason and Slidel affair. When that government demanded the return of those men, she accompanied the demand with a movement of troops, a fitting out of warships and other warlike preparations that cost, in the aggregate, fifteen millions of dollars. We had a vast army of veterans, a powerful navy, iron clads in great numbers and war material in abundance, and we might-but did notmake any menace toward England. That country was given to understand that the great wrong and injury done us must be righted. But the United States was willing to submit the whole question to arbitration of disinterested parties. We all know the outcome. In the quiet and calmness of a council chamber trusted men met, discussed the case, and arranged terms of agreement, England paid us an indemnity of fifteen millions.

An example was set before the nations of the earth of a better way of settling difficulties than by a resort to mutual destruction.

Such an event was a new thing. It revealed the possibility of the abolition of war, at least among enlightened nations. God speed the time when na-tions shall not lift up the sword against nation; when men shall learn war no more. Not the least among the high honors of General Grant was this auspicious beginning of the parliament of nations and the federation of the

> The second event in General Grant's Presidential career to which I refer was his change in the Indian policy. For a hundred years or more our treat-ment of the Indians has been a dis-army. He was twice elected to be Chief Magistrate of a nation of fifty millions. He was popular with large numbers of those who opposed him in the war. His experience in foreign lands was a continued triumph. Soldiers, statesmen, orators, poets, princes, kings and vast populations had vied with each other in doing him honor. But there comes a time when all these honors are esteemed at their true value. What are banners, and cheers, and martial music, and salutes, and welcomes to him who, in mortal weakness, is battling with dire disease, reinforced by death! What he now needed was—not the voice of fame, not the splendor of earthly glory, but help, help supernatural and Divine; the response of the Infinite Father to the cry of human want! So while bathed in an atmosphere of prayer, the tran-scient was fading and the eternal was dawning!

It has been said of some great men that the best impression is gained from a remote point of observation, on the principle that "Distance lends enchantment to the view," Lord Byron said, "No man is a hero to his valet." The worshipers of Carlisle have been fearfully shocked by a near view of their idol. Lord Nelson's private life is spoken of in whispers. That of the Great Napoleon awakens indignation. But the searching eyes of fifty miltions see nothing in the home life of our Great Leader, living or dying, to detract from our high regard. Rather does the old hero get nearer our hearts from this closer view. Until he was dead we never knew how much we loved him!

There is an ideal soldier that is as false as it is common and pernicious. Many imagine that a man who lives in camp, and who leads armies, and fights great battles, must be rough and insensible to the humanities of life and the attractions of kindred and home. The popular story pictures him as brusque, passionate and profane, a sort of dare-devil, fearing neither God nor man. If Shakespeare deliniated character truly, the popular military man of his day was of this type. You will recall his words:

"Then a soldier, Full of strange oaths, and beardedlike a pard, Jealons in honor, sudden and quick in quarrel, Seeking the babble reputation Even in the cannon's mouth."

One glance at the home life of Gen.

Grant dispels the illusion. Faithful and affectionate as a husband, tender and indulgent as a father, kind and sympathetic as a friend, he possessed those traits that adorn and gladen domestic life. He loved his home, and his presence brought pleasure there. Little children were to him a delight. During the recent months of suffering the million eyed public has been gazing into the privacy of the old soldier's family life only to see a picture of affectionate tenderness and mutual good-will that excites admiration. The gentleness, the patience and mu-tual kindliness of that home are worthy of universal imitation. A pure home-life in a public man is a jewel to be prized! God grant that our young men may appreciate and covet the gem! Well did the Scottish poet sing:

"To make a happy fireside clime To weans and wife; That's the true pathos and sublime Of human life!"

But the time will fail me if I go on. When a sailor once appeared on board a United States war ship, and offered his service as an able seaman. an officer asked him: "At what work shall I test you?" "Test me at anything," was his proud reply, conscious of his skill. Did you ever think of it? A sterling man may be tested any-where. And every test reveals a new evidence of his worth! That makes the study of a worthy character a pastime and joy. Grant's story never tires. His name is a charm. And yet, though I might continue, I must draw to a close.

MICKEY'S HARMONICA.

New York Sund "Mickey, run down to Brady's an' get a pound an' a half o' pork an' a pint o' molasses," said Mrs. Finn to her son who was trying to dislodge the tame crow from the steeple-like top of the clock with the help of a putty-blower.

"Will I get fat pork or lane pork?" "Ye'll get half fat an' half lane; an', mind ye, kape yer fingers out o' the mo-

Little Mike went down the road swinging the bottom of his father's dinner pail. The father of lies whispered a suggestion to him, which was something like this: "Get a pound and a quarter of pork, and buy Doolan's little horn with the money you save." The little horn referred to was a very dilapidated month harmonica, the possession of which Mike had envied his friend Doolan for a long time. Mike repelled the suggestion, not because of the expostulation of an outraged conscience, but because he knew his mother would miss the pork. As he went along little Mike sang a song in praise of Doolan's recoster, which was written by Jack Brady, the bard of Cooney island, to the tune of "Paddy Duffy's Cart."

While returning from the grocery little Mike sat down on a grassy bank beside Doolan's fence. He looked through the fence and saw Fogarty's bantam walking in a circle around Doolan's rooster and scraping his left wing on the ground in a very belligerent manner. The Shanghai refused to accept the chal-lenge, which seemed to please Mrs. Fogarty, who called out from across the street to Mrs. Doolan: "Faix, that big Shanghai o' yours is no good, Mrs. Doolan. He has no gravel in his craw. He's afraid o' my banty."

"Arrah, you're too consaity wid you're weeny little banty, Mrs. Fogarty," re-plied Mrs. Doolan. "Shure, my rooster wouldn't be bother in' himself wid the likes o' him. Look at that, now!"

The big rooster's quick eye had discovered a belated worm. Quietly ig-noring the fierce little bantam, he stepped over him and called clucking dominicks and animated little bunches of yellow down to the feast. Then he bent his glossy neck, gobbled up the worm, flew upon the fence, and crowed so lustily that answering cries came from all the hen roosts on Cooney island. As he distended himself for another clarion note, a round stone struck him in the side, and he fell off the fence into the currant bushes with a broken wing. After throwing the stone, Mickey turned his attention to the molasses. He had succeeded in dipping his forefinger into the pail and winding the saccharine rope so neatly around his finger three times that not a drop was spilled on his jacket, when Mrs. Doolan laid him across her knee with a deftness and vigor which told of long experience. The application of Mrs. Doolan's calloused hand was rapid and effective. It quickened Mickey's circulation and started his tears, and spille. I the molasses. As he went slowly up Murray street with his knuckles in his eyes, he met Mrs. Moran, the milkwoman, who said:

"What's th' matter wid ye, Mickor?" "It's me bones, ma'am," he sobbed. "Yer bones, is it?" replied Mrs. Moran, who evidently thought the boy to be suffering from rheumatism. "Thry gin, thry warrum gin. Poor b'y, ye'r broke up intirely." If Mickey was broken up when Mrs.

Moran saw him, he certainly presented a much more dilapidated appearance after his mother's warm reception of him, which consisted of both moral and physical instruction, such as:

"An' ye'll ate th' molasses, will ye! [Whack.] Why didn't ye ate the pork? [Whack.] Faix, I'll paint ye black an' blue. [Whack.] It's a swate b'y vere now, wid a pint o' molasses down yer red neck. May th' divil fly away wid ye." [Whack, whack, whack.]

ing rocky chambers, and died away in the dim recesses of the Glory Hole. There was no answer. When the miners found Mickey half an hour later he was lying beneath the car, which had turned over in its fear-ful flight. He was unconscious, and a thin rivulet trickled down his white face and dyed the stones a bright crimson. (lasped tightl; in his nerveless hand was the little horn. "He's fearful limpsey," said Doolan. "See can he stand!"

Willing hands lifted the insensible figure to its feet, and wistful eyes watched the feeble knees give way. They laid him in the bottom of a cart upon a bun-dle of straw. The little procession wound slowly up the old foint road, through the defile in the rocks. Poolan, refusing to ride at what he considered the expense of his friend's misfortune, walked behind the cart, the solitary mourner. As the cortege passed Stampy Field, the gray-headed billy goat came as near as his rope would permit, and shook his head defiantly until the cart lisappeared in the gathering gloom and stopped in front of the Finn shanty. A railway train thundered around the turn, waking the echoes in the little valley, and disappeared down the grade. Mrs. Fogarty sat meditatively smoking in her back doorway, and listening to the frogs chanting their monotonous song around the corders of Brown's Doolan's rooster nestled closer to his favorite dominick upon the roost and Michael Finn, Sr., entered Grant's time of life, which passed from them saloon, called for his usual glass of that the fruition of summer and autumn might be, while the use, the beanty, the

"No, Michael; but you're b'y-" "Me b'y." interrupted Mike, seizing the schoolmaster in his vice-like grip and peering into his face. He saw the hesitation there. He saw the trembling lip and moist eye. Dashing the schoolmaster against the fence, he started on a run for the shanty. But the fierce-ness of his passion burned to ashes when he saw the white face upon the bed. He sat down in the little room and watched with hungry eyes for some sign of returning life. After hours of patient waiting the watcher was rewarded. A faint flush came into the wan check. The eyelids trembled and slowly opened. From beneath the coverlid the boy drew the little horn. Feebly lifting it to his lips, he blew a strain so faint, so far, so broken that it sounded to the friends in the outer room like an echo from the calm land.

Cheap Clocks. [The Argonaut.]

The manufacture of cheap clocks and watches has come to be one of the great industries of the country. A prominent engraver of New York says that several years ago officers of a certain clock comnot make an engraved paper imitation of the French porcelain face that was then used on their clocks. He spent several hundred dollars on the experiment, and finally gave it up in despair through inability to find paper that would answer the purpose. The com-pany refused to let him stop his experi-menting, and he finally hit on a glazed and enameled paper which answered the purpose. He has made from 12,000,000 to 14,000,000 of clock faces for the com-

About Growing Old.

A pathetic figure in history is that old Spaniard who, three hundred and seventy-two years ago, went up and down amid the rank, unexplored wilds of our Southern coast-country, searching for the fountain which should change age to perpetual youth. Men who have done mighty deeds of valor will be read of but to be forgotten, while Ponce de Leon will be of immortal memory for having voiced, in his

CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND & PACIFIC RAILWAY

CHIGAGO, ROCK ISLAND & PACIFIC MAIL WAY By reason of its central position and close relation to all principal lines East and West, at initial and terminal points, constitutes the most important mid-conti-nental link in that system of through transportation which invites and facili-tates travel and traffic between cities of the Atlantic and Pacific Coasts. It is also the favorite and best route to and from points East, Northeast and Southeast, and corresponding points West, Northwest and Southwest. The Rock Island system includes in its main line and branches, Chicago, Joliet, Ottawa, La Salle, Peoria, Geneseo, Moline and Rock Island, in Illinois; Davenport, Muscatine, Washington, Fairfield, Ottunwa, Oskaloosa, West Liberty, Iowa City, Des Moines, Indianola, Winterset, Atlantic, Knoxville, Audubon, Harlan, Guthrie Centre and Council Bluffs, in Iowa; Gallatin, Trenton, Cameron and Kansas City, in Missouri; Leevenworth and Atchison, in Kansas; Albert Lea, Minneapolis and St. Faul, in Minnesota; Watertown in Dakota, and hundreds of intermediate cities, towns, villages and stations.

THE GREAT ROCK ISLAND ROUTE

THE GREAT ROCK ISLAND ROUTE Guarantees its patrons that sense of personal security afforded by a solid, thoroughly bullasted road-bed; smooth tracks of continuous steel rail; sub-stantially bull culverts and bridges; rolling stock as near perfection as human skill can make it; the safety appliances of patent buffers, platforms and air-brakes; and that exacting discipline which governs the practical operation of all its trains. Other specialties of this route are Transfers at all connecting points in Union Depots, and the unsurpassed comforts and luxuries of its Passenger Equipment. The Fast Express Trains between Chicago and the Missouri River are com-posed of well ventilated, finely upholstered Day Coaches. Magnificent Pullman Palace Sleepers of the latest design, and sumptious Dining Cars, in which elaborately cocked meals are leisurely eater, "good Digestion waiting on Appetite, and Health on both." Between Chicago and Kansas City and Atohison, are also run the Celebrated Reclining Char Cars.

THE FAMOUS ALBERT LEA ROUTE

INE FAMOUS ALBERT LEA ROUTE Is the direct and favorite line between Chicago and Minneapolis and St. Paul, where connections are made in Union Depots for all points in the Territories and British Provinces. Over this route, Fast Express Trains are run to the watering places, summer resorts, picturesque localities, and hunting and fish-ing grounds of Iowa and Minnesots. It is also the most desirable route to the rich wheat fields and pastoral lands of interior Dakota. Still another DIRECT LINE, via Seneca and Kankakee, has been opened between Newport News, Richmond, Cincinnati, Indianapolis, and Lafayette and Council Bluffs, Kansas City, Minneapolis and St. Paul and intermediate points. > > The Venetian Gondoliers. [Venice Letter.]

About two years ago the gondoliers of Venico struck work for an increase in the rate of fares, which movement resulted in the establishment of a line of steamboats on the grand canal. Another serious trouble for the gondoliers has been the paucity of visitors during and after the cholera scare, and now a fresh one has arisen through the action of the inn keepers. For some time all the large hotel-keepers have kept gondolas of their own. The mayor and Giunta have tried to stop this by a prohibitory ordinance. The inn-keepers retorted by giving their guests just as many gondolas as before, but free of charge. The Grand Duke Constantine of Russia, who came to meet his sister, the queen of Greece, was interfered with by the police on trying to use his landlord's gondola. The same thing happened to Mai. Gen. Sir W. Paget. Finally the gondoliers, taking matters into their own hands, made a descent upon the obnoxious gondolas, drew them on land, and scuttled them all, including one valued at 7,000 francs, which had figured

Then Mrs. Finn disrobed him and put him in his little trundle bed, the head of which projected from beneath the more ambitious resting place of his parents. He sobbed himself asleep. His eyelashes were wet with tears, and intermittent staccato sobs heaved his breast. As the mother looked upon the tear-wet face her soul was touched to finer issues. She stooped down and kissed the freckled cheek, and something very like a dewdrop plashed upon the patchwork quilt. When little Mike awoke at noon he slipped quietly out of the window, and went in search of Doolan, whom he met on the railroad track. He had set his heart upon Doolan's little horn, and offered him in exchange for it an old vinegar cruet, a diminutive mud turtle, and an eelskin bracelet, which was a sure cure for rheumatism. But Doolan refused to accept this tempting offer. He was waiting for higher bids. Pending these higher bids Doolan let Mickey carry the horn. The boys took their way over to the Vleightburgh.

A stranger coming into Rondout creek on the deck of a steamboat can see on the west bank of the creek a rocky, precipitous bluff, the top of which is crowned with trees. Twenty-five years ago one summer evening a huge slice of this bluff peeled off, and trees, acres of earth, and boulders as large as a house rolled down the hill. Scattered along the face of the hill many of the boulders may now be seen, partly concealed by under-growth. Underneath this hill dark subterreanean galleries have been drilled into the lime and cement stone, and vaulted chambers burrow it from the main entrance on Hasbrouck avenue to the old Point road, up which the Eritish sol-diers went when they burned Kingston in the revolutionary war. The lowest point in the quarry is known among the quarrymen as the Glory Hole, because of its peculiarly damp and gloomy ap-pearance. It is seventy feet below tide water, and a tramway 300 feet long connects it with the surface. The summit of the hill is known locally as the Vleightburgh. It affords a charming view of Rondout and its environment, and is the favorite resort on sunny afternoons for lovers, sightseers, and idle boys. It was here that Doolan and Mickey came. Lying under a tree Mickey blew a few measures on the little horn of what he called "Wait till the clouds roll by," although Doolan failed to recognize it, probably because there was sand in the instrument. They climbed down the face of the cliff by what is known as the Devil's path, and reached the upper extremity of the tranway leading down into the Glory Hole. They watched the cars loaded with line and cement stone come slowly up the steep incline drawn by big cables and a sta-tionary engine. As the sun rolled down behind Woolsey's common, weary miners came out of shafts leading into the hill, and trudged homeward. When they had gone Doolan said: "Mickey, if you'll ride down on that into the Glory Hole I'll give ye th' little born."

"I'll do it," said Mickey. A good deal of hard work was neces-sary before the big hook was loosened from the car. "Jump in," said Doolan. Mickey vaulted in. Gripped tightly in his grimy hand was the little horn.

"Let her go, Doolan.' Doolan's sturdy little shoulder moved the car slowly along. Nearer and nearer it came to the brink of the incline. Inside sat Mike, brightening the horn upon the leg of his pantaloons, and holding it up admiringly in the rays of the setting sun. He was unconscious of the fact that his ride might mean a journey into a far country. The car trembled hesitatingly a moment on the edge of the descent, as though conscious that its freight was alive. Mickey looked up and saw a dandelion blossom in a cleft of the rock overhead nodding him a good-bye in the evening breeze. Casting a quick glance into the yawning gulf of blackness awaiting him, he began to realize the danger of his

Queen Bess' Prayer-Book. [Foreign Letter.]

A prayer-book, prepared by Queen Eli abeth's own hands about 1581 is now on exhibition in London. It is three by two inches in size, has sixtyfive pages, and the prayers are written in a neat hand in English, Greek, Latin, French and Italian. It was intended by the queen as a gift to the Duc d'Alencon, whom she once thought to marry. The prayers are very autobiographical; the writer speaks of herself as "drawing my blood from kinges," and thanks God for "passing me from a prison to a pal-lace," and "placing me a Souveraigne Prince over this people of England." The history of the book can be traced from James II, who gave it to the duke of Berwick, whence it passed to Horace Walpole, and afterward to the duchess of Fortland. At her sale, in 1786, it was bought for Queen Charlotte for 101 guineas.

[Vick's Magazine.] Of all personal ornaments flowers are the most precious—far too valuable and everlasting to be spoken of in the same breath with the productions of the jeweler or the milliner, and yet we are told that orchids are the fashionable bridal bouquets, because some one or two daughters of millionaires carry them. Very often nothing less graceful or more inappropriate could be chosen. The idea with many seems to be simply to find the most rare and unique species of natural flowers, independent of beauty; if they cost much and are rare, that is quite sufficient. The overstrained effort always betrays itself, and orchids were never yet more highly valued by people of retined tastes than were the wild violet; or the hedge rose.

Sometimes while reflecting on the use of a word or its spelling I find its picture in the brain or its appearance on the paper gradually becoming strange and outlandish. The letters seem all out of place, and the utmost exertion of the will cannot make a word that is usually so familiar seem other than a silly mixture of vowels and consonants. A sort of mental nightmare has made that one word monstrous. Pass it by, and ten minutes later that same word is as easy to master and handle as ever. Alcohol as a Food.

The houses are always profusely framented with potted plants, and at diaer parties instead of adorning the fales one corner of the room is decor-and with these, interspersed with the ses full of flowers. They have also an art of preserving wers for great lengths of time by afferent processes, one of which is to thar the ends of the stems, thereby preventing the juices from exuding. Of old every one was targht the flowery science, but of late it has fallen in large part into the hands of the women, who pass in their graduating year strict examination in the art. Princes also are required to know it, and amateurs and very elegant persons are ashamed of any ignorance on the subject; in short, so well regarded are the "Two Great Arts of Bouquet-Making," that when one wishes to say the last word as to the taste of a friend, one says "he is, indeed, a noble bouquetmaker!

Average Length of L fc.

[Brookly_1 Eugle.] Facts have been collected to prove that the average length of life is greater among Jews than Christians under similar circumstances. In London it is stated that the death rate of (hristians is 14 per cent. Of Jews only 10. It has been shown that in Frankfort the Jews live eleven years longer than the Christians, and that of those who reach the age of 70 years 13 are Christians and 27 are Jews. In Prussia, from 1822 to 1840, it has been ascertained that the Jewish population increased by 31 per cent. more than the Christian, there being 1 birth in 28 of the Jews to 1 in 25 of the Christians, and 1 death in 40 of the Jews to 1 in 34 of the Christians. Solve It To-Day.

photographs are most unconscionable flatterers. They not only give a delicacy and refinement to coarse and homely features, but they enhance the leauty of a pretty face as well. As the name signi..es, these little examples of the photographers' art are the exact size and shape of an ordinary letter postage stamp. Their edges are perforated, they have mucilage on their reverse side, and around the figure or head is an ornamental border. The idea is said to have originated in England, where the suggestion was had from the head of the queen on the ha'penny stamps in use there. Like all English frivolities, the little pictures soon found their way to this country, and as their flattering propensities become more widely known doubtless the demand for them will increase propor-tionately. When the full-length figure of a woman is contracted into the limits of a postage-stamp photograph it becomes, as if by magic, graceful and cap-tivating, the features lose their irregu-larity, and appear delicate and peculiarly refined. The size is also a great advantage. The devoted swain can paste his sweetheart's picture in the case of his watch, where he can gaze furtively at it every time he pretends to be looking at the time o' day. A letter with one of the sender's pictures pasted on the corner of the note-paper is doubly acceptable to a friend, and as the uses are so many to which these pictures can be put, and as the cost of them must needs be trifling, they will doubtless soon become "the rage." A Corner in Bibles. [Constantinople Cor. Philadelphia Press.] There is one method of paying duties here which works rather strange results at times. It is a recognized principle that if any importer is dissatisfied with the valuation put upon his goods, and considers the tax exorbitant, he can pay in kind. The result is that the custom house store is overloaded with all man-ner of useless articles, which go for a mere song at some auction, or else the custom house authorities become practical accessories to influences entirely foreign to their habits or beliefs. At one time the authorities thought to prevent the importation of the Scriptures by imposing very heavy duties. The result was that the duties were paid in kind, and the custom house became, for the nonce, a Bible depot, where English, French, German, Greek and other Scriptures could be bought very cheaply. This went on for some little time, until some one told the director. "Don't you see that you are just playing into the hands of these Bible and missionary societics? You are practically doing their own work gratuitously! Selling their books to a class of people that they reach with difficulty!"

That phase had never appeared to the director's mind before. "Mashallah, that won't do!" and word was sent to the importers to take their Scriptures at their own price, and henceforth to

> Chinese at Breakfast. [Yau Phon Les in Wide Awake.]

Soup is taken first; then each person, holding the chop-sticks in the right hand and a bowl of rice in the left, lifts his food to his mouth, pushes the lumps in with the sticks, alternating this motion with picking meat, fish or vege-table, with his fingers, from the dishes which are common to all.

One must take only from that side of the plate which is nearest to him, however. It is a breach of etiquette to ever. It is a breach or exqueue to reach over to the opposite side. When one finishes he bids the rest "eat leisurely," which is our mode of saying "excuse me!" The Chinese invariably wash their hands and faces after every meal. Tea is drunk about the same time. It is taken without milk or Lincoln's Cordiality. [Cor. Boston Journal.] George Clerk, an eccentric man in humble circumstances, was an early friend of Lincoln, who subsequently removed to New England. He met Lincoln in Boston during a stumping tour in the east. A few years passed and Mr. Lincoln was the man of the hour. Clark, whenever I met him, was talking about him. "I can have any office I want," he said emphatically; "Abe will look out #### for me." I thought him a dreamer, and, like all his acquaintances, doubted his claim. Shortly after Clark said he was pay on the old basis. going to have an office, and that in order to get it he must have $12 to pay his fare to Washington. I told him it was a useless undertaking. He laughed at me. "Abe wouldn't refuse him anything he asked. He had made up his mind he must have a postoffice. I told him that $12 would only pay his fare, and that everything was so high and the hotels so crowded that he couldn't live twenty-four hours in Washington. Again he laughed in my face and then said: "What do I care for high prices and hotels? Abe'll take care of me. All I want is money enough to get there. Half in earnest, half in jest, the money was raised and Clark went to Washington. A reception was taking place at the White House, and a man of his
