MY LITTLE WIFE.
She isn't very pretty.

Her voice is low and cooing;
She hates more than she speaks;
The duty near she seeks.

It may be but to burnish
The silkenness of her hair,
Or to brush her hair,
The beggar at the gate.

So I, who see what glances
She sheds on lowly life,
To fashion's fairest faces
Prefer my little wife.

And though at her with pity,
The only glances my little wife,
Who do me her beauty pretty
And sadly out of style.

To me she seems a creature
So musically sweet,
I would not change one feature,
One curve from head to feet.

And if I could be never
From her lowly career mate,
I think 't would be for me
The best at the gate.

RUTH'S TEMPTATION.
BY N. M.

Glyndon had suddenly become rich and aristocratic. It had sprung from the deal of a real estate village, without consulting the outside world, save by a stage route to a fashionable summer resort.

To be sure, there were the lakes, lovely sheets of water affording splendid boating and fishing, and the woods and hills and glens, so delightful for picnic parties; but the public would never have known about them, or been able to reach there, had it not been for the railroad, which had come from Buchanan, Mich., and had followed hotels and steamboats and a gay throng, and Glyndon woke up to find himself famous.

So, in the excitement of the moment, he had sold a portion of his farm in lots, on which elegant summer residences had been speedily erected. The sum realized had enabled him to put up a comfortable house on the shore of one of his lake shore frontages. He had enlarged his house and beautified his grounds, and now could sit quite at ease on his fashionable veranda, or walk abroad, the envy and admiration of the neighborhood.

The very wildness and broken rockiness that had rendered his estate unfit for anything but a summer resort, had added to its attractiveness now to the "scenery" hunters, artists and amateurs, who exclaimed over its "glens" and "dells" and "caylan shades," and then proceeded to camp to paper and canvas such representations as would have made Nature hide her face in despair, and that the counterfeits were so pliantly superior.

But when he was now called, instead of plain John Harden, his former patronym, found that riches bring new responsibilities. For soon arrived from various quarters relatives and friends, and he was obliged to receive them at long intervals.

There were cousins of both near and remote relationship, with an occasional niece and nephew. Some of these were good, hardworking, commonplace people, who took the opportunity of once in their lives getting a little glimpse of fashionable society. Very few of them brought trunks, and when the resources of carpetbag were exhausted, they would content themselves with their own clothes, and they had really seen the world.

Mr. Harden received them all kindly, did his best to remember all the intricate tangles of family relationships, and to make them comfortable in the house, but up to the lawn and beach near their accommodation.

But beside these nondescript visitors were two others, whose names and names were known to the little community five years before. But now Glyndon was to be surprised over their dignity display of wealth, and the respect and admiration which they had put off their country ways had become worldly and cosmopolitan.

Mrs. Stapleton was Mr. Harden's stepmother. She was a gay, fashionable woman, who had been in the society, and proud of her position as a leader of fashion. She had seen the rounds of the fashionable watering places and other resorts, and was a well-known figure in the society.

But it was not until she had become famous as a summer refuge for engaged pleasure seekers, she was seized with a spasm of affection for "dear brother" John, which became a permanent one. She had found and found how comfortably he was circumstanced in regard to this world's goods.

Estella Pennington was a second cousin of Mr. Harden's, a gay girl, a maid whose idea of happiness was plenty of money, and endless admiration. She called Mr. and Mrs. Harden "uncle" and "aunt," and she had a grand daughter, Ruth, with the affectionate concession she would have accorded a pet kitten, and altogether made herself very much at home in the house.

She called Mr. and Mrs. Harden "uncle" and "aunt," and she had a grand daughter, Ruth, with the affectionate concession she would have accorded a pet kitten, and altogether made herself very much at home in the house.

plein they were always together, and her grandfather had more than once laughingly railed Ruth concerning the possibility of being something called "Ruth" for the young people to begin housekeeping in.

But since Estella Pennington's arrival everything had changed. Until then Ruth had been the most light-hearted creature in existence; the joy and sunshine her countenance had reflected had been a pleasure to behold. But now, when Estella was daily coming to see her, she was no longer true friend and knight, like other maidens on similar occasions, she wept sad tears, and strive as she would to appear cheerful before others, there was very often a shade of melancholy on her countenance.

Estella did not especially wish to wound Ruth, but it was as natural for her to seek admiration as it was for Estella to seek to please. She had seen that Polyphemus had come in her way wearing the garments of gentility and there had been a rival to give the requisite zest to the pastime. And Geoffrey Alston was handsome, he dressed well, he had a boat and was a practiced oarsman, a great convenience at times, and what had proven the greatest incentive at first, he was independent.

Reference was first to Estella's cup of happiness. She would have been unhappy if the servant who brought her coffee had been stolidly insensible to her charms; but that one social quality should be so deficient in taste—that she could not endure.

So during a period when, because of a severe cold, Ruth was confined to the house for a week, Estella had had some of her own. She had played lawn tennis, she went boating with him, she displayed a sweet innocence and ignorance, deferring to his superior knowledge; she called, she came, she saw, she conquered, and she had the same stock in trade, and so rehearsal is unnecessary.

And Geoffrey, won by her friendliness, and not knowing how to excuse her, he had been a little more than his gallantry by the fair charmer, had gradually come under the spell of her influence, and Ruth was neglected.

Mrs. Stapleton about this time had been in the city, and she had done something for Brother John or his family in some way, and considering also the advantages that might accrue to herself as champion of such a noble cause, she had been in the city with suitable adornment, she proposed to her brother that she be allowed to "bring Ruth out."

"The child really ought to go to the city," said Estella, "it seems to me she's not as part of late as usual."

"If Rowena wants to take the trouble, why I haven't anything to say against it," said Estella. "Besides, the child ought to have a little of the world, she settles down to housekeeping in a house of her own."

"But she must have some new things," said Sister Rowena.

"I'll see to it," said Estella, "as the best of 'em," said her brother, "and I'll settle the bill."

Then he resumed his newspaper with a feeling of satisfaction that only a rich man can have, and he had a poor man's experience.

Mrs. Stapleton found Ruth arranging flowers for the dinner table.

"Come away and leave those things to me," said Estella, "I'll do them for you."

"Do you know you are to quit roughening your hands with the housework?" Brother John has given me leave to take you out in society, and I want you to be ready to go to-night."

Ruth had stopped to listen with her hands full of scarlet geraniums, and she was a little more than her usual self in arranging with delicate, feathery ferns.

"Dear Aunt Rowena, it is very kind of you, but please don't ask me to do anything of the kind. I don't like the color mounting to her brow."

"Indeed, I would much rather stay at home here quietly with grandma and grandpa than to go to the grand balls and to the opera."

Mrs. Stapleton was deeply offended. She was not accustomed to having her kind offers rejected in that way. She turned with a grand sweep of her garments, and a haughty expression of manner, and went into the house.

Ruth saw and felt her displeasure. She was already taxing her composure. This was the last drop added to the cup, and it rimmed over. She drew down her forehead and escaped to her unfrequented part of the grounds.

There she flung herself upon a rustic seat and wept unrestrainedly. But it was not until she had become famous as a summer refuge for engaged pleasure seekers, she was seized with a spasm of affection for "dear brother" John, which became a permanent one. She had found and found how comfortably he was circumstanced in regard to this world's goods.

"Mercy! I didn't know she had so much temper," said Estella to herself, as she resumed her walk toward the house. "She was almost handsome when her eyes shone so. But, dear me, to think she should be jealous!" And she laughed again.

Late that night, when Mrs. Stapleton returned from the ball, she found Ruth waiting in the parlor. "I have come to take back what I said this afternoon, Aunt Rowena," she said. "If you will be so kind as to take charge of me I shall be very grateful. I will go to town to-morrow, as you said."

Mrs. Stapleton turned all smiles and graciousness, and took the poor girl's face between her hands.

"I am so glad to see you with your great blue eyes, your dimples and soft round cheeks, why, dignity is altogether gone. I do want smiles and pleasant glances instead. Your teeth are fine, too—another reason for your going."

The cyclone season was opened at Mt. Vernon, Illinois, Sunday evening, and in about three minutes laid one half the town in ruins, killed and seriously wounded over one hundred persons and incurred a loss of over half a million dollars worth of property.

Cider. Hon. Lawrence C. Fyfe, of St. Joseph, has written a letter, published in the Palladium, Tuesday, upon the bugbear that is being held up before the farmers by the saloon keepers, for the purpose of frightening them into voting against local prohibition. For want of space we give below only the salient points in the letter:

For lack of better argument, sounder reasoning or stronger point, the cider question is made to do duty in an effort to defeat local option at the coming election. It seems to me perfectly asserted that the new law, when adopted, will prohibit the manufacture and sale of cider. It is hardly possible that such a proposition can be honestly believed or affirmed. It is the veriest nonsense in the world.

The only change made in the new local option law is to prohibit entirely what is now prohibited without first paying tax and giving bond. Other than in this, it is in no wise different from the present law. What we are able to do now without tax and bond we will be able to do under the new law. Those farmers and people in the towns who have, during the past few years, made cider either for themselves or to sell, know that no tax was required of them and that they of right made their cider and sold it too. When the new law will be adopted there will be no change. They may press the apple to their heart's content, and sell the produce where and where they please without fear of let or hindrance.

It is said, however, that a Supreme Court decision against the manufacture and sale. Now if that be true, the decision is under the present law and it is now and has been for several years unlawful to manufacture or sell it. It is unlawful, therefore, whether the new law is carried or not. Voting against the law will not help us. It is, however, passing strange that for years we have been making and selling cider and yet never knew it to be unlawful. It has been a matter of yearly experience and every day knowledge with us that the people made and sold cider, and did so rightfully; but now on the eve of this election we are told that our experience has been faulty and our knowledge erroneous, and this decision of Judge Champin is pointed out to us.

The decision is in a case in which a druggist was charged with selling "hard" cider by the glass as a beverage and it was held to be unlawful. This decision has not only been familiar for a good while but it has been acted upon in this country. As justice is done in Royalton, I find a fellow who had a little store and had sold hard cider over the counter by the glass as a beverage without first paying the tax or giving bond. It had entered no one's mind that the neighboring farmer who made and used and sold his cider had contravened the law. The decision is very far from holding that it is unlawful to manufacture and sell cider. It does not even say that we should not sell it by the glass as a beverage. It says that we must not sell it when it is "hard" by the glass as a beverage. The question as to when it is "hard" and when it is "soft" will come up only when one tries to evade the law by selling over the counter by the glass as a beverage. Our farmers are not in the habit of trying to evade the law or of selling cider in any such way.

There is no question, there can be no question but that we can manufacture and sell cider under the present law and that we can do the same under the new law. It is a mere pretext, it never was, and it stands to reason that it never will be prohibited.

Florida Correspondence. TAMPA, Fla., Feb. 13, 1888. EDITOR RECORD:—In former years I have written you several letters from the south, while making this a winter residence, but now, after locating permanently in southern Florida, and living here continuously for some time over a year, I think that I am better prepared to speak understandingly of the climate, developments, resources, etc., than heretofore. As you are well aware that I have frequently expressed myself as being particularly in love with the climate, and considering that one of the chief attractions, I will speak of that first.

Bidding adieu to our friends and relatives in the pleasant and attractive little town of Buchanan, in the latter part of October, 1886, we arrived at Tampa, unlocked the gates and doors of our heretofore winter residence, and were "at home" on November first. We found the weather during the winter of '86 and '87 about as we expected, in fact, a typical Florida winter, with not sufficient frost to do any particular damage, the mercury remaining from about 40 to 50 above the most of the time. Having never spent a summer in the south we confess to feeling that perhaps the tales told us in regard to the mercury never going above 90 to 96 might not prove true, and feared that we might suffer some with heat, but in this our fears were not realized, 96 being the highest point touched at any time during the summer, and that being reached only a few times. Situated as we are, on the Gulf and Bay, we always have a nice breeze, and do not feel the heat as one does at the same temperature north. The winter of '87 and '88 just passing out, has been an exceptional one, the mercury getting down to 32 but once, and at that time it was cloudy and windy, so that we have had no frost this winter. Tomatoes, Bananas, Pine Apples, Guavas, Mangoes, etc., have been growing in our yard all winter, and have never shown a touch of Jack frost. Judging from my own experience and what I can learn from those who have traveled extensively in foreign countries, I conclude that we not only have the best winter climate in the world but that our summers are certainly much more endurable than the same season at the north. One thing aside from the continual sea breeze that adds to the redeeming features of our warm weather is the almost daily showers that we have during the rainy part of the summer season. While Florida as a rule has plenty of rain an absence of sunshine for a whole day at a time does not occur more than two or three times a year, justly meriting the title "Sunny South."

During the whole winter our markets have been stocked with garden truck of nearly all kinds, including beans, peas, cucumbers, ripe tomatoes, etc. Ripe strawberries have been in the market since early in January, and will keep in bearing until June or July. Orange, lemon, lime, citron, grape fruit, and, in fact, nearly all citrus fruits are now blooming, and the amount of bloom indicates the large crop ever known in the state.

In regard to development I will at present only note a few facts in regard to Tampa the "Queen of the Gulf." A little over six years ago Tampa was a little hamlet of a few hundred inhabitants, although for many years it had been an important trading place. The mail was brought in once a day by stage. A few large stocks of old style, staple goods, were dumped in buildings resembling old warehouses, and at night, if lighted at all, were brilliantly illuminated with one tallow candle. The people seemed contented and happy apparently satisfied to live along without making any improvements upon their former ways of living or doing business. Now, since the introduction of railroads and steam ship lines, in connection with northern capital, enterprise and energy, Tampa has become a city of seven thousand inhabitants, has a steam street railroad connecting the extreme wards, the streets, stores, churches, and many of our dwellings are using electric lights. The contract is let and buildings partly up for a good system of water works, to be completed within six months. During the last two years twenty brick stores have been completed and are now filled with stocks of choice goods. Thirteen brick stores are now in course of erection and the contracts let for the building of a score or more of dwelling houses. In contrast with the old stage, lumbering in and out with the mail once a day, we now have the Plant Investment Co., giving us two mails a day each way, and transferring all Cuban mail from railroad to steam ship at this point. The Plant Investment Co. have just purchased ten or twelve acres of ground here, upon which to build a grand Oriental fire proof hotel, of the Moorish design, to cost one or two hundred thousand dollars. Work will be begun at once. Lozano Pendas & Co., one of the largest manufacturers of pure Havana cigars in the world, has just located here, which with the others already established here gives Tampa considerable prominence in that line. We cannot help feeling a little pride in our town as a commercial point, but when it comes to climate and we can sit on our verandas in mid winter and enjoy the fragrance of orange blossoms mingled with the perfumes of roses and listen to the songs of Mocking birds, then it is that we feel fully justified in saying that we have the finest climate in the world. But on many such occasions our hearts have been made sad by reading in your excellent paper, and other northern journals, of the terrible destruction of life and property caused by the murderous Northern blizzard. But I fancy I hear you say, "Florida too has her drawbacks. How about your yellow fever?" I answer yes, every part of the world has some disadvantages, and Yellow Jack did get after us, but upon comparing records, I find that the death rate here was no worse than in some places in the north where they had diphtheria, Typhoid, Scarlet, and other fevers. Then too, I am satisfied that with our terrible Yellow fever scourge there has been no more deaths during the last year in proportion to the size of the place, than there has been in Buchanan. While I admit that Yellow fever is bad enough I prefer it to Typhoid fever, as well as to many other diseases. True no other fever strikes such a terror to the hearts of the people, or succeeds in getting up such a panic, while the danger from other diseases may be even greater. It has been seventeen years since the Yellow fever was here before, and we hope it will stay away much longer this time, and we think it will as the authorities here have learned by past experience how to guard against it in the future.

As there has been several heavy frosts in the northern part of the state this winter, I hope you will not forget that Florida is a very long state, and that there is quite a difference between North and South Florida.

Very truly Yours, H. H. KINYON.

REDDICK, Fla., Feb. 13, 1888. EDITOR RECORD:—As Dakota and Florida represent the extremes of temperature in the winters of the United States, and as Dakota has occupied considerable attention lately, I thought it would be pleasant change for some of your readers to hear a few words from the "land of flowers and sunshine." The winter here has been unusually pleasant. During the week of the great blizzards in the north and west the temperature here at seven A. M. averaged sixty-one and three-sevenths, and at two P. M. seventy-three and three-sevenths. Our coldest day was the nineteenth of January, 31 at seven A. M. and 48 at two P. M. There seemed to be no connection between Dakota and Florida, and for which Florida has good cause to be thankful. It seems that the California "gushers" are very quiet lately. I think a few such letters as those of Dr. Hale's in the Chicago Tribune will put a quietness on the "tenderfoot gushers" who think they know more in three or four weeks residence and one good dinner in California than the oldest inhabitant.

Orange trees, plum trees and blackberries are now in bloom here. Peach trees have blossomed all winter. The prospect is now good for an immense orange crop. Vegetables of all kinds never looked better, and the area planted is very large. There are two things in which Florida is very deficient, dust and mud. We have neither summer or winter, but the people here "prefer it that way." (Tell us about sand and sand bars, Doctor.) Travel in this state seems to have largely increased lately.

The Michigan Pulp Company, of Niles, has succeeded in making a piece of pastebord sixty-one inches wide and thirty-seven miles long, and did it without a break in the web. Two Scott, Kansas, News, of Feb. 16, contains a "Writer up" of Manning, a village lying twelve miles east of Scott, the following portion of which is of interest in this vicinity: Geo. W. Fox, David Lloyd and Wm. Coveney proved up the quarter sections on which the town is laid out. They came Feb. 27, 1886, and at the same time J. T. Eastman, Abe King, L. Wells, J. C. Service, and Van Ripper took up claims. The country was wild and desolate looking, and not a house was to be seen anywhere. You could scarcely walk out on the green prairie without running against a herd of wild horses. The cattle were so thick you couldn't rest in the daytime; and the coyotes so thick that you couldn't rest at night. Van Ripper's house was the first one built in the settlement, and it is still there. The next day the houses were frame shanties, 10x12 feet, some of them having a "cyclone cellar" at one side. These eight men worked in common, and owned most of the property in common till they got their own houses built. A blizzard struck them when they had about completed Service's shanty, and the entire crowd had to live several days on short rations. At last, Service was killed by a cyclone. E. B. Brewer, and considerable knowledge in regard to his success, during the many years that he has been traveling through this part of the country, has decided that he is an honorable exception to the common rule, and those who trust themselves in his hands may rely on a speedy cure, if their disease is curable. His large success in the past is ample evidence of his ability to afford relief. He charges nothing for consultation, and deals frankly and fairly with all who call upon him for advice, and gives no encouragement unless confident of his ability to afford relief. He has a long list of names of persons who have been cured of chronic complaints, to call attention to the fact that Dr. F. B. Brewer, now a regular visitor for years, will be again at the depot at Buchanan, Mich., on Tuesday, the 6th of March. See his advertisement in another column.

Catalogue of Vaughn's Seed Store. The annual issue for 1888 is just at hand, and we must say in behalf of Western enterprise that as a work of art exceeds anything in this line we have seen, both in its exceedingly beautiful cover and colored cover, and in its readable print and handsome wood engravings. It should be in the hands of every one who plants a garden, and can be had by sending five stamps to J. C. VAUGHN, 88 State street, Chicago.

White Swelling. Mr. M. S. Hamlin, one of the best known insurance men in North Carolina, writes from Raleigh, N. C., that he had a case of white swelling of the knee-joint, which was there for years. One of our friends, who had a case of the same kind, together with surgical operation on the leg bone. I tried every known blood purifier to build up my system, but none did me any good, until I got to you in the spring. It always builds me up, giving me appetite and digestion, and enables me to stand the long, trying, enervating, but successful, course of Dr. King's Electric Bitters, purifying the blood and building up the wasted system as S. S. S. On using it I soon became strong of body and easy of mind. My color changed from pale, wan look to a healthy, robust complexion.

Mr. G. N. Frizzle, of Farmersville, Texas, writes: "About August 1st, 1885, an eruption appeared on my arms and legs, which pained me much and seemed to afflict my physical condition generally. I tried every medicine for nervous prostration I finally purchased using Swift's Specific. I am glad to say that after using three large bottles the sores have all healed."—The Swift Specific Co., Drawer 3, Atlanta, Ga.

A narrow escape. Mrs. Lickerell, of Middlebury, Ind., had a very narrow escape from the insane asylum. For years she was subject to headache, palpitation, spinal rigidity, and all other nervous prostration. For three years she had convulsions, often as many as fifty a night. Able physicians failed to help her. At last after taking that wonderful remedy, Dr. J. C. Keeler's Nervine, for six weeks she was entirely cured. It is a recent discovery by one of the greatest living physicians, and is working wonders. Trial bottle free at W. H. Keeler's Drug Store.
