MILLICENT RAYNE

BY RETT WINWOOD.

Concluded. Madam stood haughtily erect. "Miss Rayne has severed her con-nection with this institution," she answered, in her iciest tones. "Surely you will receive her back?"

"You must see for yourself that it is impossible. The welfare of the pupils under my charge will not admit "What has the child done to merit this condemnation? You are punishing her for a mere thoughtless freak." "It is useless to continue this conversation. 1 understand my duty to my patrons, and shall do it." Leon's eyes blazed, but he turned silently and retraced his steps to the carriage. Once within, he put out his arm, drawing the trembling girl close to his side.

"Millicent," he said, gravely, "I have confession to make: No message was sent to the seminary the evening you came to the Grange. It was very wrong in me. Let me make a clean breast of it. I was bewitched by your innocence and fresh young beauty, and could not bear to part with you, as I knew I should be obliged to do, if the principal received word from you." Millicent drew away from him sobbing as if her heart would break. "How could you be so cruel?" she faltered, piteously. "I intended no harm. The Grange seemed so much brighter because you were there. As soon as you were sufficiently recovered I expected to take you back to school.'

A stifled sob was the only response He raised her hand to his lips.
"The fault is all mine," he added. "If you had been sent for, all would have been well. Millicent, I can make but one reparation, and I do that gladly. Will you be my wife now, this verv day?

"You cannot man it?" she cried, in a startled tone, lifting to his face her velvety eyes drowned in tears. "I do, my darling," he answered, "You may not be able to understand it, but when I first raised you in my arms, and looked into your sweet face, my heart went out to you as though I had known you for a lifetime. The feeling has intensified from that moment. There is but one way to set this matter right. By trying ever so hard, can you not love me a little?"

His brilliant dark eyes were gazing passionately into hers, and again he touched his lips to her hand. Millicent thrilled all over, and her heart beat rapidly.

'There is no need to try," she gently said, leaning her head on his shoulder with the gesture of a weary child. "I love you already."

His arm stole round her, and again e drew her to his side. "You will be my wife?"

"If you wish." A moment later they were flying along the road in the direction of the nearest town. Millicent waited in a private parlor at one of the hotels while her impetuous lover went for the parson and a license. Ere the summer twilight faded, with its flaming sunset fires, its soft breezes and mellow beauty, she was a bride.

Back again to the imposing old The stars were out, and the Grange. moon had hung its silver crescent in the western sky. The young bridegroom's face was luminous with exultant happiness as he led Millicent along the spacious hall to the room where Mrs. Blossom sat alone. "You have long wished for a mistress at the old Grange, and now the desire of your heart is gratified," he said, gayly. "Millicent is my wife, Mrs. Blossom.'

The good old woman stared at the blushing bride in amazement a moment, then took her affectionately in "This is unexpected, but I am very glad. I was just thinking of you, dear child, and how lonely the house seemed without you. And so Mr. Leon has made you his wife? There never was a lovlier bride." One bright, blissful month of happiness went by. The young couple remained quietly at the Grange. Leon had been a wanderer in many lands, and was wearied out with journeying to and fro. Loving, impetuous Millicent would have made a paradise of any spot that also held the hero of her girlish dreams. The world had never looked so beautiful—songs were upon her lips the whole day through. She was too happy to send any message to her father, and after a few days a letter was forwarded from the seminary saying he had been called unexpectedly to the West, but it gave no address. So the summer drifted on. One morning, as Leon sat in his study, a servant entered with a letter upon a silver salver. "It was left at the door by a special nessenger," said the man. The handwriting was strange, and Leon, more curious than startled, tore the letter open. This is what he read:-"Leon Ross deceives himselves if he thinks his image fills the heart of the Kate Granger's voice. "It cannot be!" and Millicent staggered, and would have fallen had not Kate supported her in her arms. "I know it is a dreadful story for you to hear," she went on, relentlessly, "but you ought to know the truth." "There is some mistake," moaned the stricken girl. "I will not believe that Leon has so woefully deceived me."

As the evening wore on, he had calmed his fevered pulses, and sought his wife's boudoir for the purpose of winning her confidence, if possible. Cleona stood at the door, looking pallid and restless. "My mistress bade me say that her head aches, and she felt unequal to joining you in the drawing-room," said the maid, telling the falsehood glibly enough. Leon's heart smote him. His wife ill, and he remaining coldly aloof! "I will go in for a moment," he said, with his hand on the knob.

Cleona made an impulsive movement, as though tempted to restrain him from entering. The young man was horrified. He flashed one swift look into her face, then crossed the threshold. The boudoir was tenantless. So was the sleeping-room. Leon Ross seized the girl fiercely by the arm. and demanded,—

"Where is your mistress?" "Don't kill me," she cried, thoroughy frightened. "My lady has gone out." "I don't know, sir."

if you trifle with me now. Where is my wife?" "Mercy!" cried Cleona, falling upon her knees. "I'll tell you all, sir. My lady has gone to meet her lover." "Her lover!"

"The fine young gentleman who has been hanging about the gate for a day or two. Letters have passed between them, and now Mrs. Ross has gone to meet him. It is a shame, sir, for her to deceive such a fine, noble gentleman as yourself, but-" Leon flung her violently aside, and dashed from the house. On reaching the gate he saw distinctly two figures standing in the moonlight near the outskirts of the grove—his wife in the arms of a man. His supposed rival turned and fled, and when Leon gained the spot Millicent was lying upon the grass in a dead faint. He hung over her torn with anger and despair, but his heart pleaded for her with an earnestness not to be resisted. Raising the senseless girl in his arms, he carried her to the house.

Some time elapsed before Millicent opened her eyes. Leon approached the couch where she lay and demand-"What have you to say to me?" He was ready even then to hear her exculpation, if she had any to offer. But Millicent made a fatal mistake.

"Kate's dreadful story was true," she thought. "He knows I have learned of his duplicity." One swift, appealing glance, and moaning as though her heart would break, she shrank away, covering her face with her hands. Leon fancied the gesture expressed guilt for which there was no extenuation, and left her without a word. In the gray light of the pallid dawn Cleona came to him in the study where he had been walking the floor the live long night.

"My lady has fled!" she cried.

It was even so. Poor Millicent had flitted away in the darkness, leaving no clew. Believing as she did that Leon was not her husband, she hoped to hide herself from him forever. Days and weeks went by. The young man's heart had been wholly wrapped up in his girlish bride, and he suffered untold agony. He could find no clew to Millicent's supposed lover, being ignorant even of his name. One day Mrs. Blossom ushered a visitor into the luxurious room where he sat brooding over his sorrow. It was Kate Granger, her beauty emphasized by every appliance of dress and art.

"I have come to offer my sympathy," she said, standing before him with drooping eyes. "Would I had warned you against Millicent Rayne before it was too late!" He looked up, quivering with intense mental pain.

"You knew her?" "We roomed together at the semina-Perhaps you can furnish some clew by which I may trace her to the hiding

Cleona lay bruised and bleeding almost at his feet. She had left the Grange two days after Millicent's flight. "My poor girl! I am truly sorry to find you like this," he said, compassionately, stooping to raise her head in his arms.

Cleona burst out sobbing. She suffered terribly, and was frightened, believing her hour had come.

"I have a confession to make, sir," she cried. "Let me speak while I have the strength. Your wife is pure and good as an angel. It was all a plot of Kate Granger's, who wanted you for herself. It was she, disguised as a man, that your wife met that night in the grove. She made the poor child think you had deceived her with a mock marriage, and she was not lawfully your wife." Leon listened like one in a dream. He understood all at last. Sweet, injured Millicent, how he had misjudged her! Only waiting long enough to place Cleona in careful hands, and see that she was on the road to recovery he resumed his journey with very different feelings from those under which he had set out.

In Boston, six weeks later, a friend brought him cards to a private entertainment given for the benefit of some charity.

"It is worth going to," said his friend. "The great cantatrice, Carboni has a protege who will make her debut in this humble way. I forget the girl's name, but she is said to be a real beauty, and her voice, though untrained, is something wonderful." Leon went. As he stood listlessly in the midst of the richly dressed crowd, a voice fell upon his ears that caused every nerve in his body to thrill. The fair singer's notes filled the room. The flashing lights and gay company faded away. He stood in the rose-scented garden of the Grange again, close to the wall, and held in his arms a girl with the face of an angel.

That thrilling voice, clear as a bird's, warbled on to the close of the refrain. Then Millicent raised her eyes. Some magnetism drew them directly to the spot where Leon Ross stood as if transfixed. With a low cry she fell back insensible. Leon's kisses on her lips recalled her to life as he held her close to his heart. Of course Madam Carboni was forced to give up her promising pupil. Leon Ross could not spare his beautiful young wife. The Grange has an honored mistress once more, and all are happy—all save Kate Granger. On learning the utter failure of her plot, she left the neighborhood in disgrace. The Shoe Was Laced Wrong.

break his neck before he came under the string." "That's quite interesting. Would you mind giving me some of your experience? What do you consider a lucky omen?" "You want to know what I consider a lucky omen, eh? That's just as the idea strikes me. I used to count white horses. Supposing I was standing at the corner of Broadway and Wall street. I'd take out my watch and time myself and count the number of white horses that turned into Wall street in five minutes. I would sometimes go on odd numbers and sometimes on the even. Like this: If I made up my mind on the even horses and an even number went by during the five minutes then I would be lucky, and vice versa." "You gamble on cards, do you?" "O, yes; I make my living as a sporting man.

"Does your superstition effect you in playing cards?" "Yes, indeed. If I am going to play cards for money, I always hunt up a beggar and give him some money for luck. I have walked sometimes two miles to find a beggar. I know a gambler who goes daily to an Italian on Green street who has three little canaries that tell fortunes by pulling an envelope out of a pack. He always follows the advice of a bird, and I have actually seen him shed tears over the slips he got, not from grief, but from vexation, if they went against the grain. I have had gamblers tell me they acquired the habit of trying their luck in different ways, but I claim it's not a habit; it's natural born in a man and it never comes out. Ammonia in Baking Powders.

From the Scientific American. Among the recent discoveries in science and chemistry, none is more important than the uses to which com-mon ammonia can be properly put as a leavening agent, and which indicate that this familiar salt is hereafter to perform an active part in the preparation of our daily food. The carbonate of ammonia is an exceedingly volatile substance. Place a small portion of it upon a knife and hold over a flame, and it will almost immediately be developed into gas and pass off into the air. The gas thus formed is a simple composition of nitrogen and hydrogen. No residue is left from the ammonia. This gives it its superiority as a leavening power over soda and cream of tartar used alone, and has induced its use as a supplement to these articles. A small quantitity of ammonia in the dough is effective in producing bread that will be lighter, sweeter and more wholesome than that risen by any other leavening agent. When it is acted upon by the heat of baking, the leav-ening gas that raises the dough is liberated. In this act it uses itself up, as it were; the ammonia is entirely diffused; leaving no trace or resduum whatever. The light fluffy, flaky appearance, so desirable in biscuits, etc., and so sought after by professional cooks, is said to be imparted to them only by the use of this agent.

The bakers and baking powder manufacturers producing the finest goods have been quickly to avail them-selves of this useful discovery, and the handsomest and best bread and cake are now largely risen by the aid of ammonia combined, of course, with other leavening material. Ammonia is one of the best known products of the laboratory. If, as seems to be justly claimed for it, the application of its properties to the purposes of cooking, results in giving us lighter and more wholesome bread, biscuit and cake, it will prove a boon to dispeptic humanity, and will speedily force itself into general use in the new field into which science has assigned it.

Girls and Marriage.

"No girl under twenty," says a wise woman, "has any business to think of marriage." Bless you, no. We know that. At that age no girl thinks of marriage as a "business." She just tumbles head over heels in love and marries the dear fellow just because she would cry her eyes out without him. It is when she is no longer what you would just exactly call a "girl," when she is rising 38 and has cut her last new teeth, full set, that she begins to make a "business of it."-Buffalo Ex-

While the booms are being pushed in all interests, Judge Gresham of Indiana, is the strongest man in the hearts of the people and will poll a stronger vote than any other candidate the Republicans can nominate. There has been a break of friendship among Indiana Democrats that bodes disaster to that party in that State in a contest between Gov. Illinois has a law prohibiting the sale of tobacco, in any of its forms, to minors, and the effect is marked in Chicago as a good one in cutting off the sale of cigarettes to school children. One of the leading Democratic advocates of the Mills tariff bill in the House, Thursday, in his speach remarked that he was decidedly in favor of buying in the cheapest market, regardless of the effect upon American interests, and that he favored carrying the same policy to the purchase of labor, and made special mention of that item. A number of his colleagues tried to have him cover up that point, but he persisted and repeated the statement. He simply spoke the real object of the measure, to reduce the American labor market to the level of that in Europe, which is the only way in which American manufacturing industries may hope to survive, without the aid of the protection given by the tariff.

That Iowa delegate to the general conference of the Methodist church, who stopped here to visit his friend, Rev. Mr. Elliott, preached a very fine discourse last Sunday. Among other matters discussed he mentioned the prohibitory liquor law of Iowa and said it worked finely and that there were no open saloons or liquors sold in that state, save in a very few of the border of the river towns. He says the Prohibitionists of Iowa do not want a third party, the Republican party is good enough for them. There were a number of the Dickie stripe of Prohibitionists present, and when the minister stated that the Prohibitionists of Iowa had no use for a third party their faces were a study for an artist.—Dowagiac Republican.

Tim Tarsney, the Democratic Congressman from Saginaw was making a free trade speech, Saturday, when he was prodded by Mr. O'Donnell, of the Jackson district, as follows:

Mr. Tarsney was depicting the woes of the agriculturists on account of the tariff. Mr. O'Donnell asked him how it was that under the tariff the value of the farms in Michigan had increased from 1880 to 1884 in the sum of $81,000,000, and during that same period the value of personal property on farms in Michigan had increased $17,000,000, making a total increase in wealth of the Michigan farmers in four years of $98,000,000. Mr. Tarsney replied that they had done this in spite of the tariff. Then he resumed on the woes of the laboring man. He was interrupted again by O'Donnell, who called his attention to the fact that in the four years mentioned the number of persons employed in manufactures in that state had grown from 77,535 in 1880 to 128,987 in 1884, and the capital invested was augmented $44,000,000. He further directed atwages had increased from $25,313,682 featherbone town. in 1880 to $44,203,739 in 1884, an increase of $19,090,057, the increase being 80 per cent. Mr. Tarsney was proceeding about the injury of the tariff to the people. His tormentor again rose and asked him if the tariff was so depressing how it was that the wealth of Michigan had increased from 1880 to 1884 from $18,000,000 to $2,000,000,000, an increase of nearly a million dollars

Mr. Tarsney hesitated a minute, then said he would like a week's increase himself. 'He was proceeding to draw a picture of the troubles of the farmers and the mortgages on their farms when Mr. O'Donnell again came back, saying he knew the farms in Michigan were mortgaged nearly twenty per cent, but surely the tariff was not to blame for that, for he found that in free trade England the farms were mortgaged 58 per cent of their value. Mr. O'Donnell was proceeding to make a few more inquries when Tarsney said he had the floor, and would not yield to anyone longer. O'Donnell made a pleasant response and took his seat.

Those on the Republican side were delighted with O'Donnell's breaking up of Tarsney's arguments and cheered at his apt responses and array of figures. Tarsney soon concluded his remarks, but before doing so said his colleague could not talk that way in Michigan-that if he did his constituents would be heard from. To this Mr. O'Donnell replied that he and his colleagues had made speeches some what similar to those to-day. He liked the result, for his people had increased his majority of 1227 in 1884 to nearly five thousand in 1886, and the people of the gentleman's district had greatly reduced his majority.

Moses Sees the Error of His Ways. Moses W. Field, Chairman of the Greenback State Central Committee, has issued a letter to the party resigning his position. This led to an interview with Moses by a reporter of the Detroit Tribune with the following

"I am not holding a press reception this evening as the number of reportorial callers here this evening would lead one to infer," he said. "There is really nothing to be said that is not fully set forth in my letter of resignation, which you perhaps have seen." "Mr. Field, the obvious reasons which you allege in addition to business engagements as the cause of your resignation would perhaps be better understood by the public if they were more fully explained. "So I have been told by several callers this evening. Still, I see no reason for enlarging upon what I have said in my letters. My reasons will be perfectly obvious to the committee, I am sure. Is that not sufficient?"

"The composition of the committee has not been exactly suited to your "I don't like the shape of that question," said Mr. Field, with the shake of the head. "Besides, being of a leading character it is couched in terms that might call out a reply which would be misunderstood." And Mr. Field stroked his whiskers with a thought-"Now, if you are determined to interview me, why not ask a question like this: "Mr. Field, have you not realized for some time that a considerable popular representation of your party has been tinctured -- yes, tinctured is the word—with the fallacies of the Cobden club?" To such a question as that I would reply most emphatically "Yes!" and Mr. Field pounded the table before him by way of em-

"And this free trade coloring is a little too pronounced in the make-up of the committee?" "Let us not discuss the committee," said Mr. Field, with a deprecating wave of the hand, "The committee of course are not the party." "But, of course, the committee represent the aims, hopes, inspirations and aspirations of the party, do they not? Mr. Field took a moment to collect his thoughts.

"It is perhaps needless for me to say that I am a pronounced protectionist. I believe in the principle announced by Liszt that the markets of the country belong to the labor of the country. I will never consent to the scheme now being advocated to snatch labor out of the hands of the poor in our own country in order to enrich the industries of foreign lands. In saying this I speak in the full consciousnness that I am representing the views of the major part of the Greenback party."

"Mr. Field, it might be inferred from this that you thought the management of the party-in other words the committee—did not represent the true character of the Greenback party." "Did I say anything about the committee? Let me speak plainly. Entertaining, as I do, strong protection views, I could not, without doing violence to my conscience, be a party to any movement looking to the re-election of Grover Cleveland to the Presidency of the United States. I would rather see a smoked ham in the Presidential chair than the present incum-

"Then, of course, you would not like to see the Greenback party coalesce with Democrats this year?' "Coalesce! No, sir; and I don't think they will."

"If Cleveland is put in nomination, what should be the course of the Greenback party?"

"In reply to that question let me answer for myself personally, and await future developments to show how nearly my own views accord with the views of the party. It is a safe assumption that Cleveland will be renominated, and consequently the tariff will be one of the issues. Let me say right here that with this situation to face Moses W. Field will be found working for the success of the Republican ticket. If Russell A. Alger, or in fact any other good man with sound views on the tariff, should be the party's candidate, I will take the stump and work night and day for his triumphant election. Yes, sir; I mean every word I say. I would speak in every hall, every court house, every school house—wherever I could get an audience-in support of his candi-

AMERICAN WOMEN'S VOICES

A Young English Diplomat's Remark

Throat Gymnastics. Considerable discussion has been caused by a remark of a young diplomat belonging to the English fisheries commission He said that he was much struck with the facial and physical loveliness of American women, but that his sense of the harmonious was jarred when they "Englishwomen's intonation is musical, low, sympathetic, while that of the typical daughter of America is high, somewhat harsh, and not grateful." He added that in repose the American woman is more attractive than her English sister; but that the latter is more agreeable in conversation.

Throughout the debate which this candor has started their is no denial of the assertion that American women's voices are often disagreeable and that English women's intonation is more melodious. But there is no proper effort to get at the cause of the difference. There is an error in admitting that the difference is due to higher pitch in this country than in England. Any one who has heard English women speaking with total self-unconsciousness in their own homes knows that they run to quite as high a note as women of any other country; and that, in proportion as the spirit is amiable, the voice rises as naturally in the gamut as the thermometer ascends when the icy fetters loosen the mercury. Miss Terry's voice is perfectly natural on the stage, and when she is not tragic it is in a high key. Sontag was noted for talking as "flutes lisp and nightingales warble," and both are at their best in high pitch. The trouble lies not in the pitch, but in the quality of voice. When Lear said of Cordelia, "Her voice was over soft, gentle and low, an excellent thing in woman," it was quality, not pitch, he correctly described. When Petruchio says of Katherine, in "Taming of the "Think you a little din can daunt mine ears?" he describes again the offensiveness in woman's voice, its noisiness, not its pitch. Chaucer knew that "small voices, sweet entuned," "the sweetest melody he ever heard;" and once again it is quality, not pitch. that is referred to. It is undeniable that in the American air all voices are more or less roughened by the catarrhal maladies, more disagreeable than dangerous. We can count too easily the singers we have produced; and the moment a voice is discovered there is feverish anxiety to get it out of the country before our winds crack it in the throat. Few singers born or bred in Europe return, unless in extraordinary cases of great laryngeal pliability, with as even or suave a tonality as they bring out here. The voices that are bred among us we do our best to destroy for musical quality in either singing or speaking by the elocutionary antics of our schools. In England, except among those who are latterly patrons of the public primary tuition outside the home in childhood is all but unknown. The governess is a tradition as immovable as the house of lords or the judges' wigs. The children study and recite in an ordinary room. The "low' voice is naturally and sweetly developed, because the lining of the throat is not scraped by voice forcing. When singing lessons begin the special timbre of each voice is carefully watched; and as rapidly as indications suffice, it is given the proper education for its natural register, be that high, low or medium. Meanwhile we have forty children in a large schoolroom; the teacher arranges them in a row at the rear, and stands herself at the front of the apartment, and the child who reads loudest is the highest in order of merit. It is considered particularly commendable if the entire class can read in concert louder petitive schools—competing for the ruin of individual voice quality. The same unscientific course is followed in music. All sing the same register for years: all are urged to shout and "holler" in school. When they are of an age to make battle with the climate in its ugly moods they can already say, as Falstaff did to the voice, I have lost it with holloaing and singing of anthems." Doubtless, too, mental composure has much to do with the quality of the voice. The eager of both sexes will shout or scream. As the best conversers are also the best listeners, the quality of voice which goes so far to make a good converser is instinctively low and sympathetic. The English girl learns in infancy that she is to speak only when spoken to; that she is to reflect before speaking, and when she speaks is to say as little as possible that will antagonize her lords and masters. The American girl is accustomed from childhood to speak on everything; to exercise spontaneity, if not independence; and the vices resulting from the abuse of the good ideas herein involved are loud voice, harsh quality, and speech, followed by reflection, perhaps, but rarely preceded by it. American girls, as a rule, are poor listeners. A dozen of them will speak all together, and the highest pitch is often

A Bath in Washington.

Probably Washington is the only civilized place in the world where it comes within the limits of etiquette to ask a visitor to take a bath; yet many a congressman crowns his politeness to a constituent by offering him a ticket of admittance to the marble pools in the basement of the Capitol. Of course, when an immersion would, for obvious reasons, be of the most benefit, the statesman wisely refrains from an invitation partaking too much of the suggestive. As a rule, the curiosity of the visitor impels him to take advantage of an opportunity to see the luxurious appointments that keep our national politics clean.—New York Press "Every Day Talk."

Early Inhabitants of America. A glance at the geologies of the present day shows that workers in this department of natural history are enabled to map out the continents and seas of ages ago almost as correctly as they can those of today—so distinctly are the old shores and landmarks outlined. Today we ride in cars across the American continent; yet not so long ago, geologically speaking, a vast inland sea extended northwest from the Gulf of Mexicofinding its boundaries, in all probability, on some shore now submerged beneath the waters of the Pacific.

This was during what is known as the age of chalk, or the cretaceous periodand millions of years ago, if our geological estimates are correct. The question as to whether man existed then is an interesting one. Evidence of human life has not been found; yet there were vast areas of land, with animals and plants of great variety, and as there was no physical barrier to human existence, in the opinion of many the cretaceous continents and islands were populated by

at this early time, the strange animals that lived during it, it is a comparatively easy matter to understand or appreciate the daily life of our ancestors. It is evident that they were much more primitive than even the bushman of today, and undoubtedly were what we would term wild men, living in rocks and caves as the lower animals do. They were essentially hunters and fishermen, depending upon game for their suste-nance. The small continent of America at this time had in all probability low, marshy coasts, and the great ocean or gulf, whose coast line can be traced from Arkansas to near Fort Riley, on the Kansas river, up to Minnesota to Canada, near the head of Lake Superior, was a vast shallow sea. On its borders we may imagine cliffs of sandstone worn out into caves and quarries, in which these early fishermen made their homes.-Philadelphia Times.

Sending Unsealed Letters. The "point of etiquette," in regard to not sealing letters sent by the hand of a friend, is to be considered, undoubtedly, as settled by the usage of polite society. And yet there are two sides to the ques tion. To intrust to a friend an unsealed letter to a third person is a compliment to the friend; but why should it be thought necessarily uncomplimentary if the letter be sealed? On the other hand the sealing of a letter may be deemed always advisable, for one good reason at least. The contents of an unsealed letter are never safe. They are safe so far as the honorable friend is concerned, but not safe in any other sense. They may be lost from the envelope easily and innocently. They may be abstracted and read by the servant to whom note is delivered at the door, or by any prying individual who may find the missive lying on the hall table and awaiting the owner's arrival. Especially unsafe is it to place in an unsealed package articles of large money Would any sane man send a $50 bill in an unsealed envelope by the hand of a friend or anybody whomsover? The friend himself, if he knew the nature of the inclosure, would be very apt to protest against this sacrifice of common sense at the shrine of etiquette.—"C. S. E." in New York Commercial Advertiser.

How to Photograph Birds. Dr. R. W. Shufeldt suggests to ornithologists that they may find portable photographic outfits of advantage in their studies. He finds that by the use of the instantaneous shutter birds may be photographed in nearly all of their posi-"Out here on the prairies we will often find an old stump or stalk upon which a dozen or fifteen species of birds will alight during seven or eight hours on almost any day suitable to use the camera upon them. Now, all we have to do is to properly set our instrument near this point, conceal it in such a way as not to alarm the birds, focus it sharply upon the perch where they alight, place on your 'snap shutter,' and fix it with a string. and then remove yourself far enough away to pull it when you have a subject sitting to your liking. Birds that you have wounded but slightly may be photographed under the most favorable circumstances; they may also be taken sitting on their nests; in actual flight, however swift; in pursuit of their food; in leading about their young; indeed, the list is almost an endless one. Rookeries also offer admirable subjects, and a splendid field is open at those wonderful resorts of water birds in such places as the Bahamas or the Alaskan coast."--Chicago News.

Useless and Dangerous Animals. It is a consolation to know that while man's selfishness, as well as idiotic folly, is obliterating the elk, antelope and buffalo, as well as depopulating the streams of finny inhabitants, a great deal is also done annually to rid the world of animals of a more useless and dangerous sort. Twenty thousand rabbits the other day were corraled, by men, women and children, in one of the valleys of California, and killed. Thousands more escaped, but the rabbits were sufficiently reduced to make agriculture possible for the coming year. There is no section of the civilized world where man fails now to fairly cope with dangerous animals, unless it be with the snakes of southern Asia. --Globe-Democrat.

Champion Short Hand Writer. Mr. A. S. White, the well-known author of "White's Phonography," famous as the Champion Shorthand Writer of the World, received the first prizes in the international contests at London, Edinburgh, Paris and Berlin; he came near being permanently disabled by rheumatism. His recovery by the use of a remedy infallible in curing rheumatism and all blood diseases is told in a letter from his office, 102 Washington st., Chicago, dated June 20, 1887. He writes:

"Your remedy has done wonderful service for me. For the past five years I have been troubled with rheumatic pains. "My right hand had become almost useless and I was gradually losing speed as a shorthand writer. A friend of mine, Dr. Dederich, advised me of your remedy. I used a dozen bottles of S. S. and am now entirely recovered. I shall never cease to commend your ex-ellent medicines, and wish you much success.

"Yours truly, A. S. WHITE" And here is another witness: BENTON, Ark., August, 25th, 1887. "Last spring I was dangerously afflicted with erysipelas, and my life was despaired of by my physicians. As a last hope I tried S. S. S. and soon found relief, and in two weeks was able to attend to my business. I used five bottles.

DEAR SIR:-As Mr. Hinman, the druggist, told you I am a great friend of your remedy. I have used it at intervals during the the past twelve years. It carried me safely through the critical period of change of life without a single sick day, and it did great things for me in many ways. I always recommend it where I see a case that needs it. FARMERS in all directions complain that the wheat crop is going to amount to nothing this year. A large per centage of the plants were killed or injured by the winter, and the balance are nearly dried to death. By the good rain of this, some fields may yet be saved, but the out-look for the crop is far from flattering.

THERE was a grand drunken jubilee at the saloon Saturday afternoon. There were a number of knockdowns and a general dragout picnic. The Marshal did not arrest the drunks for Talman, of Dayton, became tired of the | he had not room for more than half of them. As the time for prohibition draws near, the necessity of it becomes more marked.

> Four years ago Elizabeth Vanderhoof was arrested in Galien for murdering her husband, found guilty and sentenced to life imprisonment in Jackson prison but was immediately transferred to Detroit House of Correction, where she has since remained. During the four years her friends have been by small contributions raising money for expense of an appeal to the Supreme Court, which heard the case last Tuesday.

> If the fellow who started to carry some fruit trees to his home, west of town, and was so drunk that he didn't know when he dropped them from under his arm, on Front street, Monday afternoon, will call at J. J. Well's, he will find his trees safely healed in and awaiting his arrival. He can console himself with the prospect that it will not always be necessary for him to get so drunk when he comes to town.

> A petition was presented to the Common Council, of last year asking them to open Chicago street through to the Terre Coupe road. Some of the petitioners are asking what has become of the document, and fear that it has been permanently pigeon-holed. The present Council does not appear to consider itself interested in the unfinised business of its predecessor, and therefore this petition not before the Council.

> AT the Republican Caucus, Saturday afternoon, held in Justice Alexander's office, N. Hamilton was chosen chairman, J. G. Holmes, Secretary, and the following delegates were chosen to attend the Convention, which was held in Berrien Springs yesterday: L. P. Alexander, Geo. Searls, Geo. Irwin, Geo. W. Noble, I. M. Vincent, Wm. Brocous, Wm. F. Thayer, N. Hamilton, LeRoy Dodd, A. A. Worthington, A. A. Jordan, Scott Whitman, Geo. Howard, Wm. Keeler, Levi Logan, Wm. Burrus, Chas. Bishop, John Graham, Erastus Kelsey, Robert H. Rogers, J. F. Hahn. On motion, such delegates as attend were empowered to cast the full vote

In towns where electric light is used incandescent lamps are lighted at an expense of eighty cents per month for each lamp of sixteen candle power. This is about the same cost as for oil, not taking into account the annoyance and trouble of cleaning greasy lamps every day. There is no place in Michigan with better natural facilities for having electric light than Buchanan as it is seldom that a good water power sufficient for the purpose can be found as conveniently located, and doing nothing else, as is found here. A plant here, managed in a business like manner, can be made to pay. Will

The picnic season was opened in great style by a number of young lasses from this place who went to Weaver's lake Saturday. There is a great story of their adventure with a boat with which they had permission to play, so long as they did not loosen it from the shore. By some means, however, the boat managed to drift into the lake with Burness Earl and Maud Mowrey in it. Maud became frightened and jumped out going to the neck in the soft mud where she stuck. Some of her companions ran for help, who removed her from her rather cool situation, and captured the boat. There is a probability that the next time the girls go picnicing they for company.

NILES city council had its meeting Monday evening and discussed the the question of taxes, which will have to be $4,200 more this year than last, on account of the loss of the saloon tax, which equaled that amount. The tax in Buchanan will be somewhat larger than last year for the same reason, but very few tax-payers will be found but would prefer the increase in the tax to having such a drunken mob on the streets as was here Saturday afternoon and evening, made by the saloon. No civilized community has any use for such celebrations.

THERE is a picnic brewing over the grade of the sidewalk on the north side of Front street. Mr. Boyle failed to find a grade and so built his wall to raise the walk about six inches. This morning Dodd & Son have their walk up, will excavate the space under it and when it is replaced will put on the same grade as Mr. Boyle's. The same is in prospect for the other properties extending to the corner at the bank. The walk east of Mr. Boyle's is in greater need of being raised than that on this side.

BERRIEN SPRINGS has the receiver for the narrow gange railroad, the Jackson; Austin Davis, burglary, five power and the privilege to improve that property on a paying basis. The prospect for the early completion of the Lake Shore and Indiana railroad is not the most flattering, and there is a constant growl about the lack of for men who never thought of such a | means to reach the county seat, which the Board of Supervisors cannot long ignore. There was a hope that, with the appointment of the new receiver, something would be done with child. Some of those are men who are that property to make it earn somesomething. Will it not? commonly considered as having pretty NILES has a peculiar judgment of ber $600 against her, given by a jury the present term of Circuit Court. Several years since some one erected a billboard next to the sidewalk, on Front street, and two years ago John Hollister was passing that part of town during a heavy gale and the bill-board was blown down upon him, and he was somewhat badly bruised. He sued the city and secured the above amount. If this is to be the rule, it will stand cities and villages well in hand to be careful about allowing billboards to remain in close proximity to the sidewalk. When suits for damages of this kind are brought against municipalities the tendency is to give judgment against the corporation, regardless of the justice of the claim. Buchanan has paid $3,200 for knowledge of this sort.

For the benefit of the Niles Democrat we wish to remark that the observance of a liquor law, or any other, in any community depends very largely upon the sentiment of the community. When that sentiment amounts to encouragement or even to indifference violations may be expected. If your good citizens were prompt to prosecute for keeping open saloons on would not have been so bold about keeping them open. There are communities in Berrien county where such violations have not occurred, simply because to do so meant to court prosecution and certain conviction and punishment. Communities who have permitted continued and uninterrupted violations of the old law can hardly be expected to enforce the new one, which is more difficult of enforcement

O. E. ALESAIRE B. F. BUCK have gotton out circulars announcing a sixweeks' summer school for teachers in Buchanan, commencing July 9 and closing August 17. Tuition will be $5 for the term, or $1 a week for less than the full term. It is also expected that the State Teachers' Institute. lasting one week, will commence on the closing of the summer school. This will be a good opportunity for those who wish to avail themselves of a short term of school between jobs. We suppose that the school is to be held in the Union school building, as they advertise free use of the library, although the circular does not mention where it will be held, nor has the school board been consulted regarding it. The janitor will be expected to work nights and Sundays to do his annual job of house cleaning in time for the opening of the regular fall term of school, which will open the first Monday in September.

The Young Man Destined to Rule The Fatherland.

SOMETHING ABOUT BOULANGER.

He is Talked of Almost as Much in Europe as Is William, the Son of Frederick-The Mourning Court Held by the Dowager Empress at Berlin.

All Europe has an intensely practical interest, and the rest of mankind a natural curiosity, concerning William, the son of Emperor Frederick, who must soon be emperor of Germany. The purveyors of information have told us much; and the net result is to give us a very unpleasant impression of the young man. That he was deformed from birth having a withered arm and shapeless formity and easily insulted; that he has a scrofulous affection in one ear, and that his general system is abnormal, are bad enough, but not just subjects of reproach. But that he is a reactionary of the worst type, openly defiant of his father's wishes and disrespect ful to his mother, and disposed to be dictatorial and cruel, these are the really dark features of his character. Add that he goes beyond Bismarck himself in his demands for an immense military system and has a natural liking for war and warlike methods, and it is plain that Germany's future is somewhat problematical. To an American it seems a sad and strange thing that a whole nation should be made anxious and all Europe disquieted by the peculiarities of one young man; but as they will not learn to do without hereditary monarchs they must take the evil with the good-if there is any good. And William "came honestly by" his peculiarities, most of them being of the kind which miss one generation and take effect on the next. He "takes back," as the western people say of that peculiar inheritance which scientists call atavism. His grandmother Augusta was a granddaughter of Maria Paulowna, one of three daughters of "Crazy Paul," the czar who was trampled to death in his palace by a few of his loving subjects. Paul was a mass of disease, and, as to his brain, he was in that most unhappy of all states-a little too crazy to be at large and not quite crazy enough to be shut up-and consequently capricious and cruel. His daughters were thoroughly scrofulous, and so the younger Hohenzollerns inherit the curse. For centuries the scrofulous taint has run through monarchical lines, and more than one royal or ducal house has thus become extinct.

Frederick William Albert Victor (such is his full name) was born Jan. 27, 1859, and was educated at Cassell and Bonn. He was rather feeble in early life, but by military training has gained strength. In ISSI, when but 22 years old, he married the Princess Victoria of Schleswig-Holstein-Augustenburg, who was born May 3, 1860, and they have four children, born as follows: Frederick William, soon to be crown prince, May 6, 1882; Frederick, July 7, 1883; Adalbert, July 14, 1884; August William, Jan. 29, 1887. His wife is rather plain featured, and not at all gracious in demeanor. On the paternal side the family record begins to be conspicuous with that surly Frederick who knocked his wife and daughter down with his heavy and knobby cane, bear and imprisoned his son, afterward Frederick the Great, and repeatedly threatened him death, and who was so brutally frank and plain spoken that his best qualities appear much like other men's worst. His son, the great Frederick, was a little better. He was extremely fond of argument, but as he had a playful habit of collaring and kicking any one who disagreed with him it was as Voltaire said, "impossible to discuss with a man who had such powerful arguments and wore such heavy boots." We can understand, therefore, just what the German people mean when they say of the crown prince, "He is one of the old Hohenzellerns." And yet they like him, because he is a born He speaks with sneering contempt of English traders, and treats his mother with undisquised rudeness she being English. His unfilial conduct was so notorious before the old Emperor William's death that the grandfather denounced it in unsparing terms. His father reproached him bitterly for seeking the imperial power while that father lay sick. "You," he said, "are the only one who appears to be convinced of my speedy death. And you have dared to speak and to act as if I were already irretrievably lost. You have given an example of an ambition most merciless and undignified. But thereby you have lost much of the confidence of the court and of the people." The same evening, the report further says, at dinner, when William lifted his glass and said, "I hope for your speedy

EMPRESS AUGUSTA'S MOURNING COURT. nonies, none of which exceeded in interest probably the court of mourning (Trauer Cour), instituted by the dowager Empress Augusta shortly after the death of the Emperor William. The cut here given of this extraordinary court is said to be a faithful representation of the scene, and it will be seen that while the formalities of a court reception are rigorously complied with the dressing is of the most somber character.

Gen. Boulanger is the great man of the hour in Paris, for he has appealed to the people and they have elected him as deputy from Dordogne by 59,498 votes to 35,745 given to M. Clerjounie, the Conservative Republican. But according to the peculiar system of French representation, he has been voted for in other departments, so his majority is 80, 000 to 100,000, and he comes back to Paris the conquering hero of the hour. We say "comes back," but it is only in the political sense for it is another oddity of the French m that a man need not live in the district he represents, and, as a matter of fact. Boulanger did not even visit the department in which the vote was nearly unanimous for him. It is just as if Gen. Grant in 1882 had appealed to Illinois, and been elected to congress by two or three districts. "But 'twas a famous victory." It is taken to mean that the people indorse his former vigorous administration of the war department, and especially his brutally frank statement that he expected an early war with Germany, and intended to be fully prepared for it. For that statement the conservative administration put him out and down. Now he is up again; 80,000 people turned out to cheer his passage from the Hotel du Louvre to the chamber of the assembly, and so the timid cabinet officers are "all of a tremble," as they say in Paris.

The present politics of that mercurial capital are wonderfully like those of Louisiana were from 1870 to 1877; they are much the same sort of people as the Orleanois, and are in a condition even more unstable. Of course, an ovation in which 80,000 people took part could not end without a fight; but the police authorities had their arrangements so well made that only a dozen or twenty people were knocked down. A day or two later the students of the Quartier

Latin made a big demonstration against Boulanger and carried things with a high hand till they reached a market square where the butchers set on them, and the general rabble coming to the latter's assistance, the anti-Boulangistes were soundly and satisfactorily whaled. All this, the reader should understand, turns on the question between Radical and Conservative Republicans, the war party of Boulanger and the peace party now in power, with President Sadi-Carnot as its head. As the word Boulanger means "baker" the wits of Paris make many passable jokes about the butchers' support of

Gen. Boulanger visited the United States in 1881 as head of the military embassy representing the French army at the Yorktown centennial, and with him were the most prominent descendants of Lafayette and Rochambeau, Col. Bosson, the Count de Noailles, Marquis de Lestrode and many others. After the ceremony at Yorktown

BOULANGER IN HIS ROOM: Gen. Boulanger announced an intention to visit Canada-"that Canada which remained faithful to the manners and language of the mother country." Freuch diplomats in America represented to him that it would be "inconvenable imprudent," after having assisted at a celebration of a defeat of the English, to go in the character of a French general to visit an English province, but he took the responsibility and was most cordially received. A great banquet was given in his honor at Montreal, presided over by the governor of that province. Also a right royal fete on the old battlefield of Wolfe and Montcalm near Quebec. The tact of Gen. Boulanger and the eloquent fitness with which he spoke assured him a "boom" on his return to Paris, and was practically the beginning of his political leadership.

We present a view of the general in his room at the Hotel du Louvre, copied from a large picture prepared for Le Monde Illustre, of Paris, by the artist Tiret Boguet. All the halls near his room are crowded daily with would be visitors, not one in ten of whom can secure access to him, and when he appears in public his progress is a continued oration. His supporters ery "Vive Boulanger!" and utter untranslatable cries against the "German cabinet" (meaning the cabinet which refuses to be anti-German), while the students yell "Vive la republique! Down with the dictator!" and then they fall to breaking each other's heads like good patriots. All this time the more prominent supporters of the two factions are hurling at each other such fierce epithets as make our old war cries of "Copperhead" and "Nigger thief" seem like little pleasantries, and duel are quite numerous. French duels are proverbially safe affairs, except, as Mark Twain tells us, "when the combatants catch cold," but there have been some painful exceptions. Thus Robert de Fanconnet had a rapier run through his arm the other day, and Count do Kelman received a thrust in the breast which is likely to prove fatal. Young Rochefort, son of the Communist, or Radical. editor. "pinked his man" while fighting in favor of Boulanger. Of course, the popularity of the general, still more his theatrical posing, has offended some of his former allies, and the way they manifest a slight displeasure is shown in this article in Le Paris, edited by Charles Laurent:

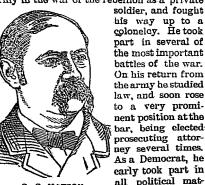

FII plead guilty of not having known Gen. Boulanger till today. I plead guilty of having been, as I fancied, patriotically reserved toward him. Yesterday I saw, heard and understood. I saw a man enter the Salle des Seances at the chambe forced smile who at a chosen moment took a high seat and exhibited himself to the whole as sembly, especially to the public in the galleries, for whom he filled his seat. I have seen all this, have heard and read all this, and I say one mus be blind or an accomplice now not to understand the aim of the man, who calls himself a patriot above all things.

Russia's Railway Accidents.

The Russian courts are severe in dealing out punishment for railway accidents. The court at Odessa has sentenced the local director and the engineer of the Steam Tramway company there to three months' imprisonment and to pay a compensation of 60,000 rubles for an accident which occurred on the line.—Chicago Herald.

INDIANA DEMOCRATS.

They Name C. C. Matson for Governor and W. R. Myers for Lieut. Governor. Courtland C. Matson, nominated for governor by the Democrats of Indiana, is a native of that state. He was born in 1841 in Franklin county, a county that has furnished a number of prominent men, among them being Gen. Lew Wallace, author of "Ben Hur, and Captain Eads, of jetty fame. His father, Hon. John A. Matson, was once the Whig nominee for governor of Indiana. Col. Matson attended Asbury (now De Pauw) university at Greencastle, where he graduated with honor. He early entered the Union army in the war of the rebellion as a private early took part in all political matters, and, possess ing very agreeable manners, he was nece sarily personally popular. In 1880 he was nominated for congress, his opponent being the candidate of the Republicans and Greenbackers. He defeated the combination by a handsome majority. He was re-elected to each of the succeeding sessions. In congress he has always taken a leading place in his party, and for some time has been chairman of the house committee on invalid pensions. He has devoted a great deal of his time in congress to pension matters, and has made himself popular with the soldiers, especially in his district. On the stump he is fluent speaker and is counted as one of the best his party has. In his last race for con gress he had a split in his own party to meet as well as a most popular Republican candidate. The result was one of the hottest political campaigns ever fought in the district. He outgeneraled his enemies and was reelected, but by a reduced majority. He has a dignified and courtly address, and his manners are winning. He has few personal enemies, even among those opposed to him in politics. He is well equipped in all the arts that go to make up a successful politician.

Capt. W. R. Myers, named for lieutenant governor, is of Ohio birth, but has lived all his manhood life in Indiana. He received a common school education and chose the law for a profession. Soon after the breaking out of the army and was promoted to the cap taincy of his company. Up to 1872 he was a Republican in politics, but that year cast in his fortunes with the Democracy unof Mr. Greeley. W. R. MYERS, prominent position among his new party associates, and in 1878 was elected to the Forty-sixth congress, defeating Gen. William Grose. Rear Admiral Boggs. Another of the naval officers prominent during the civil war has gone to his rest. Rear Admiral Charles Stewart Boggs died recently. Admiral Boggs was born at New Brunswick, N. J., in 1811. In 1826 be entered the navy as midshipman and attached to lieutenant. Serv ing in this capacity on board the steamer Princeton he was present at the siege of Vera Cruz and compedition from the Princeton which destroyed the United States brig Truxton after her surrender to the Mexicans. In 1855 he was made commander, and in 1862 commanded the United States steamer Varuna at the passage of the forts below New Orleans. The Varuna was the only vessel of Farragut's squadron lost in the passage of the forts. She was, from her great speed, selected to engage the rebel squadron above the forts, and was attacked and sunk by two rams, not before she had destroyed the attacking vessels, however. In July of the same year, Boggs was made captain, and commanded the Juniata on the blockade of Cape Fear river. Ill health soon after caused his transfer to the superintendence of the construction of several steam picket boats, and while thus employed he designed and fitted out the torpedo boat which destroyed the rebel fron clad Albe-

He was promoted to commodore on July 25, 1866, and commanded the steamer De Soto, which suffered serious damage in the earthquake of that year at St. Thomas, In 1869 he was assigned to the special duty of reporting on the condition of steam engines afloat; next he had charge of the lighthouse depot on Staten Island, and was lighthouse inspector for the Third district. He was finally commissioned as rear admiral in July, 1870, commanding the European fleet in

A PICTURESQUE RELIGIOUS ORDER OF THESE TIMES.

Any Woman Can Join It for Ten Cents and Unite in the Great Work of Doing Good to Her Fellow Creat-

Perhaps the most wonderful religious or ganization which has ever sprung up in this country is that of the "King's Daughters." Its members already number about 40,000, and are increasing all the time. It is wonderful, because it is so simple. It contains no long drawn out code of ethics, and its simplest precept is the golden rule. The motto of this order is "In His Name," and it means that any member shall "lend a hand" to her fellow creatures when necessary. The idea was in a measure suggested by Edward Everett Hale in his book "Ten Times One is The book also contained these mottoes, which he gave to the world: Look up and not down: Look forward and not back; Look out and not in, and Lend a hand The society of "The King's Daughters" was first started in New York in 1886 by Mrs. Bottome. Ten ladies met to consider how they could give more help for more help for good by uniting together than by each trying to each trying to work separately

They adopted the H 10x1=10 idea, and called their band

"The King's Daughters." They Daughters." They chose for their badge a little pur worn either with or without the MADGE OF KING'S DAUGH-Maltese cross, and TERS. TERS. adopted the lend Anything, however small or simple, that helps another human being to be better or happier is proper work for "The King's Daughters," and every branch may therefore be left to choose its special work, according to location and circumstances. Each ten may organize and elect officers, though this is not essential in so small a body. There is nothing of a secret society character about the organization, but not even the Masonic sign meets a readier recognition than the tiny silver Maltese cross with the initials L. H. N. or the significant bit of purple ribbon in the button hole wins for its wearer.

The significance of wearing this cross is that its owner has adopted the motto into her daily life; that "In His Name" she is willing to serve any other woman, stranger or friend that she recognizes practically her sisterhood with all other women, that any reasonable request made her "In His Name" will be readily granted.

Mrs. Bottome is the president of the central council; Mrs. M. L. Dickinson, of 230 West Fifty-ninth street, New York, is the secretary, and to her all applications for the establishment of chapters should be addressed. The fee of membership is only ten cents, thus bringing it within the means of the poor, though not limiting the contribu-tions of the rich. Perhaps the objects of the order are best stated by Mrs. Dickinson in work discussed.

Whatever special work may be done, all branches have the common work of increasing the number of tens. Every member of a ten may form any number of tens. One may be the King's Daughter and unite with no ten. On the other hand, tens may be formed without adopting the order's chosen name. Each ten may organize and elect officers, but in so small a body it is not essential. The one who forms a ten should keep list of tenshers and lines growth and purposes of the branch. It is contrary to the spirit of so elastic an organization to define the routine of what each ten shall be and do. These points each must settle in accordance with its own conditions. The same suggestions would not be helpful to all branches.

These plans are not yet perfected, but as soon as they are they will be given to the order and explained by those authorized to those wish-

How Locomotives Are Named. "Locomotives," said the railroad man, "are oftener numbered than named nowadays. The great trunk lines of the country number their engines, but some of the New England lines still continue to both name and number. Localities are conciliated by naming engines after them, and the directors feel flattered of course to see their names on majestic express or monster freight engines. Then there are individuals locally influential whom the corporation wishes to please, and they are hon-ored. Sometimes these men are 'kickers,' and the road doesn't like to be kicked, and names the locomotive to soften their asperities. But as I said before, you've no idea of the number of letters and the many forms of pressure exerted. Some man who owns some pleasure resort on the road wants its name put on a locomotive as an advertisement of that place, and as his interest is a good deal the road's interest, he generally has his wish gratified

"There is a sort of unwritten custom for localities and individuals to give clocks or ornaments to the engines named after them Different roads have different ideas and methods. The Providence names its shifting engines after characters in Dickens, suggestive of qualities that will be called into play. There is the 'Pancks,' that goes about puff ing: the Micawber, that waits for something to turn up, etc. The Eastern road once ran on Shakespeare some years ago, and gave its machines such names as Coriolanus, King Lear, Othello, Macbeth, Tempest, Hamlet, etc., thus making its trains propaganda of Shakespeare study.—Boston Transcript.

THE OLDEST MASON.

John Jamieson, Who Died Recently at Batavia, Ohio, There died recently one of the two last survivors of the war of 1812, John Jamieson, of Batavia, O Mr Jamieson was born at Lexington, Ky., on the 25th of October, 1793, and was, consequently, in his 95th year at the time of his death. His father kept a hotel at Cynthiana, Ky In 1807 the hotel was burned and shortly afterwards John Jamieson was left an orphan. When the war of 1812 broke out he enlisted a regiment of 740 men at the time of his death. He was in many battles with the British ans, and had many narrow escapes year of his service he was a spy, and often penetrated the enemy's lines.

At one time he was discovered and chased eventy or eighty miles in one day by the Indians, and killed two bloodhounds that were following his trail, and got safely into In 1818 Mr. Jamieson settled in Williams-burg, O., and married. He leaves five children and many grandchildren. His wife died about ten years ago. Since her death the old man was very anxious to go to his rest.

On May 28, 1820, John Jamieson was initiated into Clermont Social Lodge, No. 20, of Free and Accepted Masons. He continued to be an active member of the fraternity all his life, and at the day of his death was the oldest Mason in the United States. Mr. Jamieson's life spanned an important period in American history Living within five years of a century, the period of his existence covered every administration of the government from Washington to Cleve-land. He saw the United States grow from 3,000,000 to 60,000,000 of people, and its frontier moved from the Ohio river to the Pacific ocean. He saw three wars, the last the most gigantic struggle the world has ever produced. He saw a new union, broken and formed again. Mr. Jamieson died of old age. He had no visible disease, and died from clear exhaustion, and without a struggle or pain, going to sleep and passing away so quietly that the moment of his death was not perceptible. He died in the full faith of the Christian religion.

MGR. BOULAND.

He Has Left the Catholic and Propose to Jo'n the Anglican Church. A sensation has recently been produced in the religious world by the withdrawal of Mgr. Leon Bouland from the Roman Catho lie church and hisunion with the Anglican church. Mgr. Bouland was lately appointed by Pope Leo XIII to organize "Peter's peuce" in America. He has held many positions of trust by appointment from Rome, and his relations with the Pope were of a very confidential nature. The withdrawal of one of such prominence from the Roman church will doubtless create much comment both in Europe and America Mgr. Bouland in giving up his connection with the Roman Catholic church relinquishes many honors which have accrued to him. He after his name: Honorary private chamberlain of his holiness Leo XIII: honorary canon of church of Rheims ionorary canon of St. Michael Angelo, MGR. BOULAND.

Rome: commander of the Order of the Hely Sepulchre; member of the Academie des Arcades, and president general of the society of the Avocats de St. Pierre in North Mgr. Bouland has for many years been debating the propriety of taking the step which he took at last, "deliberately though sorrowfully." When he had arrived at his decision be went to New York, sought the Rev. Dr. Aberigh-Mackay, of the Anglican church, and by him was introduced to Bishops Potter and Williams. Mgr. Bouland's credentials were found to be correct, and he has written a formal request to be received into the Prot estant Episcopal church of America. Mgr. Bouland is about 40 years of age. He was educated at Paris. Having taken orders he preached eloquently and with zeal, and celebrated mass regularly as a priest in good standing in the Roman church until the day of his withdrawal.

It is claimed by those not friendly to Mgr. Bouland that his present intention to connect himself with the Episcopal church is due to the fact that, because of certain irregularities on his part, he is not in good repute with the Catholics. It is perhaps improper to state the charges made against him until they are proved, but they are very serious in their unture.

The general will be represented as standing, with his right foot slightly raised and resting upon a stone, with his sword in hand and crossed before him. The pose of the figure is easy, dignified, and out of the conventional position given to portrait statues. In the front of the pedestal will be a bronze panel, upon which will be illustrated, in low relief, some incident in the military career of Gen. panel upon which will be inscribed the bat-tles in which he participated.

A CHINESE METHODIST.

Sia Sek Ong Now in Attendance on the M. E. Conference. A prominent and interesting figure in the general conference of the Methodist Episco pal church, which is now being held in New York, is the delegate from China, Sia Sek Ong. He is the presiding elder of the church in that country. His history is a remarkable one. Born in an ancestral house, nine miles from the city of Foochow, he was taught at an early age to read diligently the Confucian books. For ten years he continued this spective disposition, the spiritual side of his nature rapidly developed. When he was 16 years old his mother suddenly died. His father's burdens were growing heavier and heavier, his brothers and his sister were too small to take care of themselves, and so he resolved to teach school in order to increase the family income. It was while engaged in this pursuit that he first heard of those who believed in Jesus. They were called Hong Kaw, i. e., adherents of doctrine. One day while on a visit to a friend's school he met a Christian His interest was excited by the talk that ensued, his heart was ready to believe, but his intellect rebelled. Then followed a long period of introspective thought. A year passed by. One day he heard an eloquent missionary preacher. Sin Sek Ong was deeply affected. But it was not until the death of his first born child that he finally

His friends and relatives gathered round and endeavored to persuade him to worship idols in behalf of the child, but he stood firm. When the child died reproaches were heaped upon him for doubting the power and efficacy of the idols. From that day he believed.

In the spring of 1862 he was received into the church. He was still a school teacher, and the knowledge that he had adopted Christianity proved very detrimental to his interests. He became the object of endless persecutions. His own family became his oitterest enemies. His neighbors threatened to confiscate his property and turn him from his home. Yet all this time he continued to preach the doctrines of Christianity whenever he found an opportunity. In the autumn of 1866 he was appointed to the Hok-chiang circuit. In 1869 sent out to travel the Hok-chiang district.

While engaged in performing this duty his greatest triumph of his life. It had been his ambition for some time to make the church to take the initiative step. He withdrew from the Chinese mission's pay list and began to lead the church members to support their preachers. In the spring of 1870 be was appointed to hold the quarterly meeting

The season was rainy. It is difficult to conceive of the poverty and misery of the little congregation. The chapel was very small, had a wet mud floor, and no ventilation except such as the door afforded. Yet even this dismal place was preferable to the wretched houses that served as homes for the church members. Consequently they gathered together in the chapel to smoke and chat. It was in this place that Sia Sek Ong says he had a vision akin to that which came to Saul of Tarsus.

without the aid of a foreign dollar. He has proved that the missionary churches abroad can be made self supporting, and may have many interesting things to say upon the subject at the present conference. Sia Sek Ong s a man of gentle manners, spiritual mind and dignified bearing. His conversation is subdued and simple, but when speaking before an assemblage he bursts forth into noble flights of oratory. Among Methodists he is considered the greatest of Chinese orators. But listen to his own estimate of himself: "I think of myself as a manikin, a mere image of wood which moves only by the power of a living hand."

The New Minister to Liberia. Ezekiel E. Smith, a citizen of North Carolina, has been named minister to Liberia by President Cleveland. Mr. Smith was born a slave in Duplin county, N. C., in 1852. When he was 9 years of age he could read and write. At 14 he began to work at the cooper's trade at Wilmington. For three years he continued at this work, attending well. In 1870 he began to teach in the North Carolina free public schools. Five years later be entered Shaw uni-, versity and was there graduated in

In 1883 he was elected by the state board of education principal of the state normal school at Payetteville, N. C. Mr. Smith was one of the originators of the North Carolina Industrial association, at Raleigh. He also established and was editor and proprietor of The Carolina Enterprise, published at Goldsboro. In 1880 he was comnissioned as major of the Fourth battalion state guard. He was secretary of the Colored Baptist state convention from 1876 to 1883.

It is injurious to rub the eyes while inflamed by the cutting winter winds and and the dust raised thereby, and equally so to bathe them and go out immediately again in the air, as then there is danger of catching a cold. A prominent optician declares that most of the eye troubles at this season are caused by imprudence in rubbing or bathing. He also says that in rubbing the eyes the tear line from the outside to the nose should be followed. though the majority pass the fingers from the inside out, which, he asserts, affects the sight and produces crows' feet. A Moonless Month.

The month of February, 1866, was in one respect the most remarkable in the world's history. It had no full moon. January had two full moons and so had March, but February had none.
