Mr. Bilberry Keeps House. BY ELLA A. COLUMBUS. Mr. Bilberry prided himself on being a methodical man, and was about as consistent in general.

ought to have a certain number of minutes allotted for each duty to be performed, and not allow one duty to interfere with another. Instead of doing this, they will spend half their time crimping their hair, making worsted cats and dogs, and in consequence, the housework must be hurriedly performed.

The rocking had a soothing effect, but was not an entire success. "Ma always sings when she rocks me."

On one point, however, Mr. Bilberry and his wife both agreed, and that was that their little daughter should be named Betsy Jane, in honor of a rich aunt, from whom they had great expectations.

All these thoughts passed through the mind of Mr. Bilberry. At the same time, there were the Browns, who would be only too delighted to be called upon to alleviate dear Aunt Betsy's neuralgia, in view of the "prospects" before her.

Mr. Bilberry decided the point for her by saying, with a lofty wave of the hand, "You must go immediately, my dear. Give yourself no uneasiness about the children or myself. I shall not go to the office today. I shall get whatever I need from the butcher's boy, and I shall buy some bread, and the butcher's boy will be here, and I can get whatever I need from the butcher's boy."

Bilberry, on the contrary, was secretly elated. He had a feeling deep in his heart that he would be able to give his wife a few "points" on her return.

When a man, he reasoned, make a great fuss over washing a few dishes, and getting a little coffee. They must often have a hired girl to help them, and even then one will hear them complain of the amount of work to be done.

Point number one for Mrs. B. If women would only study these little places where they could economize, a man's wages would support them.

He hadn't mopped up the water with his handkerchief, while each one was trying to tell how it happened.

"Ma always sings when she rocks me." Here was a dilemma! He could think of nothing except "Tish, My Bubby, Tish and Slumber," but his grandmother used doubtfully, grave doubts about his ability to render it acceptably.

"How can I sing, pa?" "Oh, a long time ago, when I was a little boy." "Did you mother sing that to you?" "My grandmother used to."

He had just pinned it nicely around him, when the baker's boy arrived with the bread. The lad bustled took his leave, trying to suppress a giggle as he went.

He searched around a little while and failed to find one. He spied the one he wanted, and he was the very thing!

He vaguely felt that it needed some kind of seasoning, so he salted it. This made matters worse, for he added too much. The steak was so tough that they gave it up in despair. There was no resource but the bread.

"Pa, my plate is all greasy," said Thomas Jefferson. "The steak, and eat your dinner." Mr. Bilberry spoke rather sharply.

"I don't like greasy plates! I can't help being particular, ma says I can't. She says I take it from the Bilberys." "The dishes were washed in more cold water. In Mr. B.'s researches in the pantry, he found a pitcher of milk.

"Ma always braids my hair pretty in the afternoon, and puts a clean dress on me," exclaimed Betsy Jane. "I'll try to do it for you, ma, when you get home."

the loves of bread in the pantry, and never told Mr. Bilberry that she gave eight of them to Mrs. McCarty, the washerwoman, who keeps a "nice, swate little pig."—Waverley Magazine.

Don't Undervalue the Boy. Too many make their boys feel that they are little or no account while they are boys.

Give him tools, and let him find out whether he has got any mechanical taste or not. Do not discourage him as parents are apt to do, by saying, "Oh, it is no use for you to try to do anything with tools. I never had any success in my own life."

Space is so valuable to New York merchants, and particularly those engaged in the dry goods trade, that they prefer purchasing the packing boxes to which they attach the price or lot, making them upon their own premises.

When Grant was engaged in writing his memoirs, the Century Company, which had been publishing some of his war articles in the Century magazine, offered him $10,000 for the manuscript of his book.

A young doctor who has his office in a building on State street, was invited to rap at his door on a recent afternoon. He was in negligee attire and was smoking a cigarette.

It is not generally known that the rental rate of a woodcock is good a barometer as any we have today. While in the country a short time ago the writer had occasion to travel through the lower part of Berks.

To accomplish this feat requires the following preparation: To first soak an egg in vinegar, and in time its shell will become quite soft so that it may be extended lengthwise without breaking; then insert it into the neck of a bottle, and on pouring cold water over it, it will assume its former shape and hardness.

In the charge of the Six Hundred, immortalized in song as good as the loss in killed was over 113. There were fourteen Union regiments and twenty-three Confederates which lost double that per cent. in an action.

It is gratifying to learn that in some instances the officers of the law have taken hold of the matter. In New York many of the peddlers who peddle in this way offered gifts to purchasers of their packages have recently been arrested upon indictments for lottery swindling.
