BY GEORGE P. ANDERSON.

CONCLUDED. He narrated his idyl to be sure, while eating a sausage and black bread, which he had purchased at a station, but there were tears in his eyes all the same. He had loved and been loved by a young lady belonging to a family who could write before their name, and who cast her off when she insisted on marrying beneath her. The two had been very happy together, and although her hushand was poor when she accepted him, before a decade had elapsed he surrounded her with every comfort and with such luxuries as suited their simple tastes. "She was an angel," sighed Herr Holdeniss. "The most wonderful combination of intellect and sweetness. Ach, Gott! to hear her repeat Schiller Goethe was music. She could make and such coffee as I shall never drink again, and the real recipe for creamcabbage died with her-it died with her!"

And Herr Holdeniss gulped down a sigh and his last bit of sausage to-

There was one of the deceased lady's relatives who had not deserted her, he went on to say—a sister a few years older than himself. This sister had married a rich old man with a title, who had treated her very ill; but he had a long time dead, and his widow now lived contentedly at her country seat a few miles from Nuremburg. Aunt Caroline, Frau von Kleuze, was very fond of her niece. It was to her the young lady had gone this morning; and Herr Holdeniss looked vexed and amused again as he added: "But whether this time she will not have had to pass a bad half-hour—the Aunt Caroline is very particular." Then he checked himself in the most provoking manner, and began to talk of the celebrated cities he had visited, to the great exasperation of Max, until he secretly cursed those places and all connected with them. At length the train puffed into the Nuremburg station. Max had indulged the mad hope that his new friend might ask him to go out with him to Ledenthal. But no! The friend expressed renewed pleasure at the acquaintance; learned at what hotel Max was to put up; said he should call if he stopped over the next day, but gave no hint that a visit on Max's part would be agreeable to himself or the mistress of Ledenthal. I regret to say that Max internally called him an old, sausage gobbling German fox!" Even elegant young men can be very inelegant in their reflections under sufficient cause for irritation.

Max, being close to the door? got of the carriage first. As Herr Holdeniss was descending his foot slipped and he would have fallen but for his companion's timely aid. As it was, the old gentleman had twisted his ankle sufficiently to make the pain very severe for a few moments, and he uttered numerous groans, interspersed with sundry German oaths, each a yard

When he grew quieter Max said: "Take my arm and give me your traveling.bag. Lean on me—so. That's right."

They passed through the station and out upon the broad grass-plot, decorated with flowers and shrubs, and sat down on a bench to rest for a few mo-

"I am better now," said Herr Holdeniss. "I believe I'll take a turn or two on the turf—that will putmy ankle straight.' If the venerable parent's heart wasn't harder than a rhinocerous hide. Max thought, it would soften under his tender attentions, and he aided the old gentleman in his little promenade with almost as much solicitude and care as a mother would her lame child. But in spite of all this he received no invitation to Ledenthal, and that was what the sly young man was after. "A friend of mine lives quite near the station, said Holdeniss. "I muststop and speak with him. 'I shall walk to his house. Good by! A thousand, thousand thanks. I am charmed to have met you, Adieu, adieu!" He was gone, and Max, instead of seeking a cab, strolled away to the further end of the lawn and sat down under a linden tree and upbraided fate and fathers, and then fell to dreaming of those blue eyes that had looked so gratefully at him earlier in the day. He vowed he would see them again, and soon, too, in spite of parent or aunt Caroline, either.

Sooner than he imagined. He was roused by the rustle of a woman's dress, looked up and started to his feet, for there, only a few paces away, was the lovely girl in the Tyrolese hat and the dark green dress, and she was more lovely than ever as she half paused and glanced toward him with a smile at once embarrassed and mis-

"Fraulein Lina!" he exclaimed in a tone of delight, and he hurried toward her, so bewildered by this unexpected bliss that he hardly knew what he said or did. "You here? You have not gone out to your aunt's, at Leden-"Not yet," she replied, smiling and lushing, "My courage failed—I was blushing, afraid she would scold me, though she never does. So I determined to wait and go by the post-carriage that leaves after this train comes in. I saw you and papa—where has papa gone?" This address, speaking as if to a person whom she knew, completed

Max's bewilderment, equal though he usually was to any emergency; and to chief and embarrassment.

"Frightened!" she repeated with a wave of her hand, as if brushing off some troublesome insect. "Frightened –of vou?" It seemed to Max as if he must be in some horrible nightmare. This could not be real. "Fraulein Lina!" he repeated. "How dare you!" she cried. Max had rather a hot temper of his own, and this conduct stiried it somewhat, even amid his confusion. "My errand must be my excuse for this intrusion." he said, drawing himself up to his fullest height, and looking very stately, though he trembled so that his grandeur was a little marred. "It was necessary that I should come -I could not send. I came to your father—to bring to your father—' "Now, then — oh, Heaven!" cried Fraulein Lina, her eyes blazing more hotly than before. Then she regarded him from head to foot, and added: "And it is necessary for me to tell you that I find your coming uncalled forindecent-yes! And I spoke graciously to you at the station. I will never forgive myself-I-oh, what is your visit to me that I should even be angry? My father you came to see-my father-well, then, you shall. I will call him!"

"Fraulein Lina!" he broke in, interrupting the passionate words. "I will call him; do you wait here," she said imperiously.

She darted out of the arbor and up the terrace steps; and as he, mechani-cally following, reached them, she fied through one of the open doors and disappeared down the corridor. Max dropped into the Inearest chair and sat there utterly confounded, while a new thought disturbed his brain, so unutterably terrible that his anger was lost in pity.

and now here, and her father's evident anxiety to follow!" He was interrupted by a voice calling: "Lina, Lina! Whom were you talkin Calcutta one of a party of gentle-men opposite me said to me: "You are a stranger here I see." "Yes but, how did you know it?" (for there was

ing to? What did—

It was Herr Holdeniss emerging from an open door lower down the terrace. He was rubbing his hands and yawning in a fashion that showed he had just wakened from a nap. He caught sight of the visitor and ex-

"Max Ingersoll, or am I asleep still?"
"Yes, it is I," said Max, coming forward and trying to compose himself. "I beg your pardon for intruding, but I found your letter case on the station lawn, so I thought it best to bring it out myself at once." "How kind of you-how thoughtful!" cried the old gentieman; "and I did not even know I had lost it-full of important papers, too. What abominable carelessness on my part."

"I am very glad I happened to see it.
I will not disturb your siesta further," said Max, with more than Castilian stateness.

"What the deuce! You don't mean to fly off in that fashion," said Hold-eniss catching his arm. "I'll tell you a secret. My sister-in-law is the best creature in the world, but crotchety. knew when I told her about you she would invite you; but since you are here, do wait. I'll see her and ex-"No, no, thanks," said Max. "You must-you shall! And Lina must thank you-" "Oh, there is no need of that," broke in Max. "I must tell you that just after you left the station I saw your daughter. We spoke, and she was very civil. I met her now, as I came in. I can't imagine how I have offended her. I could not, in the least, comprehend the extraordinary things she told me—' Herr Holdeniss interrupted.

"Told you? That was odd for her to do. I suppose you'd said I knew your uncle, and so she felt acquainted. I've had no time to mention you. Well, well, no wonder she is upset and vexed. So she told you?" "Why, the old man is mad too," said Max to himself.

"And women are such incomprehensible creatures," pursued Herr Holdeniss. "Since she has spoken I'd like to tell you the whole. You see, Germanlike, I thought it my duty to arrange a marriage for her. My old friend Peter Dornheim, had a son in England. knew him a little; a handsome fellow, money, good business. I'd no mind to buy my girl a title, and a husband who would despise her and me."

"Hopelessly mad," thought Max. "So when Peter and I had settled matters, I told Lina. That's nearly a month ago," continued the father. "She was very rebellious, vowed she should detest the man, but I thought that would wear off. Well, the fellow did not send a photograph, but Peter Dornheim said it was all right— "Oh. I must tell you that you misunderstood me. Fraulein Lina spoke of none of these things." Max broke in. "No, I suppose she hated to give the details," said Holdeniss, and was deaf when Max tried to explain. "But this morning I got a telegram from the young chap to say that he would be at my house at ten o'clock. I told Lina, and the monkey just put on her hat and ran off here to her aunt." he concluded, laughing heartily. "Oh!" ejaculated Max.

"Yes, but she needn't have been so silly. The fellow came to confide a secret. He was married already. Some low match. He is afraid to tell his father yet. He wanted me to take the blame of the breaking off of the proposed alliance. He admitted he ought not to have waited so long to tell me. But I was rather sorry for him, after

"Oh!" was all Max could say. "But this is the odd part. I told Lina when I got here, and it seems, though she professed to be so averse and ran away this morning to escape seeing young Dornheim, that she must have been weaving a little romance. for she turned pale and shut herself up in her room. Hush! here she comes. But when Lina saw Max she started back, and stammered out that she thought her father was alone. Don't run away, Lina," said Herr Holdeniss. "I want to introduce my friend." "Your friend!" exclaimed Lina, with a scornful laugh. "Oh, there is no necessity for an introduction. Mr. August Dornheim and I have already met "August Dornheim? What the deuce!" cried her father. This is a friend of mine, Mr. Max Ingersoll." Lina's embarassment was, pitiful to see, but she behaved very bravely. She walked up to Max and extended her hand.

"I beg your pardon," said she; "you must have thought me crazy. But I. saw you with papa, and you called me by my Christian name; my mistake was quite natural." "Quite, said Max in delight. "But I'm glad I'm not Herr Dornheim, for I judge you don't like him." "I never saw him," said Lina, recov ering her dignity.

"To own the truth, Lina, I thought you had told Herr Ingersoll, so I have let it all out." said her father. "Papa," cried Lina, half vexed, nalf laughing. "Well, now, let us never mention the odious, selfish man's name again." "What the deuce!" cried her father. "But so, why have you been fretting, or cross, ever since I told you he was married? And by the way, when you met Ingersoll at the station thought he was August Dornheim. It's lucky you didn't snatch him."

"Oh, you hadn't told her then," exclaimed Ingersoll, quickly, before he knew that he was thinking aloud. Lina's intolerable confusion, as she ran back into the house on a pretence of calling her aunt, was a confession which Max dared not then admit to himself he understood, but which he afterward did: it was a confession that mistaking him for the proposed bridegroom, she had felt that running away to escape him had been a silly thing to

Max stayed a month at Nuremburg, instead of the three days he had expected, and before the enchanted weeks ended, such mystery as there was had been fully cleared up.

Max had confided to Lina that he fell in love with her at first sight, and Lina had admitted that when she saw him crossing the station lawn with her father she recognized that her youth had found a hero to realize its dreams. The only mistake she made was in the hero's name, but even intuition must stop somewhere.

We can't put them out of the church for that alone. But the young men, we insist, must not put this stumbling block in their way."

Slavery of India. Let me give some facts which will illustrate my thoughts. At table d'hote had not been talking.) "Because," he replied, "you say please to that servant of yours and thank him when he serves you. We never do that. They can't understand it." I laughed and told him we had a myth in America. It was a tradition of George Washington, who lifted his hat to a poor negro because he could not be outdone in politeness by a slave. He rejoined: "That will do in America, but not in India; it would soon ruin the servants. They are a lot of niggers and have to be treated as such!" I told him these "niggers," as he called them, were learning something, and were already demanding a participation in the making of laws, and that the English ought to try to elevate rather than repress them into a lot of slaves. The companions of this gentleman said nothing but seemed to approve of what he said. Again: I visited a merchant's office, also in Calcutta, to inspect some shawls to be shown us by some Hindoos. I bought a small ring shawl, and finding I had left my wallett in my room, told the native he could go with me to the hotel for the pay. The proprietor, an old resident, saw me to the door. I got into my cab, inviting the native to a seat by my side. This he was about to do when my friend imperiously motioned him to mount with the driver, saying: "We never let those fellows ride with us." Now, this Hindoo was a man of elegant manners, clean, and bright, and I was told he was rich. But it would not do for him to ride inside with a white man; it would spoil him and others. He had or even ordered, in that tone which softens an order into a request. It was always an order, and of the most dictatorial kind; an order rarely used in old slave days in America, except on the cotton plantations, and scarcely ever in Kentucky or Virginia. I was speaking in Cevlon with some resident English of the beautiful little bullocks and the pretty carts, and of the ease with which they could be ready, and expressed my surprise that I had not seen them used by the foreign residents. They all said that it was a pity that the foreigners could not use them, they were so cheap, convenient and pretty; but that they were used by the Cingalese and, therefore, it would not do for the governing classes to be seen in them; and yet the Cingalese

I did not while in India see a single instance of a free, friendly mingling of white and native people except among the high born natives and the rulers at grand entertainments. I saw no native and Englishman in what might be called a friendly and equal intercourse, and from what I could learn from the English residents there is no such thing as familiarity between the Europeans and natives, and the majority say it is right; that these latter are a conquered people and should be treated as such.—Carter Harrison's Peach Growing on the Blue Ridge.

The eastern shore will soon have a ival in the peach trade in Western Maryland and Pennsylvania. Until recently the land on the side of the Blue ridge Mountains at Edgemont, Washington Co., Md., on the Western Maryland Railroad, and the western and southern slopes, had very little value for farming purposes. The soil is a light shade, mixed with white sandstone. Every small farmer had his patch of fruit trees and garden berries in perfection, but no cne realized until recently that there was horticultural wealth on a large scale in this mountain region. Fruit growing has now become the chief industry.

Immense quantities of peaches and grapes are shipped in season to the astern markets, and from their size, and color and superior flavor bring the highest prices. Within the last year over 100,000 peach trees have been planted in this region, two farmers alone planting 20,000 each. One farmer iear Edgemont has 400 acres planted in peach trees, and thirty-five acres of young bearing trees of fine quality of peaches were recently leased for four vears to an eastern dealer for $9.000.

There is one peculiarity about mountain peaches not to be found about those elsewhere. When peach crops fail in other sections of the country the most delicious varieties are obtained in great quantities in the Blue Ridge Mountains. Up to the present time there are no canning establishments in the neighborhood; but during the last five years evaporators were erected each with a capacity of drying shipments of fruit from Edgemont and and Blue Ridge Summit are made by the Western Maryland Railroad to all sections of the country. A few of the smaller varieties ripen in July, but they are perfection in August. -- Bnlti-

There is a peculiarity which Vienna shares in common with all Austrian towns. At ten o'clock the streets are deserted. Scarcely will you meet one solitary soul. A law authorizes the portiere or concierge to levy a tax of ten kreutzers, called the Spergeld, on any person leaving or entering the house after that hour. Thus this Spergeld obliges you, when you are invited to a party, to pay ten kreutzers entering your host's house, the same when you leave it, and the same on reentering your own. This Spergeld gives rise to some curious fashions. Thus the theater and opera begins early, and the performance is timed to end at a quarter before ten. If it lasts longer nearly the whole audience rises clubs are interrupted. It grows into such an accepted fact that, except under exceptional circumstances, you do not think of incurring the debt.

Here is a puzzle for the school children to figure out and is worth trying. A captain crossing one of the great lakes with a small boat, had 30 men on board, 15 of whom were negroes. A storm overtook them and they were likely to be lost. Finally they decided that 15 should be thrown overboard to lighten the boat, and perhaps save the remainder. They asked the captain to pick out those who were to remain on board. The captain placed the 30 men in a ring and told them he would count around the ring throwing out every ninth man until only 15 were left. How did he mix the negroes and white men so as to throw over a negro every time. Cut 15 pieces of white paper and 15 of brown and figure it was shown by many ingenious tricks, one of which I will mention. Father had a large barn, and on one side was a shed in which we kept the sheep. In one side of the barn, next to the shed, there was a large oat bin in which we had several hundred bushels of oats. At various times, when we were not at the barn, we could hear a peculiar knock, knock, knock, in the shed. We did not pay any attention to it at first; but, as the noise continued, we wondered what it could be. We tried in various ways to find out, but failed. One morning, about four o'clock, father rose, and hearing the noise set about to solve the mystery, and, to the satisfaction of all, succeeded. He walked very slowly and carefully to the barn, and stooped down and peeped under the door before the sheep were aware of it. He saw the sheep referred to, which had long horns, standing beside the oat bin, with its tongue

In the Maine election the official figures give the Republicans 79,513 votes, or 5,474 more than Garfield received in 1880; 7,797 more than Blaine received in 1884, and 1,784 more than Robie received in the same year. The Democratic vote last week was 61,018, or not as many by 4,153 as Hancock received in 1880.

The democrats at their convention in Dowagiac last Thursday, nominated George L. Yaple, as their candidate for Congress, notwithstanding his repeated protests that he was physically unable to make the canvass. We trust the democrats in this vicinity will not attempt to deny that he is a free trader. He has never made a canvass upon any other issue, and that as clear cut free trade as it is possible to find.

Does any Democrat think a northern precinct could be carried for his party by the some methods as were used to cary Pulaski county, Arkansas, at the election held there three weeks ago, by stealing the ballot boxes, without some one going to State Prison and a new election being held? Such methods are distinctly democratic and

A successful wool manufacturer of Michigan writes as follows:

"To make the $44,000,000 worth of woolens imported last year would employ 293 woolen mills with 100 hands each"—in all 29,300 home workers. He is opposed to free wool and says: "Why not raise all the wool we want at home? We have the land and the people could do it with proper protec-

The partnership between the democrats and prohibitionists was pretty well demonstrated at Durand, Ill., where a joint meeting was held, and speakers vied with each other in their abuse of the republican party. Following is a copy of the hand bill advertising the meeting:

"Durand Democrats and Prohibitionists will hold a joint meeting at the town hall, Saturday, September, 8th. Music will be furnished by the Prohibition Glee Clubs of Rockford, and the Durand Brass Band. The Cleveland and Thurman drum corps of Rockford, the prize club of Winnebago county will be present. Speaking by Maj. N. C. Warner, J. W. Hunt of Rockford, and others. Everybody come and listen to the discussion of the issues of the day. Special train, fare for the round trip, 70 cents."

Wm. E. Curtis, in a letter, to the Chicago News, Monday, from New York, says the democrats have given up all hope of carrying that state. Without New York there is no possibility of Cleveland's election. The republicans have given up all hope of the democrats carrying any northern state this trip. All prospects being that Cleveland and Thurman will receive just 153 electoral votes. It is a sorry predicament for them but they have no one to blame for it but their own party. No effort will be made to overcome the majority they received by the Little Rock, Arkansas, method. as that plan is so strongly in the sympathy of that section that no punishment for it appears possible, and about the only thing practicable is to see that the party never reap another national victory by Arkansas tactics.

Keep the woolen mills at home busy and the market for wool is good; stop those mills and the home market ends; there is none in other lands and our great wool industry dies with a loss of at least $200,000,000 to the wool growers of this country. Had we made at home the $44,000.-000 worth of woolens imported last year and raised the wool here, it would have called on our own wool growers for the fleeces of about twelve million

Each medal is attached to a short silk ribbon, with an eagle fastening, and the other end of the rib bon is provided with a pin. The medals are large and heavy, two of gold for the owners of the tug, Charles Moll-hagen and August Kuehn, and seven of silver for the others. Each medal is properly inscribed with the name and date and occasion of the heroism, with illustrations of heroic life-saving acts embossed on either side, and the inscription around the edge. "In testimony of heroic deeds in saving life from the perils of the sea." Each occupies a handsome plush case. The gold medals are worth at least $100 each.—Detroit News.

A Vivid Picture.

It seems impossible that the names of Benjamin Harrison and Grover Cleveland should be coupled in a contest for the presidency of the United States without provoking a comparison of the lives and services of the two men in that dark hour when the air was all aglow with the flash of arms and the fire of battle to preserve the constitution and make it possible for a country to exist and a president be required for the United States in this year of 1888.

Dull indeed must be the magination which would not recall the one amid the terrors of battle and the other in the selfish security of home. But it remained for such a genius as that of Lewis Hanback to draw a true and living picture of contrast, which he did when called out for an impromptu address before our late State Convention. It was a sweltering day, the great hall was filled with a mass of impatient suffering humanity, waiting for the report of committees. Mr. Hanback had failed to impress his audience, and some one called out "time." The word was an inspiration, and the following wonderful words fell thick and fast from the burning tongue of the true

As the speaker rested, the silence of death reigned in that great audience. So vivid and startling was the picture that it required minutes to compre hend its purport and its full force. Then there went up an involuntary shout of applause. Hats and caps went high in the air by staid sober men, handkerchiefs, parasols and wraps joined them from the hands of mothers and daughters in the galleries, and full ten minutes were required to bring quiet when the speaker closed with the following grand and impressive words:

O, men of America! Proud of your country, of the glory of its past, and of its promise for the future; O, citizens of this grand state, for whom will you vote? For him who won his star at Peach Tree Creek, or for him who won the drinks at Buffalo?-Ottawa (Kan.) Republican.

An observer who saw in the democrat procession in Niles, Friday night, a banner inscribed, "We are slaves to monopoly," carried by two Buchanan democrats who were too full to know with positive assurance, whether they were afoot or horseback, remarks that he knew they must be slaves to something but never heard it called by that name before.

From time to time the council have had a bill stuck under their noses for settlement, and the matter having been left to the city attorney, he reported "no cause of action," and consequently little or no attention has been paid to the matter. Whether it is a case of blackmail or not, at this present time cannot be 1 told.—Niles Star, Saturday.

GOV. C. G. LUCE.

Will address the citizens of Buchanan and vicinity on the political issues of the day, at Buchanan, on our distinguished Governor.

THERE is a place at the corner of Detroit and Third streets, that needs the attention of the street committee before some one is upset in the ditch and the village have a neck to pay for. We shall need our cash to secure the new railroad, and do not want any broken necks on our hands at this time.

DON'T forget the meeting tomorrow afternoon, which is most likely to determine whether Buchanan wants a North and South railroad or not. Some of those whose property is likely to be crossed by the road have expressed a willingness to donate the way through their property.

Some of those who live near the river bridge, enter protest against such salvation army meetings as was held in the street at that place, at a late hour Monday night. While the praying was done by a member, the army is in no wise responsible for the meeting, but it is due to some drunken toughs of both sexes, whose proper place is in state prison.

The great improvement that was to be made in the cemetery, the promise of which brought a good attendance to a concert, many of whom would not have attended but for the promise, will not be done this Fall, it being too late. Next Spring it will have been forgotten and those who do not now think so, become fully convinced that there was never any serious intention to invest the proceeds of the concert in that manner.

In his letter of acceptance Gen. Fisk says: "I shall bear with glad heart and reverent hands, the only party standard on which is inscribed. For God. Home, and Native Land.' The standard of the only party which recognizes God as the source of government, and would defend His holy day from desecration."

How do the followers of this holier than thou party reconcile this declaration with the holding of a political meeting on the Sabbath, or with their action in taking down and packing up their tent and all its fixtures, on last Sunday afternoon. Matthew 23, 27 and 28 would be a good text for such to study.

Clinton Bliss, Clyde Valentine, Executive Com. Orrin Nash, Walter Noble,

An invitation is extended to every Republican not over thirty years of age to join the club. A meeting will be held Saturday evening to make arrangements for Tuesday, and this will be a good time to join.

MONDAY the republicans had a mass meeting in Cassopolis, and in the evening a torchlight procession, which was headed by P. D. Beckwith. of Dowagiac, who carried a torch and pretended to be as good a republican as the rest of them. The report next morning had a peculiar effect. Republicans were jubilant, and the democrats tried hard to explain that it was perfectly natural that a manufacturer should be a republican. Some even went so far as to credit his action to the attraction the democrats are pleased to term free whisky, but the evening brought a letter stating that he did it for advertising purposes, and that he is still a democrat. Whether he be a democrat or republican he has certainly succeeded in advertising himself. The republicans feel considerably like unto the boy who had caught a buzzard by the tail and when he reached to take the critter by the neck the tail feathers pulled out and the bird flew.

THE Buchanan RECORD does not like the article relative to the Berrien County Fire Insurance Association being run by republicans .- Niles Mir-

The only trouble with the Mirror's article is, it is an unwarranted tirade of-abuse of the officers of that institution, without any reason whatever, excepting that the democratic ring that used to run the association was in the habit of giving the Mirror the printing of the association, at rates much above what was offered by other offices. making a political boodle of it, and that has been stopped. The company is certainly as reasonable as any one in the town can expect, and if we do not do that much it will appear at once as if we do not want the road at any price. THE Prohibitionists had their tent meeting on the Ross corner, Saturday and Sunday. The first speech was by Mr. Comings, of St. Joseph, the candidate for Congress. He scored both parties, but explained that he struck hardest at the Republicans, because, they pretended to favor temperance legislation and the Democrats did not. A prominent Democrat in Niles gives a better reason, which is, that during the canvass in 1884 the democrats put up a boodle to run the prohibition campaign, and that Comings had $10 a speech for his services, and that a simitar fund had been raised this year. He claims to have obtained his knowledge by having put up some of the boodle himself. Of course this might not be the most reliable evidence, and Mr. Comings has the benefit of the doubt. Another remark of Mr. Comings was that the Republican platform says that rather than give up any part of the protective system the party advocates free whisky at twenty-five cents a gallon. If any one can find anything in the Republican platform that says that to many in this vicinity: TOPEKA, Kan., Sept. 25.—George S. Elwood, a cattle man at Greenleaf, shot John D. Wilson, an auctioneer, through the head with a revolver, this morning, his victim dying within an hour afterward. They had quarreled a few days ago over some mortgaged property sold by Wilson, but to-day's shooting was wholly unprovoked. Elwood was arrested.

"THE Democrats had a hilarious time at their Cleveland and Thurman pole raising at Stell's Corners on Wedothers were present and made speeches. Considerable beer was also on hand and it is said it flowed so freely that several present got into a fight and a general rough time followed. It isn't expected, however, that Geo. F. Comings will take up more than a column in his third-party paper to con-demn such disgraceful proceedings in the ranks of his free-trade ally, Democracy."—St. Joe Herald.

him injustice. Especially will you do so if you think him a fool. Make your most friendly advances to him, and say the kindest and most reassuring things that suggest themselves to you, and he will probably look you steadily in the eye with no more expression than there is in a wooden horse and say: "No sabe." Yet he very likely knows English quite well enough to understand all you are saying. Why does he pretend not to? Because he suspects antagonism in the white man, and is cunning enough to retain every advantage. Never has the large Chineso population of

New York been so stirred from its inmost depths as now. John reads the papers and knows that his interests are debated in congress, he understands that his countrymen are already prohibited from joining him in America, and the question now is: will be some morning be himself invited to return to the Celestial empire? He does not feel himself competent to grapple with this conundrum. He prefers to carry it to one who he thinks should know all about it, and who can—and if properly approached, will—give him authoritatively warning, consolation or reassurance. That one is the great Quong-Tai-Gong, or Quong-He-Say-Gong, the Chineso Deity. Both titles belong to him. The irreverent American shortens his name down to "Joss." Before his altars in the two temples that Chinese New York maintains, there has been, since the Chinese question was taken up by congress, an unwonted amount of devout sacrificing of joss sticks and anxious consultation of the divining strips of bamboo.

There is no hour at which the devout Chinese worshiper may not approach the shrine with confidence that Quong-Tai-Gong is present in spirit to receive his adoration, and that a priest will be ready to aid him, if desired, in his questioning of the future. The manner of that questioning is very interesting. Let us observe it as conducted in the principal temple, that on the third floor of No.

10 Chatham square, New York.

It is desirable, but not absolutely necessary, that the shrine should be in the north of the temple, and the ever burning flame, symbolic of the light of immortality, in the south. That, however, is not practicable here. Yielding to the architectural necessities of the situation, the figure of Quong-Tai-Gong sits in the west. About him is a wondrous mass of carved, gilded and painted wood work, seemingly merely docorative, but actually full of the deepest symbolic significance, in every bough, and leaf, and tiny figure of bird, beast and fish. Before him is a great high table bearing bronze and china bowls filled with sand, emblematic dragons of bronze and other objects. To the right, a little in front, a bowl of sand is placed upon the top of a stove. To the left, a little less advanced, upon the floor and underneath a table is another bowl of sand. Before the center of the shrine, at a little the light of immortality.

Either from smiling Muy Bok in the store below, or from a priest in the temple, the worshiper supplies himself with "joss sticks." They are very slender splinters of bamboo, about a foot long, three-quarters of their length coated thickly with a peculiarly fragrant incense composition, and are done up in red paper sheaths, gorgeous with fire-cracker lingo printed in gold. Twenty-five cents buys ten packages of them, from 170

Removing the papers, the worshiper lights the whole bunch at once, either by the me of a lamp on the altar, or with a match, and when they are well started ex-tinguishes their blaze, not with his breath, but by a quick downward motion. The end of each stick remains a glowing spark, send-ing up a thin blue line of perfumed smoke. "All good things are three," says an old German proverb. So believes the Chinaman. Three is, with him, a sacred number. Its duad-six-is of doubled potency. Fo nine he has no especial reverence, and, in-deed, the offering of nine joss sticks in either of the sacrificial bowls, it is well understood is not approved by the Deity. If six are not enough to give full expression to the worshiper's earnestness of feeling, let him go to the extent of twelve, but six are generally

AT HIS DEVOTIONS.

In the bowl of sand upon the stove, to the left as one faces the altar, the worshiper plants six of the slowly burning sticks. Those are in the nature of a sacrifice to promote domestic or household happiness. Then six are stuck in the great bronze bowl before the figure representing the Deity. Those are deemed quite enough and three are "a per purely devotional. There are three other bowls, somewhat smaller, on the altar near to the large one. The first to the left is for the past, contrition and prayer for pardon; the second, in the middle, is of the present, devotional and personal thanksgiving; the third, to the right, belongs to the future, and signifies prayer and hope. In each of these six sticks are placed. Four more bowls, on the corners of the table, symbolize the universal sovereignty of the Deity over all the carth, and in each six glowing sparks of incense are thrust. Finally, if the worshiper has any idea of going into a game of "fan-tan." making a play in the Chinese lottery, starting a new busi ness, or doing anything else in which he seeks fortune, he puts half a dozen sticks in the bowl on the floor under the table, on the right, as a propitiatory offering to the demons who govern luck. These dispositions may be modified according to circumstances. If the devotee is cious, for instance, that his past has been such as Joss cannot consistently approve of without an unusual amount of influence is brought to bear, he plants an extra number of sticks—twelve, or perhaps eighteen, or twenty-four—in the left bowl upon the altar; but if he thinks that he has done about as nearly right as he knew how he wastes no extra joss sticks upon a past that he has no reason to be ashamed of, but plants the greater number in the right hand bowl. If, after thus dividing them all around, he has any left over, he sticks them into the great central bowl and those on the corners.

The joss sticks all being thus placed properly, he takes his position facing the shrine, upon a prayer rug spread before the altar. If in great trouble, afflicted by deep grief or conscious of needing to give extrem phasis to his prayers for pardon or blessing, he may fall upon his hands and knees and touch his forehead to the floor three, five, seven, nine, eleven or thirteen times, according as the momentousness of the occasion may seem to him to demand. Thirteen, by the way, is no unlucky number among the Chinese; quite the contrary.

Ordinarily, however, it suffices that he shall stand up and, white he mentally repeats his prayers, makes his genuflexions as follows: Raising his hands, with the open palms turned downward, to his forehead, he bows very low, at the same time letting his hands fall with a graceful downward and RISES HIGHER AND HIGHER. Next, he crosses his arms upon his breast, with the outstretched fingers almost touching the opposite shoulders, and so bows three times. Then he returns to the first position and bows three times more in the original way. After that he may, or may not, according to his own knowledge of his spiritual requirements, bow twice more in the second fashion and perhaps twice again as at first.

While he is doing all this he is mentally praying, either putting special petitions suited to his requirements before the Deity for consideration, or repeating one or more of the 200 formulated prayers prescribed by the priests, many of them said to be far more ancient than the Christian religion. Here is a free translation of one that is said to be more than 3,000 years old, and is yet one of those in commonest use today: "Oh, God! accept my love. Forgive my nisdeeds, of the body and the thought. Bless me, and my family, and my ancestors, and those I love, and all who love thee. Bless those who love thee not, and bless those who know thee not. Give unto me a happy future and call me as thy child when all things are past. And bring about the time when thou shalt be with us. Amen." And here is one of their little prayers that onveys the ideas of reincarnation and

"Oh! Lord, I thank thee that I have grown through so many lives to be a man and thence to be myself. I pray thee that my good deeds may hold me up in other lives and that thou wilt assist me in my growth intil I reach thee in the end." Finally, here is one with which the wor-shiper may close his devotions, as simple, trustful and beautiful as any child's prayer

"Oh! Lord, now I lay me down to sleep. Keep away from me all diseases and all dragons, and so fill my soul with thy goodness that when I awake I shall be a better

But before arriving at that point, when he has sacrificed, made his obeisances and said his prayers, the worshiper-especially in these troublous times—will want to look into the future. Quong-Tai-Gong, if his adora-tions have been acceptable, will aid him. On the altar stands a deep cylindrical bamboo vase, handsomely lacquered. In it are standing upon end many very thin long strips of bamboo that do not quite reach to its top. Sometimes there are not more than S0 or 100 of these strips, but there should be 300. With the latter number one has an oracle that amounts to something. He who inquires of fate clasps his hands around the vase and shakes it with a rotary movement. As ho does so one of the slender bamboo strips detaches itself from the mass and with a steady movement, as if it really meant it, rises higher and higher, until it is ready to fall to he ground, and doubtless would do so if the shaking were continued. The theory is that a magnetism from the scul of the carnest infied by prayer, acts upon the bits of bamboo and causes them to be recentive of the spiritual power that selects the particular one that points out a truthful answer to the question that is dominant in the mind of him who holds the vase. Each of the strips bears a number and that number is affixed to a sentence in the Book of Fate—a volume that lies upon a table at the farther end of the room from the shrine. A priest generally takes the strip, hunts up the sentence it indicates the strip, hunts up the sentence it indicates and reads it to the worshiper. It is supposed that those sentences reply, in all possible ways, to all serious questions concerning life that can be asked, and, taking into consideration the oracularly ambiguous constructions of the construction struction of some of them, they probably Chinamen have an immense deal of faith in this method of divination, and a majority have been informed that "the evil day is not nigh."

J. H. CONNELLY. WORK OF ENGINEERS.

GREAT BRIDGES SPANNING HIGH-WAYS OF COMMERCE.

The Structure Over the Frith of Forth the Most Advanced Work of Its Kind-Oxus Bridge on the Central Asian Railroad. A Long Pontoon Bridge.

This seems to be an age of bridge building. The engineers are at work not only spanning the "Big Muddy" in America, but the Scotch re engaged on a structure across the Frith of Forth, and the Russians on a bridge across the Oxus for the Central Asian railway. The engineering skill begotten by European civilzation is extending all about the globe. While art, literature, the less practical sciences, lag within the limits of their development, man pushing out into uncul-tivated countries calls to his assistance the ngenuity of the scientific bridge builder to ake him ways across rivers and inlets. Meanwhile new triumphs in the art are beng achieved at home. One of the most difficult streams to span is he Missouri river. Its current is rapid, and brings down vast quantities of sandy soil, which is deposited along her course, and auses the channel to continually shift. One ooking across the stream may one day see no object to break the view. A few days later a great bar will lift its huge back where the current erstwhile flowed merrily. The "Big Muddy" is truly named. It is a treacherous stream, at times almost if not quite fordable; at others her volume of swiftly flowing water ssufficiently powerful to sweep almost any-hing away before it. Ten years ago congress granted the inhabi-tants of Nebraska City the right to build a contoon bridge there, but after securing the privilege they scarcely believed that they could avail themselves of it, supposing it to

PONTOON BRIDGE AT NEBRASKA CITY. be impracticable. However, the bridge has been built, and it is said to be the largest pontoon bridge in the world. The especial feature is a V shaped draw, with the angle of the V down stream, which the current may open whenever required. The draw is so constructed as to be closed by one man. From the Missouri to the Oxus is a big step. The Central Asian railway has been constructed by Russia to open the interior of Turkestan and Bokhara to Russian commerce. The diffculties in the way have been the crossing of the rivers Tejend, Murghab and Amou Daria, or Oxus. The obstacles in bridging these streams are the same as those encountered in the Missouri-the shifting sands and liability to flood. To combat this peculiarity the Russians planted a shrub called "Saxaul," which takes root in the sand and at last forms a barrier and permits the carrying off the flood water through numerous conduits. The bridge across the Oxus at Chardjui is a light structure of wooden piers and is two miles long, though it includes an intervening island. The railway line has been in all its parts under the superintendence of Gen. Annenkoff, one of the most distinguished officers in the Russian with the Order of St. Alexander Newsky and the appointment as chief director of the line for twenty years. And now come the Scotch with a new style of cantilever, which looks for all the vorld like a string of whales. This bridge, though not a suspension, rivals in proportions the great Brooklyn bridge. It is more than a mile and a half long, and has a clear head-way of 150 feet, which will allow the passage of the largest ships. The cantilevers are simply enormous, being each 680 feet long, and held in position and united by 850 feet of girder. Two of the spans are each a third of a mile in length. The extreme height of the tion, ninety-one feet below high water, is 361 feet. Some idea of this altitude is obtained when we remember that the Bartholdi statue in New York, with its pedestal, is 305 feet high. The height above water of the Niagara bridges is greater than the Forth bridge, but these Niagara bridges were not built up from the bottom of a river, but across a chasm. It will be finished next year and takes the place of the long bridge which used to span the Frith of Forth, and was blown down with a train load of passengers in a storm some years ago.

Doubtless the Brooklyn bridge and this Scotch cantilever are the two most remarkable specimens of bridge building today; at any rate, of suspension and cantilever bridges. There are several truss bridges of renown, but none of them exhibits so much engineering skill, especially as to magnitude in bridge building, as the Scotch and Ameri-can bridges. Of arched structures probably the most difficult in building was the St. Louis bridge. Pontoons are at best temporary structures, and have been used mostly in military operations.

If the inhabitant of another world should come upon earth today with power to fly around it and view man's works at will, he would probably be most struck with the great bridges. They represent in the Nineteenth century what the pyramids represented before the Christian era. And what a difference, both in the civilizations and their exponents. The pyramid represents the sluggish intellect of the

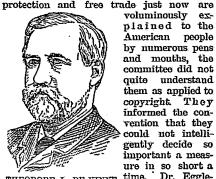

OVER THE FRITH OF FORTH. Egyptian with a certain extent of instinctive cunning in the methods of construction, as seen in the ant. The great bridges represent the splendid intellect of the European, who by accumulative thought, experiment, ingenuity and discovery stands upon an intellectual pyramid whose upex reaches almost into the domain of superior beings. These marks of his triumples are not to be alone found to span they are now in the original for interested them. ceived them; they are carried far into the heart of Asia, and doubtless the time will come when they will be found on every

THE UNITED TYPOTHETÆ.

Portrait of Theodore L. De Vinne, One of Its Leading Spirits. The convention of the United Typothetæ of America, which recently met in New York, attended strictly to business for three sucessive days, and at the end of each day attended strictly to pleasure. At the close of the first day they went to Glen Island to a clambake; on the afternoon of the second to Coney Island; on the third up the Hudson; and finished the whole by a dinner. There were delegates present from many of the principal cities in the United States, and at the finishing dinner some 300 members sat lown together.

facturers would come to America, to the in Enlightened by these two gentlemen the committee took a vote on a resolution instructing the executive committee to enter a formal protest against the bill being made a law; but the speakers had evidently neutralized each other's arguments, for the convention voted to lay the matter on the table.

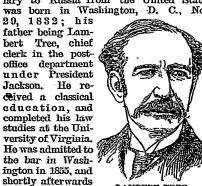

Many other subjects came up for discussion, among them being the Thorne type setting machine, some harmony of action between the Typothetæ and the Typographical union, etc. The concluding dinner was an elaborate affair. It was held in the assembly room of the Metropolitan Opera house. A number of speeches were made by eminent publishers of New York, St. Louis, Boston and other places. Mr. Everett Waddy, of Richmond, Va., said that he thought the south was copying the enlightened methods of the west and northwest and was sure the south would keep pace in the race. The Society of Typothetæ is one year old, having been formed in Chicago a year ago.

Theodore L. De Vinne, whose portrait is here presented, is one of the leading spirits of the Union Typotheta and is a leader among the employing printers of America.

JAPANESE WOMEN.

Though European Fashions Are Being Adopted They Do Much Hard Work. The Japanese are adopting European fashions with surprising rapidity, but not always with good judgment, as is shown in the re-cent adoption of English fashions by the women. The mikado issued a general order

So, after debating the matter for five years, the supreme council has requested the empress to introduce the European dress

It will be far less convenient for their work, especially for the stout portresses and description of Mr. C. W. In the European dress they can hardly walk. The ladies of the court and of the merchant class who have adopted it in deference to the empress say it is torture to them. But if the wealthy and noble make it the fashion the others will soon follow, and it is likely that those reared to it may be as healthy and happy in the new costume as in the old. Nearly all the men, however, of all ranks regret the change, both as a matter of taste and increased expense.

DOCTORS IN SESSION.

Something of the Triennial Congress Held in Washington. The triennial congress of American physicians and surgeons met in Washington on Sept. 17 and transacted considerable business, besides enjoying a great deal of sociability. Dr. John S. Billings, of the United States army, presided. Dr. William Pepper, chairman of the executive committee, delivered the opening address. Dr. R. Hayes Agnew headed the list of vice presidents. The congress is a combination of various associations under one head. There is the Association of American Physicians, the Otological society, the Neurological association, the Orthopedic, the Surgical, the Gynecological, Climatological, Physiological, Pediatric, Dermatological and other societies, their names ending chiefly in "ogical," with an occasional "ie" thrown in by way of variety. On the morning of the meeting of the congress all these societies met severally at 10 o'clock, while the congress convened at 1. The human body, therefore, received a thoras a deliberative body. Deliberative bodies as well as individuals become hungry, and after the day's work was over the congress sat down to a banquet, at which the M. D.'s deputed their surgical skill to sundry subordinates in white aprons. These carved the viands, while the surgeons devoted themselves to the pleasanter task of mastication. An opportunity was offered the members to meet Professor von Esmarch and other distinguished foreigners. After dinner the toasts flew thick and fast, and then, as is usual, the diners dropped into informal speech making. It is to be hoped that the average suffering of the American citizen for the next three years will be considerably

He Was the Original "Fat Contributor," and Is a Right Good Fellow. A. Miner Griswold, who enjoys a national celebrity both as lecturer and humorous writer, was born in Oneida county. N. Y., in 1836. His family is well known in th genealogy of Connecticut during the Seventeenth and Eighteenth centuries, and originally came from England. He received an excellent education, passing successively through the public school, the academy and Hamilton college. In the last named institution he founded the local chapter of the Delta Kappa Epsilon society, one of the most powerful literary secret organizations in the country. From college he went direct to the newspaper office, obtaining, in 1858, a situation as reporter upon The Buffalo Republic and Times, a paper which was afterwards consolidated with the present Buffalo Courier. Its editor, Henry W. Faxon, a noted wit, poet and journalist of that time, soon perceived the talent of mentary offers from many editors A. MINER GRISWOLD. to join their staff. Of these he accepted one from The Detroit Advertiser, in 1859, as editorial writer. His popularity increasing, he advanced rapidly in the profession, becoming successively an editor of The Cleveland National Democrat, Dealer, succeeding the late Artemus Ward: city editor of The Cleveland Leader, and in 1863 city editor of The Cincinnati Times. He had worked so hard in this brief but brilliant period that his health was impaired and his eyesight greatly weakened.

He left journalism in 1864, and entered the same year into dramatic business, becoming manager for Lawrence Barrett, then an unknown and struggling actor, just starting in his career. His season was successful, and at the close saw his star on the road to prosperity. During the season he had written an odd article, half essay and half lecture, which was a mass of nonsense and laughter and with which he was accustomed to amuse the guests at the dinners and receptions in which he participated. At the suggestion of his friends he delivered the piece as a lecture under the title of "American Antiquities" at Brainard hall, Cincinnati, on March 15, 1865 To his surprise the house was crowded, and netted him over $500. This proved the turn ing point in his career. From this time till ISS3 he continued upon the lecture platform, appearing in nearly every town and city of the United States, and in every instance making a financial success. Of those deliv ered, the most popular was the one entitled "Injun Meal," which drew as well at the end as in the beginning. In 1873 he started The Fat Contributor's Saturday Night, afterwards The Cincinnati Saturday Night, a humorous literary weekly, and the first of its class outside of New York city. He continued in its management until 1883, when During all this period he found sufficient leisure to be a regular contributor to such journals as The Cincinnati Times, Texas Siftings, New York Weekly, Leland's Continental, Saturday Night, and to the magazines. In 1883 he left America and went abroad. He passed three years in Europe, devoting his time to the study of the Latin languages and doing but little work of any sort. This consisted of a series of letter from a "Yankee Tourist in Paris," which were published in The Paris Daily News, Texas Siftings, and Saturday Night. In 1886 he returned from Europe in perfect ings, of which he is now the managing edi-tor. He continues his lectures, which are under the management of Maj. Pond, but confines his appearances to the eastern and middle states, editorial duties not permitting him to go farther away from the metropolis. Mr. Griswold married in 1857, his wife being Henrietta M. Benson, a daughter of Capt. H. J. Benson, of Boston. They have no children. Personally the famous humorist is very popular and congenial, his conversation being as clever and entertaining as his writings. He keeps open house in New York city, where he entertains liberally a large circle of literary and social The British Navy. While the Americans have "gone through their sweat," and their naval department is now doing some excellent work, the British are "enjoying" one of their regular panics about invasion, and this time apparently with some reason. They have lately completed the most stupendous experiment ever tried in naval maneuvers—a sham battle on a scale involving almost the entire circuit of the British isles. They divided their entire navy into two squadrons, one for attack; the other for defense, and arranged for rules by which any vessel should be considered as dis abled. Thus, a vessel within range of sighted guns for a given length of time should be considered as disabled. Torpedoes were used which would break many other deough tests, and competent judges were distributed among the vessels, to meet afterward and sum up the results. The "conflict" began with the attacking squadron blockaded in Bantry bay and other ports of Ireland where off by contact; siman enemy would be expected to strike. The result was amazing. The squadron of attack "ran the blockade," "silenced" the coast defenses and (theoretically) "ravaged the whole coast from the north end of Scotland down and around the southwest coasts and up to the fortifications on the Thames To these points the judges unanimously agreed. And now the British have a little problem of their own to ponder over-that is, if we may assume that any hostile nation will soon come against them with as good a fleet as their own theoretical "squadren of Hardiness of American Half Breeds. The experience of the teachers of the Lincoln institution confirms the views here expressed, that the mixed Indian is more exempt from pulmonary disease than the pure Indian; and, further, that if the former are attacked by disease, they offer greater constitutional resistance to it than the latter. This view is also confirmed by the large experience of Capt. R. H. Pratt, superintendent of the Carlisle Indian school, who says in his last report: "Our experience is that the mixed bloods resist disease and death from pulmonary troubles better than the full bloods; and our best health conditions are found among those we send out into families-due, I think, very largely to the regular occupation and varied Similar views have been expressed by others who have resided among the mixed or half breed races in the northwestern part of Canada. These people are said to be strong and hearty, long lived, and not subject to disease, so long as they remain in their native climate. They regard themselves as the equal of the whites, and look in a patronizing way on the Indian. Their families are usually very large, and the female sex is said to be very handsome. Quite recently I had occasion to investigate the question whether pulmonary consumption tends to exterminate the American Indian, and I then found that nearly all those Indian agencies which show the lowest consumption rate are precisely those which are shown in the table of this paper to contain the largest number of mixed bloods.—Thomas J. Mays, M. D., in Popular Science Monthly.
