bly distinguished and intellectual looking man. Seated in his study, as I found him, with a cigar in his mouth and the heavy-beaded smoking jacket buttoned around his tall form, he was the picture of aristocratic negligence. His forehead is high and covered with a splash of wavy gray hair, and his eyes are exceedingly bright and ex-pressive. The main charm of his manner lies in the directness and force with which he talks. He says pleasant things with full as much power as he does caustic ones, and this is saying a great deal. His diction is clear cut and admirable to a remarkable degree, and it is a pleasure to hear him talk on any subject. He not only uses good old Anglo-Saxon, but he drops into the vernacular, including an occasional big, big D. with a degree of celerity and beauty that would win the staunchest democrat in the world to his side off-hand. One forgets that he is President of the Senate and a power in the republican party when he starts in to talk on subjects outside of politics. I am not surprised that the Senate is crowded whenever Ingalls speaks,-Washington Cor. Cleveland Leader.

They know the meaning of the word fire. Last summer we came near having some trouble. Men were blasting out trenches in the Transverse road, north of the arsenal, to put in water pipes. When the blast was ready one of them stood up waving his red flag and shouting "Fire! Fire!" The elephants were fastened outside of their buildings, and at the first shout they raised their heads in alarm, and at the second every one of them snapped their chains as if they had been thread, and the way they went jumping in the opposite direction, as the blast was fired, startled the pecple, who got out of their way as quickly as possible. I found them down in the trees very much frightened. After that the man was told not to shout 'fire' any more where the elephants could hear him."-N. Y. Tribune.

BUCHANAN RECORD.

JOHN G. HOLMES, Editor.

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 22, 1888.

Michigan will have but two democrats in the fifty-first Congress.

There are 3,000 street merchants in Chicago who pay $30,000 into the city treasury in licenses.

There is no one who appears to trouble the democrat party so much as Blaine. They are now preparing to place him in the senate.

Peru has given Uncle Sam a sound snub that should demand reparation. The action of Secretary of State Bayard in the matter is of interest just now.

The first democrat to be elected to a state office in Iowa in thirty-one years was Peter A. Day, elected railroad commissioner at the recent election.

The Detroit Tribune sizes up George William Curtis, as a "pecksniffian hypocrite." A new title for an old bird.

Now Hayti has put the American flag into the mud and trampled upon it. A number of American vessels have been seized and the crews placed in irons.

The next legislature in this State will contain twenty-three republicans and nine democrats in the Senate, and seventy republicans and thirty democrats in the house.

The next congress will have something to do toward the pouring of the offscourings of European vagabondism into this country, and of their early admission to full citizenship when they get here. We have enough vagabonds, tramps and anarchists here, and a certificate of decent character should be demanded of every foreigner who attempts to land upon our shores. This will be no hardship upon the respectable immigrant who will make a good citizen, and will free us of the stream of disreputables that are being landed here by the thousands.

The democratic clerk of the House, at Washington, is the only officer whose term of office continues into the next Congress, he being the man who will call the roll of the new Congress. Up to Friday it was boldly proclaimed that he should place upon the roll the names of enough democrats from the close districts to give the democrats the organization of the House. At that time the failure of that scheme became apparent and the democrat leaders suddenly discovered that they didn't want to hold the House in the coming administration, anyway. That is well, as but few want them to.

When the South is able and willing to protect the life and property of her citizens the country will justify her demand to be let alone. Gov. Luce says: "It is not generally known that at the last session of Congress a bill was passed appropriating to each state $100 per annum for every soldier maintained. This will give to Michigan between $35,000 and $40,000 per annum, which will effect a reduction of state taxaticn to that amount. The board will at this session of the legislature ask for an appropriation of about $$0,000, which will be in the neighborhood of $$0,000 or $90,000 less than two years ago. Of course this appropriation will be for the two succeeding years. About $3,000 or $4,000 of the last appropriation by the legis-lature remains unexpended, and will revert to the treasury."

One of the results of this election over which good men of all parties will rejoice is the breaking up of the "Solid South" by the Republican victo-ry in West Virginia. Now that the crust is cracked, the next Presidential election will probably see more Southern States following the example. This will nationalize the two parties, and do more to close up the "bloody chasm" than anything else that has happened or can happen. It will be a blessed day when there is a Republican party in the South, the same as in the North, and when there will be no more talk of the Confederacy being in the saddle, and when the same issues will divide in all the States with free and fair elections, and honest counting of the votes. All honor to West Virginia for taking the lead in this political direction.-Lansing Republican.

HARRISON GOSSIP.

HIS FIRST BOW BEFORE THE POLIT-ICAL WORLD.

Some of His Personal Characteristics-His Home and His Family-"The General Is Out Taking a Walk"-He Is Not Emo-

Benjamin Harrison first became nationally prominent in 1876, and then under circumstances peculiarly embarrassing both to him and his party. Down to that time the rule had been for the Democrats of Indiana to hold their state conventions on the Sth of Jan-uary—jocularly called "St. Jackson's day" -and the Republicans on the 22d of February. The experiences of that year led both parties to adopt a much later date, and now the campaign in that state is short and hot. At their convention the Republicans nominated for governor the Hon. Godlove S. Orth, whose long experience on the bench and in congress peculiarly qualified him for the post; but immediately after the convention a charge was made against him in connection with certain transactions in Venezuela of such γ a complicated nature that it would have taken all the campaign to explain them, and then the people would have been keptical. So Judge higher civil office than that of reporter of the supreme court, and was almost unknown to most of the voters. Coming in as "second choice" and sneered at as a "kid gloved aris-tocrat," he suffered the additional disadvantage of being a candidate in the worst year, industrially and commercially, that the state had ever known, and when all currents were against his party. Yet he made a "strong race." The plurality of his opponent, "Blue Jeans" Williams, was very small, and Gen. Harrison at once took rank as one of the coming men of his party.

It is just a little odd that Gen. Harrison should have been so vehemently denounced as an "aristocrat," for he was born in a log cabin, reared in a pioneer country, educated only by pinching economy, and has never been rich. In fact, he began married life with barely money enough to buy the necessary furniture, and was so poor for the following ten years that the small office of reporter of the supreme court was quite a boon to him. Of late years his successful law practice has brought him a competency. It is admitted, however, that he is not "magnetic" in the sense that word is applied to politicians. He does not shine in conversa tion, and there is nothing at all effusive in his manner. With new acquaintances he is

MR. HARRISON'S LIBRARY. As a lawyer he is extremely methodicalnot at all eloquent. One never reads any quotations from his speeches in the popular collections of oratory, nor do the people refer to any of his "brilliant efforts," as they do to those of Voorhees, Cumback, Morton, Lamb, Beveridge, Nelson, "Dick" Thompson or other Indiana politicians, young and old. It is believed that all his speeches are written somewhat advanced course at Bloomingdare, a few miles from his father's residence. While Joseph was still a lad his father, returning late one night from a visit to a patient, was drowned in what was popularly alled a "sinkhole" in Sugar creek, or Rocky river, and the boy, thrown upon his own resources thereafter, made his own way in life. Removing to Vermilion county, Ills., he studied law, located at Danville, took to politics naturally and became a very ardent Republican when that party was formed, as his education had made him a strong op-ponent of slavery. Indeed, it may be said parenthetically that in every part of the western states the middle and higher class of emigrants from the old slave states, and especially the Quakers from North Carolina, were the most ardent anti-slavery men. As was said by one of their number in Indiana, they were present when the Republican party was born, assisted in forming it and were ready for it long before it came.

Neither history nor tradition go back to a time when Guilford county, N. C., was not an abolition stronghold. As early as the date of the Mecklenburg declaration of independence, to wit, May 20, 1775, the pioneers of the upper western part of the state of North Carolina expressed their opposition to the system of African slavery. At the close of the revolutionary war, and for the nsuing fifty years, the Quaker population of Guilford county gradually increased until it

cate, an outspoken exponent of Free Soil entiment, and from that time until the outbreak of the war the Quakers seldom failed to renew their testimony against slavery. From that section an immense emigration went to the vicinity of Richmond, Ind., and later to Hendricks county and to Parke, the new county of the Wabash, which now contains about 600 Quaker voters. Reared amid such surroundings and educated by such a class of people, it is plain that Mr. Cannon was both by inheritance and conviction an ardent anti-slavery man. Just before the war he was elected states attorney in Illinois and served in that position until December, 1868. After four years devoted to the practice of law he was chosen in 1872 to the Forty-third congress, and has been re-elected successively to each succeeding congress, sometimes by very large major-ities, having thus been fifteen years in continuous congressional service, which, with his marked ability as a parliamentarian, eminently qualifies him for the position of speaker.

The believer in the persistency of family traits and hereditary human tendencies might collect volumes of testimony in the vicinity where Mr. Cannon was born and still more where he spent his boyhood. The Bloomingdale neighborhood, as it is com-monly called in Indiana, is indeed but a liberalized and westernized reproduction of the New Garden neighborhood in Guilford county, N. C., and a list of the names taken alphabetically from the taxpayers of the two townships would probably show two-thirds of the same family names. Still more marked are the personal traits, the intellectual tendencies and the moral bias of the two populations. Mr. Cannon's father was long and favorably known in Indiana as a humane, skillful and conscientious physician and a reliable man in every station of life. It is not probable that any man in the county was so widely and sincerely mourned, and the tragic circumstances of his death add to it a melancholy interest which causes the incidents of his life to be matters of household talk in the community today. His firmness, conscientiousness and earnest devotion to what he conceived to be right reappear in his son, and the friends of Mr. Cannon confidently affirm that in all the scandals which agitated the country during the years following the war and the early years of his service in congress, there was not a single al legation made against him of any conduct unworthy of an American or the representative of a free people.

DANTEL HAND. was a northern man and an Abolitionist. Meantime Mr. Hand had retired to the mountains of North Carolina. After the war he removed to the north, and left his partner Williams to make up the accounts of the firm, allowing him unlimited time. The man who has been so munificent to the colored race is somewhat striking in appearance and rather like a literary or professional man than a merchant. Wealth has never been his ambition and yet riches have come to him. He is a man of large reading on practical subjects which concern humanity. His partner, Mr. Williams, became in volved in cotton speculations which proved unfortunate, and when pressed hard by his creditors Mr. Hand, who was by far the largest creditor, declined to push him. "If Mr. Williams lives," he said, "he will pay his debts; I am not at all concerned about it." There is something singular in an avowed anti-slavery man growing rich in the heart of the south, his wealth escaping the Confederate government, living to give his for-tune to the race the befriending of which caused his withdrawal to the mountains of North Carolina.

PERRY S. HEATH. Will He Be the Dan Lamont of President-

Elect Harrison?

Perry S. Heath, the clever Washington correspondent of The Indianapolis Journal. has been mentioned as the probable private secretary of President-elect Harrison. He would make an excellent one. He is scarcely 30 years of age, and is a bright, well educated fellow of irreproachable character and wide acquaintance with men and affairs. He was on intimate terms with Mr. Harrison when the latter was in the senate, and he has kept up a correspondence with him ever since. Mr. Harrison respects him highly and trusts him implicitly. Heath is a good looking bachelor (nearly all of the Washington corre-No. spondents are sad Ŋ, bachelors) with a handsome pile of cash, which he has gathered by hard work and lucky investments, so that

SHE WILL RESIDE IN WASHINGTON THE COMING WINTER.

How Different the Circumstances Under

Which She Now Goes to the Capital from Those Which Surrounded Her When She First Went There.

Harriet Lane Johnston, almost as beauti ful now, in her robes of widowhood, as when, in the days of James Buchanan, she was the courted of princes and the admired of queens, has taken a house in Washington for the winter and will probably make Washington her permanent home. It is curious, and not a little instructive, to think of the different circumstances under which she will again take up her residence, after over thirty years, at the national capital. She is now a woman past middle life; when she was last a resident of Washington she was in the prime of girlhood, and surpassingly beau tiful. She was then frequently alluded to as the "American queen," and it was a rare day when her charms were not celebrated in the poets' corners of the daily newspapers Nearly all her friends of those days have joined the great majority; even the birth place of her fame, Washington, has so vastly changed that to this woman it must seem strange and new. Little is heard of Harriet Lane now. Her day was before the present generation was born.

She is the niece of James Buchanan, and is one of the most distinguished women who ever graced the White House. She was educated within the walls of Old Visitation convent, which is still standing and educating at Georgetown. While her uncle was secre tary of state under the Polk administration she spent Saturday and Sunday every month with him. At his house she was, when a mere schoolgirl, introduced to all that was best, most brilliant and distinguished in the the nation. In this cosmopolitan society she acquired the grace and ease of manner which afterwards made her remarkable in Queen Victoria's drawing room. After leaving the convent school Miss Lane returned to her uncle's home at Wheatland, where she saw much company, and occasionally visited the great cities. Her fame dates from the time when, in 1852, Buchanan was sent to England as United States minister and s h e accompanied HARRIET LANE JOHNSTON him. Her success was instantaneous. She was the most popular American woman who had ever been known in the drawing rooms of London; admirers by the score hung upon her words; her wit was the fashion; her bon mots were repeated everywhere; the exquisite tact, for which she has been always noted, was studied by half the titled women of London; her charms of mind and person made a decided impression on the queen herself, and the fair young American was the recipient of many distinguished marks of royal favor. She was but 18 years of age at this time. When but a stolid boy the Prince of Wale States has treaties with both China and now fat and scant of breath, was infatuated Corea, and in the first article of its treaty with her, as he has often confessed with Corea it is distinctly stated, with refer Indeed, the fondness of the Prince of Wales ence to the United States, that "if other for Americans dates from the time he first powers deal unjustly or oppressively with either government, the other will exert its good offices, on being informed of the case, knew Harriet Lane. The famous incident concerning Miss Lane's presentation at court made the Prince of Wales, as well as his to bring about an amicable arrangement, mother, warm friends of the young woman. thus showing their friendly feelings." On that occasion the ladies of the diplomatic The Chinese government has been accus-tomed to furnish the Corean king with a corps had been marshaled in regular order by the lord chamberlain, and were awaiting th confidential adviser, of whom it was expected arrival of royalty, when a very ill bred that he would not only advise the king as to English woman, married to a diplomat, deliberately took her place ahead of the American minister's niece. They were bent on hammering the soldiers, but not on Sunday. So they waited till Sunday had passed, nursing their wrath in the mean-The next day, after having religiously attended divine worship, they re-assembled. They went at it early. Between 6 and 7 o'clock in the morning several hun-dred men, armed with all kinds of implements, assembled in Kings (now State) street, shouting that they would drive out the soldiers. Two bours after they attacked some soldiers in Dock square. There was a good deal of shouting and crying of fire and tearing up of property; the citizens poured into the streets; the town was in a commotion. This continued through the day, and before midnight the din of shouting, ringing of bells and rattle of musketry were a perfect bedlam. Finally, as matters were quieting down, a tall man, Mephistopheles like, in a white wig and a scarlet cloak, suddenly appeared on the scene and commenced to harangue the crowd, concluding his remarks with the words, "To the main guard!" The words were re-echoed by his listeners, and divid-ing in three divisions they went by different routes to the main guard. One of the divisions passing the custom house attacked a sentinel on post. He called on the main guard for protection, and Capt. Preston, the officer of the day, sent him eight men with knocked the muskets with their clubs and shouted to the mob to "come on." Meanwhile Capt. Preston came on the ground and endeavored to quiet matters. Attucks imed a blow at his head, which the captain parried with his arm. The weapon felled a soldier, and Attucks seized his bayonet. At that juncture voices behind Capt. Preston shouted, "Why don't you fire?" A soldier struggling with Attucks, supposing it to be an order, shot Attucks dead. Five other soldiers fired at intervals. Three citizens were killed, five wounded, and a few others slightly hurt. Crispus Attucks, Samuel Gray and James Caldwell were killed outright. Samuel Maverick and Patrick

Personally he is as little like his illustrious grandfather as any other man might be. The latter was tall and spare almost to painful attenuation. The president-elect is the short-est man ever chosen to that office, rather stout in build, with fat cheeks and a broad, smooth forehead. His temperament seems more lymphatic than nervous, and one would say that his face is that of a man not much disturbed by popular excitement or party clamor. His domestic life is a model of quiet duty and enjoyment. His wife was a noted beauty in her day, and his married daughter, Mrs. McKee, is a lady of striking beauty. She has made her home with her parents for some time, and will go with them to Washington. Her boy is the pride and delight of the family, and will add a new feature of life to the White House, where the patter of childish feet has not lately been known. It is one of the odd facts of American history that every third president elected was childless from Washington to Buchanan inclusive, and the record was only broken in 1876 by a contest so close that all patriots hope it may never be repeated.

IN THE HARRISON HOME.

Gen. Harrison's amusements are of the simplest, quietest and most inexpensive kind. "The general is out taking a walk," has been the reply to many anxious callers since the election. For a while he was almost a prisoner in his own house, as his appearance on the streets was the signal for a demonstra-tion; but since the jollifications ceased, he has resumed his habit of taking long walks, for which, by the way, no city in the nation has better facilities than Indianapolis. Outside of the business centers it is one wide, extended suburban city of retired country seats, with elegant drives, fine pavements and handsome houses, just far enough apart to give room for rural surroundings. Gen. Harrison's residence, at No. 674 North Delaware street, is in no wise conspicuous except that visitors have lately carried away the picket fence and damaged pavement, doorstep and front hall by extensive tramping. In doors are the usual parlor, back parlor, library, sitting room and household rooms. To the first the great American public ap-peared to be welcome at all reasonable hours during the campaign; but for private consultations the library was reserved. It is no secret that the general was not enthusiastically confident of his own election, as he is not unreasonably elated over it. In short, the American people have chosen for chief executive a calm, cool, rather unemotional, cautious and conservative man.

WILL "JOE" CANNON BE THE NEXT SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE?

And Will Senators Frye and Stockbridge dent's Cabinet?-Points in the Lives of

One of the coming men of the Republican

Of course everybody is talking about cabi-net possibilities and probabilities just now. One of the most frequently mentioned as a fit man to enter this advisory council of the republic's chief magistrate is Senator W. P. Frye, of Maine, the portfolio named in the connection being that of the navy. During the Fiftieth congress Mr. Frye Qui has been a member of the committee on rules. He was the only member of that committee W, P. FRYE. who voted for the Platt resolution, requiring consideration of executive nominations in open session. William P. Frye, of Lewiston, Me., was william F. Frye, of Lewiston, Me., was born in that city Sept. 2, 1831. He was graduated at Bowdoin college in 1850, and then took up the practice of law. He was a member of the state leg-islature in 1861-53 and '67, was mayor of the city of Lewiston in 1866-67, was attorney general of the state of Maine in 1867-

68 and '69, was elected a member of the national republican executive committee in 1872, and was re-elected in 1876 and 1880. During the latter year he was made a trustee of Bowdoin college. In 1881 he received the degree of LL. D. from Bates college. He was a presidential elector in 1804, was a delegate to the national republican conventions in 1872, 1876 and 1880; and was elected chairman of the Republican state committee of Maine in place of James G. Blaine, resigned, in November, 1881. He was elected as a representative to the Fortysecond, Forty-third, Forty-fourth, Fortyfifth, Forty-sixth, Forty-seventh congresses, and was elected to the United States senate as a Republican to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of Blaine. and took his seat March 18, 1881, and was re-elected in

The friend remarked: "Waal, Frank, you've got a nighty fine house here, and I reckon there's nothin' more you want."

"Yes," said Mr. Stockbridge, "I suppose this is very recherchy, but there's just one other thing that's lacking." "What's that?" "A parrot."

In the center is represented the old state house, and behind it the brick First church. Above the bas relief stands a statue of "Free America," at er side an eagle ready to fly. The perfect command that he exercises over himself in addition to pulling the noses and patting the backs of the nations was shown last winter when the Iron Chancellor reduced his weight thirty-five pounds by a course of training that would have staggered a collegian.

"The full significance of this feat," one of the prince's physicians said to me the other day, "will not strike you till you call a' the conditions into view. It shows after all that three score years and ten is by no means a goal to be dreaded. A man's age is what he makes it, according to Prince Bismarck. Still when a man is in his 73d year it looks like foolhardiness to suddenly reverse all old and methodical habits, take ice cold baths at daybreak, have cold meat and cold tea for breakfast, let wines and beer drop out of existence, and do an amount of violent exercise that would wear out a 30-year-old laborer."
