Where the Roses Blow.

BY EUGENE STEVENSON.

It was an old-fashioned and rather romantic looking house, standing back some distance from the village street, and almost concealed from view by the shubberies and tall silver maples, with which it was surrounded. To be sure, it sadly lacked a new coat of paint, and the window blinds, creaking loosely upon their rusty hinges, were faded, and broken in places. But these deficiencies were relieved in a wonderful measure by the roses, which covered the house from porce to pillar, monopolizing every available space of the weather-beaten structure, and freighting the air with their delightful fra mpatient gesture, and turned her gaze upon her companion, a little rosy olonde, who was mechanically engaged in plucking to pieces a large cab-bage rose, and scattering the petals over her pretty, slippered feet. She was evidently in a brown study, for the earnest blue eyes continued to gaze

into space, and there was the faintest

vestige of a frown upon the smooth matter to his satisfaction ere now. Yes, she is rather pretty, but you do not remember your friends long. I used to fancy you had a penchant for the whole family," with a bantering laugh. "Surely you remember Edith Haverly." "Impossible! Why, when I left here she was still a little girl, not out of short dresses. And yet I fancied I saw a resemblance to some one. It was her sister I remember—Clarice; I have not seen her since she was married. Is she here?"

"Oh, dear, no, Mr. Rutherford! Clarice Haverly is not married. Have you not heard that? Why, the Haverlys had a terrible come down; lost all their property. Mr. Haverly died soon after, and Clarice is engaged at the village school, in teaching the young idea to shoot. They have kept their place in society, although they are very poor; and only for Clarice's princely salary as dispenser of the birch, I'm sure I don't know how they would get along at all."

Ethel Mayhew might have rattled on indfienitely in this strain had not something happened to change the current of her thoughts. Leslie Ruther ford had received a surprise, and it made him nervous. His hand trembled, and the glass of iced sherbet which he was about to place before Miss Mayhew slipped from his nerveless fingers full upon her dress, deluging her from neck to toe. She was not angry, however, and smiled more sweetly than ever; for Mr. Rutherford was a desirable lover. and this was really an opportune occurrence. The heat had faded her wonderful complexion; the rouge had lost its pristine bloom from contact with the sun's rays, and her gown had not proved so becoming as she had hoped. So this was just the moment she had longed for, when she could slip away, change her dress, and re-appear in fresh war paint and feathers. Left to himself, Leslie strolled idly about the grounds, with a perturbed expression upon his handsome, grave face. Again before him rose the vision of a slender, graceful girl, above whose pale, classic face waved a halo of golden hair. He had come to Westville, impelled by an unaccountable desire to see her once more, himself unseen, if possible, and then he would go away forever.

Oh the deceit of womankind! He had imagined once more that she cared for him. And yet, perhaps, he had been too hasty, after all; might there not have been some mistake? She was not married, Ethel Mayhew said; evidently the rumor he had heard was false, and perhaps she had not found his note, after all. He was but a poor, aspiring artist when he had dared to declare his love so timidly, and she was the child of wealth, a beauty and a belle. Now their positions were re-

A timid little pull at his coat sleeve cut short his meditations. He glanced down to meet the blushing face of Edith. She held out to him a faded, crumpled envelope "O, Mr. Rutherford!" she faltered incoherently. "You will excuse me, I hope, but I felt that I must tell you. found this note in the pocket of the dress I am wearing; it was Clarice's, and she only wore it once, three years ago, at a garden party, and I'm sure she never knew the note was there. It was sealed, but I opened it, and -I'm atraid there has been a mistake." Edith paused a moment, and gazed timidly upon the ground.

Leslie's hand trembled as he took the sheet and glanced over it hurriedly: then, in a hoarse voice he cried: "Mistake! yes, there has been a terrible mistake, but, thank Heaven! it may not be too late to rectify it."

A short conversation sufficed to make him the "happiest mortal living," and he walked briskly away in the direction of the little red school-house. Ethel Mayhew re-appeared, after a half-hour's delay, with a "complexion fearfully and wonderfully made," and attired in an elaborate costume, donned with the evident expectation of effecting a complete conquest of the heart of Leslie Rutherford. Alas! In vain did she look and long for a glimpse of her recent knight, while replying in monosyllables to old Major Pettigrew's gallant speeches. It was well for her peace of mind that she was not permitted just then to see the inside of a certain schoolhouse. The last pupil had filed out, after turning to gaze in open mouthed wonder at the strange spectable of a young gentleman, in the immaculate attire of a city swell, seated behind the desk. The small boy's last shout of joy over his emancipation died away in the distance as Leslie Rutherford drew the unresisting Clarice gently toward him and tenderly whispered something in her ear. It must have been satisfactory, for with a happy smile, she laid her head upon his broad shoulder, while his arms closed about her slight form in a tender embrace. After a silence more eloquent

"You shall see it some day," he answered, smiling, "for it is to you I owe my success. It is the picture of you in your 'rose dress,' and I call it my Queen Rose of the rosebud garden of girls'. You are not angry, little one?" "No, Leslie, but very happy."

"Mrs. Mayhew's garden party has been a decided success. So every one declared, excepting, perhaps, Ethel Mayhew. Edith Haverly and Harvey Dinsmore thought it the happiest day they had ever known, as they strolled slowly homeward in the gloaming.

With a smile and blush she left him at the gate, whispering shyly: "Yes, you may tell mamma in the morning, Harvey, dear. Good-night. Clarice caught her about the waist before she could enter the house. Her lovely face was transfigured with hap-piness as she held out to Edith a slim white hand, with a magnificent soltaire blazing upon the third finger.

"Oh, Clarice, you too? I knew it would all come right, dear, some time. How happy I am! Both on the same day! No, the roses brought him back to you-how I shall always love them! -Waverley Magazine.

A Venerable Toad.

·Local antiquarians and zoologists are enchanted at present with a live toad found in the course of railway excavations at Greenock, Scotland. The toad is from 20,000 to 30,000 years old, as the stratum of clay in which it was found, certainly dates from the glacial period. Its mouth is sealed up. It breathes slightly through the nostrils, and though the eves are quite expressive, it does not seem to see.

An angry light gleamed in Ethel "Can you tell me what the 'golden rule'. is?" asked the Sunday School teacher: "Yess'm," promptly replied Mayhew's black eyes, but she laughed sweetly.

What Constitutes a Faithful Employe.

An exchange says: Every faithful employe will constitute himself the guardian of his employer's property. The man who will either wilfully waste what is intrusted to his care, or encourage such waste in others, is unworthy of confidence, and should he ever become the head of a business, will deserve to be treated in the same

There is a vast deal of truth in the aboye, adds the Industrial World, and yet how many workmen there are who wilfully squander not only the property of their employers, but, what is equally valuable, the time which the atter pays for.

Workmen do not seem to know that the prosperity of a manufacturing concern oftentimes depends upon the observation of closest economy. The enlargement of the wage fund depends on this economy, and any fair-minded employer would rather expend in wages the amount saved by economical observance than have the amount wasted. The little waste here and there that seems so trivial to the workman, when scattered through a great number of hands amounts in the total to a large sum. When a workman sees the first evidence of a machine getting out of order, by drawing the attention of the proper parties he may save an expensive bill of repairs and also a considerable loss consequent upon the idleness of the machine while undergoing repairs. The careless workman says, "It is none of my business whether the machine gets out of repair or not," and so he lets it run on until it is entirely disabled. A workman observes a quantity of material carelessly left where it will deteriorate or be spoiled instead of taking care of it, or notifying the manager or superintendent, he allows it to remain and be destroyed or injured, consoling himself with the thought that "it is none of his loss any way." Perhaps he observes a brother Perhaps he observes a brother workman willfully wasting or injuring the material upon which the latter is working. Duty would tell him to inform the foreman of such a dereliction on the part of his fellow laborer, but he does not, for lack of interest in his employer's welfare. He may see where a saving could be made in the manipulation of the material upon which he is working, yet for lack of interest he refrains from making any suggestions leading to the discovery of that fact. Not infrequently a workman refrains from protecting his employer's rights and property because by so doing it will entail additional labor and care upon himself, or impose a responsibility which he does not wish to assume. Some seem to think there is no obligation incurred by them when engaging themselves to work, except such as is included in the rule of "doing the least work for the most pay." Such men shufile through their labors, slighting the work here, wasting material there. squandering all the time they can, and thinking of no one's interest save their own. This class of workmen are the first to be dismissed when hard times come. When wages fall, theirs are the first to be lowered. If the force of the shop, by reason of slack trade, has to be curtailed, they are the ones selected to leave. Self-interest teaches the manufacturer to give the best places and the largest remuneration to his most faithful workmen. This is not only natural, but right and commendable. The employe who thinks most of doing his work well and lof subserving his employer's interests, and less of com-

Graceful curves, an upright carriage and finely molded hands and feet are common characteristics. Their faces, too, are usually pleasing and often beautiful, with the richly tinted softness of the south. So sweet is the expression of these faces, so bewitching are the glances of their dark eyes, that an experienced traveler declares they are the most perfect women in the world. The eyes of nearly all are large. black, and almond-shaped; their soft expression still further beightened by long lashes and the universal use of "k,hl," with which they blacken the edges of the lids. They have oval faces, sometimes a little broad, and clear olive complexions. The lips are usually quite full; the nose is straight, though a little wide. Glossy black hair, with eyebrows that form a lovely arch, complete the features of these sirens, famed since Cleopatra for their beguiling beauty.

They dress the hair in an elaborate fashion. It is cut short over the forehead, but on either side of the face hangs a full lock, often curled or braided. The rest of the hair is arranged in numerous braids, usually from eleven to twenty-five, but always an odd number. Three black silk cords bearing little ornaments of gold are generally fastened to each braid, hanging down the back in a glittering shower. The head-dress is a complex arrangement. It consists of a kind of turban, round which is commonly bound a gay kerchief or a long strip of muslin folded into a narrow band. The latter is nsually black or rose-colored. The central part is ornamented for several inches with spangles that fall over the forehead, while the ends are decked with a gay edging and tassels of colored silks, above which a few more spangles are sewn. On the crown of the head-dress is worn around, convex ornament, called the "kurs." about five inches in diameter and as costly as the wearer can afford. Wealthy ladies, and even the wives of some small tradesmen, wear those composed of diamonds set in gold. Others wear a simple golden kurs, silver being seldom seen even among servants. The head-veil consists of a long piece of white muslin embroidered at each end with colored silk and gold, or of colored crepe ornamented with gold thread and spangles. This is drawn well forward upon the head, while the the ground. The face-veil, always worn in public, is a simple strip of white muslin fastened just below the eyes, from which it falls nearly to the feet. It completely hides all the features except the eyes, but as these are commonly the greatest beauty of the women, it serves rather to heighten admiration than to quell it.

It is said that corn cobs, when treated as follows, make an excellent fire kindling: Put six gallons of water into a boiler, and one pound of saltpeter. Heat it to the boiling point, and then rut in as many cohe as the cover. Let them stand a short time. and then take them out and place in the sunlight until thoroughly dry. when they can be easily lighted with a match and will make a hot fire.

Peruvian Whistling Jugs.

The silvadors or musical jugs found among the places of Peru are most ingenious specimens of handiwork. A silvio in the William S. Vaux collection at Philadelphia, consists of two vases, whose bodies are joined one to the other, with a hole or opening between them. The neck of one of these vases is closed, with the exception of a small opening in which a clay pipe is inserted leading to the body of the whistle. When a liquid is poured into the open-necked vase, the air, is compressed into the other, and in escaping through the narrow opening is forced into the whistle, the vibrations producing sounds. Many of these sounds represent the notes of birds;

one in the Clay collection of Philadelphia, Pa., imitates the notes of the robin or some other member of the thrush tribe peculiar to Peru. The closed neck of this double vase is modeled into a representation of a bird's head, which is thrushlike in character. Another water vase in the same collection, representing a llama, imitates the disgusting habit which this animal possesses of ejecting its saliva when enraged.

Gen. and Mrs. Harrison. One of the most interesting of this character came to day from the artist William Kellogg of Williamsport, Pa. It is a very excellent portrait of the general burned upon a pine board with a red-hot iron and is appropriately styled "The Poker" portrait.—Indianapolis Courier.

In 1886, as third party candidate for governor, General Fisk polled nearly 20,000 votes in New Jersey. This year, as candidate for president, he was expected to receive at least 30,000 votes. The returns give him about 7,800, which is only a few hundred more than St. John had in 1884. It was a case of great expectations which totally collapsed.—Boston Journal.

The official count in Michigan gives Harrison 236,307 votes; Cleveland, 213,-304; Fisk, 20,942; Streeter, 4,532. In 1884 Blaine received 192,669 votes; Cleveland, 189,361, and St. John 18,403. The increase in the republican vote is 43,71S; in the democratic, 23,943; in the prohibition, 2,539. .

The aspirants for post office appointment may about as well rest easy. It is not likely to be the policy of the new administration to go into an extensive : ousting business, except in cases where grossly incompetents are in. There are enough of these to keep the machine busy for a time.

In 1876 the total vote of South Carolina for president was 182,776. This vear it is 79.565. Meantime the population has not diminished. No one will probably have the hardihood now to deny that the republican vote there is suppressed by force or counted out by fraud. The congressional representation of the State ought to be reduced in proportion.

Said Mr. Glenn, of the Georgia Legislature, seconding the renomination of Senator Colquitt for . United States

Senator Colquitt represents the unterrified democracy which survived the fall of Sumter, the surrender at Appomation. It had not only survived, it had advanced step by step, until it entered the White House and ruled the destinies of this country for four years. Too soon, alas, too soon for the good of the country, it has been driven from power. But its principles were true and must win in the end. Would any man who stood for those principles when they were triumphant adjure them in defeat. They were eternally right; they were the heart and spirit of democracy, and would yet be established in the government of this country. Because he represents and stur-dily advocates and defends those principles of democracy, I second the nomination of General Alfred H. Colquitt, not of Fulton, but of Georgia.

It is unnecessary to remark that the speaker's grandiloquence does not conceal the proclamation that the Cleveland democracy was the Appomatox and Sumter democracy; nor does it obscure the popular vision that sees in such an atterance full cause for unqualified jubilation that the "unterrified democracy" has been incontinently bounced,—Inter Ocean.

Above all questions of economic affairs of this country the one that rises into greatest importance is whether this country shall longer submit to the disfranchisement of a large percentage of the citizens of a considerable portion of its territory by means of fraud and infimidation, as it has during the past twenty years. The political complexion of the next house of representatives depends upon a small majority either way, and now the question whether that branch of government shall be under democratic or republican control depends upon the amount of Iraud that shall be perpetrated in these few states. There is no pretension made by them that any other method is employed to falsely carry elections, but the balance of the country is simply asked, "What are you going to do about it?" A representative from South Carolina has offered to Gen. Harrison the suggestion that the Joseph Smith's bible. They are yellow

Who Said "Ruins?"

The result of the recent Presidental election was quite as disappointing to the political Prohibitionists as it was to the Democrats. The third party managers may not be willing to acknowledge the fact, but they must certainly find little to encourage them in

In the first place the third party vote

has fallen far short of their expectations everywhere. This alone is enough to convince the rank and file that the temperance people have no confidence in its purposes or faith in its usefulness. But this is not all. A "condition" confronts the third party at the present time which entirely changes the situation from that of four years ago. Then the Republican party was beaten, and it was the third party that gave the victory to the Democrats. The Prohibition leaders rejoiced over throughought the eastern States this the result, and at once proclaimed that week. Railroads have been blockaded | the Republican party would never win another National victory. They took a rosy view of the future. They said: "It is for us to first destroy the Republican party and then build up our new party from its ruins." That was their hope and purpose. They undoubtedly made themselves believe they could do it. They saw that the Republican defeat in 1884 would have been impossible if the third party had not been a factor in the campaign and they were confident that they could do more in 1888 than they did in 1884. But let us take a front view of the Dickie for governor, Rapid strides the of the third party and all opposition the Republicans have won their greatest National victory since 1872. What does this mean? We ask you third party leaders-what does this mean? Do you not see that you have reached the end of your rope? You were gothe northern States. The latest sum- ing to build up your party from the ruins of the Republican party. Where are the ruins? Not available, are they? your present or future assets. The speaker was Chief Operator William Lloyd, of the main office of the Western Union in this city. Mr. Lloyd went on to explain why a message could not be sent such a long distance on a continuous line.

"Land telegraphing and sea telegraphing are totally different," said Mr. Lloyd, "and that is where the hitch comes in. If I want to send a message to Bombay, for instance, it first goes to New York. then to Torbay, Newfoundland. It is taken down there and is sent by another system to Queenstown, Ireland. It is received there, not by sound, but by reflection. The operator sits in a dark room and the spark from the wire is shown in a looking glass. This is reflected on the wall, and is read in that way, From this point it goes to London by the ordinary method. From there it is sent to the African cable line leading across the Channel, down the Mediterranean and the Red sea to the Indian ocean, there it takes to Bombay. Probably fifteen operators handle the message before it reaches its destination, and to say that a message can be sent through without a stop is nonsense. The work is done very quickly, though, and a message to Calcutta or Bombay would go through in two hours, perhaps three, according to the way the wires are working. "Beating" the Machine. The schemes whereby the knowing ones nowadays beat the "drop-a-nickel" machine are so numerous that the business is threatened with ruin. Bismarck's Famous Sentence. It is proposed to use the famous sentence of Prince Bismarck, "We Germans fear God, but nothing else," as the national German motto. A number of students have been hunting for the origin of that expression ever since, to prove that there is nothing new under the sun. One finds it in Racine's "Athalie," as the saying of the high priest Joash, and another has discovered a passage almost identical in Carlyle's eloquent description of Abbot Samson ("Past and Present." book II, chapter 17). #### Harper's Bazar. ILLUSTRATED.

HARPER'S BAZAR will continue to maintain its reputation as an unqualified family journal. Its art illustrations are of the highest order, its literature is of the choicest kind, and its Fashion and Household departments of the most practical and economical character. Its pattern-sheet supple ments and fashion-plates alone will save its readers ten times the cost of subscription, and its articles on decorative art, social etiquette, house keeping, cookery, etc., make it indispensable to every household. Its bright short stories, and imely essays, are among the best published; and not a line is admitted to its columns that could offend the most fastidious taste. Among the at tractions of the new volume will be serial stories by Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett, Mrs. Alex-ANDER, WILLIAM BLACK, and THOMAS HARDY, and a series of papers on nursery management by Mrs. Christine Ternune Herrick.

THE TIME THAT HAS ELAPSED SINCE THE BRITISH REVOLUTION.

The Constitutional Powers Then Won by the People of England the Forerungers of the Present System of Government in the United States.

The British are now beginning a series of local celebrations to end in one grand celebration of the most important event in mod-ern history, the revolution of 1688. Strictly speaking, the revolution began June 30, 1688, when a junta of noblemen invited William, Prince of Orange, son-in-law of the king, to come over with a force sufficient to preserve the liberties of England; it reached its climax Nov. 5. when William landed at Torbay in Devonshire, and ended officially Feb. 13, 1689, when William and Mary were proclaimed joint sovereigns of England, Scotland and Ireland, with the declaration that the administration should be in William, and the succession provided for alternately in the offspring of Mary and William, of Mary by ny other husband than William and of Wil liam by any other wife than Mary. By this act the character of the British government was finally established, substantially as it is now-a limited and strictly constitutional monarchy, the power in the house of commons. The sovereign is administrator only, the government extremely flexible in character, yielding readily to the will of the people and securing to a degree never before attained all the advantages of stability and far more than the advantages usually gained by revolution. In short, the British statesmen have wrought out a system of government in which revolution is peaceful and continuous, and yet liberty, property and order are bet-ter secured than under the most rigid despot-

The Dutch revolution of the Sixteenth century, the British revolution of the Seventeenth century and the American revolution of the Eighteenth century are simply three closely connected chapters in the serial evolution of liberty. The first established the right of a homogeneous people to rule its own country absolutely free from the dictation of any foreign power; the second established the principle that government exists not by divine right, nor yet for the pleasure of the governors, but solely for the benefit of the governed, and that each people is the best adge of what is best for its own happiness and government; the third, or American revolution, carried this principle to its logical outcome in personal freedom, popular institutions and the complete severance of church and state. The constitution of the United States is simply a liberalized or popularized form of the modern British constitution. No essential element is omitted. The modern British constitution is a slight improvement on the older British constitutions, and they grew up by a union of the feudal system of the Normans and the tribal and local self-government of the Saxons. The element of per sonal freedom is Saxon, and 2,000 years ago in the forests of Germany there existed, in the germ, trial by jury or right of appeal to the vicinage, the sacredness of the person of a freeman and the dignity of woman, which are the basis and the essential elements of an American's liberty today.

The Norman conquest fastened upon England the rule of the church, or more properly perhaps, the cast iron union of church and state, of which the English have been slowly relieving themselves through all the progress of S00 years. The United States government began by completing the separation of church and state, but as the colonies had become states before the national government was established, the union of church and state still prevailed in many of them and was not entirely done away with until the administration of John Quincy Adams. All these and many other fact make the revolution of 1688 and the following years the most important of all eras in British history.

WILLIAM OF ORANGE AND HIS COUNCILLORS It was then, too, that the various religious sects of England, which had been in a formative condition since the time of Elizabeth and had suffered what might be called a social fever during the commonwealth and been cruelly persecuted during the administration of Charles and James—it was then, in the revolution of 1688, that they took final form and obtained for the first time a fair measure of liberty.

There were four Stuart kings of England,

each pre-eminent in some special vice or folly.
The first, James VI of Scotland, and I of England, was in almost every element of his character an object of pity and contempt. He was, perhaps, the most despicable man of his age. His son, Charles I, by a natural reaction, was a gloomy fanatic, who, as near as we can setermine, actually believed that it was God's will that he should deceive his subjects and rule them despotically. After the commonwealth and rule of Cromwell the restoration brought in his son, Charles II, a saunterer and voluptuary, wasteful, in dolent and good natured, who did not feel the contempt of mankind be-cause he was below it. Similarly another reaction was exhibited in the character of his brother and successor, James II, a gloomy, obstinate fanatic—a man so bigoted that he refused to be restrained even by the pope, and so determinedly despotic that even his own ministers of despotism were alarmed at his measures. This, the last Catholic king of England, succeeded his brother in February, 1685, and at once began a series of acts violating the most charished prejudices as well as the dearest rights of Englishmen. By his own act he assumed to dispense with statutes, to compel the universities to receive members contrary to their charter and the courts to find verdicts favorable to the crown. Rebellion followed, but the better class of Englishmen were not ready and the abortive rising of Argyle in Scot land and Monmouth in the west of England were suppressed with the utmost cruelty, and that of Monmouth was followed by the celebrated Bloody Assize, the details of which, even now, cannot be read without horror. In a few weeks the notorious Judge Jeffries caused to be hanged over 300 persons, besides punishing and ruining by heavy fines a much larger number.

· Not satisfied with his first experience, King James had the temerity to directly attack the church of England, and when six bishops and the archbishop of Canterbury united in a protest they were imprisoned and prosecuted on the plea that the protest was a libel. The trial was one of the most exciting state trials in British history, and the jury, after being locked up all night, returned verdict of not guilty. Perhaps even then King James' acts might have been borne by his subjects if he had not surpassed all that could be believed possible in folly by attempting to completely reverse the existing system of government in Ireland, overthrowing British supremacy there, and to raise an army of Irishmen and a standing army in England without warrant of law. The disaffection now took the form of open rebellion. The Earl of Devonshire, the Bishop of London, Lord Edward Russel, Henry Sidney, the Earl of Danby, George Savile, Marquis of Halifax, and many others concerted popular risings in various parts of the country and sent an invitation to William, prince of Orange and stadtholder of the Dutch republic, whose wife Mary was the eldest daughter of King James, and had been born and bred a Protestant, her mother being English and of that faith. On the 1st of November, 1688, William embarked from Helvoetsluys with thirteen ships of war and about 14,000 men, hoisting a flag which displayed the arms of Nassau and England. On the 5th of November, the anniversary of the gunpowder plot he landed at Tor bay, and as he marched toward London the people, led by the noble-men, supported him almost en masse. With him were several of the most noted soldiers of the continent, especially the Count Marshal Schomberg, a Protestant exile from France. At Exeter William was received with extraordinary cermonies and there was a service performed in the great cathedral. One by one the prominent men of the British army and navy went over to the sup-port of the prince and after many changes of plan King James, with his wife and infant son, son of Mary of Modena, the Catholic second wife of the king, fled from London and took ship for France. William, acting on the advice of the Whig lords, called a parliament consisting of all who were entitled to sit in any of the late parliaments; but as this parliament was made without the formal and legal issue of the king's writ, it resolved itself into a convention, which drew up a declaration setting forth the liberties of England and providing new securities against the encroachments of the crown, especially the habeas corpus, and then formally bestowed the crown upon William and Mary. Then began the great division in British politics which has continued with various changes and modifications to the present day-a division which exists in all the countries where men are free a division between those who want more power and those who want more libertybetween those who think a strong central government the best security for the country and those who are willing to trust more to the love of free citizens.

The famous Declaration of Rights was drawn up by a parliamentary committee and adopted by both houses. It condemned every form of interference with the liberty of the citizen not warranted by the strictest construction of law and support of a judicial ruling: condemned the ecclesiastical commis sion and other arbitrary methods of interfering with the English church, and condemned standing armies not provided for by express warrant of parliament. It denied the right of any king to dispense with the laws or raise money without the consent of parliament. It asserted the rights of petition, free election and a pure and merciful adminis-tration of justice. It asserted the free-dom of delate in both houses of parliament and declared that the prince and princess of Orange were king and queen of England. The Declaration of Rights was accepted by King William and Queen Mary and remains the great modern charter of British liberties. The American colonies were founded with the implied promise that the principles of that charter extended to them. Their forms of government were modifications of the British system of king, lords and commons, and from the establishment of the colonial governments until the beginning of the troubles which led to the American revolution, the Anglo-Americans enjoye? the liberties of Englishmen. The liberty f Americans is but a continuation and improvement of the liberties their forefathers enjoyed as Englishmen. So the re-volution of 1688 has for all of us an interest only second, if second at all, to that which it has to the people of Great Britain and Ire-

The exiled king took up his residence at the French court and a long war followed, England, Holland, Austria, Spain, Savoy and several of the minor German state being leagued against France. King William and Queen Mary died without issue. The house of Orange ceased to rule in England and the crown reverted to Anne younger sister of Mary, who, though often a mother, died in turn without issue, and tho British parliament was compelled to go back to an offshoot of the Stuart line, married to the elector palatine of Germany, to find the nearest heir to the crown, which brought in the Georges and the house of Brunswick and finally Queen Victoria. THE ACCIDENT TO THE CZAR.

A Picture of It Has Just Been Received in America and It Is Here Reproduced. A Russian officer who was an eye witness of the accident on the Russian railway last October, by which the lives of the czar and other members of the royal family were endangered, made a sketch of the train breaking and fall ing off the embankment, which is herewith reproduced. The accident happened at noon, and as it has been made the subject of official investigation its details may be briefly recounted here. The train was drawn by two engines and was composed of several cars besides the czar's saloon carriage, which was of massive construction. The disaster was due to the bad state of the line, which had been superficially repaired. The rails were not strong enough to support the train, and

THE CZAR'S TRAIN AFTER THE ACCIDENT. the car in which the minister of roads was traveling ran off the line. The czar and his family were in the saloon carriage. The emperor was just about to take coffee, which had been handed him by a footman. The latter was killed, likewise the dog which was lying at the czar's feet. The floor of the car collapsed, and all the occupants were thrown to the ground. The train stopped immediately, and this was the only thing that saved their lives. The Grand Duchess Olga was thrown out to a distance of several yards without being hurt. It is said that the emperor exhibited great strength in releasing himself and family from the car. The director of the railroad is reported to have shot himself in his office.

WHAT WILL HE GET?

THE QUESTION OF THE DAY RE-GARDING J. S. CLARKSON, OF IOWA.

The Talk Is Pretty Evenly Divided Between a Cabinet Portfolio and the Office of Public Printer-His Paper, the Iowa State Register, His Home and His Career.

What will be given to J. S. Clarkson? He worked faithfully for the success of the Republican party during the recent campaign, and he has always been one of its

Whether he will go into the cabinet, the public printing office, or some other office, there seems to be general conviction that he will receive something worth having.

James Sullivan Clarkson is the editor of The Iowa State Register, at Des Moines, Ia., one of the strongest and wealthiest newspapers in the northwest, but he became known to party fame principally as chairman of the Republican national committee during and following the campaign of 1884. Had the statesman from Maine been elected, it was commonly understood that the loyal Iowa editor could have had any position within the gift of the presidency, from the cabinet

Mr. Clarkson was born at Brookville, Ind., in 1844, and is therefore 44 years old, just in the prime of life He is the second son of C. F. Clarkson, who was at that time editing The Brookville American, and who early pressed his two boys, Richard and James into the service of the office as type setters and "devils." At the ages of 10 and 8 J. S. CLARKSON.

respectively the youngsters had learned the cases, and acquired their primer ideas and tastes for the brilliant and successful journalistic careers they have since recorded on the tablet of time. In 1856 the senior Clarkson sold out the Hoosier journal and removed with his two boys to Grundy county, Ia., where he bought a farm and started out to make grangers of them. Their farm life and experience covered a period of about ten years, although Richard went to the war in 1861 and served to the end of it. The year 1865 found the senior Clarkson in the state senate from the Grundy county district. Richard and James had been left at home to run the farm, but grangerism was odious to them, and they had ong been kicking in the traces, being consumed as they were with their inherent and irrepressible ambitions to enter the field of journalism. It was at this time that James wrote to his father and stated that he had an opportunity to buy a half interest in The Eldora, Ia., Herald, a little country paper, which his building enthusiasm led him to covet as the proverbial tide which needed but the seizing to open the wonted way to fame and fortune. The senator, however, had loftier ideas and plans for his sons, and promptly discouraged The Eldora sche "If you are determined to abandon the farm and enter journalism as a following," the father wrote, "then aim higher than a little

Thereupon James abandoned the idea of going to Eldora, and next besought his father to get him a position in Des Moines. This he of surgical aid. Dr. Sands, however, per did, and James soon arrived in the then young and undeveloped capital city of Iowa and entered The Register establishment as the composing room cub. To cut a long story short, the hitherto imprisoned journal-istic genius reveled in its freedom, and James rapidly ascended the ladder of success. Inside of four years he had risen step by step to the foremanship of the news room, the night or telegraphic editorship, the city editorship, and finally, the political editorship, under the Mills & Co. administration of The Register, all of which positions he filled with success Meanwhile his orother Richar, had also quit the farm and followed his brother to The Register, upon which he held cases. One day in 1870 James hurried post haste to the parental farm in Grundy county, and excitedly disclosed to his father that The Register property was for sale, that Mills & Register property was for safe, that and come Co., the owners, had thred of it and given him an option for thirty days at $30,000. Father and son returned to the city, countries the contribution of the city. seled with Richard, and the three decided to secure the golden egg. The farm was sold for the necessary $5,000, for the first payment, and their firm notes given for the ance, B. F. Allen, the then celebrated town banker, backing the Clarksons in the enterprise. The Iown State Register now entered upon a new career, with Mr. J. S. Clarkson in the editorial chair, assisted by Father Clarkson, who established the farm department, and Mr. R. P. Clarkson as business manager. Des Moines was upon the threshold of a new boom. The Rock Island railway had just banded the state, and the other trunk lines began to look in the direction of the capital city. To The Register, now the leading paper of the state, came power and money. First came the state printing and next the postoffice. Meanwhile, advertising and subscriptions poured in, and The Register, under the Clarkson regime, flourished like a green bay tree, not only speedily wiping out the debt assumed by the new proprietors, but laying the foundation of three comfortable fortunes, and all this in the space of ten years.

DES MOINES REGISTER BUILDING. From $30,000 in 1870 The Register property in 1880 had increased in value to over $100,000, that sum, it is said, having been refused for it. It is today probably worth more. In 1863 The Register block was remodeled and

While The Register has increased in valuation, enriched its proprietors and made many friends, it has also created regiments of enemics. Mr. J. S. Clarkson, the editor-inchief, knows nothing of the neutral or medium plane in his work. Popular editors are rare the world over, but with the exception of his political trainers and a few pet friends, Mr. J. S. Clarkson leads the life of a recluse. He is seldom seen in society or at the play, and never except on extraordinary occasions. He is reserved to a fault in manner, though devoted and generous to his family and intimate circle. Excepting during a political campaign he lives so entirely in his editorial rooms and at his home that the people of Des Moines never know when he is at home or

The homes of the proprietors of The Register are among the handsomest in the city of Des Moines. Along in the sixties Mr. Clarkson married a lovely country girl at Pella and took her to Des Moines, where they started in humbly enough at first; but with the Clarkson administration of The Register came wealth, social position and all that follows in their train. Four sons have sealed the

The business maker of The Register property, Mr. Richard Proctor Clarkson, is one of the eccentricities of the city and state. He is droll enough to have taken to the stage as a humorist, sober enough to have studied for the cloth, and independent enough to be president. He tired of the farm as carly as cured a situation as a type setter in The Register concern, which was then owned by Hon. Frank Palmer. He had hardly mastered the intricacies of the case and limbered his plow stiffened fingers, however, when the call came for volunteers, and he enlisted in the Federal army. At the close of the war he returned to Des Moines and The Register as an employe, and when in 1870 it passed into the Clarkson control be materialized as its business manager. In this position Des Moines knew him only. For twenty years he has been one of the most devoted hard workers in the city, putting in about fifteen hours' labor every day, and seldom, if ever, deserting his post. He is almost gruff in his manner, never parleying with the obstinate or taking time from business for arguing or jesting. To this day, on every Wednesday, he pulls off his coat and repairs to the composing room, where he proceeds to make up the forms of the weekly, his "pet" of the establish ment, and which has jumped from a circulation of about 1,000 copies in 1870 to between 15,000 and 20,000 at the present, largely due to Father Clarkson's able and far famed "Farm and Agricultural Department." Richard, or "Dick," as he is called in Des Moines, is the elder of the two brothers. He is business from the word go, never goes in debt or buys anything that he can't afford or

He was graduated from the College of Physicians and Surgeons in 1854, and at once entered Bellevue hospital, where he served for a time as medical and surgical in terne. He then went to Europe to further study his profession, but in 1857 was invited to become demonstrator of anatomy at the New York College of Physicians and Surgeons, and returned from abroad to assume

BENNY M'KEE, WHO WILL BE THE PET OF THE WHITE HOUSE.

HERE IS HIS GRANDSON.

had enough impudence to ask him.

-Philadelphia News.

Some Further Gossip About the Home Life of the President-elect and His Family, with Some Particular Notes Upon the Son, Russell Harrison.

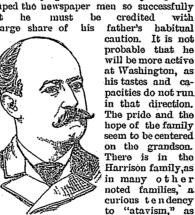

Bennie McKee will be the baby of the White House for the next four years, and the boss, too, by all accounts, though he has a little sister who was born while the Chicago convention was in session and would seem therefore, to be a child of promise. Benjamin Harrison McKee, as the full name of the president-elect's grandson and pet runs, is but twenty months old; and, making all allowances for the natural tendency of journalists to find "cuteness" in a president's grandson, the little fellow really is very bright and at-

He sits next to his grandfather at the table and is the boss of the house when that gentleman is at home; he has already mastered that fact, and shouts with the delight of a suddenly freed child when he sees his great ancestor coming up the front walk. Little Ben is the son of J. Robert McKee and Mrs. Mamie Harrison McKee. Mr. McKee is in the wholesale boot and shoe trade, and is the son of one of the wealthiest men in Indianap-When he won Gen. Harrison's daughter he was allowed to marry her only on the condition that the young people would agree to make their home with the Harrisons, and this explains why they all have lived together in the general's house at No. 674 Delaware street.

Often when visitors were coming in platoons to see his distinguished gr..ndfather, young Benjamin McKee would be carried in on his grandmother's shoulder, and, nestling there, would shake in great glee the hands of the callers. He also persists in crawling into the room of the president-elect, and helping him confer with party leaders. No one will restrain him, and he seems to know it. Already he is as big a man as Gen. Harrison, and if he keeps on growing, he will be a strong factor in the next administration. His sister Mary, though not quite able to help her brother receive visitors, gives promise of taking much honor to herself in Washington. It is a long time since there have been babies in the White House, and there will surely be delightful amusement some of these coming days, when the two Harrison grandchildren shall insist upon descending to the Blue room, or some other room, to help the president shake the hands of the long lines of people.

Benjamin Harrison and Caroline Scott were married when he was but twenty and she nineteen years of age, and became the parents of two children. The first was the son Russell, and the next was the daughter Mary Scott. Each is living and married. Russell caught the heart of Minnic, the daughter of Senator Saunders, of Nebraska, and lives with her at the head of a stock farm near Helena, Montana. Mary Harrison married J. R. McKee, a merchant in Indianapolis. While these children were growing, the father, busy with law cases and battles and politics, and then with law cases again, increased his earnings, but never got them far beyond his constantly growing expenses. Nevertheless the young Harrisons saw a great deal of society, and Miss Mamie was quite a belle. They had dances and receptions for their friends and made the Harrison home quite a social center in Indianapolis. Russell Harrison never became prominent in Indiana politics, and in a state so intensely political, non-action means either total indifference to or incapacity for politics. He is a business man, and a rather quiet one. Soon after the campaign began he came to his father's at the latter's request, and though he did some work during the campaign he did it so quietly and escaped the newspaper men so successfully that he must be credited with a large share of his father's habitual caution. It is not in that direction. The pride and the hope of the family seem to be centered on the grandson. Harrison family as in many other curious tendency "atavism," as RUSSELL HARRISON. the Darwinians call it; that is, the same or similar traits reappear in each second or third generation. From the English regicide Harrison to the Harrison who signed the Declaration of Independence was considerable of a gap; but the president of a month in 1841 is partially reproduced in his descendants. Although Benjamin Harrison's father was once a member of congress, he was such a quiet one that he will probably live in history only as the son of one president and the father of another; and it is reasonable to expect that after the present president-elect the family greatness will take a long rest till the grandson comes to the front.

ELIJAH W. HALFORD.

The Journalist Who Has Been Selected Private Secretary to President-Elect. Elijah W. Halford, editor of The Indianapolis Journal, who has been made private secretary to President elect Harrison, is a native of England, came to this country when a child with his parents, who settled in Cincinnati, is now 43 years of age, and began his newspaper career twenty-five years ago as a typesetter on The Indianapolis Journal. After a time he became a reporter and from that time has constantly worked his way unward. He was for a time managing editor of The Chicago Inter Ocean, and before he became editor of The Journal was connected with The Indianapolis News. He has long been intrusted with much important work for his party, and was a delegate to last summer's convention at Chicago, where he did much good work ELIJAH W. HALFORD.

for Col. New, who engineered Gen. Harrison's campaign there. Mr. Halford's hair is turning gray. He wears glasses, is slender and of medium height. His manner is pleasant and obliging. His religious tendencies are as strong as those of Mr. Harrison, although he is a Meth-odist instead of a Presbyterian, being a lay preacher in his church. Up to the beginning of the recent campaign he had never missed a weekly prayer meeting. He has a wife

When Mr. Halford was a reporter he was what is known in the west as a "hustler," and many entertaining stories are told about that period of his life. This one is too good to let slip:

Being assigned to report a hanging, he determined to find out if possible whether con-sciousness deserted the victim at the moment the drop fell or not. In conversation with the condemned man he said:

"My friend, have you any objection to help settle a scientific question? There has been a good deal of talk in the newspapers lately as to whether a man who is hung has any consciousness or feeling after the drop falls. Now, if you choose, you can settle this question?

"Well," said Halford, "suppose you have consciousness after the drop falls. If you will just wiggle the little finger of the right hand that will be a signal to me. I will know you are conscious as long as the finger The man was not easily persuaded, but Halford's eloquence finally overcame him. It is not recorded that the finger wiggled.

WENT BACK ON PARNELL.

Capt. O'Shea, Who Has Been Playing the Role of Informer. Capt. O'Shea, who was once the object of the misplaced confidence of Mr. Parnell and, in fact, of many of the most prominent members of the Irish party, has made a great sensation by testifying against Parnell in the celebrated Times suit, and playing the disgraceful role of the informer. It is assumed that he is well paid for taking the part of the traitor. He is an extremely adroit and unscrupulous man, and one who would hesitate at nothing that would tend to the accomplishment of his own ends.

He is a great poser. In court he is dressed elaborately, strikes attitude for the exhibition of his muscular physique, constantly pulls out of his pocket a perfumed white handker-chief with a blue border, toys with splendid gold glasses, and acts the exquisite to perfection. But all the same by his traitorous action he has probably brought contumely upon himself as long as he lives.

JULIUS CÆSAR BURROWS.

He Has Been Making a "Still Hunt" for the House Speakership. Of course the gossip of the country just now is all about the men who will secure positions in the Harrison administration. One of those talked about very freely is Julius Cæsar Burrows, representative in congress from the Fourth Michigan district. Mr. Burrows has a great desire to be speaker of the next house of representatives. He has more than a desire; he has a conviction that his desire will be realized, and so have many of his friends. It is stated in recent dispatches that Mr. *Burrows was satisfied early in tho recent campaign that Mr. Harrison 母际 would not only be elected, but that the majority of the house would be Republican, and he began laying plans at once for the speakership. In short, he conducted with some vigor J. c. Burrows.

these latter days as "a still hunt." Mr. Burrows hails from Kalamazoo. He is tall, has square shoulders, and is as erect as a soldier-in fact, he was a soldier from 1862 to 1864. He weighs 200 pounds. This information is found duly set forth in the pages of Mr. J. H. Truesdell's "Our States-

Mr. Burrows was born in Erie county, Pa., in 1837. He studied in the common schools and the local academy. When he was graduated from the latter institution he studied law. Then he went to war, and when it was over he removed to Kalamazoo, where he became prosecuting attorney. He devoted a good deal of his time to politics and was a member of the house during the Fortythird, Forty-sixth, Forty-seventh and Forty-ninth congresses, being re-elected to the Fiftieth. In 1884 President Arthur offered to him the assistant attorney generalship, but

How Amputation Is Performed. The layman is often surprised to note how slight are the external manifestations of serious diseases which sometimes call for radical surgical treatment. Dr. Warren brought in before the medical class at the Massachusetts general hospital not long ago an old man upon whose right hand there appeared to be a small sore spot, not at all malignant or painful in its appearance. It was situated directly upon the back of the hand, and seemed to be no more than a trifling local sore that could be easily healed The patient was a man of more that 89 years. Dr. Warren explained that the trouble was of a cancerous nature: that it had manifested itself in no other part of the body, and that amputation seemed to be the only safe course to resort to. He accordingly proposed to take off the hand just above the wrist before the malignant disease had a chance to

The usual application of rubber bandage and tight rubber cord above the point of amputation was made, and the surgeon made rapid work of the case. A single sweep of the knife just over the wrist severed the skin and a little deeper The tissues were then dissected upward for nearly an inch toward the elbow to the point where the bone was to be cut in order to make a flap. The flesh was quickly cut to the bones, and a few strokes of the saw severed them. The wound was antiseptically treated and sewed up, and in ten or fifteen minutes from the time he was brought in the old man was picked up by a strong attendant and carried back to his cot in the surgical ward.—New York Sun.
