-Nashua Telegraph. A DOMESTIC CHRONICLE

"Well, my dear," said Mr. James Cavendish, entering his wife's room, I've sent that girl of yours about her business.

Mrs. Cavendish looked up with a start. She was buttoning Bob's apron, patiently following him about the room as he frisked after the cat. "What?" said she in a dismayed

"I spoke distinctly enough, didn't 1?
—have—discharged—Lucy!" "What for, James?" "Insolence, that's all." "But Lucy never could have been in-solent." pleaded Mrs. Cavendish, twisting off the last button from Bob's apron in her perturbation. "Oh, couldn't she, though? I just wish you had been there, that's all." "What did she say?" "I told her she was half an hour behind with breakfast, and asked her what she meant by it; and she told me she was doing the best she could, and could not do better if all the world de-"But, James, the poor girl is nearly frantic with toothache this morning.'

"I can't help that; she had no busi ness to answer me so impudently. It wasn't the words so much—it was the manner." "Poor Lucy! And you've discharged

"That's you all over," said Mr. Cavendish, angrily. "I believe you'd take anybody else's part against me. Of course I discharged her. I told her to have her things outside of the house in two hours or I'd fling them out of the window." "But, James, what am I to do?" said Mrs. Cavendish, who had by this time captured Ethel, the second child, and was buttoning her boots with nervous rapidity. "With one of my sick headaches coming on, and Willie and Pen down with the measles, and not one soul to lift a hand for me." "That's a pretty question to ask," said Mr. Cavendish, standing with his hands in his pockets. "One would think you women were made of sugar or salt nowadays. My mother had ten children—ten—and did every stroke of work for them herself, year in and year out, and here you make a rumpus because you happen to be left without a servant for twenty-four hours-because, of course, I shall expect to stop at Wiggins', and send you up a Norwegian or a Swede this afternoon." Poor Mrs. Cavendish burst into tears "James," said she, "Lucy was the best girl I have ever had. You should not have sent her out of the house in this way. How would you like it if I went down to your wholesale boot and shoe place and discharged your clerks?"

"I should say you did perfectly right," replied Cavendish, "if they answered you impertinently. Now, don't snivel! If there is anything I hate it is a scene. I'll go down stairs and boil the coffee myself-any one can make coffee-and you hurry down with the children as soon as you can. There is plenty of bread and butter and cold boiled ham, anyhow. Nobody ever starved on that." Mr. Cavendish had "camped out" a good deal during his bachelor days, and succeeded in preparing a very good pot of coffee. The bread and butter and cold ham were not bad of their kind, but the children cried aloud for milk. The Cayendishes kept a cow, and the milk had not been brought in.

"And that was what kept Lucy!" in voluntarily cried Mrs. Cavendisb. "Condensed milk is good enough for anybody," asserted Mr. Cavendish. But Bob and Ethel declined to drink "Starve 'em to it!" said the father, drinking his hot coffee in prodigious "Healthy children have no ousiness to be dainty." and made a bee line for the train.

Mrs. Cavendish looked piteously around at the disordered table, the ashchoked fire, the general desolation of the room. Her headache was gradually working itself up to the supreme moment of desperation. The children above stairs were crying for breakfast. Bob was sailing his shoe in the cedar pail of water; Ethel was feeding the kitten from the can of condensed milk. "Ma," piped up Bob, "there's a tramp at the kitchen winder!" But it was no tramp. It was Miles the stable man. "Oh, Miles, I am so glad!" said Mrs.

Cavendish. "You have brought us the milk?" "I haven't that, mum," said Miles. 'The cow's lost, an' it's not meself is goin' to track her all through the swamps an' bogs. If the master wants his cow took care of, he's got to pay me a dollar a week more wages."

"Yis'm!" boldly retorted the man. "I ain't to be put upon no longer. Doctor Miller's man—" "Very well," said Mrs. Cavendish, "Ma'am!" echoed astonished Miles "You are discharged," said Mrs. Cavendish, firmly; "at once!"

Miles slunk away and disappeared. Mrs. Cavendish went up to her room, and after administering as well as she could to the wants of the poor little victims of measles she threw herself on the bed, with a wet towel bound around her head and despair in her

"There's one comfort," said Mrs. Cavendish, gloomily smiling, "if he discharged Lucy, I have sent away Miles!" has for its clasp a tassel of gold with Mr. Cavendish had an unusually long ends, each tipped with a pearl.

busy day in the city. As he was hurry-ing toward the depot in the afternoon he remembered that his mission to Mr. Wiggins' famous "intelligence bureau" was yet unfulfilled. "Confound it!" said Mr. Cavendish to himself. "However, to-morrow will do just as well. My mother did without any help at all!" At the station no buggy was wait-

"I wonder what that lazy villain Miles is doing!" said Mr. Cavendish, a dark frown gathering upon his brow. "He may think he's got a snug rlace of it, but I'll teach him I'm not to be trifled with!"

"When he reached Althea Lodge everything was disorganized. Ethel was pulling the feathers out of the peacock's tail. Bob was galloping around the barnyard on the back of Pounce, the pony.
"We're having such fun, pa!" he cried, as his father entered the yard.

'Pounce hasn't been fed, 'cause I could not find the key of the oat bin and the cow is lost. Such fun!"
"Where is Miles?" roared the father. "Ma discharged him."

"'Cause he talked saucy to her." Mr. Cayendish stood a moment staring at the pony and the peacock, the boy and the girl.
"Ethel," said he, "let that bird go.
Robert, get off the pony at once and come into the house."

"What for?"

Ethel obeyed reluctantly; Robert with alacrity. "We've got company," chirped the latter youth—"company, pa; I most forgot to tell you. And ma's in bed with the headache, and there's no one to get any supper. Hooray!"

Mr. Cavendish hurried into the house The parlor was undusted, yesterday's flowers were wilted in the vases, and the fire had died into a mass of feathery cinders. Through the open door was visible the dining-room, with the remains of the breakfast still on the table—as dispiriting a scene as could well be beheld. And there, in the midst of all this forlornity, sat Mrs. Burgoyne, his sister from the West, to whom he had frequently boasted of the perfection of his wife's housekeeping arrangements, and a Mrs. Ridgway, who may warrs are had been a sort who once, years ago, had been a sort of sweet friend of his. Of all people, he was most anxious that his home should appear pleasant in the eyes of those two women! and now-He made the best of it, however. He extended to them an ostentatiously hospitable welcome, hurriedly built up a blazing cannel cal fire in the grate, and hastened up-stairs to where poor Mrs. Cavendish was deluging her forehead in cologne and endeavoring to twist up the wet braids of her heavy hair into company order.

'Julia," said he, "what does this mean? Miles gone-" "I discharged him," said she, resolutely. "You said that I was perfectly justifiable in doing so, if he spoke

"But what am I to do?" "Precisely the question I asked you this morning." Mr. Cavendish had nothing further to say for himself. He simply muttered some kind of an anthema between his closed lips. "Do you know," he said, "that there is company down stairs?" "Yes; but until this moment I have been unable to leave my bed." "My dear," he said compassionately, putting. his arm around her shoulder, loes your head ache so hard?' "It is better now, James."

"I do believe," slowly observed Mr. Cavendish, "that I have been a fool." "Ob. James!"

"I wish I hadn't flown into such a passion with poor Lucy. And a'l about nothing, too, when one comes to think

Mrs. Cavendish laughed bysterically. "We a 1 make mistakes, James," said "Wait a moment, dear, I'll go down stairs with you now, if you'll give me your arm. I couldn't ask your sister and her friend up here with the children sick with measles, could I?" "Who is with them now-the children, I mean?"

"A handy young girl from the village—Lucy's sister."
"Couldn't—couldn't she help us with the dinner?" ventured Mr. Cavendish. "She is too young. Besides, she has had no experience. But, James-"

"Yes, Julia!" "Open confession is good for the soul," said Mrs. Cavendish. "Lucy came back to me about two hours ago. She said you had sent her away, but that she could not bear to leave me at such a time. She is getting dinner down stairs now."

"She's a trump!" cried Mr. Cavendish. Scarcely had he introduced his wife to the ladies in the parlor than the folding doors of the back room slid open, revealing a bright fire and a well-spread table, decorated with spring flowers-daffodils, tulips and a few purple spikes of lilac. A pair of ducks had been roasted in the best and most tempting style. Ther: were sweet breads and chicken salad by way of entrees; a delicious steamed pudding sent forth its perfume from the kitchen, and Lucy was just bringing in the tomato soup.

Mr. Cavendish nodded good-humoredly toward her. She courtesied respect-

"You needen't worry about the horse and cow, sir," she said in a low voice. "Peter Frink, from the Low farm, is coming to attend to them." While the rest were discussing the steamed pudding and prune pie, Lucy slipped into the parlor, and to use her own terms, "straightened" up the dis-And he caught up his hat and ulster order there, and the last impression taken away by the visitors was one of neatness and comfort. Mr. Cavendish drew a long breath as he watched the retreating footsteps of his company toward the road that led to the train. "Julia," said he, turning to his wife, "I've come to the conclusion that times have changed since my mother did the work for ten children without any ser-"I quite agree with you," said Mrs. Cavendish, quietly. "And I was entirely wrong when I sent Lucy away; and you were quite right when you discharged Miles. So henceforward, my dear, we will try to mingle a little common sense with our housekeeping. Eh—shall we?" Mrs. Cavendish smiled as she assent-

How He Escaped Siberia.

The recent outrage by the Siberian officials in flogging two women brings to mind an episode of the daring escape of a Siberian exile at Moscow, as told by an Englishman, apropos of his residence in that city for some two years. "The exile," said he, "was the leader of a band of Nihilists noted for their daring. He had many aliases, but was generally known as Petrovski. Physically he was one of the most perfect men I ever saw. He was of a dark complexion, stood over six feet high, and was built in proportion. It seemed that be and part of his band had been captured in connection with some plot the authorities had unearthed, and had been sentenced to life servitude in the mines of Kara. Knowing only too well what this meant, the men had become desparate as caged lions by the time they reached Mos-cow, and were willing to take any chances to effect their escape. If I re-member correctly there were about a thousand prisoners in this cavalcade, and they were guarded by a regiment of St. Petersburg soldiers. Unlike the other prisoners Petrovski and his party were handcuffed to each other. They were under a double guard, as it was known that they would make an attempt to escape should the opportunity offer. No chance offered, however, until the day of starting for the mines arrived. The soldiers who were guarding the party appeared to be rather under the influence of liquor, and were not so vigilant as usual. I stood on the stoop of a small inn within ten feet of Petrovski, and from the expression of his face I knew some-thing was in the wind. The officer who had charge of this part of the prisoners, who was noted for his brutality, had mounted his horse and stood near the party. The guards had walked off some distance and were conversing together. I saw Petrovski working at his handcuff, and then I saw him draw a common dinner knife out of his pocket. The movement did not attract attention, and then he turned slightly, so that his back was toward the officer. Then I saw that he was going to attempt one of the most desparate escapes ever heard of. The man was certainly amputating his thumb with the table-knife, so as to allow the handcuff to slip over his hand! He worked at it, never flinching, until the thumb dropped at his feet. The blood was flowing from the wound in a stream, and he tied it up in a rag after drawing the skin over the wound and slipped the handcuff off. His companions were aware of his movements, but stood like a statue. The suppressed excitement I was sufa tramp at the time." n't go," said a lawyer. "I know because I've tried it. I proposed to my

A little later I met her again in the parlor of a hotel and suggested marriage again. She accepted me then. Something New.

Chicago has inaugurated a new system of rapid transit by means of a showy looking vehicle called the "carette," which is described as a kind of combination stage and street rail-way car. Each vehicle will seat twenty persons. It is claimed by the promoters that the carette is the handsomest and most convenient and easy riding vehicle ever put upon the streets for public accommodation. The seats and back are upholstered and contain springs. The vehicles are specially constructed for ease and comfort, and rest upon patented springs of novel egress. There is said to be an absolute freedom from jolting in motion. Fast motor is only horse power, there are no blockades such as obstruct street mile before we were missed. When it | cars As no tracks are necessary, these carettes will probably soon be running on the most exclusive residence streets and boulevards. They are painted white, with gold decorations, and will make street cars look very plebeian by comparison.

Caught by Innocence.

Children sometimes demand the proof of the pudding in a way that startles their elders. A little boy had broken a large mirror with his ball, and knew he was in for severe punishment. He went to his father, and said: "Please, papa, can God do any-thing I ask Him?" "Yes, Johnny." "Well, papa, will you hear me ask Him for something?" "Yes; that's right. Go on." Then the little fellow shut his eyes, and said: "Oh, God, I broke the mirror with my ball; please make papa not to be angry. Amen." No doubt the father felt that he was rather neatly cornered, and couldn't say any-

Owing to a bad state of the blood, I have been afflicted with rheumatism for the past twenty years, and have used crutches for ten years. I have expended large sums of money for remedies recommended to me, and from using powerful liniments to get a little sleep, my hip and knee had lost nearly all strength. When I com-menced to take Hibbard's Rheumatic Syrup I could not take one step without the aid of a cane, or turn myself in bed without assistance. I can now move with perfect ease, and walk without my cane from my house to my office every day. I am relieved from a terrible affliction, and wish I might herald to all afflicted with rheumatism and other blood diseases, the merits of this wonderful medicine.

DR. LAMBERT, the general medical director of the Equitable Life Insurance Company, said: "There is no doubt that the whole tendency of life insurance now is toward liberality. There are comparatively few attempts to work any great scheme of fraud upon us, but we have to be on the watch. Two years ago a man wanted to insure for a very large amount. I suspected that he had kidney disease, and discovered that my suspicion was well founded and rejected his application. A few months later he committed suicide, and stuck insurance companies to the extent of $50,000."

"We reject sixteen per cent of the applications made to us for insurance," said Dr. Lambert, "and I have saved the entire expense of this medical department by the rejection alone of applicants who had diseased kidneys, and who died within two years after I rejected them."—NEW YORK SUN, Feb'y 13, 290.

The Farmers' Trust. At last the farmers have a sure remedy for depressed prices. A company has been incorporated in Illinois, with head quarters in Chicago, under the awe inspiring title of the Farmers' Cooperative Brotherhood of the United States. The incorporators propose to do business with $50,000,000, which will be subscribed by the farmers. When the stock is all taken, the brotherhood will be informed by the farmers what price they desire for their grain, and the brotherhood will go into the market and push the price up to the desired point. Thus farmers can sell their grain, and buy more stock in the brotherhood, and in a short time the brotherhood will bave the grain and the farmers will have the stock.

The scheme is very simple and will undoubtedly prove a howling success -that is, the farmers will howl for their grain, which the promoters have successfully made away with. The Farmers' Brotherhood are to get rich by buying their own grain. The "farmers" who are in the scheme probably all live in Chicago. The curious part of this and all similar plans for increasing the price of the farmers' produce is that it utterly loses sight of the fact that the farmers of the United States do not raise all the grain in the world. In fact, any very great advance in the price of wheat, for instance, would be almost certain to bring Russian wheat to our shores, in spite of the tariff. The farmer has not had a very good time of it of late years; but his redemption will not be brought about by any such scheme as the brotherhood proposes, or the equally brilliant plan of the Detroit gentlemen

The most diminutive railroad in all Down East, according to a newspaper exchange, is that owned and operated by the Monson, Maine, Slate Co., running from the Company's quarries to Monson Junction, on the Bangor and Piscataquis. This little road has a two feet gauge, is about six miles in length, and is thoroughly equipped with locomotives, passenger, baggage, and freight cars, has several stations, regular time tables, and a superintendent. The superintendent is also conductor, baggage master, mail agent, passenger and freight agent, brakeman, news—agent, and directora regular Pooh Bah—and for performing all these officer he gets $900 a year. Ten men constitute the entire force of the road. The trains average about 50 miles a day in summer and 25 miles in winter. The road is all down hill one way, so that a car will run from the quarries to the junction without the assistance of a locomotive. If a passenger misses the regular train, $5 will secure a special to carry him over the line. Last year this toy road carried 9,000 tons of the company's freight to Mon-son Junction (6 tons to a car) for transshipment over the Bangor and Piscataquis to Bangor and points west, 4,200 passengers, who paid $12,000 in fares, were transported at a cost of $9,000. This little road has been in operation six years, and in all that time no accident of any kind has octhe smallest independent line running

The Way to Matrimony. "Every girl makes up her mind at some time in her life that she will never accept any man who does not propose gracefully," said a man who was sipping claret with several others "He has got to be fully togged out in dress suit, and has got to kneel according to the Delsarte system. That is their idea at first, but I'll bet there isn't one girl in a hundred who ever gets her proposal that way-at least, from one she accepts—and I'll leave it to the present company to decide, if

All right. I took my wife that was to be, and is now, sleigh riding. We were talking about sentimental things and neglected to notice that we ran on a stretch of road which the wind had cleared of snow. We never noticed it until the horse stopped utterly exhausted. There was nothing to do but to get out and lead the horse back, because he couldn't drag us. I proposed on the road back, while I was trudging along a country road with my left hand on a horse's bridle, and the other

"I'll give you a summer story," said young man, recently married. "I did my courting in a place full of ro mance, but the proposal never came in a romantic time; in fact, I don't think a man is responsible for the time he proposes. A company of capitalists have applied for a charter to build a tower in Chicago that shall be 1500 feet tall, and include within its base a hotel of 4000 rooms, besides other apartments for business purposes. This is to be a private scheme entirely independent of the world's fair.

Some of the leading democratic papers are advising people to answer only such of the questions asked by the census enumerator as they deem proper. Citizens of the United States who have lived here long enough to become acquainted with Uncle Sam will do well to not heed their advice. An instruction has gone out from headquarters for the enumerators to simply mark in the blank "Refused to answer" when such is the case, and the department of Justice will deal with them directly. It will be the cheapest to answer all of the questions asked by the enumerator, notwithstanding these obstructionists.

A magnificent statue has been erected in Richmond, Virginia, to the memory of Gen. Robert E. Lee, and the unveiling ceremony was held Thursday with great display of confederate lost cause emblems. The Philadelphia Inquirer says: "The arrangement of the demonstrations so as to make them typical of the secession of the states. and of the events which characterized the attempt to destroy the Union is regarded as a direct insult to the dignity and authority of the government. Northern Democrats in congress are greatly annoyed over this revival of the events of the rebellion which occurred three decades ago, and admit that it will injure them in the coming campaign. They concede that the loyal sentiment of the north was sensibly disturbed by the proposition to erect a statue to Gen. Lee; but not satisfied with a simple tribute to his services in the cause of rebellion against the Union, to make the occasion one of glorification is in exceedingly bad taste." The following from the Richmond Dispatch gives an idea of the display: "The Richmond State leads off in confederate decorations in honor of Gen. Lee. Its building is covered from top to bottom with confederate colors and confederate flags wave from every window. None but confederate colors are displayed." Of course their Democratic brethren at the north will call this all right; it will so aid them in their next national campaign. Of course there is nothing said about the two parties in all this arrangement, but no one ever expects to hear of a Republican being engaged in such Briefs filed in the Mt. Tabor church case.—B. S. Era.

The Supreme Court to day decided the long disputed question of the liability of Michigan cities for accidents arising from defective sidewalks. For years the Michigan supreme court has held that a person who sustained an injury because of defective sidewalks was not entitled to damages from the municipality. The federal courts, on the other hand, following their own decisions, have held that the cities were liable. As a result, it has often happened that a person who had sustained injuries from such cause would attain a residence in another state or in Canada, in order to get his or her case into the federal courts. In the case of Elizabeth Osbun vs. the City of Detroit, the court decided that the law as interpreted by the Michigan supreme court for the past 20 years must govern sidewalk injury cases in Michigan. The court intimated that the Michigan court's way of looking at the matter was the correct one, but that in this class of cases the federal courts must administer Michigan laws, good or bad.— Washington Cor. > THE Michigan Central Company has submitted its proposition to Niles regarding the long talked of new passenenger house improvements. The proposition includes the closing of one street, building a viaduct to carry another over the company's tracks, and a tunnel through the heavy embankment under the tracks between the river bridge and the freight house, incuring an expense to the city of from $4,000 to $12,000, depending upon whether the tunnel be built or not. A HORRIBLE accident occurred just west of Dayton, Sunday evening, which cost the life of Miss Jennie Alspaugh, a young lady aged about twenty years. Miss Alsphaugh was employed as domestic in the family of Henry Ritzler, in Galien, and came to her home in Dayton to spend Sunday. In the evening Edward Wolff, employed by the company in Galien, took Mr. Doliver's railroad velocipede and started with Miss Alspaugh for Galien just ahead of the fast Express, known as No. 5, which passes Dayton at about 6:40. They had gone but about a mile, and were on the curve and in the cut opposite the Mr. Sebasty's place, when the train came upon them. Wolff rolled off on the north side of the track and down the embankment in time to save himself with only severe bruises. But not so with Miss Alspaugh, who fell between the rails of the track, and before she could get away the locomotive struck and cut her in pieces. The body was completely severed about midway, and the lower part fairly ground to pieces. At the inquest, when he first saw them he thought it was the flagman, who has been stationed at that point while the work of raising the grade this side of Galien has been in progress, and when he discovered what was ahead of him, he was so close upon them that he could not stop. He blew the whistle twice for them. The first time he says they did not appear to hear it. There is a quite heavy grade at that point, and this train goes down it at about sixty miles an hour, and as the banks are high it is impossible for the engineer to see the track more than a few seconds ahead. There was a carelessness next to criminality connected with Wolff's starting out on such a trip. when he must have known that the express was about due.

THE CHARMING SPOT WHERE A NEW YORK EDITOR SUMMERS.

A House Filled with Pictures, Vases and Books and Surrounded by Grounds Ablaze with Flowers and Dominated by Noble Trees.

[Copyright by American Press Association.] Mr. Charles A. Dana, the distinguished editor of The New York Sun. has for twenty-five years enjoyed a high reputation for good taste in art as well as in literature. The kind of home such a man makes for himself has a special interest, as it is in a measure a reflection of the man's self. Mr. Dana's home is in Sixtieth street in New York from No-

MR. DANA'S HOUSE FROM THE SOUTH. vember to June, but from June to November he lives on West Island, near Glen Cove, L. I., the neighborhood being known as Dosoris. West Island contains forty-five acres, is two miles from the village of Glen Cove and is separated from the mainland of Long Island by Dosoris pond, a sheet of about 200 acres. After Mr. Dana acquired the property

he built a stone wall all around it. On the south side of the island this wall is draped with such vines as matrimony vine and silk vine. The north side is a steep bank or bluff, and it is planted with wax myrtle, red cedar and locust and tangled with Virginia creeper. These, in addition to being ornamental, help to bind the embankment. The public road to the water edge crosses the bridge and passes the east side of the island, which is protected from the dust of the highway by a thickly planted broad bank of shrubs, and a belt of European linden trees. To protect the island on the north and northwest sides from bleak winter storms, shelter belts of white spruces, Colorado blue spruce, Douglas' spruce and Austrian pines have been planted.

The iron gates at the principal entrance are always open-winter and summer, night and day, and visitors are free to come and go as they choose. No signs are to be seen in any part of the park warning trespassers not to enter, and Mr. Falconer, the superintendent, says that this open hospitality has only been abused on one or two occasions in nearly a score of years. The main road curves gracefully towards the house, which is of the island, which is a little more than a third of a mile across from north to south, and about the same distance from east to west. The house is also on the highest part of the island, and from it the ground slopes to the banks above the sea wall so gently that it seems to the eye to be level. The lawn to the north of the house and between it and the Sound is covered with a beautiful blue grass turf, and there in the summer Mr. Dana's grandchildren and their friends play tennis. The south lawn reaches towards Dosoris

The house, a roomy, wooden structure, surrounded by wide piazzas, over which clamber Virginia creeper, pipe vines and Japanese honeysuckle, is very much as when Mr. Dana purchased it seventeen years ago. It is two stories and a half in height, the half story having been added by him, and a roomy hall stretches from the north to the south, with library, sitting and drawing rooms opening into it, and a side hall, in which is also the staircase, furnishes an entrance to the dining room.

It is to be seen at a glance in entering the house that it was constructed and is maintained for comfort rather than display. The polished wooden floor is uncarpeted save with rugs, and the walls are covered with engravings of famous trees and forests. Opposite the side hall hang noble antlers, and beneath, on a table, is a large and beautiful majolica vase, with dragon head handles, and from the very brim looks a satyr's face, beaming with roguish contentment.

The library is to the left of the south entrance. Low book cases run all around the room, except where windows and doors and the fire place intervene. On top of the book cases are plaster busts of poets and philosophers. Over the mantelpiece is a portrait of Tennyson, and on either side of this are crayon portraits, one of George Sand and the other of

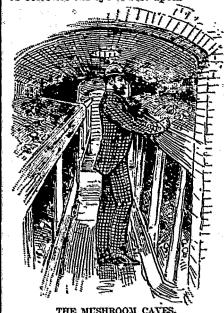

On the other side of the hall from the library are the drawing rooms, furnished in walnut. The pictures, chiefly of the French school, with a few portraits, are not numerous, but all are interesting. There are also two large and beautiful Chinese vases in this room.

The dining room in the east extension is furnished plainly in walnut, with only a few engravings on the walls, the chief one being of Paul Delaroche's hemicycle in the Palais des Beaux Arts. In this room, too, Mr. Dana indulges his exquisite taste in vases, and the mantelpiece holds two magnificent Chinese

One of Mr. Dana's many tastes is for billiards, and he has provided himself with a comfortable house in which to play the game. The table is of the regulation style, and there is plenty of room for both players and spectators.

Near the stables is a most carefully planned hen house, which was built some ten years ago, when Mr. Dana concluded to breed poultry. One night thieves broke in and carried off every chicken. Since then he has not kept chickens. Mr. Dana has been very successful as a room grower. The mushroom cave is eighty feet long and eight feet in diameter. The product of these beds is much greater than Mr. Dana's family can consume and the surplus is sent to his friends. In his large and numerous hot houses every possible variety of flowers is grown, and from year's end to year's end he has an abundance of flowers for the decoration of his own house and the houses of his children. With his flowers he is generosity itself. No one ever goes to West Island and comes away without some kind of a nosegay. The large beds here and there through the grounds are planted with reference to flowering time, and from June till the frosts of autumn there is always a glory of color for the eye to rest upon.

THE MUSHROOM CAVES. The kitchen garden has no distinctive boundary, but a bed for this vegetable and that is placed hore and there among the flowers, in the vineyard and among the fruit trees. Everything the latitude permits is grown. There is a vineyard of two acres. Just across a graveled roadway from the vineyard is the fruit orchard. The trees are dwarfed after the French method, the branches starting at the ground. They are cut and trained in varying shapes—here is an apple tree shaped like a harp, there a cherry tree like an isosceles triangle. Approaching the garden is a long alley with rose trees on either side, their branches interlaced some seven feet from the ground, so that the effect is produced of a continuous archway of roses. This idea is carried out on a large scale over a driveway which enters the grounds immediately from the bridge over Dosoris pond. Here are pin oaks on each side of the road. Some twenty feet above the road the branches are trained together and a noble archway of foliage made. The effect is most beautiful. Mr. Dana's island might be termed a museum of living trees. His hardy trees and shrubs form a collection embracing 204 genera and 1,103 species. Most of these are, of course, of Mr. Dana's planting, but the island is rich in old trees, many of which were doubtless standing when the Indians first gave a title to the island. Among these old trees are red cedars, black walnuts, shellbark hickory, plane trees, red maples, soft maples, red oaks, locusts, honey locusts and wild cherries. The trees most interesting to one skilled in forestry are the gold colored pines from Japan, the Japanese hem-locks, the Carolina hemlocks and the fine specimens of the big trees of California. There is also a deodar from the Himalaya mountains, a blue leaved Atlantic cedar and two splendid specimens of the Chinese false larch. JNO. GILMER SPEED.

Once Well Known; Now Forgotten. M. Catacazy is dead, and probably few know or care who he was. Yet not many years ago he held the post of embassador extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary from Russia to the United States, and American papers printed columns about him, or rather about the woman he presented to Washington society as his wife. The scandal connected with his domestic affairs resulted in his retirement from the diplomatic service, and he spent the later years of his life as one of the editors of The Paris Figaro. UPROAR IN CONGRESS.

FORMER TUMULTS RECALLED BY A RECENT SENSATIONAL EPISODE.

Words Were Spoken in "Heat of Debate" Long Before Bynum and Bayne Came Under the Calcium Light of Public Attention-Noted Instances.

The recent uproar in the house of representatives at Washington and the vote of censure passed upon the Hon. William D. Bynum, of the Indianapolis, Ind., district, have set the critics to hunting for precedents, and developed the fact that the whole matter of disciplining members is in a chaotic state. The constitution and rules presume that members will not insult each other, and for the most part it has been so; but there have been some notable exceptions. The most noted, of course, was that of Preston Brooks, of South Carolina, who made a savage assault on Senator Charles Sumner, inflicting injuries from which that statesman did not recover for many years—if, indeed, he ever fully recovered. No other incident in congress raised such a furor as did this assault. Both men were noted, the era was one of furious sectional controversy, and the date (May 22, 1856) was at the beginning of the first presidential campaign in which the issues were purely sectional. The committee appointed by the Republican speaker of the house (Hon. N. P. Banks) reported a resolution for expelling Mr. Brooks, but it failed of therequired two-thirds majority, and there was but a mild censure instead. The local court imposed a fine of $300 upon Mr. Brooks, who

W. D. BYNUM. thereupon resigned, appealed to his constituents and was triumphantly re-elected. Eight months after the assault he died quite suddenly of an acute inflammation of the throat. Seven years passed before the house had another very serious case to deal with, and it was again shown that there was practically no mandatory law upon the subject save the will of the majority at the time. The case was that of Hon. Alexander Long, of Ohio, and Mr. Harris, of Maryland. The former boldly introduced a resolution pronouncing the war for the Union a failure and demanding a recall of the troops and recognition of the independence of the Confederate states. The debate thus precipitated was extremely bitter, and Mr. Long outdid all others in denouncing President Lincoln and the Federal generals. The debate on a resolution to expel Mr. Long extended over five days, but the resolution lacked the two-thirds majority. worthy member of the house" was adopted by a vote of 80 to 70. Mr. Harris was censured somewhat more mildly by a vote of 92 to 18. Down to that date the expulsion of a member was scarcely thought of, or, if thought of, it was only as a revolutionary or very extreme proceeding; but events following the war made it seem like an ordinary remedy. One member was expelled for selling an appointment to the naval academy, and another for bigamy. The last named was sentenced by the local court to a term in the district penitentiary, but was pardoned by President Grant, then returned to his home and resumed his leadership of his party, apparently without loss of prestige. The committee on elections brought in a resolution to expel George Q. Can-non, delegate from Utah, but he managed to retain his seat for some years hereafter. He was, and still is, a high official in the Mormon church, and the susband of four "wives."

The next congressman to be censured was Hon. John Young Brown, of Tennessee; but the circumstances were such that the whole affair barely escaped being farcical. Gen. B. F. Butler was doing his best (and that is a great deal) to put the once noted "force bill" through the house, but was not particularly favored by Speaker Blaine, and was most thoroughly hated by the southern members. Mr. Brown narrated the horrible strocities of that Burke who murdered men to sell their bodies to a medical college, and thus gave origin to the word "burking," as a summary of all possible infamy, treachery and murder. In like manner, he added, "mankind will hereafter sum up all that is cowardly in war, cruel in peace and infamous in legisla-tion and call it 'Butlerism.'" There was a fine uproar, of course, and Mr. Brown was censured; but no man ever lost prestige in Tennessee by abusing Gen. But-

On the last night of the Forty-seventh congress the Hon. John Van Voorhis, of New York state, was brought to the bar for using this language: "It is so outrageous, so damnable, that nobody but a gambler or a cutthroat would have thought of tacking such a thing as that to such a bill as this." He apologized and avoided a formal censure.

THE HOME OF MR. BYNUM. With the facts of the recent case the public is familiar. Hon. W. D. Bynum appears to possess a happy faculty of attracting the warmest admiration of his political friends and exciting the fiercest hatred of his opponents. Owing to the rapid growth of the city since 1880 the Indianapolis district has the largest voting force in the state—53.541 at the last election—and as it was long considered firmly Republican, till reversed by Mr. Bynum, the local warfare on him has been phenomenally furious even for Indiana, where both parties go into a campaign as if it were a pitched battle in which the defeated were to lose all but life. His plurality in 1888 was $,773. He was born June 26, 1846, in Greene county, Ind., was graduated from the state university at Bloomington in 1869 and admitted to practice at the bar the same year. Locating in Washington, Daviess county, he rose rapidly both in law and politics, filling various local offices till 1882, when he was elected to the legislature, in which he was made speaker of the house, and ruled it through some extremely stormy scenes. Locating then at Indianapolis, he was elected successively to the Forty-ninth, Fiftieth and Fifty-first congresses. He is known in Indiana as a "hustler from way back," and has more than once put down a strong opposition in his own party and hen beat the other by an increas jority. He is tall, black haired and aggressive in appearance, and his opponents assert that there is "a good deal of the Injun in him"—that he always aims to "get even" with foes and to reward his friends.

Hon. Thomas M. Bayne, of Allegheny, Pa., the principal opponent of Mr. Bynum in the late discussion, is also a fighter and in more senses than one. He served with distinguished gallantry in the war for the Union and is affectionately known to his constituents as "Colonel Tom" Bayne. He was born June 14, 1836, in the city he represents, and has been a member in every congress since and including the Forty-fifth. He was educated at the public schools of the city, and at Westminster college. Owing to the fact that the Republicanvoteisabout two to one of the Democratic in that district, his principal difficulty was in securing the first nomination, and heis not widely known as a "hustler." In 1874, however, on his first venture, there was a split in his party and he was de-

During what is called the "middle period," when Gen. Jackson virtually ruled the country for twenty years, there was a license in debate, and personal invective which would not now be tolerated for a moment; yet it was rare for any member to claim his privilege. The foes "had it out fist and skull," or their "friends" arranged for a "meeting" and they took a shot at each other on the noted duelling ground at Bladensburg. Two famous politicians once fired at each other there so many rounds without effect that "friends," physicians and bystanders joined in a general laugh and brought about a reconciliation. The Hon. Cave Johnson proposed in congress a few days later that the land be exthat the days later that the faint be ex-empted from entry on the ground that it "now contains a mineral deposit—viz., lend." The only person hit was an un-fortunate darkey who had climbed an adjacent tree to get a good view.

News comes from over the water that is in its way a relief and a novelty. She has elected instead to bestow herself upon an American gentleman. KATE SHELLEY'S DELAYED REWARD. After Nine Years Her Unselfish Daring Gets Recognition. Brave Kate Shelley need no longer tear for the safety of her little home near M. ingona, Ia. The mortgage, to pay the interest on which she toiled at school teaching, has been lifted through the instrumentality of The Chicago Tribune, and the surplus of the fund raised will be devoted to improving the little farm that affords a living to the family dependent on Miss Shelley's labor for support-her widowed mother and young isters and brother.

The girl's story? It is a simple one of veryday heroism accentuated and made mown by one deed of splendid daring. Between Boone and Moingona (five miles) the Northwestern railway crosses twenty-one bridges. On the night of July 6, 1881, a storm piled up the water in Des Moines river and Honey creek and swept away ten of these structures. A freight train crashed into the creek near Kate Shelley's house. The girl hurried out into the midnight tempest and rescued the engineer and fireman. Then she crawled over the ties of the Des Moines river bridge, ran to Moingona station, stopped the on rushing passenger train, saved 150 lives and fell fainting on the track.

The country rang with praises of her magnificent intrepidity, but the substantial reward was small. The railway company gave state of Iowa voted her a gold medal. The excitement over the 15-year-old maiden resumed her daily battle with poverty, and kept it up cheerfully and uncomplainingly. She had dropped from general view until last spring a writer visited her home. He found the young woman keeping her family together and trying to pay interest on a mortgage out of a schoolteacher's salary of $35 a month. He retold the story of her gallant deed. This is not a bad world, but a forgetful one, and the moment the public were reminded of the case contributions poured in for Kate Shellev's benefit. Now the mortgage paid, and the heroine of Moingona has over $500 in bank and some forty matrimonial offers under consideration. THE DAMROSCH-BLAINE WEDDING.

It Was the Fortunate Climax to a Romantic Courtship. To be youthful, wealthy and beloved ought to fill the measure of human desire, and, possessing all these requisites for happiness, the young lady who, the other day, was Miss Margaret Blaine and is now Mrs. Walter Damrosch would seem to have nothing to ask from fate save the continuance of her present fortunate condition. With the hearty approval of her family and the good wishes of her friends she has married the man of her choice after a courtship during which the course of

MRS. WALTER DAMROSCH. Miss Blaine and Mr. Damrosch began their acquaintance in Scotland. Both were guests of Mr. Andrew Carnegie on a coaching trip modeled after the famous journey described in one of William Black's novels. The pleasant companionship then initiated ripened, later on, into friendship and love, and the announcement of the engagement a few months ago elicited nothing but congratulations. Both husband and wife have lived so much within the public view that their careers are generally known. Miss Blaine was to her mother the helpful assistant her lately deceased brother, Walker, had been to his father, the Secretary of State. Mr. Damrosch, on the other hand, is rapidly establishing a reputation in the musical world second only to that of his lamented parent, Dr. Damrosch. The portrait herewith given of the bride shows her in a fancy costume worn at a young people's ball some months ago. Since then being photo-graphed she has had no picture taken.

Dr. F. B. Brewer:-I received your last box of medicine all right. I think I am much better than I was a week ago. I commenced to gain strength as soon as I got the chills and fever broken up. I don't have those nervous spells any more. I don't cough and raise as much as I did what I do raise looks pretty bad, but no blood, inst clear corruption. I have not vomited up my food for about a week. My victuals begin to tast natural. I have a splendid appetite. MRS. A. F. BERDAN, Raymond, Dak.
