And the path that leads to a House of Your Own Climbs over the bouldered hills, And the path that leads to a Bank Acco Is swept by the blast that kills: But the men who start in the paths to-day In the Lazy Hills may go astray.

By the dreamy Brooks of Sleep, And the rollicking River of Pleasure laughs, And gambols down the steep; But when the blasts of Winter come,

The brooks and the river are frozen dumb Then woe to those in the Lazy Hills When the blasts of Winter come, Who strayed from the path to a Bank Accoun And the path to a House of Their Own; These paths are hard in the summer heat,

JOSHUA FLINT'S ANGEL

BY ANNIES SWAN.

Joshua Flint had had a busy morning. It was market day in Perkinsville, and all the farmers' wives were in with their butter and eggs; and though they took away well filled baskets of groceries from Joshua's store in exchange for their produce, he chuckled to himself as he counted up his gains after they were gone. balance was on the right side; he had done a good morning's work. Joshua Flint was well named, for not a man in Perkinsville could drive a harder bargain. He took care to keep on the safe side.however, not only to keep a good distance from the law, but also to make sure that his neighbors could not say he was unjust. "Mighty close" was his reputation, but it was his boast that he never cheated man or woman out of a cent in his life. He would scorn to do such a thing, and besides he had his reputation as a church member to keep up, and considered himself one of the pillars in Bethesda, as the little chapel under the cedar clump round the corner was called. Perhaps if you had asked the minister he would not have appeared quite so appreciative of the pillar as he ought to have been. Joshua was indeed a thorn in the minister's side, and a stumbling block in the way of many a good and necessary work. If it did not pay Joshua came down on it without mercy. and usually carried everything before him. He was one of those domineering sort of folks who not only want their own way, but insist on having it.

Joshua was a bachelor. He had looked judiciously around among his neighbors, saw, or fancied he saw, what an expense a wife was to a man, not to speak of the children, who only waited till they had got all they could out of the old folks, and then went off with somebody else. Such was Joshua's creed, therefore be remained in single blessedness, and lived all by himself in a little room behind the store. There were two attic rooms above, which he used to store dry goods in, and though it was a miserable, narrow, mean sort of life, Joshua had got used to it, and it suited him thoroughly. If he had not a big house to live in he could keep it tidy himself, and then the small expenses of his housekeeping swelled the big balance at the bank, which was lent out at ten per cent. Joshua would have started had any human being suggested that there might be a touch of extortion in the ten per cent business. If people were so shiftless and stupid as to need the loan of money then they ought to pay sweetly for it. He never needed to borrow money from any man. so, strong in his self-righteousness. Joshua complacently pocketed his ten per cent and waxed exceedingly rich in worldly wealth, while the soul of him became a poor, withered, stunted thing, for which the beggar in the street might have pitied him. It was about three o'clock in the afternoon,and business was slack, when Joshua stepped out of the door of the continued the minister in his quick, energetic fashion; "they are in positive destitution. The poor fellow can't live over a few days, and they have hardly the necessaries of life. I want you to give me ten dollars, and send a basket of provisions as well. I've given what I can, but I can't give them all they need. They owe Higgins for the rent, and he is threatening to put them out. Not that I think he will do it, but he is so poor himself he can't do without the money. Put your hand in your pocket, Joshua. Ten dollars is no more to you that ten cents to me, and you'll have the reward, if you need any, of

Mr. Brandon that von would make the i drunkard's downbill path easier for him," said Joshua, severely.

The minister rose. Disgust and contempt sat upon his features, and Joshua saw it, but did not miud it at all. He was used to it. Mr. Brandon was a young man, and had mighty foolish notions. Although he had a young family he was laying by nothing. Joshua knew anything that was left over his meagre salary he gave away to the needy, of whom in Perkinsville there were quite a few. "Joshua Flint, you lay claim to being a Christian man," Mr. Brandon said, solemnly and sadly. "You take part in church ordinances, and make a form of godliness; but as I live, I believe Emerson M'Kim, with all his failings, to be nearer the kingdom than

"That's a pretty doctrin, parson. What do you make o' the words, 'No drunkard shall enter the kingdom of God?" said Joshua brusquely.
"True religion and undefiled is to visit the fatherless in their affliction," said the minister, not without stern-Just as he turned his face to the door a shadow fell athwart the sunshine, and the figure of a young girl stood hesitatingly upon the threshold. She was dressed in shabby mourning, and carried a small valise in her band. She had a bright, quiet, eager face, framed by sunny hair, but it was not a familiar face. She was quite a stranger in Perkinsville. "Is this Mr. Flint's store-Joshua Flint, whose sister Mary married Lindoric Curtis, who went to Montreal?" she asked, and her voice was like the sweet, clear notes of a bird. She looked for an instant hesitatingly at the two men, and then walked up to the counter and stretched out her hand. "How do you do, Uncle Joshua? I'm Christie Curtis, your niece. Mother died six months ago, and she told me if I found it hard to get along alone in the city, I was to come to you because you were very rich. So here I am; I guess you'll have a boy to send for my trunk; and I'm just famishing, Uncle Joshua. I've had nothing but some biscuits and apples I ate on the cars. I hope it's near your supper time?" Joshua shook hands limply with his newly arrived relative. Shall I tell you why he had not presence of mind to set her about her business at once, as he sometimes wished afterwards he had? It was because a something in her big, earnest eyes which reminded him of his sister and his mother, and which brought back a thousand recollections of his boyhood, which had been pure and beautiful-until greed of gold enthralled him. The minister saw a queer look in the man's eyes, and he walked away out of the store with a prayer in his heart and on his lips,— "God save him, for Christ's sake," was the prayer; a curious one for a minister to offer up in behalf of one of the pillars of his church. "So you're Christie Curtis," Joshua said, shortly. "And how did your mother think I, a lone man, could have any way of doing for a young woman like vou?" "Oh, we'll soon make a way, Uncle Joshua. Where's your house? Mother and me used often to speak of you. Mother was always sorry for you, though you were rich; I suppose because you had 1 obody to look after you. But I'll look after you now, Uncle Joshua," said the young woman with a reassuring cheerfulness. You're going to have a real good time at last. Mother said she thought you lived at the tack of the store. Is this the way?" There was nothing for it. Joshua led the way into the little back room which was his home. It was a small, meagre place, with a single bed, and a table and two chairs. It smelt musty, and the little stove was quite red and

"Dear me, Uncle Joshua, is this where you live, and you quite rich?"

For the first time in his life Joshna. Flint felt mean. And yet, why should he, before a chit of a girl whose mother had been so silly as to marry a "newspaper man" for love, and going to certain poverty, instead of becoming the wife of a rich old farmer, whom she didn't love? "If you don't like it, I guess you needn't stop," he said brusquely. There's the stove and the kettle. You'll find teacups and things in the cupboard. You can get yourself something to eat; but don't bother me. 1'm busy." So saying, he stalked back into the store, and Christie got her valise on the table, and shut the door into the store, and looked about her with a wavering, uncertain smile. Everything was so mean and miserable, she did not know whether to laugh or cry. She did neither, but laying her hat and cloak on the bed, she gave the stove a clearing out; put in some wood, and set the kettle singing; then she opened the cupboard and in a very gingerly fashion began to handle what was therein. Nothing was conspicuously clean. She managed to get a meal set down, however, and then opened the summons; he had been sitting staring straight before him, looking as if he had not yet recovered from the shock of Christie's appearance. He came into the room, and somehow it warmed his heart to see the young creature kneeling by the stove toasting the bread, with a bright flush on her cheek and a sparkle in her eye, which certainly had never been brought there by the heartiness of his welcome. How like her mother she was! He could almost fancy the years had rolled back, and it was his own sister Mary in the old kitchen at home. "Haven't you anything nice in the store, Uncle Joshua—eggs or cheese or something? The table looks dreadfully meagre; not even a bit of pie. I'll make pies to-morrow, if I'm alive."

Joshua stalked back into the store and brought out a big basket of lovely fresh eggs from below the counter. "Oh, that's splendid! Now a bit of cheese, uncle, and we'll have a cheese omelet. I'll make it in no time. I believe we'll have a good time sooner than The cheese was brought. It was her sweet daring that did it. She took everything as a matter of course, and spoke and acted as if circumstances had been against her uncle, and he was to be pittied for living so lonesomely in that poor little place. It was the very best way to treat him, though there was no plotting or planning in it Christie had been reared in an atmoschance as me, an' better, because he phere of love, and had been taught had schoolin' an' I didn't. I wonder, nothing but lessons of love and chariso she had only sweet compassion for the man who, though rich in little children, hungry little children, Uncle Joshua, we must feed them. Christ says, 'Feed my lambs,' and they can't help their father being bad." It was just the same theory Mr. Brandon had so often propounded to him; but somehow, coming from Christie's lips, it sounded differently. He wished, yes, actually wished, he had given that ten dollar bill. Had his dead sister's child bewitched him with the magic of her face and voice? Certainly her smile seemed to throw a kind of radiance over the dingy little

"Will you send down for my trunk, uncle, while I wash up the tea things? But, oh, where am I to sleep?" she asked with a merry laugh. "That must be decided before we do anything." "Well, I don't know, and that's a fact, indeed. I'll turn in among the dry goods in the attic, and you can

"Oh, if there's an attic I'll be all right—I'll soon fix up a bed for myself. It's not likely you are to turn out for me, but, of course you'll go to house-keeping now that I've come, and it'll be splendid getting the house furnish-

Joshua stalked back into the store and served out a quart of coal oil to a customer without opening his mouth. Go to housekeeping, furnish a new house, indeed! The idea! and yet it had a charm of its own. After Christie bad tidied up the place she proceeded to investigate the garret, and having satisfactorily arranged a sleeping place for herself, came down to the store. It was now dark, and the lamps were lit in the window, and one suspended from the ceiling above the counter. Christie stood at the end of the counter and, leaning her round, white arms on it, fixed her big, pathetic eyes full on her uncle's face. "We had a dreadful hard time, mother and me, after father died. I can't think why she wouldn't come to you, or ask for help, and you so rich!" she began simply, and somehow a flush of shame rose to the man's brow. Ah, Mary knew him too well. "Mother got sick just after father died, and I took needlework, but it was very hard and we were quite poor. I am afraid sometimes that mother did not have enough to eat. Often I was too hungry to sleep. I wish I had come to you, Uncle Joshua, but mother wouldn't." Too hungry to sleep! That slim. womanly child, with a face so sweet, that it was a marvel it had not won compassionate aid from strangers.

Joshua Flint thought of his ten per cent, and felt meaner still. "When mother got so sick that she couldn't get better," continued Christie, as if he were listening intently for the continuation of the story, and so he was, though it stung him to the quick; "she told me that after she died I was to try and keep on workin', and keep myself if I could, rather than go to you. Only, if I found it too hard, I was to come; and it was too bard. Once I had her rather than disappoint her in renothing to eat for more than two days, | gard to her worthiness of the laurels so then I came." Joshua Flint started nervously to his

"If you want any more eggs or cheese or anything, take 'em. Take everything you like, only don't tell me about being hungry; I can't 'bide it."
"I knew you couldn't. I can't think why mother didn't know," said Christie, through her grateful tears. "But she knows now, and will be glad in heaven because I've come to go to housekeeping with you, and be your little girl." Joshua Flint took down the shutters and put them on the store windows, and when it was closed up he bade Christie keep herself warm by the stove till he came back. And he clarped his hat on his head and walked straight to the parsonage. Memories thronged about him as he went, and the man's whole soul was in a tremble. The minister himself opened the door to him and Joshua said bluntly,— "I want a word with you, parson." Mr. Brandon in some surprise led him into the study and shut the door. "There's the ten dollars you asked for this afternoon," he said abruptly "an' ten more to buy shoes for the children's feet. I saw 'em run barefooted by the store yesterday, in the rain. And when you want any more come to my niece, Christie Curtis, my sister Mary's child, you saw come in the store while you were there. She's goin' to keep house for me now, I guess, an' women folks all like to have the spendin' o' the money. And I wish to say, that through the slip of a girl, the Lord has opened my eyes, an' I'm a

And before the astonished minister could say a word in reply the store-Who shall say that that innocent young maiden, with her heart so full of love and trust that she knew nothing of suspicion or uncharitableness, was not one of the Lord's messengers? She was, beyond a doubt, the Lord's messenger to Joshua Flint, for from that day he began a new life. Of course there were many stumblings, for the evil heart and long established habit of a man is not transformed all at once. Christie found much to discourage and perplex her, even after they had gone to housekeeping in a red brick villa across the way, but she had faith in God. brother has he helped to raise, and so he is at last laying up for himself treasures in heaven. Why Thunder Storms Affect Milk. During electrical disturbances it seems that cream and milk are put into a condition to sour easily. The probable cause of this, the editor of the Cultivator (Albany) explains as follows: The effect of an electrical discharge is to decompose a portion of the atmosphere, by which ozone is produced. This substance has peculiar properties from its intense activity as an oxide of oxygen, and its action is often believed to be, and may be, the cause of the sour of milk, beer, and fresh wine during what are known as thunder storms. The ozone is diffused through the air, and is believed to be the cause of the strong acid odor which prevails after the storm is passed. No doubt if the milk is submerged in water, and access of air is prevented, no result of the kind need be apprehended; and as the more milk is exposed to the air the more it will be effected by the ozone, the milk in open shallow pans will be acidified more readily than that in deep pails, although these may be open. In our long experience, however, the writer adds, we have never had any milk affected in this best possible care. Their function is an important one; they are to "hold the fort" until the permanent are ready to come upon the scene, and should then give way to their successors with the cheerfulness of a displeased politician. It is, therefore, a mistake to suppose that on account of their temporary character their decay is a matter of little consequence, or that they may be extracted at any time without injury. They should be kept in the best condi tion possible until the development of their successors absorbs their roots and they become loosened. If this loosening fails to take place, as frequently occurs, they should be drawn as soon as the crown of the permanent tooth appears through the gum, in order that the latter may take its proper place in line. Two or three times a year is not to often to have a a dentist examine the mouth of a child.

as the six year molar, may appear anywhere live to seven years of age, and this, besides being the first of the permanent teeth, is also specially liable to decay. Very generally it is the first tooth requiring the dentist's forceps, and may be drawn before the twelveyear molar of the same set makes its appearance. In this case the looser, as the cavity will be partially filled by other teeth when they appear, often believes that his quota of teeth has been less than his neighbors. Even parents often confound these molars with the temporary set and neglect them when known to be diseased, supposing they will soon give place to others. The second set of molars appear at about the age of twelve, and the last, or wisdom teeth, five or six years later. The advent of any of these is liable to be accompanied by soreness, ulceration, or more serious complications; the eyes or ears may be affected, or serious nervous troubles may result. When these or similar complications arise, not readily understood, it is well to look for the cause in the mouth.

A woman hates conceit in a man, but she likes the self-confidence that enables him to accept her homage and even to command it in a royal way. She likes to make a hero out of a man, and she prefers to have him deceive she would crown him with. The Type of Character.

In men, as in animals, the nose is always typical of the character of its possessor. The noses of the lower anmals are all represented in mankind. Look at the street as you pass along, and you will find the cat nose, the buldog nose, the ape nose and even the fish nose and face, as well as the eagle nose of the man who is of a grasping, hard disposition, which this formation always indicates, for a person possessing; an eagle nose has an eagle's charcharacter. Women who have mascu line noses have unmistakable mascu line characters. So vice versa, the mer who have female noses have unmistak ably feminine characteristics. You can not possibly mistake it. Yes, the nose is a feature of the face, and indicates the character more than anything else. An interesting experiment can be tried to prove this. Let a mask be prepared by cutting away all the parts except the forehead and nose. An individual may wear such a mask in the presence of his most intimate friends and not be recognized. The nose taken as a whole shows more character than the combined faces of whole families.

Unobservant Man. "The majority of people are not very observant in small matters," said a certain philosophical ticket agent, the other day. ### Etiquette in Walking.

It is no longer thought needful for a gentleman to keep himself on the other side of a lady by changing at every corner. Such a habit savors of stiffness, is too marked a concession to form. Gentlemen may take the inside when it would seem awkward to do otherwise, but the outside is preferred for them. When two gentlemen are walking with one lady the one takes the out and the other the inside, thus keeping her between them. When one gentleman is walking with two ladies, he places himself between them. When a gentleman desires to speak to a lady who is passing, he must not detain her. Instead, let him walk with her in the direction whither she is going, leave her with a bow, aad raising his hat as he retreats.

A Trick That Was Vain.

A prisoner was being tried for murder in an English court of law—the evidence against him purely circumstantial; part of it was a hat found near the scene of the crime: an ordi-nary round, black hat, but sworn to as the prisoner's. Counsel for the defence of course made much of the commonness of the hat. "You, gentlemen, no doubt each of you possesses such a hat, of the most ordinary make and shape. Beware, how you condemn a fellow-creature to a shameful death on such a piece of evidence, and so on. So the man was acquitted Just as he was leaving the dock, with the most touching humility and implicty, he pulled his hair and said: "If you please, my lord, may I ave my

DR. LAMBERT, the general medical director of the Equitable Life Insurance Company, said: "There is no doubt that the whole tendency of life insurance now is toward liberality. There are comparatively few attempts to work any great scheme of fraud upon us, but we have to be on the watch. Two years ago a man wanted to insure for a very large amount. I suspected that he had kidney disease, and discovered that my suspicion was well founded and rejected his application. A few months later he committed suicide, and stuck insurance companies to the extent of $30,000."

"We reject sixteen per cent of the applications made to us for insurance," said Dr. Lambert, "and I have saved the entire expense of this medical department by the rejection alone of applicants who had diseased kidneys, and who died within two years after I rejected them."—New York Sun, Feb'y 18, "90.

Republican State Convention. HEADQUARTERS REPUBLICAN STATE) CENTRAL COMMITTEE.

DETROIT, July 12, 1890. A State Convention of the Republicans of Michigan will be held at the Detroit rink, Detroit, beginning at 12 o'clock noon, Wednesday. August 28, 1890, for the purpose of nominating candidates for state offices and for Justice of the Supreme Court to fill vacancy: also for the purpose of selecting a chairman of the State Central Committee and two members thereof from each congressional district, and the transaction of such other business as may properly come before it.

In accordance with a resolution adopted at Grand Rapids May 10, 1876, every county will be entitled to one delegate for each 500 of the total vote cast for Governor at the last State election (November, 1888), and one additional delegate for every fraction amounting to 300, but each organized county will be entitled to at least one

Under a resolution of 1858 no delegate will be entitled to a seat in the convention who does not reside in the county he proposes to represent.

The delegates from each congression-

Shall We Have Honest Elections? Sixteen contested cases have been disposed of by the house of representatives up to date, 10 of them in favor of the Republicans and six in favor of the Democrats. These cases have been decided strictly on their merits according to the evidence in each placed before the committee on privileges and elec-tions. In most of the cases decided against the Democrats the testimony has proved all that has been charged as to the corruption of the ballot and the bulldozing of Republican voters. The case of Robert Bullock (Dem.) of Florida is a fair sample. According to the returns of the Democratic can vassers he received a majority of 3.195. Investigation proved that this majority was secured by the most outrageous frauds. The evidence was overwhelm ing and undeniable that ballot-box stuffing and ballot-box stealing, bull dozing and terrorizing by armed mobs were the methods employed to overcome the Republican majority. The press report says:

In many instances regulators seized the boxes before the votes were counted, carried them away, destroyed the tickets bearing the name of the Republican candidate and made the returns alone upon those inscribed with that of the Democratic candidate. In not a few districts men armed to the teeth marched to the polling places and threatened to shoot any one who protested against the failure to hold an election. The false registration was something almost unparalleled in the history of the state. Democratic election judges were armed with revolvers and shotguns, and, despite the pro tests of Republicans, struck from the list hundreds of names of Republican voters. The committee reports that the Republican candidate has really over 700 majority.

In the case of J. D. Alderson (Dem.) of West Virginia, who was given a certificate of election by the Democratic governor of that state, even after a recount of the votes showed that McGinnis, the Republican nominee, was elected by a clear majority of 218, it did not take the elections committee of the house long to find out who was the rightful possessor of the seat contested after beginning the in vestigation. The testimony in each of the above cases was conclusive, as it has been in the case of every other Democrat unseated. So outrageous have been the methods pursued by the bourbon bulldozers that their most apologetic party organs have been unable to put in any defense for them except in a general way to characterize the actions of the committee of elec-tions as arbitrary and partisan. But the fact is there has been nothing arbi-question of the good of this move, untrary or partisan about it. Of the 10 contested cases the committee tound six Democrats entitled to their seats, because the evidence was not sufficient were thrown out because the evidence against them was overwhelming and conclusive. Now, every one of these corrupt scoundrels and all of their slogun supporters are opposed to a federal election law. They will fight to the bitter end every movement or measure to secure a free ballot and fair count. Honest elections in the South mean Democratic defeats, and this is reason enough for their relentless opposition. They hope by pursuing the same unlawful and outrageous methods to be able to secure control of the next house of representatives. Should they succeed they know that their criminal acts will be condoned and that the thing, his confinement under life sen- house will retain in his seat every Democrat sent there, no matter how fraudulent or criminal the methods employed to secure his election. It would seem as if no honest voter North or South, could reasonably oppose a measure to protect the purity of the ballot and the rights of legal voters. This is what the National election bill is for-only this and nothing more. Opposed to this measure is every man who corrupts the ballot, bulldezes and intimidates voters, stuffs and steals ballot-boxes, shoots negroes for political reasons, defies the constitution and damns the federal government.

Literary Note From The Century Co. At the time of General Fremont's death he was engaged upon the manuscript of a paper for The Century's forthcoming series on the California Gold Hunters. It was to be entitled "Finding Paths to California," and was not only to deal with the several exploring expeditions, but to narrate the writer's intimate connection with the events which led to the conquest and occupation of the territory. The work will be promptly continued by Mrs. Fremont. A lirst draft of the article had been made, and the subject had been so recently and closely discussed by General and Mrs. Fremont that she will have no trouble in completing the manuscript, for which she had already written an introduction, as well as a supplement describing her life at Monterey in 1839. THERE seems to be considerable trouble about getting Day Expresses to stop here. Monday there were a number of passengers for it but it did not stop, as no one could be found by telegraph who had authority to stop it. Tuesday there were more passengers and the agent procured permission to flag the train. It ran up past the east semaphore before stopping, stood there a few minutes and then pulled out without the passengers. It now comes out that notice must be given in New Buffalo in order to stop the train, and passengers must be at the depot in time for that, which is about half an hour ahead of the train's time in Buchanan.

A PETITION to the Common Council asking for the opening of Oak street across the Michigan Central tracks, is being circulated and quite question of the good of this move, unless it be impossible to reopen the road just closed by the company's fence gang. It is hardly possible to imagine a more dangerous crossing than this would be, as the tracks are so arranged that they would be entirely hidden from view from both ways by cars upon the sidetracks and the warehouses each side of the crossing, so that it would be impossible to see an approaching train from either way, until the main track is reached. Of course it may be that a gate might be kept there, but gatekeepers are not always on duty, and it is the belief of the RECORD that the village does not want a crossing at that point, unless no other can be had. It is not at all likely that the company will very strenuously oppose the removal of the fence across the old road east of the depot.

St. Joseph, July 18.—A very distressing accident occurred here this afternoon at 3 o'clock. Chester Jordan. 12 years old, son of O. O. Jordan, cashier of the Union Banking Company of this place, was playing about the turntables in Chicago & West Michigan yards, when by some misstep he fell into a three and one-half inch space between the frame work and the table. He was badly crushed about the hips, causing internal hemorrhage. It is feared the little sufferer may not live.

HINTS TO FLY CASTERS.

Some Good Points About Bait Fishing That Every Angler Should Know. Two disciples of Uncle Izaak stood on the forward deck of a Barclay street ferryboat, eying inquisitively each other's creels. One was accounted in the most approved fashion and bore beneath his fishing paraphernalia unmistakable signs of the well to do business man, while the other was clad in the garb of an Erie conductor and carried besides his creel a light rod. The bond of fellowship and mutual admiration which exists between all good fishermen soon brought the two together. A comparison of the contents of their creels followed, and the railroader had a basketful of speckled beauties, whereas all the business man could produce were two four inch babies.

"Where did you get them?" asked the latter eagerly. The conductor named his stream and the questioner exclaimed: "That's the place I fished. What on earth did you use—flies?" "No; the water is too high and I ised worms." "That's what I used," exclaimed the business man, "but I'm not very familiar with worm fishing, and probably that's the reason I didn't succeed."

It was the reason—and few fly fishermen know how to catch trout with bait. It is by no means as easy as they think. In his brief trip across the harbor the business man for the first time learned the rudiments of bait fishing, and it has since been of incalculable benefit, for often the trout will rise to nothing else.

The best kind of worms are those of nedium size. They should be kept while fishing in a small box, with free access to the air and just enough dirt to keep them half covered. The hook should never be entirely covered, as some claim, but only a third, and the worm should be so put on that its two ends are free and can move freely in the water. The worm should be so managed that it is under the surface of the water, and to accomplish this often a spilt shot or two may advantageously be put on the gut a foot or two above the hook. Let the line run under all the old logs and under the banks, and many a fat trout will be the reward. Be just as careful in bait fishing about not letting the trout see you as you are in fly

In angling with a grasshopper, grub or almost any insect you can cast just as if you were fly fishing. Grasshoppers can be found in any field, and old tree stumps will always furnish an abundance of grubs, while along the banks of the brook, in the bushes and under rocks are to be secured the various other insects that trout feed upon. Take care to put them on so as least to disfigure them. Whenever everything tempt the monarch of a pool that disdains the gaudy fly or luscious worm. To make such bait more tempting other property, all of which was con-sumed.—B. H. Palladium. thus making the bait appear as if makthus making the bait appear as if making frantic efforts to escape from its watery grave.

The small minnows and fry fish with which some streams abound may be used to great advantage in large creeks. They need not be kept alive, though

Unlike in worm fishing, when it is best to give your fish a little time, strike as in nsect fishing, quick and firmly, or the trout steals your bait and swims off uncaught to devour his dainty in some lurking hole.—New York Herald.

Making Sheet Tin. The only plant at which sheet tin is being manufactured in North or South America is in operation at the United States Iron and Tin Plate works at Demmler Station, Third ward, Mc-Keesport. The fact that this country has for the last ten or twelve years been paying nearly $30,000,000 annually to foreign countries, and that not a sheet of tin was being made on this continent, urged the firm, particularly Mr. Cronemeyer, one of the members, to make strenuous efforts toward securing a protective tariff sufficiently high enable them to compete with the labor of foreign manufacturing cities. They have put in a much improved process by Leyshon & Sons, of Tipton, England. The gentleman and one of his sons have been in McKeesport personally superintending the introduction of the plant, which has been placed in successful operation. The process heretofore used consisted of five operations, two dippings in grease and three in tin. By the new process the same results are obtained in one operation by inserting a sheet in a solution of tin and palm oil. The cost of manufacture is wonderfully cheapened, and the quality of the product is said to be excellent. either for sheet or turn work.

The greater part of the tin imported to this country comes from South Wales, where the largest mills in the world are located. There are mills in France, Italy, Germany and Russia, but they make scarcely more than is used for home consumption. The import in 1889 is estimated at 6,000,000 boxes, and it is worth $5 a box.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

His Early Services as an Explorer of the Great West-The Conquest of California-The Pathfinder's Romantic Marriage-His Later Years.

Gen. John C. Fremont, who died in New York city the other day, was born Jan. 21, 1813, at Savannah, Ga. His father had come from France and married a Virginian. He died when John Charles was 5 years old, and the widow took her children to Charleston, S. C. There the boy remained for more than ten vears. At 17 years of age he entered Charleston college. There he was an excellent scholar, but his infractions of discipline were so marked that he received numerous warnings and was then expelled. After this he went in a naval vessel, the Natchez, for a two years' cruise to teach midshipmen. When he returned the faculty of Charleston college relent-ed and gave him his degree. Go-ing to Baltimore he passed an examination for professor in the United States navy and was appointed to a ship. He declined his appointment, however, to go on a survey for a proposed rail-road. After this GEN. FREMONT. survey he went in a military reconnoissance of the mountains of the Cherokee country, in Georgia, North Carolina and Tennessee. This expedition developed in Fremont a taste for exploring wild countries. He joined Jean Nicholas Nicollet, who was exploring for the government, and while with him, in July, 1838, was commissioned a second lieutenant of topographical engineers in the United States

Two years later Fremont went to Washington with Nicollet to assist in making up a report of their explorations. Senator Thomas Benton, of Missouri, was then one of the great men of the nation. His second daughter, Jessie, was a school girl at Georgetown. Fremont went there one evening to a school exhibition and met her. She was very young -only 15-but she was old enough to be an attraction to the young engineer officer. An intimacy sprang up, and it was not long before Fremont and Jessie Benton were betrothed. Mrs. Benton was opposed to the match.

Fremont was ordered off on more exploring work, probably through the influence of Mrs. Benton with the secretary of war. He completed his task a unusual expedition and returned to Washington, and before another job could be arranged for him he secretly married the lady of his love. Fremont made two expeditions under

Mr. Nicollet, and then prepared for an expedition which he was to lead himself. From 1842 onward he was engaged in one exploring expedition after another, He explored the South pass of the Rocky mountains and the Wind River mountains, ascending to their highest point, now known as Fremont's peak. The next year, with thirty-nine men, he explored the region between the Rocky mountains and the Pacific, then entirely unknown. He visited the Great Salt of the Columbia, descended its valley to Fort Vancouver, and returned through an almost unknown region leading from the lower Columbia to the upper Colorado, crossed by high and rugged mountain chains.

He made up his mind to take his party across without a guide. He suc-_ceeded, making the transit in forty days, reaching Sutter's Fort, on the Sacramento, early in March. He then crossed the Sierra Nevada, and after another visit to Salt Lake returned to Kansas in July, 1844, after an absence of fourteen

In January, 1845, Fremont received as a reward for his work the double brevet of first lieutenant and captain, and in the spring of the same year set out to explore the great basin of the maritime region of California and Oregon. He crossed the Sierra Nevada in the dead of winter to obtain supplies, and left his party in the valley of San Joaquin while he went to Monterey, then the Mexican capital of California, to ask permission to proceed with his exploration. Permission was first granted, then revoked, and Fremont was ordered to leave the country.

On his way back to the states he met a party with directions from Washington for him to watch over the interests of the United States in California. Fremont at once returned, and none too soon, for he found that Gen. Castro was marching against the settlements. The settlers flocked to Fremont's camp, and with this accession of force in less than a month he had freed northern California from Mexican authority.

Fremont was made a lieutenant colonel and was elected governor of California by the settlers on July 4, 1846. Learning that Commodore Sloat, commanding the United States squadron on the Pacific coast, had seized Monterey, Fremont marched to join him, and reached Monterey on the 19th of July with 160 mounted riflemen. Commodore Stockton arrived at Monterey about this time with instructions to take possession of California. Fremont organized a battalion to assist him, and was appointed to command it as major. Meanwhile news came of the breaking out of the Mexican war. Commodore Stockton appointed Fremont military commandant and civil governor of California, and on the 13th of January, 1847, he concluded articles with the Mexicans which left the country permanently in possession of the United States.

Gen. Stephen W. Kearny, who had meanwhile entered California with a small force of dragoons, soon got into a quarrel with Commodore Stockton as to who should command. The president had given each authority to conquer the country and organize a government. Fremont's authority had come from Stockton, and Kearny was Fremont's superior in the army. It was a question with him as to whom he should obey. He finally concluded to obey Stockton, ignoring his army relations altogether. In the spring of 1847 the government decided in favor of Gen. Kearny, and in June he set out overland for the United States accompanied by Fremont, whose position was anything but agree When they reached Fort Leavenworth he was put under arrest and ordered to report in person at Washington, where he was tried by court martial, charged with "mutiny," "disobedience of the command of a superior officer and "conduct to the prejudice of good order and military discipline." He was found guilty and sentenced to be dismissed from the service, but a majority of the court recommended him to the clemency of the president, who refused to confirm the verdict of "mutiny" but approved the rest, and remitted the pen-

Fremont at once resigned his commission, and in the fall of the same year across the continent at his own expense He reached the Sacramento in the spring of 1849: This ended for a time Fre mont's explorations. His efforts and his sufferings together with their results became well known all over the United States, and gained for the explorer the title of Pathfinder." He bought the Mariposa estate, a large tract of land containing gold mines, and organized the Mariposa Gold Mining company. The legislature of California elected him to the United States senate, and he took his seat in 1850.

His term in the senate had been determined by lot to be a short one, and expired March 4, 1851. He was a Free Soiler, his party was yet in its infancy, and he was not re-elected. He devoted himself to his private affairs for a while and visited Europe. Learning in 1853 that congress had made un appropriation for three railroad routes from the Mississippi to the Pacific ocean he returned and fitted out an expedition. He finally reached California, having found passes through the mountains. Then he went to New York with his family where he took up his residence.

Meanwhile the Free Soilers had organized the Republican party, and it was hunting for a leader. The choice fell upon Fremont, and in June, 1856, he was nominated for president, and in the subsequent campaign defeated by Buch-

As the pathfinder, as leader of the Republican party in 1856, it was to be expected that Fremont would have a very important command when the war broke out four years later. The Blairs, of St. Louis. brought the matter to Mr. Lincoln's notice, who recognizing the claim appointed Fremont a major general in the regular army, and gave him charge gave him charge of the western LIEUT. FREMONT, "THE department, with PATHFINDER." headquarters at St. Louis. Fremont was in Europe at the time, but arrived in New York about the 1st of July, 1861, and on the 26th of the month reached St. Louis. Five weeks after taking command Fremont issued a proclamation assuming the government of the state and announcing that he would emancipate the slaves. President Lincoln wrote him approving all of the proclamation except the emancipation clause, which he annulled. This difference, however, did not result in Fremont relinquishing his command, but a great deal of complaint was made of his administration as inefficient and very extravagant. Mr. Cameron, then secretary of war, looked into the matter, and on his report Fremont was relieved on the 2d of November, 1861, after having held it ninety-eight days.

In 1862 President Lincoln instituted the mountain department, consisting of portions of West Virginia, Kentucky and Tennessee, and placed Fremont in command. In the early part of June he was engaged with Gen. Stonewall Jackson in a series of skirmishes which lasted for eight days. The campaign was ended by the battle of Cross Keys on June 8, and Jackson withdrew. Two weeks later the president placed Gen. Pope in charge the Army of Virginia, including Fremont's corps, whereupon Fremont asked to be relieved. His request was granted. This ended Fremont's career

In the spring of 1864 the question came up as to Mr. Lincoln's re-election. There were three parties in the field, the Democrats, Republicans and the Republicans who were dissatisfied with Mr. Lincoln's administration. These based their opposition on the claim that the war had not been prosecuted with vigor. They nominated Fremont for president and he accepted. He was now before the people once more as a presidential candidate, but with a very different constituency. From the first it was evident that the bulk of those desiring a prosecution of the war would vote for Mr. Lincoln and the dissatisfied Republicans were but a handfull. Two months before the election Fremont withdrew.

Gen. Fremont was governor of Arizona from 1878 to 1881, and for a brief period was governor of New Mexico, to which position he was appointed by President Arthur. Subsequently he met with business disasters and was sentenced by default by the French government to fine and imprisonment for fraudulent representations regarding an issue of railway bonds. None of Fremont's commercial schemes was successful and fortune never came to him. Indeed the last years of his life were in sharp con-trast with his younger days. Only the other day congress recognized his ser-vices by placing him on the retired list as a major general of the regular army, but the honor came too late to bring him much substantial comfort. He leaves two sons, one of whom is in the military and the other in the naval service of the United States, a daughter and a widow.

COUNTRY OR CITY HEAT

THERE IS NOT A LARGE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE TWO.

And for the lean man the situation is even worse. The fat man boils and steams in comparative comfort, but the of Chicopee Falls, Mass., near Springlean man—alas! he sizzles and frys till

THE SIZZLING FAT MAN. he feels and looks like a cinder. The lean man's appearance suffers cruelly in comparison. What clammy and sluggish rivulets of perspiration are yielded up by his skinny exterior seem to be wrung from him by some great mental anguish, whereas the fat man perspires as naturally, easily, comfortably and becomingly as a pitcher of ice water. But the fat man must go. He blocks the way to the soda fountain and takes up too much room in the horse cars. The scientists declare that a person is no cooler for filling his stomach with "The sensation of thirst," they say, "is in the throat. The stomach has nothing to do with it." Why didn't some one think of that before? The stomach has enough to do already. Why overload it with lemonade and soda water because you are thirsty in your throat? As you go along the street, wet as water outside and dry as fire inside, and observe the golden streams that are pouring into the tills of plutocratic venders of temperance drinks, six to every block, remember what the scientists say. AT THE SODA WATER COUNTER.

When the temperature rose to 80 degs. the sellers of cool drinks began to make money rapidly, but experienced no little difficulty in keeping on tap a sufficient variety to satisfy wisely discriminating palates. The population was beginning to drink, but it demanded all sorts of peculiar mixtures and flavors. When the mercury touched 85 degs. the list was narrowed down to less than half a dozen of the good old fashioned flavors, and when the 90 mark was touched and passed the sellers of cool drinks had everything their own way. If the supply of "vanilla" gave out they filled up the vanilla compartment with anything that was handy, and the population drank, made no complaint. asked no questions, paid its money and came back and drank again. As the hours passed and the 90 mark was out of the race the population grew more reck less and the soda water sellers more autocratic. The population, as it wound by the fountain in a never ending procession, could find strength to gasp but one word:

"Soda! The czar of the fountain adopted the Drink was the main thing, but there was also the question of dress and occu-pation. Should business be allowed to go to the bow-wows entirely, or should an effort be made to keep up an appearance of industry? Was it better up stairs in one's room with nothing on, or on the front steps dressed in as few and as thin garments as the custom of civilization and the prejudices of the police department would permit? Was it better to go in swimming, or to sit in the shade and eat watermelon?

The question of straw hats and seersuckers was often uppermost, while the dreadful uncertainty as to the exact social status of the silk sash as a substitute for the waistcoat was as harassing as a nightmare.

It is entirely safe to say that while the city man and woman were ardently longing for the pure breezes and sylvan shades of the country spot most dear to their memories, the country man and woman were declaring the dusty roads and the crude conveniences of farm life ingapportable.

And it was hot in the country. Even the frogs and tadpoles were parboiled in the shallow, still pools where their ancestors had lived until seized by the farm boys for bait. In the pasture immersed to their shoulders, only venturing out as the sun sank low to get a few mouthfuls of grass on the way home to be milked. The pigs wallowed in the mud, first on this side and then on the other, and on the upper side the mud was always baked as hard as the boards of their pen. The hens wandered listlessly about the farm yard with their beaks wide open pouting for breath, and two old roosters, disputants for supremacy on the largest dunghill, inconsiderately renewing their ancient feud, were chastised by the sun and crawled off into the shade of the barn to die.

The only cool place on the farm was the spring house, with its troughs of running, sparkling water fresh from the hillside and its rows of moisture beaded milk crocks. Here at midday the farmer, the boys and the hired men come after dinner, and though the rye was dead ripe in the field here they lingered until after 4 o'clock drinking buttermilk and recalling all the bad days of their experience. This day was admitted to be the hottest of them all; and that evening in the midst of the violent storm that dropped suddenly out of a clear sky the old oak overhanging the well was split by lightning from top to bottom.

CURTIS DUNHAM. A NOTED WRITER'S ABODE.

The Lime of Edward Bellamy at Chieopce Falls, Mass. Mr. Edward Bellamy, the originator and leader in the Nationalist movement, lives in a modest house in the little town

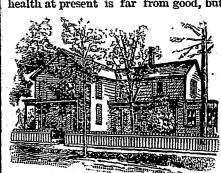

The house was built by his father, the Rev. R. K. Bellamy, who for thirty-four years was the pastor of the Baptist church. He died about five years ago, and the home is now owned and occupied by his widow, who lives with her son Mr. Edward Bellamy, whose immediate family consists of his wife and two children, a boy and a girl. Mrs. Edward Pellamy, who was Miss Emma Sanderson before her marriage, was a ward of the elder Mr. Bellamy. She is about fifteen years the junior of her husband, who is 42 years of age. She is rather a plain looking little woman of medium height, with a fair complexion and brown eyes. She has a pleasant voice and agreeable manners. She is somewhat musical, and sings in the choir of the Baptist church, where her husband usually does not follow her.

The Bellamy family traces its ancestry back to the famous Dr. Bellamy, of Litchfield, Conn. Mr. Edward Bellamy has two brothers, one a journalist connected with a Springfield paper, who resides at Chicopee Falls, the other a lawyer, residing in New York. Mr. Edward Bellamy was at one time connected with The Springfield Union, and still writes occasionally for that paper.

He now wears a full beard, and one acquainted with his face only through the photograph which has been so often reproduced of late in different periodicals would scarcely recognize him. His health at present is far from good, but

MR. BELLAMY'S HOME AT CHICOPEE FALLS. he hopes soon to get to his seaside cottage on the Massachusetts coast for a Mr. Bellamy is deluged with invitations to address public meetings. These he usually declines for the reason that he does not care to be looked upon "as a hippodromer," as he calls it.

"I feel that I can do better work for the cause by simple conversation with my fellow men," he says. He has re-cently received many letters from English evolutionists asking him to come over and help establish Nationalism among the educated people as it has been done in Boston. Mr. Bellamy disclaims any rights of leadership in the Nationalist movement as vested in himself.

"The Nationalists certainly are not going to do what I say, or what any other man says. We are not by any means united on every point that may arise in politics, or even in the policy of our novement. In our Boston clubs are Republicans.

Democrats, Mugwumps and Prohibitionists. I suppose that most of the people are women suffragists, but that does not necessarily follow. In New York city there are eight Nationalist clubs and one in Brooklyn. Mr. Bellamy thinks it quite probable that the California Nationalists will nominate state and municipal officers this fall "if it seems probable that the movement may be successful," he says. "I shall go out there and do what I can to help them in their campaign."

A Distinguished Looking Bishop. Rev. Dr. E. R. Atwill, of Toledo, who was recently elected bishop of the new Episcopal diocese of west Missouri, is a tall, distinguished looking man of more than usual charm of manner and personal magnetism. He is an eloquent speaker and a man of great learning. He was born in Red Hook, N. Y., in 1840, and was graduated from Columbia college in 1862 and from the General Theological semnary two years later. His first ministerial position was as assistant at St. Luke's church, New York. Afterward he was made rector of St. Paul's church in Brooklyn, leaving there to become Bishop Hopkins' assistant at Burlington, Vt., where he became rector of St. Paul's church in 1867. For fifteen years he remained there, but in 1882 he was called to take charge of Trinity church, Toledo, where he was at the time of his election,

The Color Line Drawn at the Beach. The negro question still crops out occasionally in a sensational way. The latest rumpus has occurred at Asbury Park, the well known eastern summer resort, where a ukase was recently issued by the owner of the ocean bluff and beach to the effect that the colored people must bathe within certain limits and at specified hours. Otherwise they will be barred from the pleasures of the surf altogether.

First Met on Their Wedding Day. A courtship by letter ended in a marriage at Rat Portage, N. W. T., the other day. The groom was Robert Gill, a teacher, of Rainy River, and the bride Miss Emily Taylor, of Owen Sound. A large crowd witnessed the ceremony, which took place in the open air immediately after the young woman's arrival in getting enough to eat, but at Memohis he had to spend his entire fortune fifty cents—on meals. In Louisville he passed two days, but he didn't like Cincinnati, and was glad to be able to get away in five hours. In Buffalo he lived for five days and then went direct to New York. This entire trip he made with the fifty cents and the good will of the railroad men. There is nothing of the braggart about the boy; he tells his story in a plain, straightforward way. When he wants to do a thing, he says, he simply goes ahead and does it. He is not at all handsome, for he has unkempt, yellow hair, a queer shaped head and hundreds of freckles. Yet he impresses one as being honest and trustworthy. THE WORKINGMEN'S LEADER.

Thomas II. Garside, Who Conducted the Cloakmakers' Strike. It has been a long time since a strike has occurred in New York which has caused so much suffering to its participants as that of the cloakmakers. At one time thousands were literally on the verge of starvation. The locked out men were mostly Polish Jews, and showed the greatest disinclination to accept aid from outside sources. A reporter went into one house where a striker and his wife and three children were living. The man acknowledged that they had had but one meal a day for weeks, but spoke quickly in protest when charity was suggested, and finally, to prove that he needed no assistance, brought out five cents, which he asked the reporter to give to some one more needy than he. Whether they were right or wrong the cloakmakers made a T. H. GARSIDE. heroic fight. They braved hunger and all manner of other discomforts in order to gain their point with a persistence that has been seldom equaled. In the course of the fight the figure of Thomas H. Garside loomed up, naturally, into considerable prominence. He is an Englishman by birth and is only 36 years old. He became a clergyman, but in 1883, two or three years after he came to this country, he abandoned the Christian faith, becoming in turn a ma terialist, a socialist and an anarchist. He was a member of the Knights of Labor, and his anarchistic tendencies made enemies for him of many of the socialists belonging to that organization. They claimed that he cared nothing for the cause of labor, but only wante notoriety. Stories were circulated that he had hired a man to club him, and had pretended that he had been poisoned in order to make himself talked about, but the men who started them have since been expelled from the party. Mr. Garside had charge of several important

How Congressional Pages Make Money A page in the house made $400 on Mc-Kinley's "suits of clothes" tariff speech, and $250 on Cutcheon's speech on Fitz John Porter. Every big tariff speech is money in the pocket of one or more of the pages, and the recent debate on federal elections has been a perfect gold mine for the boys. Then each member wants a copy of every speech made on the tariff, or silver, or elections, to bind up with his own in a handsome volume, and for gathering up the pamphlets the boys get $5 or $10. The autograph business, long a source of profit, has ceased to be productive. In the house the taking of autographs has been forbidden. unless it be done at the request of a

A Model British Landlord. Lord Tollemache, now over 80 years of age and in bad health, has achieved a unique fame in England. His Cheshire estate, 26,000 acres in extent, supports practically one of the most prosperous communities of agriculturists known to the British kingdom. In the last sixty years Lord Tollemache has evicted nobody, had no vacant farms, and suffered no loss through non-payment of rents. All his tenants are prosperous and contented, and they owe their exceptionally fortunate lot to the wise administration of their landlord. The estate descended to the present owner in a direct line from ancestors who owned it when Hen-

London's New Police Chief. The new commissioner of London police, Sir Edward Ridley Colbourne Bradford, R. C. S. I., who was recently appointed to succeed Mr. Monro, is not likely to see any more exciting or important service in his new field than he has already gone through in India. He is the son of an English clergyman, and is 54 years old.

In 1853 he entered the Madras army, became lieutenant in 1855, captain in 1865, major in 1873. lieutenant colonel in 1879 1883. In 1857 he served with the Fourteenth light dragoons in the Persian cam-patches. In the political service of lia he has gained almost as great distinton as he has in the military, one of thorightest spots in his career being the kt which he played in the suppression of a Thug-gee. He is an enthusiastic sportlan, and notwithstanding the fact that lost a portion of one of his arms durita fight with a maneating tiger, he mages a horse with extraordinary skill.

A Novel Bridge at Vienn A project is on foot for spaning the Danube canal in Vienna with a fidge lined with shops, after the model the famous Ponte Rialto at Venice a the Arno bridge at Florence. The stature is to be exclusively of iron. It ll be sixty-four meters long and fortight wide, one of the broadest in the rld. The carriageway will be twelve ters wide, and the interior footpath on her side three. The inner railings whe flanked by footpaths four mete in width. There will be sixty-eight pp on the new bridge, which will be litt on the site of the Ferdinand's Brie, the only wooden crossway that now warsse the capal erses the canal.

The Crandall Current. From observations made at the grots of the Cornell university expering station, Professor Bailey has arrived the conclusion that the Crandall currs which was supposed by its dissemina to be a hybrid between the Misso currant and the common red currant really a variety of the Buffalo or Misso current, with no inclinations of hybr ity. He pronounces the variety as qui distinct, and believes that when furth selected and improved upon it will b come a staple. $100 Reward. $100 The readers of the Buchanan Record will be pleased to learn there is at east one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constituional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken intenally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength and building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in ils curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any cases it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials. Address. F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, O.
