SEVEN AGES OF WOMEN.

BY BROWNE FERREMAN. At sixteen, she wondered just who she was, and from the word of vain men she selected a little cooey. She thought she would try it again. Twenty-five! Was she really so old? Well, well! She could hardly go back on the almanac—could she, old friend? For, somehow, she hadn't the knack.

At thirty, she felt that her case had suddenly become acute. Thirty-five! Could it be after all? That she must live always alone? When forty arrived she grew cold. Or what use to continue the fight? Between worry, duty and suspense she knew she was almost a fright.

Forty-five! "What are men but a mere shadow?" she said to herself. "I will marry and get on with my life." So she drifts into old age and tea. And forgets both ambition and spleen.

OUR HOUSEKEEPER. WANTED.—A neat and capable girl to do housework in a family of four in Dorchester district, must be strong and have good references. Salary $4 a week. References required. Address: Globe office.

There it was in the "want" column of the morning paper, just an ordinary looking advertisement, huddled in with innumerable others of like import, and only in the "want" column in its appearance; but this same little "ad" apparently so harmless, was destined to cause me considerable trouble.

"Doesn't it look nice, Harry?" said my wife, as she came off at arm's length and gazing admiringly at the wretched little notice. "It seems so nice to have something of our own in the paper. I wonder if any of our friends will sing?"

"But you forget, my dear, that our name is not mentioned," I said. "N. L." is not very difficult. It might be Scriggins the rag gatherer, who lives on the corner of the street, for any one else would know.

"Well, anyhow, I hope it will be the means of our finding a girl with some common sense," she said. "I returned, 'for if this sort of thing continues much longer I shall either hunt up another house, lease or no lease, or—I will start some night for Canada.'"

The dilemma in which we were placed was simply this: Some six months before in looking for a house, I had struck upon one out in the suburbs—on M—street in Dorchester—that just suited my fancy. It was a large and airy place, with a garden of all, was to be let at a remarkably low figure, not much above half the usual rent asked for such a house.

"I can't leave it for less than three years," the agent said, "and I don't want to see him; the owner is away in Europe, and he wishes some one to have the house who will stay there and who will see that it does not go to waste."

But Mattie—she's my wife, you know—had looked the house over with me, and we had both decided that it was just what we wanted, and so the necessary papers were drawn up and signed, and we moved in and took possession.

But just here our trouble began. If I had thought at the time that the three years' lease business looked a trifle hard, I had not attended to it, but I very soon began to have my eyes opened, and to see the agent's motive in leasing the house for such a length of time.

The first night in our new quarters, I was awakened about midnight by a sound sleep, to find Mattie sitting up in bed, clutching my arm and frantically calling my name.

"Why, Mattie, what's the matter?" I cried, sitting up in bed. "Is anything wrong?" "Something's wrong with the children, please, and see what it is, I heard such a strange sound out there."

I went hastily to a lamp, and went into the adjoining room where the children slept. All was right there, however; the two little ones were sleeping as calmly as could be. I went back to bed for the remainder of the night, and slept peacefully.

The next night there was a repetition of the strange sounds, only this time with decided numerous variations. Doors in the rooms below were seemingly slightly ajar, and a faint light shone across the floor, or appeared to be, while sounds as of some one passing up and down the stairs were frequently heard.

On the third morning the woman who acted as our housekeeper announced her determination of leaving the house as she could no longer stand the noise, which nightly disturbed her.

Had she seen anything of a frightful nature? We asked. No, she had not, she said; but she couldn't and wouldn't stay in such a chain as a neighbor's night for any amount of money. And then we learned from various sources that the house had for a long time borne the reputation of being haunted, and that many tenants had left it for that reason.

But as neither Mattie nor I am at all superstitious, and no believers in ghosts of any stamp, the disagreeable noises soon ceased to trouble us, especially as we found that the so-called ghosts appeared perfectly content to confine their nocturnal labors to the making of discordant sounds, and did not seem at all inclined to do any damage in such or other ways to our servants. Each one left us after a short time, declaring that she could not be induced to stay any longer upon any consideration. Mattie and I were in utter despair. At last a thought struck me.

"I'll advertise," I said. "The very thing," said Mattie. "May be you will find one who isn't scared to death at nothing at all. And thus it was that my advertisement appeared in the newspaper. "Anything for 'N. L.' this morning?" "Seven or eight, I guess," said the clerk. "Yes, there's a dozen of 'em," he said further on.

am not usually very impulsive, but somehow I concluded that this Nora Lenell was just the girl Mattie wanted, and so wrote to her at once, appointing an interview at the office for the next day.

If I had been favorably impressed by Miss Lenell's letter, I was a great deal more so by the appearance of the girl who came to my office. She was not handsome by any means, but had a quiet manner about her that quite met my approval, and I felt sure Mattie would be pleased with her. She was not handsome by any means, but had a quiet manner about her that quite met my approval, and I felt sure Mattie would be pleased with her.

"Very Lenell," I said, after we had talked over the matter, "I have a question to ask you which you will not doubt think a strange one. Do you believe in ghosts?"

"She looked at me for an instant in which I could see that she was not, and then answered steadily enough— "No, sir, why do you ask?"

"Because," I said, "my house has the name of being haunted. I myself do not believe in them, but I have heard of some of the things that have happened there, and I am sure you have heard of them, whatever may be their cause, have had the effect of scaring away every girl who has come there to live with us so far. For that matter, I have heard of a few looking advertisements inserted in the paper, hoping thus to find some one who had nerve enough not to be afraid of such simple things. Do you think that you might be able to do so?"

"I think you will find that I have courage enough," she said quietly. "I don't scare very easily."

And so Miss Lenell came to live with us. I had not time to see what effect the ghostly manifestations would have upon her. But for once we seemed to have found a jewel of a housekeeper. So I signed the contract, and she was engaged, and she had a quiet way of going around the house about her work that was truly refreshing after the noisy and nervous chatter of the other girls.

"Well, anyhow, I hope it will be the means of our finding a girl with some common sense," she said. "I returned, 'for if this sort of thing continues much longer I shall either hunt up another house, lease or no lease, or—I will start some night for Canada.'"

"What's the matter, Lawton?" asked Smith. "But I had lived into my desk, and was hurriedly rummaging over the contents." At last I found what I was in search of, the photographs which I had taken from the cabinet. There were two faces looked as nearly alike as a man and woman can look.

"That's him," said the detective, who had followed me, "now took the picture from my hand. "But this is a woman," I said. "Acting the woman, yes," said Mr. Anderson, composedly.

"But this is a woman," I said. "Acting the woman, yes," said Mr. Anderson, composedly. "She's my housekeeper."

"Can't help it if it's your grandmother," said the detective, dryly; "it's Dandy Ike, anyhow. Just look at that scar over his eye."

I remembered a peculiar scar which Miss Lenell had over her left eye, and there, plain as day, it was over the left eye of Dandy Ike's photograph; in the detective's hand.

"That's only one of his many disguises," said the latter gentleman. "As I said, he's up to anything; but this playing the housekeeper and cook, that's going to prove a puzzle. I should like to get right at your place, Mr. Lawton, and investigate."

Wonderingly, and half dazed, I followed him out, and we took a street car for Dorchester. I had been away that night, and had not had time to go there before work that morning, so that it was with a great amount of anxiety that I now approached my house.

Mattie met us at the door. She looked pale and frightened, and she had been crying. "Oh, Harry," she said, half sobbing, "Dandy Ike is gone, and the man who is gone, and our watch and the money in the Indian cabinet, and—"

Here she broke down completely. The detective turned to me with a sort of look which said, "I have not had time to go there before work that morning, so that it was with a great amount of anxiety that I now approached my house."

"Begin to think I was right, don't you?" he said sarcastically. "In spite of all endeavors to capture him, the wily thief made good his escape. He will add, and the matter subsequently Dandy Ike was arrested in New York for some sort of a crime, and sent to the penitentiary in that State. In a confession which he made, he admitted having stolen the watch of a woman at one time in Boston, and in company with a confederate, to having worked our neighborhood for about all it was worth."

"But what about the ghosts? you ask. Well, they are, in fact, I never believed, as I said before, that there were any there. And I didn't intend to tell a ghost story, anyhow. But the rats were terribly plenty."

A Grandmother's Birthday. A private letter to a Cincinnati friend who is spending the year among the mountains of the Pyrenees. The morning after our arrival we were awakened by the sound of a violin and flutes under the window, and burying down below the little street, we saw the shadow of a man over the door and wreaths over a high chair which was set in state.

The table was already covered with gifts brought by the young people whose names we had heard. There were many of them, and they were very simple, for their donors are poor—knitted gloves, a shawl, baskets of preserves, and the like. There were, but on all some little message of love was pinned.

"Is there a bride in the house?" I asked of my landlord. "No," he said. "We do not make such a bother about our young people. It is our grandmother's birthday."

Nearly a week afterward, when the episode of the picture-taking I had for the time forgotten, as I was passing my friend's studio he hailed me. "The birthday of your dear old grandmother, Lawton," he said. "Better take 'em along with you."

As it was a very busy time just then, I tossed the pictures into my desk when I got home, and I didn't get to looking them over, and thought no more about them.

One morning as I stood waiting for a horse car, to go to my work, I was looking at the sky, and my assistant bookkeeper in my office, and he lived just across the street from us—had taken the house only a few weeks before, and appeared to be excited.

"What's the matter?" he asked. "Burglars that have been going on around here for some time, Lawton," he said; "well, I was the victim last night, to the tune of five hundred dollars—just got the money from the bank, and I'm private speculating of my own, and was going to put it in the bank to-day."

"I was dumfounded. For a number of days the strange robberies had been taking place, I know, but this was coming pretty near home. In some cases considerably large amounts of money and jewelry had been taken, but in no instance had the burglars left any trace behind them, and the police and detectives were alike unable to discover the guilty parties."

"But didn't whoever it was leave any trail?" I asked. "No," he said. "He is an old hand at the business, a regular professional, for the lock of the desk where the money was kept was picked in good shape, and he must have used some kind of a skeleton key affair to open the door of the house, and he was locked this morning, and I know I locked it myself just before going to bed, and my wife and I were the only ones in the house last night. I shall go to the police to-day, and I'll get down town, and put the case in their hands; and I'm going to see a fellow I'm acquainted with, a detective, and put him on the track, too. He's a sharp fellow, and I think he'll now-and-then find out something about it if it is any one."

One morning, a few days after, as I entered the office, I noticed Smith talking with a strange man, and I was standing near my desk. "This is the gentleman whom I was speaking to you about the other day, Lawton," said Smith. "Mr. Anderson, the stranger bowed. Then he continued— "As I was saying, Smith, it is the work of a professional burglar, without any doubt, and I think that one of us we've been looking for some time for other offences. He is supposed to be somewhere around New York, but I've got reasons for believing that he is in Boston now, and has been for a number of weeks. From certain indications I think that he and this mysterious burglar are one and the same man. He is a smart fellow—will carry through anything he undertakes, no matter what it is, and he's more alacritous and disguises than you could shake a stick at, though he is known generally as 'Dandy Ike.' I've got good reasons for believing that it is he, and I think you have ever seen him."

I stopped over and looked at the photograph which the detective held. "Why it looks like some one I've seen," I said. "It's—no, it can't—yes, it must—"

"What's the matter, Lawton?" asked Smith. "But I had lived into my desk, and was hurriedly rummaging over the contents." At last I found what I was in search of, the photographs which I had taken from the cabinet. There were two faces looked as nearly alike as a man and woman can look.

Two Pairs of Shoes in One. A novelty in the shoe manufacturing line is of English invention, and consists of a removable sole and top lift which can be changed when worn without consulting the cobbler. The feature of the invention is said to be a metal plate riveted to the bottom of the shoe when lasted. The sole, in the shape of a tap sole, is provided with a slotted well. Under the well is a thin band or strip of metal which slides under the edges of the plate riveted on the bottom of the shoe. The Shank is of steel, japped with a rubber covering, and the sole is counter sunk to fit under the slat where it is fastened and held in place by two screws. The top piece of the heel is fastened by three screws.

It is proposed to make shoes by this method, and furnish an extra pair of soles as well as make the soles for sale separately. Any one can take out the screws when the first sole is worn and slip on a new pair of soles, which it is said are finished better and look better than the work of the ordinary cobbler.

POSTPONED SALE.—Mr. Nathaniel Wilson's sale, advertised for Tuesday, Nov. 10, has been postponed to next Tuesday, Nov. 17. He has a large lot of valuable personal property for sale. Remember the date.

THE heavy rainfall of this week will be a blessing to Niles City, by raising the level of Barren Lake so they may have water. There was talk of closing school on account of the failure in the water supply for the boilers for heating purposes.

THE report was current here Monday that the St. Joseph Valley road had been sold to Chicago parties. When the RECORD asked Mr. Patterson for news, he declined with thanks to be interviewed, so the rumor is taken at what it is worth.

THE "Ladies Relief Corps" will give an oyster supper, on Saturday evening, 11, in the Imhoff block, for the benefit of several families in this village who need a helping hand. Everybody come and help a good cause, and get a dish of fine oysters for 20 cents.

THE Vandavia Railway Company, last Saturday, bought of Wells, Higman & Co. their manufacturing site on the St. Joseph river, at the foot of Main street, in St. Joseph. This purchase will give the railway company a total water frontage of 820 feet. It is reported that one or more new boat lines will be run between Chicago and Milwaukee in connection with their trains. A passenger depot and warehouses will be built on the grounds at an early date.

A good time was had at a calico party given by the Misses Kittle Fox and Bernice Earl, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. L. P. Fox, last Friday evening. There were about fifty young people present, among whom were Messrs. Lew Burke, Hal. Lowrey, Ed. Hahn, Fred Smith, Sam'l Quimby, Dick Duggan, Lute Peak, Misses Ollie Allen, Lottie Howe, Skip Rey Niers, Florence Platts, from Niles; Harry Rought, of South Bend, Miss Dottie Barnes, of Benton Harbor.

FARMERS' INSTITUTE.—Arrangements are being made by the State Board of Agriculture, to hold a series of twenty Farmers' Institutes in the state during the coming winter. To two of these it is intended to give special importance, making them special schools of instruction to farmers, and including a large scope of territory, and besides addresses by a few local speakers, a class of speakers will be furnished by the state board, who are as good as is to be found in the state. Through the influence of Hon. Henry Chamberlain, of Three Oaks, who is a member of the state board, one of these institutes has been appointed to be held in Buchanan, the second week in January, beginning Monday and closing Friday. Hon. Charles Garfield, secretary of the state board, is expected to be here tomorrow to make arrangements for the institute. Citizens of Buchanan will be expected to furnish hall and a few other minor expenses, and to see that attendants are provided with proper and comfortable lodging at reasonable prices. It is expected that prominent farmers from all parts of this congressional district, and perhaps from counties outside the district, will attend, and they must be entertained. Committees will be appointed while Mr. Garfield is here to look after all of these details.

ED. WYKOFF, on Terre Coupee Prairie, is the latest to suffer from the sheep killing dogs of that neighborhood. The report the RECORD gets of it is that fifty-eight of his flock were badly bitten, twelve of which were killed outright.

Felix Chamberlain, of Prairieville, claims that in splitting a maple tree he found a live frog imbedded in the interior eight inches from the surface. The frog was a little bleached out from the long confinement, but otherwise was apparently all right.—Detroit News. The Prairieville liar is still living.

DASTARDLY.—On Monday night some one went into David Knight's place, in Sawyer, and bored auger holes into thirty barrels of his cider and vinegar, letting the valuable liquid out onto the ground. When Chickaming can't get up a nice spruce there is little use of the rest of the county to try.

A MAN named Whipple, who has the lake shore part of the county for his home, is serving thirty days' sentence in the county jail for inducing some boys to break into freight cars in St. Joseph and steal goods for him to sell. He was sent from St. Joseph. He will be called upon again when the term is out.

WHEN Horace Greely said "Go West young man, go West," he did not know the ladies of the Presbyterian church were going to hold a Fair Dec. 9, 11 and 13, or he never would have advised it and thus deprived them of so much real happiness. All who were too wise to accept his proposition are invited to attend.

THE plan of the farmers to protect what little game there may be, by suits for trespass, is not confined to any special neighborhood, but appears to be general in all parts of the state. There is a strong difference of opinion between farmers and hunters on this point. The hunters think it a sure sign of the presence of bristles on the person of the farmer, and the farmer, of merely protecting what is his own.

The Husband Should Be Doer.

Judge Finletter, in charging the jury in a case tried in common pleas court, gave an opinion emphatically sustaining the rights of husbands to rule their homes.

The suit was that of John Yates against Charles M. Greaves for false arrest and malicious prosecution. Miss Greaves boarded in Yates' home. She was ordered by him to leave, but Mrs. Yates, whom Miss Greaves had never seen, told her to stay. Yates subsequently, upon coming home, quarreled with his wife and, it is alleged, choked her, and when Miss Greaves interfered, it is alleged, he threatened her. The next morning Mrs. Yates went with Miss Greaves to a magistrate's office, where the latter swore out a warrant charging Yates with threatening her life. He was locked up, and spent the night in a station house.

Miss Greaves did not appear against Yates the next day and he was discharged, but in her behalf it was alleged that her nonappearance was due to a solicitation by Yates' brother-in-law, who said that his conduct got bail. After release Yates brought the present suit against Miss Greaves.

Judge Finletter said that Miss Greaves should have obeyed the direction of Yates to leave. She had no right to remain in the home of her husband. The jury would therefore have to find a verdict for the plaintiff. In arriving at the damages they should consider the condition in life of the parties, but in finding for the plaintiff they should not award their verdict for him for a few dollars or a few cents, making it ridiculous by the small amount, but they should give him the same as would show that in Philadelphia every husband has the right and the duty to rule his household.

The jury after short deliberation returned a verdict of $300 for the plaintiff.—Philadelphia Press.

Sons of Distinguished Fires.
In a down town office the other day I met two gentlemen whose names will recall remarkable men and remarkable events in American history. They were Lieutenant Fremont and Lieutenant Lawrence, of the United States navy. The former is the son of the distinguished John C. Fremont, "the Pathfinder," who ran for president of the United States, and the other was Lawrence, the grandson of the hero of Lake Erie, old "Dutch" guy on the ship. Both of these gentlemen show some of the New York "lump" over for something to eat and drink was nothing remarkable, but that they should come in arm and arm, two naval chums, was something sufficient to stir the imagination. Lieutenant Fremont is attached to the new cruiser Philadelphia. He is a nice specimen of manhood, as was his father before him.—New York Herald.

How to Select a Turkey.
In this country only is the turkey found in a wild state. It is very fitting, therefore, that in the Christmas dinner it should be the principal dish. The turkey must be wisely chosen, well cooked and properly served. It should be plump and the meat white, with some fat, the legs black and smooth, and if there be spurs they should be short. The end of the breastbone should be flexible, more like gristle than bone. A turkey that is too large is not to its size, and has dark or bluish flesh, may be tender, but certainly will not be finely flavored and juicy. A dry pickled turkey will be found to have a much better flavor than a scalded one. All young turkeys are to be avoided, as they are a pound more than the scalded, but is well worth the extra price.—Maria Parlon in Ladies' Home Journal.

Full Neckwear for Men.
The shade of neckwear of September was mulberry, and beautiful indeed were the combinations in which its treatment was varied. There are many men that will not wear a red neck scarf under any circumstances. They are entering into prejudice to the blue, and nothing can change them. To them the mulberry offerings are a benison.

Red, red, red! Red here, red there, red everywhere. Red is the rage in fine neckwear.

The reddist, reddest reds are worn by some of the dressy men, that, by a subjugation of every other detail of attire, seek to quell the blazonry of this single gleam of texture.—Clothing and Furnisher.

In this country only is the turkey found in a wild state. It is very fitting, therefore, that in the Christmas dinner it should be the principal dish. The turkey must be wisely chosen, well cooked and properly served. It should be plump and the meat white, with some fat, the legs black and smooth, and if there be spurs they should be short. The end of the breastbone should be flexible, more like gristle than bone. A turkey that is too large is not to its size, and has dark or bluish flesh, may be tender, but certainly will not be finely flavored and juicy. A dry pickled turkey will be found to have a much better flavor than a scalded one. All young turkeys are to be avoided, as they are a pound more than the scalded, but is well worth the extra price.—Maria Parlon in Ladies' Home Journal.

Full Neckwear for Men.
The shade of neckwear of September was mulberry, and beautiful indeed were the combinations in which its treatment was varied. There are many men that will not wear a red neck scarf under any circumstances. They are entering into prejudice to the blue, and nothing can change them. To them the mulberry offerings are a benison.

Red, red, red! Red here, red there, red everywhere. Red is the rage in fine neckwear.

The reddist, reddest reds are worn by some of the dressy men, that, by a subjugation of every other detail of attire, seek to quell the blazonry of this single gleam of texture.—Clothing and Furnisher.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."
L. A. ALLEN, M. D.,
111 E. Chestnut St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

In the Year 1872,
While I was a Professor in a Chicago Medical College,
Dr. F. B. Brewer was my partner in practice. The partnership was dissolved by mutual consent, but he has since been in the trading business with Dr. F. B. Brewer. Respecting the man as I did for the high order of his social and business qualities, and for his medical attainments, I have kept watch of him since, and have such faith in his skill and ability, that after suffering for a long time with heart trouble and a general nervous prostration, from which I failed to be relieved, although many kind physicians had assisted me in search of the desired relief, I finally wrote to my old friend and partner, describing my case. He sent me medicine at once, of which I have been taking four weeks, and from which I have received such relief that I feel it due him as well as those who are consulting him, to give this testimonial, which I do unhesitatingly. I am 64 years old and have been practicing medicine 39 years.
