At Odds With The World.

BY EDWIN FRANCIS EDGETT.

He was always hearty and strong, yet he was never happy. A queer friendship was ours, indeed. But it was not so very strange, after all, when one looks at the matter closely. I was an invalid, and nevertheless happy; he was well, but unhappy. Thus, in the contrast of our temperaments came the tie which bound us in close friendship, I said to him one day, after we had been acquainted for about a year: "I don't understand, Morton, why it is that you, in your health and strength of mind and body are always so melancholy. Your eyes are bright, your mind is active, all your bodily move-ments are full of life, yet your counte-nance is always clouded with a look of solemnity which belies the outward evidences of your character." "My dear boy," that was his favorite mode of address, as I was six years his junior, if I remember rightly,—"my dear boy, I can never be happy. I was born with a mind so constituted that I ok at everything unside down. It all which bears sorrow to you, I see joy; in all that is to you happiness and pleasure, I see only discontent and misery. And despite my changing mental moods, I can never show outwardly anything but an expression of melancholy. From my birth I have been so. My mother used to tell me that, as a baby, I would cry at the most inexplicable times, and laugh and crow when ordinary babies would cry. This may seem inconsistent. But my laugh was not the youthful laugh of pleasure, but rather that of solemn glee at the sorrows of others, or even my own. have learned since to overcome that tendency. I think you know me well enough now to see that I am not a fiend, but my very nature is reversed, so that what is sorrow to you is joy to me, and what is joy to you, to me is sorrow. Strange, indeed, is it not? But yet it is so." "But, Morton, can't you shake off this depressing temperament? Can't you by some mental acrobatic work. overbalance your mind, and make yourself like other men?"

"I don't want to," was his somewhat startling reply. "I see you think it Iam what I am; you are what you are. Reflect. You would not change you nature, if you could; you would not make yourself othervise than you are. Just so with me. Moreover, my temperament is not de-pressing to me. You must remember that every man is to himself a little god, a miniature creator of himself, notwithstanding the fact that his life is shaped by an uncontrollable destiny." "Ah," I replied. "I see how it is, and understand the force of your reason-Let me, however, put one question to you. Are you perfectly sat sfied with the nature which clothes you with such a mind of reversed tendencies? I do not ask you if you want to make yourself another man in temperament. I simply ask if you conceive that your present state is happier than any other would be." "Yes, there is no doubt of it." he answered. "And to show you the force of my satisfaction, let me tell you a short story, a very brief one, which contains the pith and marrow of my foundation of life." A strange look came from his eyes as he began. I almost believed him His gaze was rapt upon me, insane. and I think that I must have shudder-

"In this story, which covers about twenty minutes of my life, you have the story of my whole existence. In my early days I studied medicine, and practiced for about a year. I was a fool to think that I could succeed in that profession, but the horrors of the lissecting room and the hospital were what drew me into the study. During my four years at the medical school I was happy, and happiest when I was at work over the dead, the maimed and distressed. I was not unskilful. Neither was I cruel. I might have succeeded if I had had that steady application to work which can only bring success. But, alas, I failed in that, as

L have in everything." "One evening I was sitting in my library reading Byron. I was, in fact, reading nothing new to me, for I have read and reread every line of that poet many times, as only one can read him who is intoxicated with what I have always called the Byronic malady. Yes, sir, a taste for Byron is a disease, a disease of the mind which is fully developed in me and in many others. Now, if you want to know—

Here he stopped suddenly, gazed about him, and smiling, recovered himself, although I saw that it took a strong effort. "I am wandering, as usual," he continued. "To return to my story. I had just commenced that fine passage in which are the lines: "From my youth upwards

My spirit walked not with the souls of men, I felt, as I bave felt numberless times, its application to myself, when the bell rang violently. My mind was in such a state of extreme tension that I involuntarily jumped, throwing the book on the floor. My servant was but a moment in coming to me with these words:

"A man, sir, injured, they say."
"Have him brought here," I said. Two men entered directly, bearing upon a stretcher an apparently lifeless oody. I silently motioned them to set

"Not dead," I said, "but he cannot Why did you bring him

"He requested it, sir. He was injured, shot through the body, in a brawl at a gambling house near by. He became unconscious immediately after uttering your name and requesting to

"Do you know why? I do not know

"He gave no reason." With that, the apparently lifeless body of the injured man was shaken by a tremendous shudder, and his eyes opened. His lips seemed to move. Bending close to him, I heard him repeat the very words I had been reading when he was brought to my house. "I started back in horror. My God! What does this mean? Am I mad." I turned to the man again, and saw that he was dead. A close look satisfied me that he had died but a few moments previously. Calming myself as best I could, I said to the attendants:

"The man is dead." In a few moments the dead man was borne away, and I was left to my thoughts. I was confused. Connected thought was impossible. Since that night, many years ago, I have thought much upon the matter, and now know that the shudder which went through the man's frame was his death struggle, and that the voice which I heard could not have been his. I am not superstitious, and know full well that what I heard was the echo of my own thoughts. But nevertheless, there was something more in it than mortal knowledge can explain. Why did the man wish to be brought to me? Why did he come at the moment when I was reading that passage, which, if before it was freighted with meaning to me, it is now burned into my very The voice I heard was not being. Even though I knew the man was dead, it was, through him, the voice of my other self speaking to me, and telling me from the lips of death what I am. You know that once I resolve upon a course of action, I never alter my determination. So, when this confirmation of myself, coming though it did as the swelling forth of my own mind into another consciousness, led me to see my spirit as in a mirror before me, I was more fixed than eyer in my peculiar environment. What would have been the cause for change in another, compelled in me a renewed determination to remain as I was. Hence I think you will see why my present

His Wedding Gift to Polly.

And to this day that young man will insist that he popped the question.
All this happened away "down east", and it wasn't long before there was a wedding. Not much longer before there came a letter from Polly's Uncle Josh, out in Michigan, who wrote effusively of his delight at her exhibition of what he called "grit", and he proposed that if the young couple would locate at Buchanan he would start them up in life, as a wedding gift. Of course they accepted, and were soon bidding their friends adieu.

A few weeks subsequent to the above conversation a travel-stained party arrived at Buchanan. Our friend Uncle Josh was in charge, and he led the party straightway to his home. "Having provided you with a cage for your bird," said Uncle Josh, "the first thing we'll look after will be the furnishings for it." Hereupon Polly energetically declared that she had heard so much about Geo. Richards that she desired to go there. The result was that they were ushered into such a bewildering display that the girl was puzzled at first how to select. But she soon yielded to the sedusiveness of a magnificent parlor suit, a bedroom suit in oak (antique finish) that would have done credit to old Antiquity herself. To those she added a dining-room set with all accessories, a complete kitchen outfit, and didn't forget a most convenient and ornamental writing desk for "Hubby" Charles,

"A pretty good start," said the old man, "and now we'll go to Treat & Godfrey's hardware store. Here Polly's housewifely instincts had full play in marvels of kitchen apparatus. There is not an establishment in the city that carries a more comprehensive stock of household furnishings. Every possible piece of kitchen furniture, from a tin dipper to a cooking range, is here in all styles and variety. If Polly fails to accomplish wonders in the culinary art, it will not be for fault of superior cooking untensils. Her purchases included a gold coin range, a quickmeal gasoline stove, a Michigan washer, a novelty wringer, and a supply of antirust tinware.

"Let us see -I promised you a gold watch, didn't 1?" queried Uncle Josh. of Polly. "The place of all places in town is H. E. Lough's, so we'll go there" Entering the popular jewelry store the old man gallantly acquitted himself of his promise, and then directed Polly's attention to the superior stock of silverware carried by the house. There is no such stock in Buchanan," said the old-man, "and I will guarantee the quality to be of the very best. Pick out your family clock while here," he added, "Mr. Lough carries a magnificent line. Don't forget another fact," he continued, "if ever you unfortunately need optical goods, this is the place to come. They have everything required to improve affected eyes and to determine the required treatment." Passing down the street Uncle Josh paused before a handsome drug store. "Here is M. E. Barmore." he said. "and he may prove to be a valuable acquain-"But, Uncle, we don't---' "Oh, I know, you don't need medicine now, and imagine you never will, but I reckon it won't be unreasonably long before this young man will be taking a decided interest in the matter of paregoric, ——" "Uncle!" "Well, come in; sometime you may want a prescription compounded, and this is the place. He is a competent pharmacist, employs only trustworthy assistants, and carrying only the purest drugs and medicines."

At this point, somewhat to Charles' confusion, the old man indulged in a half-serious criticism of his personal appearance. "You are decidedly offstyle for a townsman," said he, "and it down. A singular feeling came over me, but I suppressed it, and laid my hand on the injured man's breast.

Engineering Enterprise in Japan. A large and important government engineering enterprise was recently completed in Japan. Lake Biwa, having an area of 500 square miles, is situated about seven miles from the city of Tokio, and at an elevation of about 140 feet. A navigable canal has been cut from this lake to Tokio, involving two miles of of tunneling and an aqueduct of considerable length. eastern extremity of the city, to which point the canal has been brought, there is a sharp decline of 118 feet, from the base of which the canal is continued to the sea. This difference of level is overcome by inclined plane ways, 2,100 feet in length, on which boats are raised or lowered from one canal to the electric power furnished from a Pelton water wheel, connected with a Sprague motor. The fall above named affords also a very valuable water power, a part of which has already been utilized for various mechanical purposes by means of electric transmission. The power station is located at the foot of the incline, and consists of three S feet and two 6 feet Pelton wheels, aggregating about 600 horse power, which are supplied with water from the high level canal by three lines of 36 inch pipe, 1,300 feet in length, delivering water to the wheels under a head of about 100 feet. These wheels are at present operating three Edison dynamics of 80 kilowatts each, the power from which is distributed about the city within a radius of two miles, running rice mills, spinning mills, a watch factory, and various other machinery. One Thomson-Huston alternating current dynamo of 2,000 volts supplies the city with 1,300 incandescent lights, as well as many arc lights. The above works, involving an expenditure of about $1,250,-000, were planned by and executed under the direct supervision of Mr. S. Tanabe, an eminent Japanese engineer,

Fighting Mice with a Bacillus. Professor Loesler's bacillary crusade against the field mice of the Thessalian

plain has ended in victory. The latest reports announce that the fields are strewn with the corpses of mice. It will be remembered that Prof. Loefler discovered some time ago a new bacillus, the "bacillus typhi murium," which has the power of producing a certain disease in mice, and in mice mon and Ogemaw shall constitute a repre- alone. A plague of field mice, threatening to destroy the harvest, having arpeared in Thessaly, he was appealed to by the Greek government, and immedi ately started for Athens. He began his experiments by treating field mice in the laboratory with injections of his bacillus cultivation, and when these experiments showed his method to be undoubtedly the right one, he started for Thessaly with a staff of Greek doctors. Bread crumbs, saturated with the bacillary substance, were strewn broadcast over certain fields, and as early as a week later the results were visible. Success being now assured, Prof. Loefiler returned to Germany, and the bacillus cultivation will be carried on at the seat of war itself.

Intelligent Democrats are now claiming that the last Democratic Congress has saved the country millions of dollars over what its predecessors have done. A lie well stuck to makes good Democratic argument, and this will doubtless be no exception.

The truth in regard to the sheriff sale of the Anderson, Ind., tin plate works which was giving democratic papers so much glee, is that the sale was made to get rid of stock holders who would neither increase the shares of the business nor allow others to do so. The works will soon be started again with increased capital, and will run night and day.

The Homestead Strike will receive in the September number of The North American Review the ample attention which that periodical always gives to atogian. important events. It is to be discussed from three points of view: The Congressional view, by Congressman W. C. Oates, Chairman of the Investigating Committee; the constitutional view, by the Hon. George Ticknor Curtis, and Powderly.

The success of the Democratic party this fall means a return to the state bank wild-cat money, the wildest financial heresay. The platform demands the repeal of the prohibitory ten per cent tax on state bank issues, which removes the barrier from that condition of currency. Immediately after the adoption of that platform, a bill was introduced by a Democrat member of congress providing for that same

Michigan democrats do not agree with those of the country at large by a big per cent. The Michigan article declares in its platform that all money should be issued from the National treasury, the old Greenback doctrine pure and simple, while the National platform of that party demands the repeal of the prohibitory ten per cent tax on bank issues, so any and everybody may go into the banking business and issue money. Of course the money wouldn't be good for anything, but that appears to be what the democrats

President Harrison has issued a cents a ton on all Canadian boats doing Canadian business through the Soo canal, from and after September 1 until the tax is removed from American vessels through Welland canal. Should the Canucks now conclude to prohibit American vessels from passing through retaliation would be on the other foot, until Uncle Sam could hunt out some Canadian railroads doing business in his territory.

The Democrats have made great ado over the wonderful economy of their present state administration, but when it came to state convention turned down the entire crowd, an admission that they were ashamed of their work. and no one can well blame them for feeling in that way.

Since 1882 there have been 728 negroes in the Southern states executed by mob law without being given a hearing before any court of justice, simply because they were negroes and in the interest of white supremacy, which was not in danger, and the government has made no effort whatever to protect its citizens.

THE Allegan Journal publishes the following biography of Dr. Helry F. Thomas, who was nominated last week as member of Congress for this district, by the Republicans at their convention in Allegan:

Henry F. Thomas was born in Jackson county, this state, 48 years ago and when about 12 years of age his parents moved to Hastings, Barry county, where for four years his father, Methodist minister, had charge of the Ottawa Indian mission. He received his early education at the seminary at Richland, Kalamazoo county, and at Albion college. While a student at the former place, Hon. J. C. Burrows was the superintendent and a friendship was then formed between pupil and teacher that has never been broken; it would be very pleasant to both should they happen to serve together in the next Congress. At Albion College he had nearly completed the classical preparatory course for the University when the war of the rebellion com menced and before his eighteenth birthday he enlisted as a private soldier in company D, 7th Michigan cavalry. He was mustered into the service as a sergeant, and afterwards promoted to orderly sergeant, then second lieuten-The 7th cavalry belonged to the famous Michigan cavalay brigade commanded by Gen. Custer, and was connected with the army of the Potomac during the war. During his entireservice, Sergeant Thomas was only absent from his company a few months, at which time he had charge of the quartermaster's supplies for remount camp at Harper's Ferry, and he had the honor of being present with his com-pany in nearly all of the memorable campaigns in which it was engaged, and was discharged with his regiment in the fall of 1865. He renewed his studies at Ypsilanti normal school during the following winter and spring, and the next October entered the medical department of the University and commenced his practice at Constantine, St. Joseph county, remaining about a vear. when he removed to Allegan and has continued to reside here till the present time. In 1873 he was elected a member of the legislature, and, in the language of the Lansing Republican, "was one of the leading members of the house." He was chairman of the committee on university and normal school, and a member of the committee on public health. His abilities were recognized by the Republicans of the county by an election to the senate. As a member of that body he was chairman of more committees than any other member, viz: University and normal school, insurance, public health, and library. He was known as a working member, and did credit to himself and constituents. He has been president of our village, member of the school board, a delegate to the Republican national convention from the Fifth District, chairman of the Republican county committee, and filled various other positions of honor and trust and has always proved worthy of the honor bestowed and given the most perfect satisfaction to his constituents. In his profession Dr. Thomas has been successful; he has been pres dent of the Western Michigan Medical society, and a member of the state and national societies. In 1882, recognizing his ability and worth, Albion College conferred upon him the degree of Master of Arts. By his firmness and decision of character, and outspoken frankness, Dr. Thomas has won the respect of men of all parties and has made for himself hosts of friends of the class that admire an able, brilliant and fearless personality. He will receive a large vote irrespective of party, and will carry this county by an old-time majority.

Easily built by any farmer, and will last a lifetime with very little repairs. The crimp in the wires will prevent breaking in winter and sagging in summer. On Saturday, Mrs. Levi Redden served an injunction upon the trustees of the Presbyterian church, restraining them from building upon or otherwise occupying the east twelve feet of the lot they bought of Mr. and Mrs. Redden. The contractors had excavated for the church wall seven feet back of their line, giving, with the four feet Mr. Redden has, an alley of eleven feet width. The deed to the trustees is made without reservation. The case was amicably settled by the church trustees agreeing with Mr. Redden to move their building thirteen inches to the west. This, with the four feet on his lot gives a twelve feet passageway between the two buildings. The contractors have resumed work on the

THE case against the three boys charged with robbing Wm. II. Tuesday Bib McGlinsley and Frank | and everybody glad to get them. Chi-Searls took a trip to Benton Harbor, and commenced spending money pretty freely, and by request of Constable Palmer were locked up and held for him. Yesterday Mr. Palmer, and J. W. Beistle who was McGlinsey's bondsman, brought them to Buchanan and delivered them up to the court, Mr. Beistle asking to be released from the bonds, which was done, and McGlinsey sent to jail to spend his time until Circuit court convenes. From the first arrest of Powers, Charlwood and Mc-Glinsey, Searls had a strong itching to get into the game, and has evidently succeeded beyond his expectations. He was arraigned upon the charge of receiving stolen property, and his examination will take place next Thursday. In the meantime he will languish in Berrien jail. On the whole, the case is becoming quite interesting.

EDWARD JOHNSON, a young Norwegian who lived with his parents, at 126 Front street, Chicago, accompanied by a number of friends, took the City of Chicago Saturday evening for a pleasant trip to this city. About two o'clock Sunday morning, when the steamer was twenty miles from this harbor, Johnson fell asleep while siting on the cabin deek on a couple of married Matilda Baker, a mulato who ing on the cabin deck on a couple of has made her home for the past two or stools. He had only been asleep a few minutes when he suddenly started walked rapidly to the railing near the stern, and before any of the half-asleep passengers could divine his purpose, climbed over the railing and jumped into the water sinking from sight immediately. Rev. Thomas Dixon Preaching on Roanoke Island-Humanity Is Divine, Not Diabolical-Man Was Made in the Image of God, Not of the Devil.

Manteo, N. C., Aug. 14.—Nestling in a beautiful little bay on the east side of Roanoke island is the village of Manteo. One of the arms of the land forming this bay is called Ballast point, and the natives tell the visitor that this is the precise spot where the ships of Raleigh's first colonists to the New World threw out their ballast. Tom Crank, fisherman and guide, declares that with his oyster hooks he can drag up the stones now. Rev. Thomas Dixon, Jr., in response to the urgent invitation of the islanders, preached in the Methodist church at Manteo today. The steamer Clarence ran an excursion over from Nag's Head, and the little church was taxed beyond its capacity again, as it was a few weeks ago, when a sermon was preached in the same church in the afternoon. Mr. Dixon's subject was, "The Fatherhood of God," and his

And God created man in his own image.-Genesis i, 27. This my son was dead, and is alive again; he was lost and is found.-Luke xv, 24.

For the past two months we have sought to find whether or not the development of modern thought has affected the foundations of the great fundamental facts of our religion. We have found that, so far from the fundamental facts and elemental faiths of Christianity being shaken by modern investigations, they have been strengthened and re-emphasized. That question that now arises in addition to this is, Has the development of modern thought enriched our religion; has it added anything to the faiths and promises of the past? The conception of God is central to re-

Around the conception of God we build our theology. It seems to me that modern thought has added much to our knowledge of God. It seems to me that it has added so much that the whole scheme of theology must be reset to this new knowledge. It seems to me that a great lost truth has been recovered from the superstition and tradition of mediæval an pagan theologies with which Christianity has been overlaid. TWO CONCEPTIONS OF GOD.

There are two conceptions of God therefore with which Christianity is confronted today-one the mediaval and pagan; the other it seems to me the real conception of the Christianity of Christ. Mediæval and pagan theology declared—as interpreted by the great converted pagan, Augustine-that God is the Father of only a limited few; that he is the Father of those who are converted, and that only in an adopted sense, this adoption being really a legal fiction of Roman jurisprudence. Upon the other hand, the great truth rescued from beneath this rubbish is that God is the Father of the human race: that he is the universal Father of man. There is no such thing as reconciling these two theories. One must stand; the other must fall. One is true; the other is

It seems to me that the sublimest revelation of the Spirit of God given to man since the lips of Jesus were hushed in death and his transfigured body lifted into the glory of God has been this rediscovery of the areat truth of the universal Fatherhood of God.

This glorious revelation has been the result of a real revival of religion, of a real study of the oracles of God by the fearless prophets of the living God, who have thrown aside preconceived ideas and traditions, seeking to find the inmost secret of God's heart and God's truth. It has been clearly shown:

IMAGE OF GOD OR THE EVIL ONE. First—That the universal Fatherhood of God is an Old Testament truth. The prophets of the Old Testament never referred to man as totally deprayed. The cry of the prophet of old is: "Wandering child, return. The Lord will not keep anger; he is plenteous in mercy. Only return; he will forgive." Upon the first page of the Old Testament stands forth this great truth, "God created man in his own image." If the Augustinian theory of total depravity be true, then this sentence in Genesis should read thus: "God created man in the image of the devil. Out of the elements of hell made he him and breathed into him the breath of hell." If man be a child of the devil-not a child of God-then it is necessary to rewrite the Old Testament or else read into it thought that cannot be read from it.

Second—The supreme expression of the revelation of Jesus Christ was precisely this Fatherhood of God. The Jew knew God as the Lord, the Almighty, Jehovah, Lord of Hosts, the Holy One. Christ came to complete revelation, to reveal the inmost secret of God's nature. SECRET OF HIS MISSION.

His mission therefore was to declare the Father. He teaches this directly again and again. He declares to us that he is revealing to the world the secret of its Father; that he does not speak of himself, but that he speaks out of the fullness of the Fatherhood of God. And when his disciples say, "Show us the Father and it sufficeth us," he exclaims: "Have I been so long a time with you and you have not seen the Father? I am in the Father; the Father is in me. He that hath seen me hath seen the Father." He reveals to us this great secret of his mission in every prayer that he prays.

It is inconceivable that Jesus Christ should begin a prayer thus, "Almighty God, the maker and fashioner of the universe." Christ always begins his prayer with this blessed word Father. The word father is constantly on his lips. There is scarcely a single instance of his speech to man that he does not use this term. When the disciples asked him how to pray, we remember the prayer of prayers, "Our Father which art in heaven." His parabolic teachings in which the profoundest truths of his mission were unfolded, likewise unfolded the same great truth. Take the three parables, of which the sentence in our text is the climax. Christ declared that he came to seek and to save that which was lost. In these parables he sets forth the relation of the lost to the LOST AND FOUND. Hear this sentence: "This my son was dead and is alive again; he was lost and is found." That is to say, the lost are the children of God. They once were in the father's house. They have wandered away in their willfulness. They are still God's children though they go to the uttermost limits of sin and temptation. When they return the father cries in joy, "This my son was dead and is alive again; he was lost and is found!" If the language of Christ means anything, he means to teach in this parable the universal Fatherhood of God. If you deny this truth you must strike this, the sweetest and sublimest parable, from the holy book. Deny the Fatherhood of God and you must strike from the lips of Jesus the tenderest and For this reason we find this divine jewel sweetest truths that fell from his heart.

Third—The witness of the Spirit in the | earth soul of man testifies to the fact that man is born of God. The foundation of all prayer and all religion in all nations and all races and all times is precisely this divine inheritance in man. The sense of the divine in our souls is the one foundation to which all religion appeals. If man were primarily a child of the devil there would be no basis of appeal. But precisely because he is born of God and has within him the divine, there is a basis of appeal for return to God. WAIF ON THE STREET.

We see this flashing forth from the lowest and meanest of men, from the waif on the street in its love for the beautiful, from the commoner man as we see his aspirations for the higher and the nobler in life all bearing testimony to the great truth of God found by the poet of old, reaccented by the great apostle-"We are his offspring." This great truth therefore means much to the world. It means:

First-That the key that unlocks the mystery of the Godhead is this key of the Fatherhood. Here is the central secret. In it all other attributes of God are merged. We are his servant; precisely, but servant is merged in son-We are his creature, but creature is merged in childhood. The Fatherhood of God includes all other attributes of his nature and is central to his being. It explains to us therefore a thousand sad mysteries. It teaches us that God is love, because he is a Father. His obligations to me therefore are even higher and holier and more inviolable than my obligations te him. I have a child who is under obligations to obey me, but I am under higher obligations to teach and to save him. Because he is my.child, I have no right to wring his neck. But I am bound by obligations as high as the love of a Father to give to him the highest and noblest life within my

NOT JUDICIAL, BUT PATERNAL. Such a God cannot be cruel or rejoice in cruelty or brutality. We curse the Roman Catholic church for the deeds of the holy inquisition, but let us remember that the God which the holy Catholic church worshiped in that day was a God of infinite cruelty and brutality; that they believed that God rejoiced in the roast flesh of heretics, and it is simply the statement of fact when we are told that these men believed they were serving God. If their God was such a God as their theology set forth, they certainly were justified in thus serving

Second—His government is not judicial, but paternal. The mystery of pain is resolved in the mystery of paternal government. Paternal government has in it many mysteries the child cannot understand, but its ruling principle is love. Its method is educational. The end is the training of perfect character. The way sometimes leads through pain and denial. But the Father's love spares not pain or trial to the child, because he foresees the end. God is not a remote sovereign, then, but a Father and a friend near at hand. To him we can bring the smallest trials of life as well as the great trials.

FARMER AND ARCHITECT. Two middle aged men, brothers, who were singularly fond of each other, were walking the streets of the great city. The one was a farmer, the other an architect. The farmer said to the architect: "My boys are noble men; I thank God for them. I have prayed for their conversion from childhood. They are both noble Christians. But there are some little things that worry me about them. I cannot take them to God in prayer. One is in a business that does not suit him. The other has a certain domestic irritation in his domestic life that annoys me. I have no one to whom I can take these troubles."

The architect turned into his study to attend to the details of a great work he was constructing. The brother stood by and watched. He gave directions about the measurement of a certain pipe in the cellar. He gave directions about the kind of wood to be used in the wainscoting of the dining room and several other small details. The farmer brother looked on in amazement and said: "Do you attend to all those little trifles, George? I supposed that you looked after the great conception in all its beauty and splendor, and the little things were attended to by your subordinates." "No," said the architect; "this beauty which you so much admire is the result of my care in the smallest details. Now," said he, "God who formed the heavens and fashioned the spheres is the same God who made the foot of the fly. You can take to him the smallest trifle of life as well as the greatest." The brother returned home with a new thought, looking upon God as indeed h's Father.

MONKS OF ST. BERNARD. The monks of St. Bernard, emerging from the convent on the morning after a terrific storm, found in the snow but a few feet from the gate the frozen body of a worn traveler. They tracked him for miles along the road as he struggled against the cold trying to find shelter. He gave up and died within a feet of the convent gate, not knowing that help was near. So sometimes, if we feel that God is a distant sovereign, we may give up in despair. If we remember that he is our Father, help is near. FANTS NOT DAMNED BECAUSE CHILDREN

OF GOD. Third-Every man is therefore an Incarnation. Infants cannot then be damned. Let us understand clearly that this is the only reason why infants cannot be damned—because they are born in the kingdom. If we are logical Calvinists and believe that man is a child of the devil, we must stand with John Calvin and burn Servetus, who dared to believe that children were saved. Says John Calvin, writing to a former friend: "You deny that it is lawful for God, except for misdeed, to condemn any human being; nevertheless numberless infants are removed from life. Put forth now your virulence against God, who precipitates into eternal death harmless newborn children torn from their mother's breast" (see De Occulta Dei Providentia, Tom. VIII, pp. 644, 645).

Rev. Dr. Twiss, prolocutor of the Westminster assembly, also says, "Many infants depart from this life in original sin, and consequently are condemned to eternal death." There is not a single sentence in the New Testament that warrants the assumption that Jesus Christ gives this second birth to any one who does not come to Him through personal faith. The child cannot receive this second birth because it cannot exercise personal faith. If the second birth be the only link that binds us to our Father God, then the child is certainly lost. All other reasoning is pure jugglery with sentiment, so far as the New Testament is concerned. The Roman Catholic is right in all his monstrous practices of infant baptism. Yet I never hear of the attempt of a priest to baptize a child before its birth but that my blood boils with indignation and I feel that I would like to fight. The Roman Catholic, confronted with the fact of a child that must die in the process of birth, believes that unless that child by some hook or crook is bap-tized he will be lost in hell. If the child is of hell, this is a logic from which there is no appeal. HUMANITY INTRINSICALLY DIVINE. But you ask, Does not the Apostle Paul say, "In my fiesh dwelleth no good thing?" Precisely. Man is not flesh. Man is not simply meat. A dog has flesh. The flower is not dirt. Neither is man to be confused with the flesh, the soil out of which he grew. Man was born at the top-the climax of the creative process. He never became man until he ceased to be more than flesh. in the lost depths of the degradation of

An old man walking along the streets of a great city laid his hand on the shoulder of a drunken wretch. What a wretch he was. He had promised his wife never to touch liquor again, unless from her hand she gave it. The broken hearted wife died. He crept up to the bedside of death, took her cold, dead hand, wound it around a glass of whisky, and holding the dead hand to the glass drained it to the dregs. Lost to manhood, lost to ambition, lost to the decencies of life—a wretched, drunken | hot tears of rage and disappointment dog,

And yet a kind word spoken to that man transformed his life. I saw that man stand before a sea of human faces, and with his magnificent form towering like a giant, his great eyes flashing with divine fire-I saw him sweep their hearts with hand divine-John B. Gough. Humanity is intrinsically divine.

However far you have wandered from home, young man, let me say to you this morning you are a child of God and a Father waits in love to welcome you to his heart and home.

Character in Neckwear. "Did you ever stop to think," said : city salesman of a big necktie manufacturing firm the other day, "how good an index a man's neckwear is to his character? I suppose you would call it his taste, but it goes deeper than that. I wager I could take my samples to a haberdasher, let him make his selections and without opening his mouth I could size him up instantly. For instance, you go into some shops and look over the goods they have on hand. Everything seems to be 'loud.' The patterns, styles and colors are almost 'noisy.' Then find out something about the buyer. In nine cases out of ten you will see a man much given to horse and something of an all around sport. On the other hand, an assortment of quiet, proper neckwear bespeaks the likely cultured buyer. "Of course there must be some allowance made for the nature of prevailing styles and colors as well as the class of trade of the merchant, but you give me these particulars and let me talk awhile with the buyer and I can always tell just what lines to show him."—Brooklyn

The Old Roman Method of Curing Ills. The ancient Greeks, in their desire to honor the healing art, cherished the myth that the first knowledge of medicine came from gods and demigods. The Romans, though in general more practical than the Greeks, evinced less sense of the importance of the healing art, and for centuries held practicers of medicine in small esteem. Foreigners who tried to establish the art at Rome were looked on with contempt and suspicion. The elder Cato said that these doctors came to Rome to put an end to the people. He cautioned his friends to let them alone, and preferred to treat his family and neighbors from an old handbook of medical recipes which had probably been delivered to him by his father, who in turn had received it from his progenitors.--Professor A. P. Montague in Youth's Companion. ______

Cold Bathing in the Morning. Cold bathing in the early morning is beneficial only to those persons who have sufficient vital energy and nervous force to insure good reaction with no subsequent languor or lassitude. Many persons who are greatly refreshed by their morning bath feel tired or languid two or three hours after it. When this occurs it is conclusive evidence against the practice. Persons who have an abundance of blood and flesh, who are lymphatic or sluggish in temperament, and whose nervous force is not depleted, can take the cold morning bath to advantage. Others who are inclined to be thin in flesh, whose hands and feet become cold and clammy on slight provocation, who digest food slowly and assimilate it with difficulty, who are nervous and who carry large mental burdens, should avoid early morning bath-

For all such the bath at noonday or before retiring at night is far more de sirable, and it should be followed by rest of body and brain till equable conditions of circulation are re-established. Some individuals who are weak in nervous power have such excitable peripheral nerves that they get at once a perfect reaction from cool bathing, but lose in after effects more than the value of the bath. This class of persons should not bathe too often and should always use tepid water, choosing the time preferably before retiring.—Jenness Miller Illustrated.

Not a Geranium. As an eminent physician remarked when a stump orator was describing the condition of two geraniums, one of which was watered in the ordinary way, and advertised its virtuous principles by an exuberant freshness of blossom and leaf, while the second became an involuntary toper and had been dosed with alcohol into premature decay: "Yes, if I were a geranium, I should prefer water. But then I am not a geranium."

The nearer we can approach to the healthy existence of a plant or a wiid animal in its prime, the more does the necessity for drink diminish away to a vanishing point. Children and young people up to manhood, under normal constitutional conditions, are far better without any, and the argument in favor of its habitual use rests on the specialties of the highly strung and unnatural mode of life which many of us are obliged to lead.

We must take ourselves as we are, artificial products of an artificial age, often depressed and worried, eating bad food badly cooked, breathing bad air and crushed down by money difficulties. It is at these times, when responsibilities are around us and the troubles of the world begin to close in over our heads, that a cheering glass, in strict moderation and at carefully selected times, is of real use and can be defended both by physiology and common sense. -Blackwood's Magazine.

How Lottery Companies Make Money. If one man were able to cause all the lottery tickets which are issued in a year by the one great lottery of the country to be bought up in his interest, in order that he might be perfectly surto get all the prizes, he would receive back $20,000,000 in return for $40,000,000 expended—that is to say, he would have lost outright $20,000,000, all of which would have gone into the coffers of the lottery company.

This statement is based upon the safe estimate that the annual receipts of the lottery company are $40,000,000, and its payments in prizes $20,000,000. It illustrates as well as anything could the folly of buying lottery tickets. The people of the country, as respects such an enterprise, may be represented as one man. As long as they support it they are annually paying out $40,000,000 to get back $20,000,000. This is certainly not an act in harmony with the supposed sagacity of the American people. To go on indefinitely paying out two dollars to get back one is not exactly a bright and businesslike proceeding. Though Americans were among the first of peoples to despise and prohibit lotteries, no people probably tax themselves more heavily today to buy these unprofitable lottery tickets.—Youth's Companion. English Women and the Elections. Regarding Mrs. Stanley, Mrs. Chamberlain and Mrs. Cornwallis West, will you kindly allow me to say how I think "in the mischief" their failure to get their husbands elected to parliament can be accounted for?

Those three women went on the hustings presuming on their womanhood, and, in vulgar language, that is rapidly playing out. They are handsome women, particularly Mrs. Chamberlain and Mrs. West, and ten years ago such smiles as theirs would have won votes, and not the vile language, indecent jests and fist shakings your cables have described.

Men in America wouldn't act like that yet, but they will after awhile. The trouble is, women don't know when they are well off. They want equal rights with men, and they are getting them with a vengeance. They'll find they won't like it. They will weep i (just as these three women undoubtedly did and wili), altogether making a very great mistake, but they won't see it until too late. The real truth is, women want to eat their cake and have it too. -One Woman Who Is Happy and Satisfied to Be Just a Woman, and Who Isn't a Bit Namby Pamby Either, in New

What Petroleum Is Doing. Petroleum has in it the seven colors of the rainbow, as can be seen by casting a small quantity on water exposed to the rays of the sun. These colors' have been extracted chiefly by French chemists. A great many of the new colors are derived from petroleum. Many varieties of lubricating oils are made from it and it is dispensing with animal fats and will soon be the lubricant of the world.—Interview in Chicago

COMMERCIAL TRAVELERS AND WINE.

A Custom That Is Slowly Dying Out, but Not Before It Was Time. To be or not to be? That is the question. Strenuous efforts, I am told, are being made to uphold the fast dying out practice of "wine dinners." The west of England towns are fighting hardest; but the best men on the road have made up their minds upon the matter, and are fully determined to make every table in England a free table. No longer, say the young and go ahead men, will we submit to the coercion of hotel proprietors. Only a few of these now remain; but they must go, as the others went, before the edict of a healthy opinion. If we must drink it will be at our own option, and there will be a rumpus one of these days when an attempt is made to saddle nondrinkers with the wine gulped down by the old crusted

This is the feeling with at least threefourths of the 40,000 men on the road and nothing will withstand a majority like this. Here and there may be found a few weak men who have not the courage of their convictions and who bow to the wish of the quarter of a century embassador. This condition of things, however, cannot last long. Men are becoming displeased at the number of hats which have been sent round for the widows and orphans of the men who, to be plain, have simply spent upon themselves what they were morally bound to put away for their wives and families. Wine dinners belonged to that quiet, dull period of fifty years ago.

The last quarter of a century's progress has, however, driven them well out of the way. In the rush and hurry of the commercial life of today, no matter how much a bottle of wine might be enjoyed, it is questionable whether one out of half a dozen houses can honestly afford the expense, and the most careful travelers will tell you that the soothing effects are antagonistic to after dinner business exertion. This needs no further argument; it is the unanimous opinion of every honest embassador. My remarks upon wine dinners are inspired by a somewhat recent circumstance which transpired in a well known west of England town. Some twentythree gentlemen sat down to dinner at a particular table which has long been notorious for its collection of corks. Close to the vice president there sat a youth. He was invited by the presiden: to join him, but he thanked him politely and said he preferred not to. The refusal drew out from that worthy gentleman the remark that houses were sending out a poor class of men nowadays. Nettled somewhat by the rejoinder, the novice replied that he placed very little value on the president's opinion. Then said the president, "If you refuse to join the table you had better withdraw," but this he stoutly declined to do. Next to the youth sat a gray haired embassador, to whom the president addressed himself: "I presume, sir, you will join me." "Well," said the veteran, "I have never before refused, but in the present instance I must decline, and because of your unpardonable bad taste."

Gentleman after gentleman refused upon the same ground, and, to make a long story short, the vice was elected president and the services of the original president dispensed with that day. Six weeks passed away, and not a few of the same men sat around the same table, but things were changed. On the mantelpiece stood a subscription list headed, "Subscriptions are invited for the widow and children of Mr. ---, who for upward of thirty years was one of the best known men on the west of England ground." Mr. — was the president referred to above.—Draper's

An Adventure with a Shark. Charles Jordan, of Cape Elizabeth, had an exciting encounter with a shark one night this week. He was out fishing and had just pulled a large cod out of the water when the shark dashed at the cod and swallowed it, hook and all. Mr. Jordan hung to the line, but it snapped, and the shark, carrying the trawl with him and enraged by the pricking of the hook, rushed at the boat, biting at it and at the same time diving under it. He came up under the rudder with a flop that rocked the boat, threw the rudder high into the air and dashed a cloud of spray into the boat which drenched Jordan. The rudder when it came down dropped into the sea. The shark also disappeared, carrying the trawl with him. Mr. Jordan steered for Cape Elizabeth as best he could with an oar.—Lewiston (Me.) Journal. Ammonia in Fire Extinction. The usefulness of carbonic acid water in extinguishing fire has often been referred to, and not long ago a pharmacist, who happened to have a lively incipient fire on his hands, used his soda fountain for this purpose with most satisfactory results. An equally successful application of the vapor of ammonia under similar conditions is now reported to have been made by a French pharmacist. A vessel of gasoline had become ignited, and the flames resisted all efforts to subdue them until a bottle of ammonia water was thrown into the apartment. It was thus broken, the vapor of ammonia was liberated and the flames were instantly extinguished .-

St. Louis Globe-Democrat. The Wicked Mockingbird. The mockingbird has a voice full, strong and musical, capable of almost every modulation, from the mellow tones of the woodthrush to the savage scream of the bald eagle. He whistles for the dog, and Trip gets up, wags his tail and runs to meet his master. He squeaks out like a hurt chicken, and the hen hurries about with bristling feathers and drooping wings to protect its brood. He quavers like the canary; he whistles like the redbird; he screams like the swallow; he warbles like the bluebird; he means like the whippoorwill. All these he mocks with such superior skill and effect that the mortified songsters feel their own inferiority and become altogether silent.—Troy Times.

Tooth and tail, it were long to speak; Every creature I much admire Who lives in winter and needs no fire. Whome'er one meets Has roofed his chamber or paved his streets; Yet of all their wits not one, you see, Has learned the secret of lock and key. -Dora R. Goodale in Harper's Young People.

SEEING THE SIGHTS. The President of Andorra Pays His First

Among the more or less distinguished persons now visiting Paris is Senor Antonio Moles y Pallares, president of the little republic of Andorra, situated between the French department of the Arege and the Spanish province of Lerida. This is the first time that the chief of the little state has set foot in the metropolis. As he pays a tribute of 900 francs every two years to the French government, and another to the Spanish bishop of Urgel, the senor is not quite his own master. He is a Liberal of the first water, and being the head of a republic inclines more to France than to Spain. His object in coming here is to protest against certain insinuations made in a newspaper to the effect that he had favored Spanish contrabandists to the prejudice of the French customs. President Carnot has received his humble colleague and tributary with considerable pomp, and has allowed him to defend himself thoroughly from the attacks of which he complains Senor Moles y Pallares is naturally plain, blunt agriculturist, little versed in the ways of cities. In his soft felt hat and Sunday clothes he looks rather out of his element, but is far more presentable than the two councilors general who accompany him and persist in wearing casquettes or caps, which respectable Parisians hold in detest on. The Andorran magnates have a nominal address at the Grand hotel, but are really located in a cheaper hostelry in the Gobelins district, not far from the railway station, where they can find a train to conduct them in the direction of their native valley after they have transacted their state and other business in Paris.—Paris Cor. London Telegraph.

The Mud Hen's Nest. The mud hen's nest is a weedy, reedy, fibrous structure, composed mostly of dead gray ends of tules and miscellane ous matter, and is usually placed far ont from shore, without anchorage, where it drifts to and fro, cradling its eggs easily. It presents to the eye simply the semblance of a mass of wasting vegetation. One who knows birds well. and who has made them a study from these same trees on the laguna's bank, tells me that he has many times waded out to search for a nest and espied it only when sweeping away with his hand what he supposed to be accumulated rubbish of leaves, but what proved the cradle's counterpane, with which the careful mother had shielded her treas-

Here eggs or young, deposited on the bottom, were usually half submerged, the water oozing through every interstice as through a sieve, and no sign of a parent bird near. Retreating to a distance, it was often necessary to watch closely and through a glass, when presently the mother grebe might be discovered sailing up swiftly, uncovering the floating cradle and shyly settling down to breast its contents. When they evidently were sufficiently warmed she covered them again carefully with more debris and sailed away as swiftly among the water weeds.—San Diego Cor. Chris-

Prevalence of Insomnia. In the opinion of many eminent memhers of the British medical faculty the torment of insomnia is far more prevalent among certain classes of English folk than was the case even a quarter of a century ago, and its rapid increment of late years is attributed to a variety of

Among these is the greatly augmented severity of the "struggle for life," due to a rapid increase of population, accompanied by a heightening of the educational standard that necessarily intensifies competition by adding largely year by year to the number of persons qualified to earn a living by pursuits of a more intellectual character than mere manual labor.

Another alleged cause of insomnia is the growing habit, common alike to votaries of business and pleasure, of keeping late hours and minimizing the time allotted to slumber, which, thus arbitrarily dealt with, becomes recalcitrant and will not come when it is most urgently needed.—London Telegraph.

Grant's Courage. "Grant was entirely destitute of nerves," said Captain J. C. Hawley, of Peoria, Ills. "I saw a 6-inch shell explode within four feet of him at the siege of Vicksburg and he never missed a puff at his cigar or looked in the least startled. He was standing watching the placing of a gun, and when the shell cracked a dozen men near him ran their noses into the ground. A horse was killed and the gun dismounted, but not a man was hurt, and when we looked up and saw Grant puffing away so unconcernedly we felt sheepish enough, I can tell you. General Custer, as brave a man as ever charged a battery, was all 'nerves,' and 'Fighting Joe' Hooker would start like a schoolgirl at the snapping of a tent rope."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Carnegie in the Light of Nero. Some of the Scotch papers have been thrown into ecstasies of enthusiasm by the "handsomely equipped four-in-hand coach" in which Mr. Andrew Carnegie is making a progress through the highlands, and in many places "quite a sensation" has been caused by this "very elegant and gay turnout." The delights of Mr. Carnegie's drive must surely have been considerably darkened by the news from Pittsburg. After all, however, it is only a new reading of the old story. "Nero fiddled," etc.—London Truth.

Germany Canning Goods. Germany intends to have pure and cheap canned goods for her soldiers and sailors, and in order to attain that end has concluded to go into the business herself. The government has expended $400,000 in building a factory at Spandau for the preserving of all kinds of provisions for the army, and about 550 operators are to be regularly employed there.

Actor Crane's Rule of Life. "If people would only observe one rule of action," said Mr. Crane gently, "this world would have no need of reforms, laws or prisons. It is an old rule-so old, indeed, that it is quite out of date and forgotten by many men and women. When I was a boy it was called the golden rule, and its spirit was embodied in the teachings of the greatest reformer and lawgiver this world has ever seen." And even as the signal for the rising of the curtain was given, Mr. Crane repeated with tender earnestness, "Therefore, all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them."-New York World.
