"Well, half an hour ago I heard her cry for a moment, just as children do at times when disturbed in their sleep. I started up, but as she ceased crying almost immediately I lay down again with my ear to the ground. About daylight, when a little breeze starts up, it will be colder, and she will cry again. Then I may get her; if not, I'll find her as soon as it is light enough to see the trail. She is not 200 yards from this spot, but I don't know the direction exactly."

"You take things very coolly. Let me go and get another lantern. Think of the wretchedness of the parents. Besides, the child may chill to death."

"No fear of her death from the cold. These little prairie youngsters are very hotblooded. I have not found it cold lying here in the weeds and grass. told the father I'd find his child, and I'm not going to have all that rabble rushing down here, tearing through the corn like wild men. Now, go back to camp. About daylight let the child's uncle, Clark Lewis, come on his horse to the cross fence. Then you come on here, and we will go and get the child.' "But the father, what shall I tell him?" "Give him this little mitten. Tell him that I have not lost the trail, and that he shall have his child before the sun is an hour high. But tell him to keep this news to himself and remain quietly at camp. If the men up there want to ride about the prairies, let them go-I don't want a crowd down here in this comfield."

I went back to the camp, and taking the father aside gave him the little mitten and as much comfort as I could. A great fear that his little girl was dead immediately seized him, however. 'No," said I, "she is sleeping quietly enough."

"Quietly sleeping! How do you know that?" For answer I repeated what my cous-

Next I sought out Clark Lewis, and by the time I had told him what was required of him signs of dawn were visible in the east. Clark Lewis halted at the cross fence while I went on and joined my cousin where he was literally and very comfortably "camped on the trail." He was glad to see the lantern, being tired of doing nothing. Besides he had again heard the voice of the child for a moment. but the average ones. This, however, does not hold true of the individual farmer, according to the Iowa Homestead, which says:

His profits are greatest when he grows the largest crops, provided they are grown without the expenditure of a disproportionately large amount of money in the way of fertilizers and labor. The taxes on a 40 acre field are the same whether the crop is large or small. The money involved in the land is the same. There is comparatively little difference in the cultivation, and but little difference in the harvesting. The large crop is due to the skillful husbanding of the fertility of the soil, mainly by the use of grass and especially the clovers, to the very thorough preparation of the land, the more careful selection of seed and in general better farming.

While a crop of 50 bushels of corn may barely pay the expense, the taxes and a small interest on the investment. a crop of 60 bushels will pay for all the additional labor and a large rent besides. It is therefore to the interest of the farmer to grow large crops, which can be done only by growing on fewer acres, or if on more acres by the expenditure of a much greater amount for hired help. In whichever way it can be, the obvious interest of the farmer is to grow as large crops as possible on the same land, provided that the growing of the large crop does not involve a proportionate increase in the amount of labor expended. We are not willing to take the position that it will pay the farmer to invest in commercial fertilizers in order to grow 100 bushels of corn to the acre, if that were possible, when by the use of clover and manure he can grow a crop of 60 to 75 bushels per acre. Fortunately the difference between a large crop and a small one is mainly one of management in securing a crop rotation that will maintain the fertility of his soil and the proper application of labor at the right time and

A Pressure of a Million Pounds. Some interesting experiments were made at the Washington university with the largest hydraulic testing machine in the world. It can exert a pressure of 1,000,000 pounds. Timbers such as are used for pillars in large commercial buildings were crushed, not broken, lengthwise. A piece of timber capable of sustaining 3,000 persons was crushed like an eggshell when placed in the machine. The best brick piers 2 feet square, columns of granite a foot square, and sandstone 3 feet square are spot several times. In this way embryo ground to powder with the greatest ease. The machine was designed by Professor J. B. Tilustrious Stammerers.

Æsop, Virgil and Demosthenes are generally known to have been stammerers, but how many others suffering from the like infirmity occupy an honorable place in the historical gallery?

The first of these whom we can recall is the prophet Moses. He, according to tradition, was a stammerer whose powers of speech were so limited that his brother Aaron always accompanied him, being specially commissioned to speak in his name and stead.

"I am not eloquent," protested Moses, "neither heretofore nor since thou hast spoken unto thy servant, but I am of slow speech and of a slow tongue."

Claudius Michael II, emperor of the east; Mohammed-el-Rasser, king of Spain during the Moorish domination, and Eric, king of Sweden, stammered pitiably.

Among the 18 rulers of the name of Louis who have reigned in France, we find only one, Louis le Beguo, although he was by no means the only French sovereign who stammered.-New York Journal.

Antiquity of Chess and Checkers.

Chess has been attributed to Palamedes, who flourished 680 years B. C.; also to the Hindoos. Some authorities consider checkers a very ancient game also-in fact, the origin of checkers and chess may be identical. Strutt, however, considers checkers a "modern invention." Mr. Mallet published in 1668 a treatise on the subject of draughts, and the game is known to have been played in Europe at least a century before. The Romans had a game called latrun culi, which was very similar in character to checkers, the pieces moving diagonally, capturing by leaping over and obtaining superior power upon

INTELLECT AND STATURE.

Criminals and Lunatics Have Less Than

Average Height and Weight. The influence of different occupations on adults, of town and country life, of intellectual and physical exercises and of athletics is well brought out by anthropometric inquiry. Measurements extending over 27 successive years have been made at the school of the Society of Friends at York. Friends are largely a commercial and therefore a town dwelling class, and yet there is a slight improvement shown in stature and a very decided improvement shown in weight in the boys attending this school in later years. The beneficial action of the factory acts, of higher wages, cheaper and better food and clothing and improved sanitary surroundings of the working classes in recent years, is brought out by the measurements. On the other hand, observations show that school life under favorable conditions impedes the physical development of the children, and this is most marked in charity schools. Measurements made at the Duke of York's school at Chelsea show that the children who are the sons of soldiers, and therefore of a class selected for physical fitness, were until recently very inferior in stature and weight to boys of their own class living in their own homes. A similar falling off has prevailed at the Blue Coat school among boys belonging to a higher class of society in consequence of bad sanitary arrangements and probable faults in the feeding and discipline of the inmates. The average stature of boys of different classes of the community varies between the best nurtured boys in our public schools and the worst nurtured class in our industrial schools to the extent of about seven inches in boys of the age of 14 years A fact of rather peculiar nature has also been brought to light by anthropometry-namely, that girls from 11 to 14 years are taller and heavier than boys of corresponding ages. The average height of Scotch agricultural laborers (Galloway) is 5 feet 10.5 inches; fellows of the Royal society, 5 feet 9.76 inches; athletes, 5 feet S.34 inches; lunatics, 5 feet 5.70 inches; criminals, 5 feet 5.60 inches; Herefordshire laborers, 5 feet 5.35 inches and idiots and imbeciles 5 feet 4.84 inches. When compared with the general population, lunatics show a deficiency of nearly two inches in stature and 10 pounds in weight, while criminals are two inches shorter and 18 pounds lighter, besides showing a marked deficiency of

Now continue the churning process until the corn has been knocked from the cobs. our disposal? There are only two points in its favor-many insects are no doubt destroyed, and it makes nicer plowing for those who have no sulky plows. I use a three wheeled, self guiding plow, and it's a pleasure to see the trash go under, the more the better it suits me. Take my advice, and rather than burn anything off haul more on.

I have found that early plowing for corn is as essential as early plowing for wheat. Let the ground pack if it will, or let the weeds start, get on with a disk or spring tooth harrow, and you will not only get a good seed bed, but your corn will outgrow and outyield that on late plowed land. Another important factor is the preparation of soil. Some plant without any previous preparation, but this practice cannot be commended. I take nearly as much pains in preparing a good seed bed for corn as for wheat. This is a long stride toward a good crop. Unless the ground is very hard or packed there is nothing better for fining it than the modern steel lever harrow. I never use a drag or roller just before planting, as either leaves the soil too compact near the surface. This retards rapid evaporation, and the weed seeds germinate and grow vigorously. Planting in the signs of the moon or zodiac is not necessarily a sign of good farming. The only signs I know are favorable or seasonable weather and ground in proper condition. I had an idea once that I could raise more corn by drilling than checking. I was led to think so by seeing single stalks in checked planting having fine large ears. But one must bear in mind that one stalk in a hill in checked corn stands very isolated, usually from 3 feet 6 inches to 3 feet 8 inches from other corn, while in drilling it generally stands 8, 10, 12 and not often more than 16 inches apart in the row. This makes a vast difference. It is like allowing two acres for one steer and two steers for one acre. It is analogous in principle; plants are feeders, and the more feeders the sooner will a given amount of food be consumed. If you want nubbins or barren stalks, plant 10 to 16 inches apart, or three and four grains in a hill. If you have taken proper care of your seed, don't plant any more grains than you want to grow. Most of the corn here last season was drilled, and 9 in 10 fields were seeded too thickly. Unless the soil is very rich two stalks in a hill 3 feet S inches apart, or its equivalent, one stalk every 22 inches, is enough.

I have tried both drilling and checking-have abandoned the former. Drilled corn shades the ground too much, and while it may easily be kept clean if the weather permits, in the wet season it is almost impossible to keep the weeds out of the row. A profitable crop of hay and corn can't be grown on the same land. Early planting-any time between the 10th and 20th of May in this latitude-as a rule gives best results. Listing would not do here, where the beginning of the season is usually wet; better throw two furrows together and plant on the ridges. Every farmer has noticed that on headlands where 'three soils' are thrown together the best grain grows.

Things Told by Beek eepers. Bees never make an attack while in quest of honey or on their return until they have entered the hive. It is only in the hive and in its vicinity that we may expect them to manifest this irascible disposition.

Not Natural. "That clock," said the man who was looking through the senate chamber, "don't call out the hour no way, does it?"

"No," replied the guide. "Whose property is it?" "Why, it belongs to the Union." "To which." "To the Union." "And don't strike? No, siree. Ye can't fool me."-Washington Star.

There are 16 counties in Pennsyl vania and New York of the same name. They are Alleghany, Clinton, Columbia, Delaware, Erie, Franklin, Fulton, Greene, Jefferson, Monroe, Montgomery, Sullivan, Warren, Washington, Wayne and Wyoming.

There is said to be but one British house remaining where the old feudal custom is observed of guests and servants all dining together on Christmas night, and the dance afterward being led by the hostess with the gamekeeper.

Among ancient and mediæval sovereigns the universal custom was to give a list of the various countrie over which the monarch ruled, c was supposed to rule, and the relation he bore to each.

Actresses are compelled to paint their faces before they go on the stage, or the lights would give them the appearance of ghosts.

The title prince is from a Latin word signifying leader and dates from the early Roman empire.

Presentiments.

"Of course I believe in presentiments," said Bud Harkins. "One of the most vivid things that ever occurred to me in that way happened about a year ago. I was in New Mexico, and my wife and baby were in Toledo. One night I was lying in bed and had not yet gone to sleep, when a mist seemed to envelop the room, and out from the mist came a picture of my wife leaning over the baby, and to my horror the child was dead.

"I tried to shake off the idea, but I could not. It haunted me all that night and kept me from doing any work the next day. There was no telegraph station from which I could telegraph, and if there had been it would have done no good. I knew just as well as though I had been present that the child was dead. I left the night after my vision for home, telegraphing at the earliest possible opportunity.

says: This is the way I used to shel corn when a boy, and shellers of the modern principle had not come into general use. If yon have no sheller and think there is not enough in sheep and wool to justify you in trading a dozen bushels of wheat for one, try this plan. I know a farmer who never owned a sheller, and year after year shelled all his corn for his chickens and sheep by hand. There is no need of hand shelling unless the farmer is too poor to possess an old barrel and wornout ax.

To Insure Pullets. It any breeder doubts the statement that an old cock mated to pullets will produce a large proportion of pullets, let him try the experiment and be convinced, advises a writer in The Fanciers' Journal. He says: Last spring I mated a 3-year-old Black Wyandotte cock-such a grand old bird in every point that I could not persuade myself to dispense with his services-to young hens. The result settled my mind firmly as to the truth of above theory. From the pen I raised 28 chicks, 24 pullets and 4 cockerels!

On the other hand, a surplus of cockerels will he the certain result of mating a vigorous young cockerel to 2 and 3-year-old hens.

Nature's laws in these respects may be worked to the advantage of the breeder who wishes a surplus of either sex. The preponderance of one sex may not always be so marked as in the case above cited, but as a rule the desired result may be depended upon.

Treatment For Loco Poisoning.

Field and Farm says that the best treatment for loco poisoning is taking up the animal, feeding bran and grain, with two drams phosphate of soda daily. Keep for a month in a quiet, dark box, and do not excite the animal in any way. There is no known antidote to the poison at present discovered, and as it is the chronic structural effect on the brain to be combated it is doubtful if any will be of practical value when discovered. Experiments are now being made to determine the alkaloid of loco and also the particular part of the plant it is most abundant in.

The census of 1890, according to conclusions drawn by American Agriculturist, offers strong evidence in favor of the theory that production is not likely to increase faster than consumption, It appears that in the year 1288 a and that the era of overproduction by statute was published by the Scotch extensive farming has reached its limit parliament ordaining that during the in the United States, with a consequent reign of "Her Maist Blessit Mejestie upward tendency to land values and an Margaret" every maiden and lady of increase of yields per acre only as marhigh and low estate should have libket prices warrant intensive farming. erty to speak to the man she liked.

ROSA BONHEUR'S LION.

The Great French Artist's Pet Model Which Died In Her Arms.

Rosa Bonheur loves the animals she paints and is in turn adored by them. She showed her recent purchase, a magnificent lion, who purred and writhed like a gigantic cat when his owner fearlessly stroked his mighty head. Then, showing the head of a most superb specimen of the African lion transferred to capvas with startling realism, she tells the story of Nero. He was her first pet lion and was reputed untamably ferocious and lived for several years in the garden at By. At lastone day Rosa Bonheur was about to travel and disposed of Nero to the Jardin des Plantes. She parted with him reluctantly, for he was a great pet and would greet her always with a peculiar little note of welcome. When she returned from her wanderings, two years later, she went to see Nero and beheld a sad sight. The poor creature had not been so carefully tended as he was used to be at By. Ophthalmia had set in. and the splendid brute lay blind and ailing, unheeding the curious crowd that stared at him. Rosa Bonheur watched him for a moment and then called "Nero!" The effect was magical. The lion rose to his feet, uttered his accustomed note of welcome and sprang toward the well loved voice with such impetuosity that the shock against the bars sent the sightless brute rolling, stunned, back on the floor. The great artist took him back, soothed his last days with tendance and petting, and finally he died in her arms at the foot of the staircase at By, his huge paws clinging to his mistress, as if imploring her not to forsake him in his death struggle, and his last moyement being a feeble attempt to lick the hands that held him with such infinite tenderness. "You see," said Rosa Bonheur as she meditatively ruffled her new lion's mane, "to be really beloved by wild beasts you must really love them."-Paris Letter in Philadelphia Telegraph.
