"I don't know why you should be so unkind today," Mrs. Reffold said, with pathetic patience. "I can't understand you.
You have never spoken like this before."

pessimism more gloomy than that of Schopen hauer, and he proceeds to fulfill his self imposed mission by trying to convince Bernardine that life is not worth living. But his morbid cynfoisms serve to make the young lady more cheerful and contented with her lot and with the world in general. CHAPTER III-Bernardine meets a worldly and selfish rich woman Mrs. Reffold, whose husband is a hopeless invalid, and teaches her a lesson. IV-A digression in which a servant at the hotel and the post man figure as lovers. VI-Another digression which teaches by allegory that happiness and content are in everyday life and in daily effort and not afar off. VII, VIII and IX-Bernardine visits the invalid husband of Mrs. Reffold and so sheds the light of her cheeriness that the poor neglected man thinks she is a "little brick." Meantime the Disagreeable Man continues disagreecable and incidentally informs Bernardine that he has made "the one great sacrifice"that is to say, he was living for his mother's sake when he would prefer death. This excites Bernardine's admiration. XII-The Disagrecable

After tea they began the inspection of the new camera, and Robert Allitsen showed her all the newest improvements. He did not seem to think much of her intelligence, for he explained everything as though he were talking to a child, until Man lends Bernardine a photographic camera for he himself is fond of photography.

Bernardine rather lost patience.
"You need not enter into such elaborate explanations," she suggested. "I have a small amount of intelligence, though you do not seem to detect it." He looked at her as one might look at an impatient child. "Kindly not to interrupt me," he replied mildly. "How very impatient you are! And how restless! What must you have been like before you fell ill?"

But he took the hint all the same and shortened his explanations, and as Bernardine was genuinely interested he was well satisfied. From time to time he looked at his old camera and at his companion, and from the expression of unease on his face it was evident that some contest was going on in his mind. Twice he stood near his old camera and turned round to Bernardine, intending to make some remark. Then he changed his mind and walked abruptly to the other end of the room, as though to seek advice from his chemical bottles. Bernardine meanwhile had risen from her chair and was looking out of the

"You have a lovely view," she said. "It Gloves, Mitts, Underwear, must be nice to look at that when you are tired of dissecting cheese mites. All the same, I think the white scenery gives one great sense of sadness and loneling "Why do you speak always of loneliness?" he asked.

"I have been thinking a good deal about it," she said. "When I was strong and vigorous, the idea of loneliness never entered my mind. Now I see how lonely most people are. If I believed in God as a personal God, I should be inclined to think that loneliness were part of his scheme, so that the soul of man might turn to him and him alone."

The Disagreeable Man was standing by his camera again. His decision was made "Don't think about those questions," he said kindly. "Don't worry and fret too much about the philosophy of life. Leave philosophy alone and take to photography instead. Here, I will lend you my old

"Do you mean that?" she asked, glancing at him in astonishment. Of course I mean it," he said.

He looked remarkably pleased with himself, and Bernardine could not help smiling. He looked just as a child looks when he has given up a toy to another child and is conscious that he has behaved himself rather well.

"I am very much obliged to you," she said frankly. "I have had a great wish to learn photography."
"I might have lent my camera to you before, mightn't I?" he said thoughtfully.
"No," she answered. "There was not any reason." "No," he said, with a kind of relief, "there was not any reason. That is quite true.' "When will you give me my first les-son?" she asked. "Perhaps, though, you would like to wait a few days, in case you change your mind." "It takes me some time to make up my mind," he replied, "but I do not change it. So I will give you your first lesson to morrow. Only you must not be impatient. You must consent to be taught. You cannot possibly know everything." They fixed a time for the morrow, and Bernardine went off with the camera, and meeting Marie on the staircase confided to her the piece of good fortune which had befallen her. "See what Herr Allitsen has lent me, Mariel" she said. Marie raised her hands in astonishment "Who would have thought such a thing of Herr Allitsen?" said Marie. "Why, he does not like lending me a match."

Bernardine laughed and passed on to her

And the Disagreeable Man meanwhile was cutting a new scientific book which had just come from England. He spent a good deal of money on himself. He was soon absorbed in this book and much intorested in the diagrams.

Suddenly he looked up to the corner where the old camera had stood before Bernardine took it away in triumph. "I hope she won't hurt that camera." he said a little uneasily. "I am half sorry

Then a kinder mood took possession of "Well, at least it will keep her from fussing and fretting and thinking. Still asked testily. "To send a message of excuse," she answered, with provoking cheerfulness.

I hope she won't hurt it."

She scribbled something on a card and gave it to the servant who answered the "Now," she said, with great sweetness of manner. And she sat down beside him, drew out her fancy work and worked away contentedly. She would have made a charming study of a devoted wife soothing a much loved husband in his hours of sickness and weariness.

"Do you mind giving up your drive?"

"Not in the least," she replied. "I am ather tired of sledging." "You soon get tired of things, Winifred," he said.
"Yes, I do," was the answer. "I am so easily bored. I am quite tired of this place.

"You will have to stay here a little longer," he said, "and then you will be free to go where you choose. I wish I could die quicker for you, Winifred."

Mrs. Reffold looked up from her embroidery.

"You are better."

And she was sweet in her manner, wasn't she? And, by Jove, she is beautiful! I am glad you have seen her here today. It "You will get better soon," she said. must be dull for her with an invalid like me. And I know I am irritable. The little bit of happiness at which the poor fellow snatched seemed to make him more pathetic than before. Bernardine promised to tell his wife and went off to find her, making as an excuse a book which Mrs. Reffold had offered to lend her. Mrs. Reffold was in her bedroom. "Poor Winifred," he said. "If it is ever your lot to fall ill and be neglected, per-She asked Bernardine to sit down while she searched for the book. She had a very gracious manner when she chose. she said kindly. "I cannot help noticing your face. It looks younger and brighter. The bracing air has done you good." "Yes, I am better," Bernardine said, rather astonished that Mrs. Refield should have noticed her at all. "Mr. Allitsen informs me that I shall live, but never be strong. He settles every question of that sort to his own satisfaction, but not always to the satisfaction of other people!' "He is a curious person," Mrs. Reffold said, smiling, "though I must say he is not quite as gruff as he used to be. You seem to be good friends with him." She would have liked to say more on this subject, but experience had taught her that Bernardine was not to be trifled

"I don't know about being good friends," Bernardine said, "but I have a great sympathy for him. I know myself what it is to be cut off from work and active life. I have been through a misery. But mine is nothing to his." She rose to go, but Mrs. Reffold detain-

"Don't go yet," she said. "It is pleasant to have you.' She was leaning back in an armchair, playing with the fringe of an antimacas

"Oh, how tired I am of this horrid place!" she said suddenly. "And I have had a most wearying afternoon. Mr. Reffold seems to be more irritable every day. It is very hard that I should have to bear Bernardine listened to her in astonish-"Yes," sho added, "I am quite worn out. Ho never used to be so irritable. It is all very tiresome. It is quite telling on

"His grumbling this afternoon has been incessant—so much so that he himself was ashamed and asked me to forgive him. You heard him, didn't you?" "Yes, I heard him," Bernardine said.

"And of course I forgave him at once,"
Mrs. Reffold said piously. "Naturally one would do that, but the vexation remains all the same." "Can these things be?" thought Bernardine to herself.

"He spoke in a most ridiculous way," she went on. "It certainly is not encour aging for me to spend another afternoon with him. I shall go sledging tomorrow. "You generally do go sledging, don't ou?" Bernardine asked mildly. Mrs. Reffold looked at her suspiciously. She was never quite sure that Bernardine was not making fun of her. "It is little enough pleasure I do have," she added as though in self defense. "And he seems to grudge me that too."

. "I don't think he would grudge you anything," Bernardine said, with some warmth. "He loves you too much for that. You don't know how much pleasure you give him when you spare him a little of your time. He told me how happy you made him this afternoon. You could see for yourself that he was happy. Mrs. Reffold, make him happy while you still have him. Don't you understand that he is passing away from you—don't you understand, or is it that you won't? We all see it-all except you. She stopped suddenly, surprised at her boldness. Mrs. Reffold was still leaning back in the armchair, her hands classed together above her beautiful head. Her face was She did not speak. Bernardine waited. The silence was unbroken savo by the merry cries of some children tobog-ganing in the Kurhaus garden. The stillness grew oppressive, and Bernardine rose. She know from the effort which those few words had cost her how far removed sho was from her old former self. CHAPTER XIV.

CONCERNING THE CARETAKERS. The doctors in Potershof always said that the caretakers of the invalids were a much greater anxiety than the invalids themselves. The invalids would either get better or die—one of two things probably. At any rate, you know where you were with them. But not so with the caretakers. There was nothing they were not capable of doing, except taking reasonable care of their invalids. They either fussed about too much, or else they did not fuss about at all. They all began by doing the right thing. They all ended by doing the wrong. The fussy ones had fits of apathy when the poor irritable patients seemed to get a little better. The negligent ones had paroxysms of attentiveness when their invalids, accustomed to loneliness and neglect, seemed to become rather worse by be-

To remonstrate with the caretakers would have been folly, for they were well satisfied with their own methods. To contrive their departure would have been an impossibility, for they were firmly convinced that their presence was necessary to the welfare of their charges. And then, too, judging from the way in which they managed to amuse themselves, they liked being in Petershof, though they nev er owned that to the invalids. On the contrary, it was the custom for the caretakers to depreciate the place and to deplore the necessity which obliged them to continue there month after month. They were fond, too, of talking about the sacrifices which they made and the pleasures which they willingly gave up in order to stay with their invalids. They said this in the presence of their invalids. And if the latter had told them by all means to pack up and go back to the pleasures which they had renounced they would have been astonished at the ingratitude which could suggest the idea.

They were amusing characters, these caretakers. They were so thoroughly unconscious of their deficiencies. They might neglect their own invalids, but they would look after other people's invalids and play the nurse most soothingly and prettily where there was no call and no occasion. Then they would come and relate to their neglected dear ones what they had been doing for others, and the dear ones would smile quietly and watch the buttons being stitched on for strangers and the cornflour which they could not get nicely made for themselves being carefully prepared for other people's neglected dear ones. Some of the dear ones were rather bitter. But there were many of a higher order of intelligence who seemed to realize that they had no right to be ill, and that being ill and therefore a burden on their friends they must make the best of everything and be grateful for what was given them and patient when anything was withheld.

Others of a still higher order of under-standing attributed the eccentricities of the caretakers to one cause alone—the Petershof air. They knew it had the invariable effect of getting into the head and upsetting the balance of those who drank deep of it. Therefore no one was to blame, and no one need be bitter. But these were the philosophers of the colony—a select and dainty few in any colony. But there were several rebels among the invalids, and they found consolation in conflding to each other their separate grievances. They generally held their conferences in the rooms known as the newspaper rooms, where they were not likely to be interrupted by any caretakers who might have staid at home because they were tired out, Today there were only a few rebels gathered together, but they were more than usually excited, because the doctors had told several of them that their respective caretakers must be sent home. "What must I do?" said little Mlle. Gerardy, wringing her hands. "The doctor says that I must tell my sister to go home; that she only worries me and makes me worse. He calls her a 'whirlwind.' If won't tell her, then he will tell her, and wo shall have some more scenes. Mon Dieu, and I am so tired of them. They terrify me. I would suffer anything rather than have a fresh scene. And I can't get her to do anything for mo. She has no time for me. And yet she thinks she takes the greatest possible care of me and devotes the yhole day to me. Why, some-times I never see her for hours together." "Well, at least she does not quarrel with every one, as my mother does," said a Polish gentleman—M. Lichinsky. "Nearly every day she has a quarrel with some one or other, and then she comes to me and says she has been insulted. And others come to me mad with rage and complain that they have been insulted by her. As though I were to blame! I tell them that now. I tell them that my mother's quarrels are not my quarrels. But one longs for peace. And the doctor says I must have it, and that my mother must go home at once. If I tell her that, she will have a tremendous quarrel with the doctor. As it is, he will scarcely speak to her. So you see, Mile. Gerardy, that I, too, am in a bad plight. What am I to do?" Then a young American spoke. Ho had been getting gradually worse since he came to Petershof, but his brother, a bright, sturdy young fellow, seemed quite unconscious of the seriousness of his condition. "And what am I to do?" he asked pathetically. "My brother does not even think I am ill. He says I am to rouse myself and come skating and tobogganing with him. Then I tell him that the doctor says I must lie quietly in the sun. I have no one to take care of me, so I try to take a little care of myself, and then I am laughed at. It is bad enough to be ill, but it is worse when those who might help you a little won't even believe in your illness. I wrote home once and told them, but they go by what he says. And they, too, tell me to rouse myself." His cheeks were sunken; his eyes were leaden. There was no power in his voice, no vigor in his frame. He was just slipping quickly down the hill for want of proper care and understanding.

"I den't know whether I am much better off than you," said an English lady, Mrs. Bridgetower. "I certainly have a trained nurse to look after me, but she is altogether too much for me, and she does just as she pleases. She is always ailing or else pretends to be, and she is always depressed. She grumbles from 8 in the morning till 9 at night. I have heard that she is cheerful with other people, but she never gives me the benefit of her brightness. Poor thing! She does feel the cold very much, but it is not very cheering to see her crouching near the store, with her arms almost clasping it. When she is not talking of her own looks, all she says is, 'Oh, if I had only not come to Petershofl' or, 'Why did I ever leave that hospital in Manchester?' or 'The cold is eating into tho very marrow of my bones.' At first she used to read to me, but it was such a dismal performance that I could not bear to hear her. Why don't I send her home? Well, my husband will not hear of me being alone, and he thinks I might do worse than keep Nurse Frances. And perhaps

"I would give a good deal to have a sislittle Fraulein Oberhof. "She came to look after me the other day when I was alone. She has the kindest way about her. But when my sister came in she was not pleased to find Fraulein Sophie Muller with me. She does not do anything for me herself, and she does not like any one else to do anything either. Still she is very good to other people. She comes up from the theaer sometimes at half past 9—that is tho hour when I am just sleepy-and sho stamps about the room and makes cornflour for the old Polish lady. Then off she goes, taking with her the cornflour, together with my sleep. Once I complained, but she said I was irritable. You can't think how teasing it is to hear the noise of the spoon stirring the cornflour just when you are feeling drowsy. You say to yourself: 'Will that cornflour never be made? It seems to take centuries.' "

"One could be more patient if it were being made for oneself," said M. Lichin-sky. "But at least, fraulcin, your sister does not quarrel with every one. You must be grateful for that mercy.' Even as he spoke a stout lady thrust herself into the reading room. She looked very hot and excited. She was M. Lichinsky's mother. She spoke with a whirlwind of Polish words. It is sometimes difficult to know when these people are angry and when they are pleased. But there was no mistake about Mme. Lichinsky. She was always angry. Her son rose from the sofa and followed her to the door. Then he turned round to his confederates and shrugged his shoulders. "Another quarrel!" he said hopelessly. CHAPTER XV. WHICH CONTAINS NOTHING. "You may have talent for other things," Robert Allitsen said one day to Bernar-

"but you certainly have no talent for photography. You have not made the slightest progress." "I don't at all agree with you," Bernardine answered rather previshly. "I think

I am getting on very well." "You are no judge," he said. "To begin with, you cannot focus properly. You have a crooked eye. I have told you that several times. "You certainly have," she put in. "You don't let me forget that." "Your photograph of that horrid little lanseuse whom you like so much," he said, "is simply abominable. She looks like a fury. Well, she may be one for all I know, but in real life she has not the appearance of one." "I think that is the best photograph I have done." Bernardine said, highly indignant. She could tolerate his uppishness about subjects of which she knew far more than he did, but his masterfulness about a subject of which sho really knew nothing was more than she could bear with patience. He had not the tact to see that she was irritated. "I don't know about it being the best," he said, "unless it is the best specimen of your inexperience. Looked at from that point of view, it does stand first," She flushed crimson with temper. "Nothing is easier than to make fun of others," she said flercely. "It is the resource of the ignorant. Then, after the fashion of angry women, having said her say, she stalked away. If there had been a door to bang, she would certainly have banged it. However, she did what she could under the circumstances—she pushed a curtain roughly aside and passed into the concert room, where every night of the season's six months a scratchy string orchestra entertained the Kurhaus guests. She left the Disagreeable Man standing in the passage. "Dear me," he said thoughtfully. And he stroked his chin. Then he trudged slowly up to his room.

"Dear me," he said once more. Arrived in his bedroom, he began to read. But after a few minutes he shut his ook, took the lamp to the looking glass and brushed his hair. Then he put on a black coat and a white silk tie. There was a speck of dust on the coat. He carefully removed that and then extinguished the On his way down stairs he met Marie.

who gazed at him in astonishment. It was quite unusual for him to be seen again when he had once come up from table d'hote. She noticed the black coat and the white silk tie, too, and reported on these eccentricities to her colleague Anna. The Disagreeable Man meanwhile had reached the concert hall. He glanced around and saw where Bernardine was sitting and then chose a place in the opposite direction, quite by himself. He looked somewhat like a dog who has been beaten. Now and again he looked up to see whether she still kept her seat. The bad music was a great irritation to him. But he staid on heroically. There was no reason why he should stay. Gradually, too, the audi-ence began to thin. Still he lingered, always looking like a dog in punishment. At last Bernardine rose, and the Disagreeable Man rose too. He followed her humbly to the door. She turned and saw

I wonder?"
"No, I believe not," she answered as she took possession of her violets and stroked the saffron cat. "But I am glad no one has died here."

"It is for a young, beautiful lady," he said. "She was in the Kurhaus two years ago. I liked her. So I am taking extra pains. She did not care for the flowers to be wired. So I am trying my best without the wire. But it is difficult." She left him to his work and went away thinking. All the time she had now been in Petershof had not sufficed to make her

Why should the faintest shadow steal across her soul on account of them? There was no reason. And still she felt for them all, she who in the old days would have thought it waste of time to spare a moment's reflection on anything o unimportant as the sufferings of an in dividual human being.

And the bridge between her former and her present self was her own illness. What dull minded sheep we must all be, how lacking in the very elements of imagination, since we are only able to learn by personal experience of grief and suffering something about the suffering and grief of others! Yea, how the dogs must wonder at us-those dogs who know when we are in pain or trouble and nestle nearer to us! So Bernardine reached her own door. She heard her name called, and turning round saw Mrs. Reffold. There was a scared look on her beautiful face.

"Miss Holme," she said, "I have been sent for-I daren't go to him alone-I want you—he is worse. I am"—— Bernardine took her hand, and the two women hurried away in silence.

CHAPTER XVI. WHEN THE SOUL KNOWS ITS OWN REMORSE.

Bernardine had seen Mr. Reffold the previous day. She had sat by his side and held his hand. He had smiled at her many times, but he only spoke once.
"Little Brick." he whispen voice had become nothing but a whisper,

"I remember all you told mc. God bless you. But what a long time it does take to But that was yesterday. The lane had come to an ending at last and Mr. Reffold lay dead. They bore him to the little mortuary chapel, and Bernardine staid with Mrs. Reffold, who seemed afraid to be alone.

She clung to Bernardine's hand. "No, no," she said excitedly, "you must not go! I can't bear to be alone—you must stay with me." She expressed no sorrow, no regret. She did not even speak his name. She just sat nursing her beautiful face. Once or twice Bernardino tried to slip away. This waiting about was a strain on her, and she felt that she was doing no good. But each time Mrs. Reffold looked up nardine said. "And that was the end of and prevented her. "No, no," she said, "I can't bear myself without you. I must have you near me. Why should you leave me?

So Bernardine lingered. She tried to read a book which lay on the table. She counted the lines and dots on the wall paper. She thought about the dead man and about the living woman. She had pitied him, but when she looked at the stricken face of his wife Bernardine's whole heart rose up in pity for her. Remorse would come, although it might not remain long. The soul would see itself face to face for one brief moment and then forget its own likeness.

But for the moment—what a weight of suffering, what a whole century of agony! Bernardine grew very tender for Mrs. Reffold. She bent over the sofa and fondled the beautiful face. "Mrs. Reffold," she whispered. That was all she said, but it was enough

Mrs. Reffold burst into an agony of "Oh, Miss Holme," she sobbed, "and I was not even kind to him! And now it is too late. How can I ever bear myself?" And then it was that the soul knew its own remorse. [TO BE CONTINUED.] ---

Tungsten and Steel.

A mixture of tungsten with steel is known to give to the latter so great a degree of hardness that it readily scratches glass and quartz. According to a statement in The Paper World with reference to the fact in question, a definitely crystallized compound of iron and tungsten has been discovered, the crystals being so hard as to scratch topaz. The crystals, as formed by the combination named, in the proportion of one atom of iron to two of tunsten, are silver gray and very brilliant. It is thought that when tungsten is alloyed with steel some of the compound just described is formed in the mass, thereby producing the remarkable increase in the hardness of the steel. This is cited as an interesting example of the value that one metal may lend to an. other, for until the discovery that it could be employed in hardening steel tungsten, although occurring in considerable abundance, was practically of no value.

BUCHANAN RECORD

D. H. BOWER, PUBLISHER AND PROPRIETOR.

THURSDAY, JUNE 21, 1894.

The Sturgis Journal, in speaking of the insincerity of the "one term club" ideas advanced by members of the Republican party, has the following reference to our present governor: Jno. T. Rich has made an excellent governor and is clearly entitled to a second term. If he is to be turned down, all the other officers should be served in a like manner."

The one term theory looks well on paper, if we judge by the Detroit papers who are booming Pingree who is satisfied that three terms as mayor of Detroit is about right. But when we look at the backers of the movement we find any quantity of men who are willing to be "sacrificed" for the party as many terms as they can get chances. The friends of Gov. Rich should not allow him to be "turned down" by any such timber as the so called "one term club."

The Michigan Woman's Press association have elected the following officers: Miss Emma E. Bower, Ann Arbor, president; Mrs. Alice E. Bartlett, Detroit, first vice-president; Mrs. Ada ddings Gale, Albion, second vicepresident; Mrs. Belle M. Perry, Charlotte, third vice-president; Mrs. Kate E. Ward, Lansing, recording secretary; Miss Jennie Buel, corresponding secretary; M. Gertrude Sprague, Traverse City, treasurer.

The coal supply at Evansville is almost exhausted. The waterworks fires are being fed with wood. Suspension of the street car service is threatened on account of lack of fuel.

Among the many serious and difficult problems confronting the American people at this time, one of the most important is that of immigration. It is a fact patent to all that a large proportion of the immigrants now daily landing upon our shores are not such as will make desirable citizens. Every honest, intelligent, industrious, law abiding man, come from whence he may, should be welcome to our shores. He will add to our civiliza-tion and prosperity. But we cannot hope to assimilate the mass of ignorance, crime, filth and pauperism daily dumped upon our soil from southern Europe. Their presence is a danger which grows as the number increases. one can hope for a perfect solution all at once. Any step in that direction should receive our hearty endorsement. The Stone bill providing for consular inspection on the other side, is such a step. There is no reason why the immigrant should come 4,000 miles to determine whether he is admissible or not. It is much better for him to know that before he starts, and that fact can certainly be more accurately ascertained where he lives than on the other side of the globe. It is to be hoped that this measure shall become a law, and to that end every citizen should lend his influence.—Ex.

ADDITIONAL LOCALS.

Mr. W. N. Keeler has received a telegram from Santa Cruz, California, announcing the death of his son, Mr. W. H. Keeler, at that place, on June 17th. This will indeed be sad news to a large circle of his friends, as Mr. Keeler was a former resident of Buchanan, having been for some time engaged in the drug business. He was a young man who enjoyed the acquaintance of a large number of friends, and all who knew him esteemed him very highly for his noble Christian character, He went to California in the hopes that the change of climate would prove beneficial to him, but his disease, the dreaded consumption, had taken such a strong hold that he was forced to succumb. Had he lived until Aug. 20 he would have been thirtyfive years of age. Mr. Keeler was married at Buchanan to Miss Carrie Ashbrook, his bride being a resident of

A Perfect Day and a Large Crowd. Tuesday was a great day for Buchanan, as it was the day announced for the big Sunday School "Rally" that has been talked about for the past month. The committee in charge have done their work well, and large crowds of happy children together with their parents and friends enjoyed the day's "outing" on Niles Hill picnic grounds. The day was perfect, although it had seemed in the early morning as if it would be a cloudy and disagreeable day, yet at nine o'clock the sun was shining and not a cloud to be seen. The Sunday schools formed at the the old school house grounds, and under Marshal Charles S. Black marched to Front street and then down Front street to the picnic grounds. Notwithstanding the excessive heat of last Friday, a crowded house greeted the graduates of the Buchanan High School at their annual commencement, held at Rough's opera house on that evening. The graduates, thirteen in number, occupied a seat on the stage, together with Superintendent Swain and the members of the School Board. The exercises began promptly on time and the program, as published in the RECORD, was carried out. All were awarded with liberal applause and it would be difficult indeed to make a selection, as every number was equally well given. The opera house had been neatly and tastefully

On Monday the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Philip N. Weaver was the scene of a very happy event. At one e'clock occurred the wedding ceremony by which their daughter Miss Anna, and Mr. Frank English, son of Mr. Peter English, were made man and wife. Rev. O. J. Roberts of the Presbyterian church officiated, and the happy couple left on an afternoon train, amid showers of rice, old shoes and good wishes, for an extended tour. Obituary.

Mrs. Elisabeth Beistle passed away on June 16, 1894, being 83 years, 6 months 10 days old. She was born in Union Co., Pa., Nov. 27, 1810, coming to Buchanan with her husband in 1880, who died Dec. 20, 1883. There were a family of six children, four sons and two daughters. One of the daughters, Mrs. M. B. Gardner, died about two years ago: the other is living in Pennsylvania; the four sons were present at the funeral. Mrs. Beistle was a quiet, faithful Christian, a faithful mother.

and her memory will be blessed. The funeral was held at the Presbyterian church, of which Mrs. Beistle was a member since 1880, on Monday afternoon, Rev. O. J. Roberts preaching the sermon from John 14:7. Revs. Geo. Johnson and Isaiah Wilson assisted in the services. The interment was at Oak Ridge cemetery. O. J. R.

Why not Give Them the Water. We understand that the Michigan Central R. R. Company are desirous of beautifying the station at this place, providing the town will donate the water for the purpose, or if they will not do this, the railroad asks the town a counter proposition as to what they will do. It strikes us that our town could not advertise the place in any better and attractive way than having those who travel by, as well as those who stop here, favorably impressed by their first sight of the place. It is said that "first impressions are always lasting", and by all means let us have the first impressions of the town pleasing to the eyes, even if it does take water ent rates $3 or $4.

MATING OF FOWLS.

Extreme Matings Are Condemned as a Rule Although Occasionally of Value. On general principles we are opposed to extreme matings, but we are too well aware of their value as a means of utilizing waste birds as to wholly condemn them. There is no denying the fact that more than one prize winner has been bred from birds that were decided culls on both sides, says the editor of The Poultry World, who adds: "Extreme matings are never to be resorted to except for the purposes of economy, and such economy is always doubtful when it is possible to obtain better birds. But it often happens that a variety is in great demand, and that the buyer must take extremes or nothing. He will lose | The impression is quite common among a year if he doesn't take them. By taking them he can at a much less price red clover does not produce seed. This obtain the possibility of some good stock. He elects to take his chances. If he

It also sometimes happens, and this is more true of new varieties than of off. By the time the bloom appeared those which have become thoroughly established, that the breeder to produce from the stock which he has fowls of the right character is obliged to resort to the mating of extremes. He is wise in so doing.

succeeds, he rejoices; if he fails, he is out of pocket only a small sum.

It may also happen that the standard requirements of a breed are so artificial, so built upon the extremes in development, that to produce exhibition birds of that breed the breeder is obliged to employ extremes in mating. If he is breeding to sell-and most breeders do breed to sell—he is wise in using the means to accomplish his purpose.

But the rule for all breeders in all breeds and varieties should be, so far as their stock and its breeding tendencies will permit, to avoid the mating of extremes and use birds of both sexes such as they wish to produce. This is the law of single matings, and it is a good law wherever it is applicable. No breed, no variety of a breed and no strain of a variety can be called thoroughbred in the strictest sense until from a single mating can be produced exhibition specimens of both sexes, not as exceptions, but as the rule.

The Clover Hay Worm.

The only way to deal with the clover hay worm, says the Iowa Homestead, is Haul out the affected hay and burn it before the moths begin to appear. After burning carefully scrape the inside of the barns where cocoons are found. This is the only remedy, and unless it be applied effectually this injurious pest will spread and cause great losses to farmers in the west. Once more we urge every man to make close | medium brood foundation will answer. examination of the butts of his stacks | With deep frames it is more important and the bottoms of mows and let the fire do its perfect work before the moths appear. Until the moths appear no particular harm will be done. This crop has done all the harm it can. The thing to do is to provide against the next. The moths will not be liable to issue in that latitude until about the 1st of June, so there is plenty of time yet, but the work must not be neglected. After the cattle are turned out to grass make a whole burnt offering of all infested hay, even though there be but few worms or co-

CHEAP HAY SHEDS. These May Bo of Any Size Desired and

Located Wherever Convenient. One of the greatest wastes on the farm is that of hav after it has been cut and stacked. The waste is in many directions. The waste of stacking is reduced to the minimum where farmers stack as they do in the older countries, where the climate is such as to render large barns or hay sheds impracticable. Under these-circumstances the stack is built with a skill such as few Americans possess, raked as no American will take the time to rake it and then thatched as no American will ever thatch. Under our conditions hay can be put in large barns of almost any size, although it is dangerous to put clover hay in barns over 20 feet high (to the square) on account of spontaneous combustion.

As ordinarily stacked, and especially in the prairie country, the stack suffers first by the deposit of moisture on the outside during the heating period, a damage which has been estimated by scientists at not less than 12 per cent. It suffers from insufficient raking, from leaning to one side or the other on account of unskillful building, from blowing off the tops during severe windstorms and from the waste that comes from handling these stacks in the winter, many farmers having from one to five stack bottoms covered with snow or wet with rain during the latter part of the winter season.

The remedy for all this is the hay shed. Hay sheds can be built very cheaply and of any size desired and located wherever it may be convenient. For the hay shed proper there is nothing needed but telegraph or native poles, or in default of these 6 by 6 timbers for sides and ends, and a roof which may be of boards or shingles. Authority for the foregoing tells in the Iowa Homestead that the most convenient width is 26 feet and roof one-third pitch. This will enable 16 foot boards to be used for roofing without waste of material. The shed can be made of any length desired. Where timbers are used, set posts in the ground and spike the timbers to the posts, so that in case the posts rot off they can be replaced with others. The hay carrier can be attached to this as it is to a barn and should extend from the end the usual length. The hay shed can very easily be converted into a feeding shed on three sides, preferably the north, west and south, leaving the east end open as a place at which to unload the hay. The sheds should not be less than 13 feet wide and 7 feet high at the rear; 8 would be better, thus allowing the wagon to be driven around for the purpose of hauling out the manure. They should be covered in the same way as the hay shed proper and can be divided off with movable partitions for different kinds of stock. We prefer them high, so as to leave room for plenty of bedding and avoid the hauling out of the manure during the winter, thus protecting the manure from the waste unavoidable where it lies unused through the summer season. We have thus given the general outline of a plan which can be modified to suit the circumstances of each farmer. A hav shed 26 by 40 will hold from 35 to 40 tons of hay, depending on the care

A Large Irrigation Plant. Among the irrigation plants in course of construction in Kansas probably the most extensive is that of Mr. G. M. Munger of Eureka, Greenwood county. He is constructing a reservoir which will cover about 160 acres with water. This is done by building a dam 2,800 height. This, as described by The Irriplorers will be landed at Rigolette, Labgation Farmer, will catch the storm rador. whence a boat

waters from a large area and will be sed primarily for the irrigation of a 500 acre orchard now just beginning to bear. The water will be raised by two compound duplex steam pumps, the water cylinders of which are 12 by 15 inches. Each pump has 10 inch suction and 8 inch discharge. These pumps will elevate the water to a height of 65 feet, delivering it on the highest part of Mr. Munger's farm. The estimated cost of the plant complete, including ditches for distribution of the water, is $15,000.

> Cutting Clover For Seed. A correspondent of the Iowa Homestead writes: I took your advice last year with a 20 acre field of common red clover which I wanted for seed. It had been sown on old land. I pastured until June 15 and then let it grow up. Had three bushels of good seed per acre. Another part of the same field that was cut for hay had no seed.

The journal referred to says: This is quite a suggestive bit of experience. farmers that the first crop of common is an entire mistake. The only reason why the early blooms fail to produce seed is a lack of insect fertilization. Mr. Long pastured his clover to the 15th of June, after which the stock was taken there was an abundance of opportunity for insect fertilization.

Notes of Local Interest. The wheat outlook is not flattering in Kansas, is poor in Nebraska and very

The cultivation of the prune is now quite extensively practiced throughout the state of Oregon.

A well known authority claims that the soil of the entire Rocky mountain region is well adapted to the onion. If you irrigate, you must cultivate, and if you cannot irrigate it is still the more necessary to thoroughly cultivate and keep the moisture in the soil. Russian thistle is commonly known in North Dakota as Russian cactus. In England its closely allied neighbor is called saltwort. In live stock, farm implements and machinery Iowa stands first, Illinois second, New York third, Missouri fourth. Kansas fifth, Ohio sixth and Pennsylvania seventh.

Foundation In Brood Frames. There is some difference of opinion as to how much foundation can be profitably used in brood frames, but Dr. C. C. Miller tells in The American Bee Journal that most beekcepers agree that it pays to use full sheets. Brood combs last so many years that one can afford a good deal in the first place to have them satisfactory, straight and all worker. If your frames are not wired, the heaviest foundation is none too heavy. If the frames or foundation is wired, to have the foundation than with light frames.

The Irrigation Question.

Secretary Morton takes a conservative ground upon the irrigation question. Ten thousand dollars were appropriated by congress for irrigation. This is being used to gather available information upon the subject-gather facts and data that will enable the people to secure irrigation of arid lands at the least possible expense. Mr. Morton is reported as saying that there are $6,000 of the appropriation still unexpended, and he will use what is necessary of this in the same way, and there it will stop. He does not want any further ap-

A WONDERFUL HORSE.

Educated In America and Now Delighting London Audiences It cannot be said of the horse, as Heine said of the monkey, that it does not talk for fear of being put to work. Probably the ultimate degree to which the training of animals may be carried is reached in the case of the talking horse that literally made its bow to the public recently at the Crystal palace. Mazeppa is an Arab, educated, so to say, in America, and its extraordinary capacity for learning was manifested before an astonished and enthusiastic audience. In the strict meaning of the word, the horse does not talk, but is capable of answering questions addressed to it. It even understands French or German when it hears it spoken, though it does not speak these languages, in which it is not less accomplished than some human beings. The animal not only appears to think, but is capable of expressing itself intelligibly by signs. It has a special talent for arithmetic The audience was invited promiscuously to call out a number of figures which were arranged in rows on a blackboard, and Mazeppa, after looking over them, gave the sum of the addition by pawing the ground in every case the exact number of times necessary to indicate the result. As a mere trick this would be surprising enough; but, considering the figures were taken at random from among the audience, ladies and gentlemen, and, in particular, eager little boys, contributing, collusions seemed out of the question, and Mazeppa's good faith was established by the still more remarkable achievement that followed.

The horse was directed to count the number of persons in given rows of the audience, and having done so more than once proceeded to indicate the number of women and the number of men in any particular row. Having passed this examination, Mazeppa stood forth to answer any question to which it was possible to give a reply directly, by means of a shake of the head, signifying either "Yes" or "No," or in figures. Thus, the day of the week and the month of the year, or the date of a birthday, revealed to the trainer, Prolessor H. S. McGuire, was promptly found by the horse, any attempt to deceive it meeting always with a decidedly emphatic negative. This astounding entertainment concluded with an imitation by Mazeppa of a young man paying his addresses to a young lady. The horse's affectation of tenderness adds a very humorous touch to an excellent piece of pantomime. The sagacious Mazeppa is simply a wonder.-London News. LABRADOR EXPEDITION.

Professor Hite Will Lead a Party Into the Unknown Interior. Among the various expeditions this year which have for their object northern exploration, the one commanded by Professor Charles E. Hite of the University of Pennsylvania to Labrador is of much interest. Dr. Dawson, in his essay upon the unexplored parts of Canada, called attention to the fact that the greatest area of America still almost unknown lies within the boundaries of Labrador. It is the intention of Professor Hite to take a party of 10 men to the interior of this country for the purpose of exploration and scientific research. The party will be taken north in the steamer Newfoundland by Dr. F. A. Cook of Brooklyn, who will soon be on feet long and 38 feet high at its greatest | his way to the arctic regions. The ex-will take them to Goose bay, at the mouth of the Hamilton or Grand river. Here the party will divide. Four men, including Professor Hite, will advance up the river, carrying their boats and provisions around the numerous and dangerous rapids. The remainder of the party will remain at headquarters on Goose bay and explore the region in that neighborhood, paying special attention to collecting the flora and fauna of the country.

Excursions will be made in the Mealy mountains for geological purposes. Mr. Low of the Canadian geological survey has found indications of vast deposits of the richest iron ore, and it is not at all improbable that more valuable mineral will be found on more extended research. Professor Hite and his assistants, after reaching the grand falls of the Grand river, which were found by Mr. Bryant to be 316 feet high, will determine their latitude and longitude and will then push on to the interior tablelands, determine their nature, elevation, geological and other features. After this short reconnoissance the party will return to the Ninnipi river and expore that to Lake Aswanipi and from there to the gulf of St. Lawrence. Should there be no southern outlet to this lake the party will join the collecting division at Goose bay, where they will be picked up by Dr. Cook on his return from Greenland. Great care is being exercised in selecting material, such as camping utensils, provisons and boats, for the journey. A large number of the articles used by the expedition will be of aluminium. Professor Hite, though a young man, has made a reputation as a naturalist and collector, having a wide range of travel. He served as naturalist on the Peary relief expedition in 1892. -New York Sun.

The Biggest Fire Engine. Hartford is now rejoicing in the possession of the largest fire engine in the world. It moves along the street by steam, is steered by a man manipulating a wheel on the box and can throw 1,800 gallons of water a minute a distance of 850 feet. When lying idle at the station, the boiler is kept continually fed with steam from a heater, and immediately the alarm is sounded the pipes are disconnected-leaving sufficient steam to run her a quarter of a mile—an arm swings round, striking a match and lighting the fire, with the result that steam enough can be generated in two minutes to move the engine along at a speed of 30 miles an hour.—Hartford

Paris to Become a Scaport. The project of "converting Paris into a seaport," to borrow the expression current here, or, in other words, of enabling ships to come up from Havre and Rouen to this metropolis through the utilization of the Seine and the construction of a canal at various points where that river widens considerably, has made great progress of late. The question is now being examined by a special committee, and it is thought that the bill may be voted by parliament at no distant date, thus admitting of the completion of the work in time for the opening of the great exhibition of the year 1900. One of the principal advocates of the enterprise says that the engineers who look after the navigation of the Seine are of opinion that no insurmountable difficulty will be encountered. If the plan one day becomes an accomplished fact, vessels up to 4,000 tons burden will be able to make their way to Paris from the sea.-London the Society of Friends. The yearly meeting of the Society of Friends has adjourned after having adopted several changes in discipline that will be of very general interest The rule concerning marriage, that for time out of mind has been regarded with such rigor in the society, has been changed in the direction of liberality. It is now altogether feasible for a mem ber to marry one who is outside the society without losing standing or, in any event, membership in the society. Formerly it was impossible for a member to marry any one not a member of the society without the consent of the meeting, provided the person was a member of any other body. Now, in all cases, if the meeting consent, it can be done in good order. Even if a member marry contrary to the order of the meeting and desire to retain membership, the meeting is now, by the changes in the discipline, permitted to retain him. The women's meeting, it may also be observed, is given equal voice with the The new discipline makes a number of other changes. Among the most interesting is one recommending that Friends abstain from the use, cultivation, manufacture and sale of tobacco. A recommendation against the use and sale of liquors has long been in force and remains unchanged, except that it has been extended so as to embrace 'furnishing any material whereby tho testimony against intoxicants is vio

The testimonies in relation to "plainness" of speech, apparel and behavior remain unchanged. The article in relation to slavery is stricken out, and many obsolete expressions are modernized. The queries have been recast and now embrace 14, the answering of which embraces a statement of the condition of the society on almost all essential

One of the changes that has been made is the substitution of the term "free ministry of the gospel" in place of the term "hireling," which was distasteful to many. The testimony against a paid ministry is not changed, but only the name by which it is known is rendered more cuphonious.

Peace and arbitration are also advocated.—Philadelphia Press.

Used Opium For Paint. A rancher on Vashon island, Washing ton, has his house painted more expensively than any other house in the state. Last fall he found a box which contained 200 pounds of what he thought was a fine quality of fireproof paint floating in the sound. The paint was packed in small tin cans and bore a foreign label, and as it had cost him nothing he thought he would paint his house with it. The house is now painted inside and out, and in doing so the greater portion of the paint was consumed. The rancher has discovered, much to his sorrow, that instead of fireproof paint he has his house covered with about $3,000 worth of smuggled opium, which was thrown overboard by smugglers.—Portland Ore-

The French Presidency. The widest difference of opinion contimes to exist in Paris regarding the candidacy of President Carnot for reelection. In one sense he is not a candidate, and it would be considered a breach of dignity for him to make a public announcement that he is a candidate. It is now asserted that Casimir-Perier and Dupuy will refuse to allow their names to go before the assembly unless Carnot positively refuses to accept re-election. Don't Like the Sample.

British naval experts, on the whole, the merits of the United States cruiser Chicago. It is admitted that the crew are very smart, but they are too juvenile looking altogether to please the English eye. The vessel looks well, but being old, as warships go, she lacks many improvements which are to be found on the later built ships. One calmly superior critic declares that the Chicago's chief merit consists in roominess and general seaworthiness, and he kindly adds that "as the nucleus of a navy this vessel is quite worthy of respect."-London Letter.

THEY SHOT TO KILL. A Fatal Duel the Result of a Remark In

Fun to a Pretty Woman. A pretty Spanish girl sat by the window of her house at El Monte Monday evening when a woman with a number of Mexicans drove by. One of them, named Juan Orosco, saw the girl. His eyes kindled with admiration, and he called to her in Spanish, "Oh, my pretty one!" As a consequence of the remark a duel to the death was fought between the pretty girl's husband and the young man, and the girl is now a widow. The contest was before witnesses, but sur geons and seconds were omitted. The wagon had got about a mile away from the house when the sounds of horse's hoofs were heard, and soon a man was seen to drive up, beating his horse in a vicious manner to increase his speed. The rider of the animal was Garcia, the young woman's husband, and he was gesticulating wildly to the mer in the wagon. The wagon was brought to a standstill, and Garcia drove up. He berated the men for insulting his wife. The men in the wagon were inclined to regard the matter as a joke, but Garcia was terribly in earnest. He challenged Orosco to get off the wagon and fight him. Orosco, thinking Garcia meant an issue at fisticuffs, jumped from the wagon with alacrity. Ho was much the younger man and more active and lithe, and as he jumped from the wagon he called to his companions to watch how quickly he would "do" his opponent up. Scarcely had Orosco got a few feet away from the wagon when Garcia pulled a revolver and began shooting at him. Orosco was somewhat dazed at first, but he pulled out a revolver and returned the fire. It is said that Garcia fired four shots and Orosco three, but anyway, after Orosco was through shooting, Garcia was heard to give a cry and fell back in the road. One of the bullets from Orosco's weapon had gone through his head. Orosco was shot through the right hand.

When Garcia fell, Orosco expressed his regret, and with his comrades drove back to El Monte. The jury brought in a verdict of killing in self defense .-Los Angeles Cor. San Francisco Exam-

CANADIAN ANNEXATION.

The London "Thunderer" Makes Some Interesting Comments on the Subject. Within a few months the mother country has shown some reviving interest in Canada, which has long been the most neglected of her colonial children. The Times has been publishing a series of letters from a special correspondent. After summing up the Canadian situation The Times says editorially:

"Whether these unique conditions, pregnant, it may be, with the fate of the whole world, point to the absorption of Canada in the United States, or to her acting as the flux provided in the laboratory of nature for the ultimate fusion of the whole Anglo-Saxon race, is a question which only the future, and probably the far distant future, can determine. What is certain is that the influence of Canada on the international relations of Great Britain and the United States has tended, more than any thing else, to the peaceful and not inequitable settlement by arbitration of questions which in less favorable circumstances might have proved intractable to diplomacy. What may be the future of Canada in relation to the United States on the one hand and to the British empire on the other no man as yet can say, but no man who looks the forces which prescribe and determine the course of human affairs can doubt that the problem here propounded is big with the fate of untold generations of mankind."

TRIMMED HER EARS.

A Philadelphia-Society Woman Undergoes an Operation to Improve Her Looks. A young society woman from Philadelphia underwent a painful operation Tuesday at the hands of Dr. L. F. Pitkin, 127 West Forty-second street, to remedy a pair of ears which sho thought were not shapely enough. In reality they were not at all unusual either in size or design, but the young woman thought they stood out too much from She sat in the chair yesterday afternoon, and with the exception of a few spasmodic little screams submitted to the painful operation without flinching. Dr. Pitkin made a long incision in the back part of each car and cut out a V shaped piece of membrane. Then he sewed up the wound and drew the ear back close to the head. When one ear had been fixed up, the young woman looked in the mirror and seemed to think the improvement very slight, but the surgeon assured her that it was greatly improved, and when both had been treated she thought they looked much better. The doctor said he had treated another woman similarly the day before.—New York World.

An English Bishop's Expenses. A man named Winks recently denounced the bishop of Manchester for accepting a princely income while so many better men were starving. The bishop has just made the following answer to him: "You taunt me with the amount of my income. Perhaps it may astonish you to be made acquainted with the following facts: I live as plainly as any workingman, and I believe that I work harder and more hours than nine out of ten workingmen, and yet I am compelled, by the expenses incident to my office, to spend £1,000 a year more than my official income."

A Kentucky Suicide Club. In Bowen, a hamlet in Powell county, Ky., the young men have a suicide club. Two bright youths, one of them engaged to be married, have killed themselves within two months without a shadow of excuse or a word of explanation. Parents are terribly distressed lest their own sons should be the next to draw the red ruble, and in a spirit of reckless bravado follow out the mandate of the awful oath.

WALLED UP TO DIE.

The Fate of Mon Chong, the Chinese Assas sin of Portland, Made Public. Chin Mow Sing, better known as Frank Sing, a Chinese resident of the highbinder district, told Chief of Police Hunt a very singular story, which the official is inclined to believe is true. Several months ago, early one Sunday morning, a Chinese woman was coward-ly murdered by having her throat cut on the sidewalk on Second and Pine streets. The detective force worked incessantly to place its hands upon the assassin, but all to no purpose. Frank Sing belongs to the company of which the murdered Chinese woman was a member, and he says that the murderer was apprehended three weeks ago by his company in San Francisco. Mon Chong, the assassin, had no personal feeling against his victim, but killed her for $300. One of the members of Chong's company, cognizant of the crime, turned Judas and for $500 paid him by the rival company he betrayed the murderer, who had fled to San Francisco. His captors did not hand him over to the regular authorities, but he was tried by a Chinese court, which sentenced him to be immured between airtight brick walls, where he would slowly end his life by suffocation. Sing declares that such sentences have often been executed on this coast by the Chinese.—Portland (Or.) Dispatch. Borrowed a House.

A unique case of borrowing is reported from Sherman Mills. A man whose home was destroyed by fire last winter has borrowed a house from one of his friends, which he will have hauled to his lot and will occupy as a dwelling this summer, returning it in the fall.-Kennebec Journal.

AN EXPENSIVE BOOK.

He. Got Three Copies, and the Agent Felt Lovely Over It. A suburban resident, whose home is on height far above his railway station and approachable by a moderately short, steep path and a long, roundabout road, fell in with a book agent the other day. The suburban was just hastening off in his carriage to the station, but the book agent nailed him with his glittering eye and sold his book for $5. The suburban traveled down to New York with his book, found it extremely dull and left it at his office.

On reaching home he was saluted by his wife with the announcement that she had paid for the book, as he desired. It was the same book, the agent having watched his victim depart and deceived the wife by the story that her husband had bought the book and desired her to pay for it. "If I had him here, I'd kick him," said the suburban, and then his wife exclaimed, "Why, there he is, walking down the path to the station." Then that man hastened out of his slippers and into his shoes, meaning to pursue the agent. But a neighbor drove up at that moment and was asked to drive down to the station and stop the stranger. Off went the neighbor like a shot and halted the man just as he was about to board the train. "That man up there on the bluff wants"— said the obliging neighbor. "Oh, yes; he wants one of my books," said the agent. "Do you mind taking it for him? It's $5." The money was paid, and the neighbor hurried back with the prize. "Here's your book," he cried, holding it aloft, "and I've paid the $5," and the suburban realized with wrath that he had three copies of a dull book that he did not want.—New York

He Hit It Right.

The class in geography was reciting, and there were several visitors. The subject for the day was the state of Pennsylvania. "Now, children," said the teacher, "who can bound Pennsylvania?" Half a dozen hands went up and waved wildly in the air, and a little girl gave the boundaries of the state correctly. "What is the largest city in Pennsylvania?" asked the teacher. "Philadelphia!" shouted the little boy with the jersey suit. "Now," continued the teacher, "who can tell me what building there is in Philadelphia about which no true American should think without a glow of love and patriotism? What building is there which we should all revere, and which is the pride and hope of every loyal son of the United States?" This was a poser, and no one answered for a time. Finally a boy who sat on the front row raised his hand. "Well," said the teacher, "you may tell, Sammy Ein-

Deafness Can't Be Cured by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deaf ness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lin ing of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which

DEAR SIR:—Your note inquiring the breeding of Heart of Oak Jr. just received. In reply will say that you will find the breeding of Heart of Oak, sire of Heart of Oak, Jr., in the stud book. I cannot give you the authentic breeding of the dam, as I have lost track of the party of whom I purchased her, but was told at the time that she was a three-fourths Membrino. She certainly looked it, and had all the characteristics of that strain of blood. As a three-year-old off the road, she trotted Dexter Park in a top wagon carrying a man who weighed 165 pounds, in 2:11. She received an injury, which cansed me to breed her to Heart of Oak; the result was Heart of Oak Jr. who in less than aix weeks' training, in his four-year-old form, trotted a mile in 2:34.

Yours truly,
