The Hot Season All ozone now deserts the air
And leaves miasma microbes there. The heat wilts men to spineless lumps
And leaves them in the doleful dumps. And teaves them in the observe tamps.

It's hot!
—New York World. A MISSING BRIDE.

One day in April, a good many years ago, the inhabitants of Cedar Grove were busy preparing for the wedding of Georgia Blake and Edgar Geland, which was to take place that evening at 9 o'clock. Georgia was an attractive girl and Edgar a tail, awkward boy, whose good qualities made up for good looks. Both were favorites at the Grove, and the people looked upon the match as an ideal one.

The grove had not celebrated a marriage for nearly 12 months, and the fact of "at last" having a wedding aroused much enthusiasm there and in the vicinity and among all, old and young, who looked forward to the event of the evening with keen delight. By 7 o'clock the room was crowded, by S scarcely standing room for the guests. Those from the Grove were there in full force, and the surrounding bayous were represented by a goodly number. All were merry and chatting gayly, though a trifle impatient for the coming of the bride. But when the little cricket clock on the mantlepiece struck 9 silence reigned, and all eyes were turned and riveted on the door through which the couple were to enter, and there they gazed full one hour, for the clock struck 10 before the latch on the door made any sound. Then it raised and the door opened—only to admit the tear stained face of Mrs. Lawrence who, in an excited, sob broken voice, told the guests that Georgia could not be had left home in the afternoon for the purpose of gathering water lilies and other wild flowers and had not yet come back. Her long stay did not create any uneasiness until sunset, when straightway a man was sent to hurry ier home, and he had just returned bring with him only her hat, which he found on the edge of the water. One can hardly imagine anything that wou'd have given the people so sudden a shock as t is. The women wept, the men looked out of the windows and doors, simply at vacuity, for it was black without, then put on their hats was joined in earnestly by every man present.

The search continued all night, many in their excitement going over the same ground, until daylight convinced them that there, at least, were no more traces of her than those which had already been found-her hat and a few tracks in the soft sand near by. And thus was spent the night that and instituted a search at once, which was to have been one of revelry. Bayous were crossed, and the search ers were here, there and everywhere, to places where there was and wasn't the least probability of tracing her. But all in vain. Then one by one, worn out and sad, loath to give up, yet believing further steps were as fruit-less as the first proved, the searchers—men and women-went home, now surer than ever that Georgia had been drowned and had gone out with the tide, down Cedar bayou, over Spanish lake then out to the gulf. There was one, however, who would not, could not give up-yet. That was

Edgar Geland. He went from place to place, looking, praying, hoping that he might vet find some trace of her, for as yet he could not believe she was drowned. Weeks went by, and his long wearying steps, his eager, watchful eyes for anything that would bring bim tidings and his listening ear for any sound by which he might be guided were all in vain. Hope was dead. In his despair he gave his home—the one which was to have been hers also

-to the old couple who had sheltered

Georgia for so many years, and then, having no more interest there, the boy, crushed in heart and spirit, left the Grove determined never to return. Up to that time all had gone well at the Grove, but this sad affair had cast a gloom over the place, the shadow of which was deep and threatened to be a dismal one. But one morning, just as the sun reached up to the tree tops over Spanish lake, a schooner came in sight and cast anchor at the mouth of Cedar bayou-which was too small for so large a craft-and a yawl was seen to glide away from the side of the vessel, coming straight to the Grove. This was something that had never happened before, and the people were curious to know what it meant, so curious, in fact, that many had gone down to the shore and stood there shading their eyes and watching to see who were the three in the yawl. How little they dreamed that the small figure in the bow—so that she might be the first one out—was Georgia Blake. She it was, though, and a few minutes more she whom they had mourned as dead for all these months stood before them safe and well. In a few words she told her story: On the afternoon of her disappear ance, not being able to find as many as she wanted, she set out in an old skiff, one had long since been useless. She knew it was risky, and eager for the flowers she bailed out the boat and started off, paddling and steering, all at the same time, with a little board which she found on the shore. She had been there many a time before, but not in such a skiff. However, she reached the spot where the blies grew thickest. Wild with enthusiasm over their beauty, she gathered so long as one was in sight, and then, with a sigh of content and pieasure. she looked down at the heap of beauties at her feet and found they were floating. And no wonderthere was a foot of water in the skiff, and it was coming in faster and faster. She picked up the little board which had served as a paddle and began to bail. But she could not guide the boat and bail, too, and while she got a trifle ahead of the water the boat got ahead of her. It selected, with the aid of the tide and wind, its own course and drifted farther and farther away from Cedar Grove. She looked around, hoping some boatman might come in sight, but not so. Her face grew red from the exertion, two big salt tears trickled over her lashes, her arms ached, and her heart beat with fright. But she bailed on-all that she could possibly

Broken waves beat against the old reacherous boat, rocked it and dashed the water in as fast as she tossed it out. Then, to her dismay, she saw the skiff was going toward the lake. Once on this body of water and she could do nothing with that craft. The nearer to the lake the rougher the water, and soon the waves beat in at such a race that the skiff filled, careened over to one side, bobbed and rocked and drifted

She had lost all hop s of being saved when in turning around the point at the mouth of the lake she saw a large growth of rushes. If she could run the hoat into them and the wind did not rise, it would stay there lodged until morning at least. She made the attempt, struggled with all her strength, but the skiff was too nearly sunk, too far down in the water, to be made to glide over this thick bed of high, tough rushes. But she reached out and held tightly to the stalks

This was very good—so long as her strength lasted. It held the skiff much more steady and made her feel safer. But what a situation to be in! Soon after sun-set the air became quite chilly. and Georgia up to her waist in water! By dark she had a perfect ague, and then followed a drowsy numbness; she lost her hold, and the old skiff splashed off. But she knew not when or where, nor in fact anything, until she awakened 48 or more hours afterward down in the cabin of a schooner and found the good old captain and his wife in anxious attendance. They told her that while crossing the lake, just before entering the gulf, the light from one of the sailor's lanterns fleshed on a figure over the water, and immediately boat was lowered, and she was brought aboard more dead than alive. Naturally the girl's first thought was of home and Edgar, and she wanted to return at once. But that was out of the question. This schooner was laden with lumber and bound for Galveston, and having been on the gulf now over two days and nights there was no going back. Of course it was very hard on her, but more so on those at home. However she tried to be patient, and as soon as she reached Galveston she telegraphed home, and the captain's that would explain everything and set all minds at ease until she could take the girl home. Various things, though, delayed her homecoming. First the captain was sent to Corpus Christi, and during the trip encountered such rough weather that he lost many days. Then he was sent to various other points, all opposite routes to the one Georgia had to take. In those days there was no railroads from Texas through Louisiana, as there are now, so it was necessary to come trust herself with anyone but the captain and his wife, so she had to abide her time. In the meanwhile she mailed letters regularly to her friends, but what good were thev? The Grove was 40 miles from the telegraph office, and the operator mailed the telegram, and of course it shared the same fate as the letters—staid there until the postmaster, weary of looking at them, bundled them all up and sent them to the dead letter office. The people at the Grove and surrounding country rarely went into town, never got any letters, never looked for any, and so the postofilce was the last place those people would ever dream of hearing from Georgia. They were convinced of her fate and knew nothing to the contrary until that morning when she stood before them. The old couple wept over her as though she was their child, and there was great rejoicing among her friends. But the one Georgia wanted most to see was not there, so her home coming was, after all, a very sad one. But, like many a woman had done since the beginning of time, she bore her burden patiently. As the years went by old Mrs. Lawrence was left a widow. But quiet it, but that was useless. The blood rushed in and out of her face, and her quick, short breathing made plentiful, but so were smiles.

That evening, sitting on the porch at Mrs. Lawrence's, Edgar Geland entertained the whole population with an account of himself from the day he left the Grove to the time he came back. He had straightway taken up life on the sea, beginning humbly and working himself up to a captain. And then, having made a good name, he had built a vessel of his own, and, as his own captain, was taking his vessel on its initial trip when he met the old

The Grove was a happy place that night, happier than it had ever been before, and to this day there is nothing those people take so much delight in as a recital of this story, always dwelling with pride on the marriage, and how the people crowded on the shore and waved at the young captain and his bride until the vessel had gone over Spanish lake and appeared a tiny white dot out on the gulf—Virgina Payne Henrichs in Philadelphia Times.

As I took the first step in the line of recovering it I saw that there were many steps more to be taken, so to give myself the experience of the thing I made up my mind to go through the mill and see to the end of it. The story is this. You can use it. It will be information for many a Brooklyn man and woman who occasionally puts a 5 cent piece instead of a 3 cent ticket into the receiving box of the Brooklyn bridge. Yesterday morning I was coming from New York. I was to go to Hancock street on the elevated road. I gave to the ticket seller a 10 cent piece. I got a ticket and a 5 cent piece from him. I threw the 5 cent piece into the chopping box. Twas gone. He would not let me pass until I threw a ticket in. Then I threw the ticket in. He told me he could not touch what was in the box, but that if I applied to the office, 31 Sands street, Monday morning, I could get my money back. Monday morning I went to 31 Sands street and was told the box of yesterday's receipts had not been opened yet. AMAZED THE COMANCHES. The Braves Dumfounded by the Telephone and Phonograph. Mr. W. H. Quinette, post trader

was in town recently conferring with the government officials relative to matters connected with that post, and among many interesting things he spoke of about the Comanche In- | work of blood vessels about the tubes | in triumph: "Didn't I tell you? Some months ago the war department established telephone service between Fort Sill and | that every particle of the exudation Fort Reno, 75 miles away. For their amusement some of the officers arranged to have Indians who were well acquainted with each other simultaneously brought into the two ends of the telephone line and had conversation between them opened. The effect of course was magical, as to accept the explanation of the strange fact that they were hearing familiar voices of friends many miles

A much more dramatic scene was the Indians' first interview with that wonderful device, the phonograph. An agent was sent out there from the Smithsonian institution at Washington to get a phonographic record of the language and songs of red men for the archives of that institution. A little diplomacy resulted in the agent's getting his cylinders filled before the savage suspicions were aroused. The agent was introduced to the regular night meeting of the Indians for dancing, and it was explained that he had been sent out by the great father at Washington to get acquainted with them and see how they were getting along. The interview was nicely interspersed with conversation, sonorous speeches from the chiefs, tribal songs and dancing. Of course the phonograph, adapted to receiving sounds out of doors, was meantime making its quiet but infallible record, and after awhile they were informed by Mr. Quinette that the agent had something new to show them. One after another they were permitted to place their ears to the instrument from which came the familiar sounds of their own voices in speech and song. Of course it was too much for them, and after expressing their helpless wonder their characteristic caution caused them to refuse to make any further contribution to the mysterious device. But the shrewd Smithsonian agent had already recorded on that simple cylinder what will reproduce for future generations the language of the wild Comanche long after the dusky speakers and their descendants have passed from the arena of sublunary affairs.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch. .

AVOID COUGHING.

In Bronchial Affections the Repeated Paroxysms. Do More Harm Than Good. In all bronchial affections the paroxysms of the cough should be placed as far as possible under the control of the will. The old idea that disagreeable sensations in the throat indicate the presence there of 'something which ought to come up" has been entirely displaced by the more rational view that the continued and prolonged efforts to expel that "something" are often produclive of more mischief than would result from its being allowed to re-

There is attendant upon every disease of the bronchial tubes a greater or less amount of mucus, which exudes from the membranous lining of the tube. Of course there are the accompanying signs of inflammation -heat, pain, swelling and rednessbut it is the mucous exudation which is for the most part responsible for the disagreeable sensations which we instinctively attempt to alleviate by coughing.

Now it is certain that in a great majority of instances where the general health of the patient is not attacked, this exudation undergoes what is called resolution—that is, it is reabsorbed through the fine netof and complete recovery is effected. On the other hand, let us suppose that we do not wait for resolution to take place, but that on the theory should be expelled, as being of a poisonous nature, we strain to exhaustion every muscle of expiration and,

Pigmentary Granulation.

The green color in certain oysters, localized in the gills and palps and lost under certain conditions, is known to be due to an insoluble pigment introduced by a diatom on which the oysters feed. It has been shown lately by M. Pelseneer of Ghent that a process of "phagocytosis" here occurs. The pigmentary granulations are an injurious product in the blood, and they are devoured by the blood corpuscles, which, thus charged, pass into the gills and palps, where the blood is separated from the outer water by a mere thin layer of epithelium. The corpuscles penetrate between the epithelia cells, where some are destroyed and some pass right through and escape. It is thus explained how green oysters placed in water without the diatom referred to lose their color very quickly (in 36 hours at most), the charged corpuscles being rapidly eliminated. - Philadelphia

"That's capital," said his friend, "for so am I. So we shall meet there." Warren looked a little put out. "But I am sorry to say I am not able to go," he said. "Really? I am sorry for that, and so will be the chanceller. I'll tell him how sorry you are." After a little more talk the visitor rose to go. "Don't trouble," said Warren, "to say anything about me to his lordship tonight." "It will be no trouble. Ishall only tell him how sorry you are. Why not?" Some Tests For Proving That Life Ha Gone Out of the Body. It has always been the aim of med ical science to prove with absolute certainty the existence of death, and now that cremation is gaining large numbers of advocates medical researches and experiments in that direction are more important than

The Lancet published recently an account of experiments made by Edward Haward, who in some cases applied not less than 10 different tests. Among these eight denoted that death had actually set in, while two spoke against the supposition that life was extinct.

Among the positive evidences adduced by the tests applied by Haward were total absence of heart throbs, total absence of respiration, uniformity of temperature of the body and the surrounding atmosphere, noncontraction of the muscles and the muscle groups under the clectric current, appearance of brown spots after subcutaneous injection of ammonia, rigidity, etc. The negative results obtained by Haward were the fluid condition of the blood upon opening the artery, but as in abnormal cases the blood does not congeal after death sets in this test cannot be regarded as a reliable one. Of greater importance was the absence of another sign to which many attach much significance, which is that when the fingers of a corpse are held against an intense stream of light, and one looks through the space between two fingers pressed together, a red line will be noticed in life, which is not the case in death. In the case described by Haward however, this line was still visible. although death was incontestable. decomposition having begun. In another case this line was absent while the lady was yet alive. Haward experiments demonstrate that the condition of the blood and the absence of the red line are not always reliable death signs. While congealed blood always denotes the existence

THE STRIKE SITUATION. President Cleveland's firm stand on the strike question is warmly commended by every one, regardless of party or state lines. The second week of the strike closes with evidence on all sides that the President's attitude has done much to restore order, and comparative quiet now reigns. The threatened demonstration of the general strike of Knights of Labor, as predicted by General Workman Sovereign, did not materialize, as the majority of the workmen preferred to be counted on the side of law and order. In California the strikers have resorted to guerrilla warfare and wrecked a train carrying regulars, killing the engineer and three regulars. In the Senate yesterday a resolution was passed without a single dissenting voice commending the President's strike policy and showing many of the Senators to be out spoken in their opinion on the actions of the lawless strikers.

Obituary.

Lewis Levi, oldest son of John and Louisa Redden, suddenly departed this life, in Galien, July 8, 1894. He was born in Bertrand township, March 13,

His death was very unexpected, falling like a thunderbolt from a cloudless sky upon the bereaved family and community. July 4th he ran to reach the train for South Bend, was overheated and fatally injured, and on Sab-172—Geo. Leiuweber, 27, Chicago, Lena bath morning, while the church bells were calling to the earthly santuary he quietly entered the invisible temple. Lewis will be greatly missed in the home, where he was so tenderly loved, and the community, where he was so highly respected. He was a generous friend, a genial companion and a lovely son. Indeed he was a model young man, tender heart, gentlemanly, true and kind to all. Wherever he went he made warm friends whose appreciation and love for him increased as they knew him better. The family and relatives clung to him, his Masonic brethren honored him, and the whole community regarded him with a high degree of confidence and esteem. His funeral serves were held at the family residence on Tuesday and very largely attended. Rev. C. P. Birdsey, a warm friend of the deceased, preached a very appropriate sermon visitors came down from Berrien and Rev. I. Wilson offered prayer. A SPIRITUALISTIC SURPRISE.

An Alleged Remarkable Case of Materialization and Dematerialization. "Talking about wonderful experiences in investigating spirit phenomena," said Dr. Bell of Alleghany, "the most extraordinary I ever saw occurred to me a short time ago. It is something that is unexplanable. I've tried to reason it, but without success. The incident I refer to occurred at a seance given for me by a celebrated medium. Several forms had come out of the cabinet, but there was nothing extraordinary about them. At last the form of a girl about 12 years of age came out. She was dressed in white and had extremely short hair.

"I noticed the hair as soon as she appeared and suggested to her in a kindly manner that it would improve her appearance if it was longer. She looked at me a minute, then turning her back said, 'I'll make it a little extra security and some prigrow longer for you, so that you can | vacy, upsets the routine traffic on see how I look.' There I had the hair in my hand. It was soft, silky and of a beantiful color. I looked at it awhile and then thought it would be a convincing thing to show to my skeptic friends. I took a small piece of paper lying on the table by me and wrapped up the lock carefully. I then put it in my vest pocket.

"The figure was still there and asked me to take hold of her hand. I did this, and the form seemed to dissolve, sinking down into the floor until nothing but the head was left. It remained there looking up at me, smiling, when suddenly it was transformed into the face of an old man, and the hand which I still held was changed from the soft small hand of the girl into the large hard hand of the man. The figure then rose out of the floor until it stood before me fully 6 feet high. I conversed with the old man until he disappeared in the same manner.

"When I came home, I was anxious to tell my friends of my wonderful experience. I still had the little package which I thought contained the hair in my pocket. On taking it out to assure some of my doubting friends I found the paper emptyno hair or sign of hair being there at all. The hair had dematerialized as soon as I had gone from the seance."—Pittsburg Dispatch.

The Law Explained.

Not long since in the course of a trial before a certain justice of the peace, counsel for the defendant requested the court to rule on a certain point, whereupon the counsel for plaintiff, whose name was Charley -, insisted that the court had already passed on that point. After considerable argument and due deliberation on the part of the court, the justice, who was Irish, said: "Chaarley, this court has niver passed on that pint." "Well," said Charley, "will your honor pass on it now?" "I do pass on it now," responded the court with infinite dignity. "Well, how does your honor pass on it?" inquired the perplexed counsel. The court straightened himself up, cleared his throat and relieved himself by delivering the following in his most impressive manner: "Chaarley, ye must abide by the law, whatever it is."—Green Bag.

Collars In the Commons.

An observant parliamentary reporter has been noting the styles of collars affected by the English statesmen in the house of commons. C. R. Spencer wears the highest collar. It is 4 inches deep and looks like a cuff. John Morley wears narrow "turnovers." Joey Chamberlain uses the "white wings" pattern and changes his collars three times a day. "Bloody" Balfour wears "turnovers" which exaggerate the length of his neck. Sir William Harcourt affects the fat men's pattern, size 18, with flaring points. Mr. Gladstone's collars, familiar to every one through cartoons, are bigger and higher than ever and threaten in time to reach don Correspondent.

Fame. Schumann, the famous musician, is the principal character of an amusing story told by a Vienna critic: "The composer once accompanied his wife, who was even then a celebrated pianist, to the palace when she went to play before the king of Holland and was gratified by the monarch's compliments of her performance. The composer was somewhat surprised, however, when the king turned to him and courteously inquired, 'Are you also musical?'

ROYALTY IS EXPENSIVE.

It Mnst Carry a Fat Pocketbook and Spend There have been times when a court was splendid and nearly starving and kings were magnificent who could have understood the position and felt the pride of the master of Ravenswood. But all that has passed away probably forever. The prince of today who is to be magnificent at all, who is to be free in his movements to take trains when he likes, to entertain like any other dignitary, to show good horses and many of them, to keep servants sufficient to secure that guests accustomed to luxury be not neglected, to travel when he pleases, to patronize art, to encourage charity and to live when necessary among equal princes, as becomes the nation he represents, must payaway money at every turn and always be ready with more. Everything costs, from the special train which secures punctuality and freedom from pressure, to the rooms, render exceptionally dear. It is an very well to speak of good management, and of course there is such a thing, and it is worth perhaps 30 per cent of additional income.

But no extent of good management will reduce the cost of any kind of magnificence or do away with the feeling of the innkceper who charged a royal guest a franc apiece for eggs, not because eggs were scarce, but because kings were. We have heard of charges paid by an Indian viceroy at a Paris hotel which would have made Mr. Vanderbilt wince, and there is not an uneducated man in any land who, if a prince disputes his charge, does not become a republican.

Nor within limits is this feeling altogether unreasonable, for the demands of princes, which are usually only demands for freedom, upset the usual routine, just as the queen's train, though her majesty asks only Louis Philippe in his search after a To make sure, won't you cut off a prince, if you live like a prince, as to piece of my hair?' Cathedral of Chartres. Seven hundred years ago the present cathedral of Chartres began to rise above the ground. At the beginning of this century its life seemed all but exhausted. Damaged by lightning in 1825, it suffered severely from fire in 1836. The rebuilding then begun, continued in many careful restorations, has not yet been completed. Friend and foe, the mediævalist and the modern, the builder, the destroyer and the restorer, have dowered it with memories, each one of which helps to make it what it is. Though the history of the cathedral of Chartres has not been as rich in stirring events and exciting episodes as many another French cathedralthose of Paris and Reims, for example-it epitomizes the whole of French history and thought.

The chronology of a church dedicated by St. Louis, in which Henry IV, casting aside his Protestantism, was anointed with the sacred oil sent by heaven to Clovis, and which lasted until human thought had progressed sufficiently to dedicate its ancient walls to the Goddess of Reason, cannot but have a lasting and impressive interest to every student of history and of architecture.-Architectural Record.

A Legend of the Seven Stars. To the naked eye six of the Pleiades or "Seven Stars" seem to be of about the same magnitudes, while the seventh is very dim. The dim star, the legend says, is Merope, one of the seven daughters of Atlas and Pleione, and her paleness is a punishment visited upon her for having married a mortal. The other sisters all married gods. Alcyone and Celæno married Neptune. Electra, Maia and Taygeta were wedded to Jupiter and Sterope to Mars. Poor Merope united herself to Sisyphus, a common mortal, and was doomed to eternal dimness for her rash act. Besides this her husband must throughout all eternity roll a huge stone up a hill. As soon as it gets to the summit it rolls back, and his never ending task is again resumed.—St. Louis Republic.

At a country cricket match a rustic judge had been strictly instructed that no appeal could be allowed from his decisions. A "ball" somehow came off the wicket. "How's that, umpire?" said the batsman. "Out," cried he. "Yeow lie!" was the response. "I kneaw I du," replied the judge (in fact, he had been looking another way at the moment, but the word had been spoken). "I kneaw I du, but I'll ha' yeow out for all that!"-Cornhill Magazine.

A young lady visiting for the first time in the country was alarmed at the approach of a cow. She was too frightened to run, and shaking her parasol at the animal she said in a very stern tone: "Lie down, sir! Lie down!"-Calcutta Times.

Coaches In France

As regards the history of coaches in France. Henry IV was assassinated quite to the tops of his ears.—Lon- in 1610. Soon after his death some engravings were published represent ing him being murdered in his carriage by Ravaillac. It is from these that Roubo has had the sketches of the three carriages on his plate 172 engraved.

They are simply square boxes, measuring by scale 6 feet in length by 31 feet in width, on four wheels of the same diameter, without any springs or straps, and seating six persons in all—namely, two with their backs to the horses, two facing them, and two more, one on each side of the two "boots," at the sides. Each vehicle had a roof resting on light columns and curtains to draw or to let down.

This agrees well with the received accounts of the incident, according to one version of which Henry rode in an open carriage, and according to another that as soon as the fatal blow was delivered by the assassin the king's attendants, who rode with him in the carriage, drew the curtains, and hiding the king from public view assured the enraged people that he was only wounded.-Notes and Queries.

Artificial Eyes.

A prominent manufacturer of artificial eyes has unburdened himself on what he considers a grievance. He says that the public, and therefore opticians, will no longer pay the price for a good and well made article, and that the market is being flooded with "cheap foreign rub-

He alleges that the cheap eyes crack after very few weeks' wear. Pursuing the subject further, we are informed that summer time is the best season for the sale of artificial eyes. People are at that time of the year more particular as to their appearance and discover more readily that the artificial eye is beginning to lose its pristine perfection. Another point is that there are many people walking about whose outward apwhich loyal or hospitable crowding pearance suggests that they are in full possession of both visual organs, but have not even one. "I have fitted," said the manufacturer, "scores of people with two glass eyes." The innocent deception is the more successfully carried out owing to the fact that the blind, from force of habit no doubt, look or appear to look one full in the face when talking.-London News.

Mongols of Koko Nor. The Mongols of Koko Nor are tall and fierce looking, though they proved amiable when friendly. The men shave their heads. Both men and women dress in a gown of sheepskin; girded round the waist, high boots of felt and skin, bound below the knee with a leathern strap or cotton garter, and long white felt coats, which they wear over the sheepskins when it rains. Their summer hat is of white felt, in shape something like the top hat worn by the old Welsh market women. The cap they wear in winter is of white astrakhan, shaped like a sugar loaf, with a red and green cotton brim. The women dress their hair in little plaits, more than a hundred, caught together at the ends in a wide band of colored cloth, which is embroidered with gay silks and gold thread, and studded with coral and turquoise, silver coins and brass buttons, which they get from Lassa. The tents are round, the inner sides of trellis work, the top of wooden ribs, giving an umbrella shape, and the whole covered with white felt, with an aperture for a small door of wood, and a hole in the roof to let out the smoke.—National Review.

A Bran Pie. Alphonso, king of Aragon, attended by several of his courtiers, called at a jeweler's to inspect some of his wares. No sooner had he left the shop than the proprietor came running after him and complained that he had been robbed of a diamond of great value. The king returned to the shop and ordered a large vessel filled with bran to be brought and placed on the counter. He then commanded each of his courtiers to insert his hand closed and then withdraw it open. He was the first to begin, and after all had had their turn he asked the jeweler to empty the vessel on the counter. By this means the diamond was recovered and nobody was disgraced.-Lecture.

Engaged on the Spot. Lady of the House (to servant girl applying for a situation)—You were in the service of my friend, Baroness K. Why were you sent away? Servant-Please, ma'am, for listening at the doors! Lady-Ah! Then I will take you. Only you must promise to tell me all you heard.—Chronique Bourgeoise.

He Took the Long Odds.

A horse owner at Clifton sent a young stableman to Paterson the other day to a doctor, as the youngster had complained of feeling ill. He told the lad to go to the first doctor's house on Church street and have the bill charged up to him. The boy started out, and upon reaching the physician's house read, "Office hours, 1 to 3." He did not go into the place, though it was the physician was a friend of his employer and the place to which he was sent. The lad went next door, saw the doctor and returned to the track with a pint bottle of medicine. He happened to meet his boss in the betting ring and was asked. "Did you see the doctor I told you? "No, sir. I went next door." "Why so?" asked the horse owner. "Well, when I got to the house you spoke of, there was a board out 1 to 3, and looking next door there were better odds at 10 to 1, so I went in there."-Paterson Press.

Empty Titles.

We have heard of captains, majors, colonels, judges, professors, etc., until the whole thing has become a nuisance and almost intolerable. Do let us stop this nonsense and say for a time plain "mister." When men have once filled an office, it is courtesy to continue to address them as such-for instance, Judge Walker, Colonel Bowies, Colonel King, Captain Gantt, Captain Rumbley, etc., but do let us cease to give these titles to men who never held the offices a stranger would think they now or once filled. We do not know a single man in Evergreen who has, by reason of either present or past services, any claim to be addressed as professor, only two as captain and two as colonel.—Evergreen (Ala.)

A Wrinklo Killer. Quite a sensation has recently been made in Boston by the successful anplication of wool fat, or agnine, to the skin for the removal of wrinkles. When applied with rubbing, it passes directly through the skin and acts as a nutrient to the fatty tissues beneath. An ancient dame has succeeded in removing nearly all the crow's feet from around her temples,

Down on the Nail. This is a well known, half slang phrase used for a cash payment. Of its history I cannot speak, but I confess to being startled when I found it, as it seems to mo, in a parliamentary deed of King Robert the Bruce. By indenture dated July 15, 1326 (Scots Acts I, 476), a tenth penny was covenanted for, payable to the king. On his part he agreed not to exact certain prizes and carriages unless he was passing through the realm, after the custom of his predecessor, Alexander III. "for which prize and carriages full payment should be made super unguem." (The words are: Pro quibus prisis et cariagiss plena fiat solucio super unguem.") I am aware of the classical use of the phrase, "In unguim" or "ad unguem," signifying "to a nicety," but it does not seem to apply here. At the same time the corresponding French phrase, "Payer rubis sur Pongle," may make this doubtful. Just below the passage cited occurs another, in which payment is to be made "in manu." Both, in my opinion, refer to ready money, and I do not hesitate to translate "super unguem" "down on the nail." Hitherto I have supposed the nail to be a figure of speech for the counter on which the coin was told. Apparently this is erroneous, as it is clearly the finger nail which is referred to. I would like to hear of other early instances of "down on the nail."-

Railway Rates. If the railway companies serve a useful purpose for themselves by establishing agreements as to freight rates, they serve a more valuable purpose for the interests of the public. It is even more desirable for the public than for the railway to have uniformity and permanence in freight rates. Rate cutting, while it affords cheaper service temporarily and to certain points and within certain territory, is attended by a great deal of demoralization. It is a manifestation of competition that has no elements of general or continuing advantage, and that disturbs established and proper conditions of traffic.

It is better to have fixed conditions, arranged by general consent and with recognition of the rights of all. Such conditions will enable all the railways to operate to the best advantage and to provide the best service according to the merits and requirements of the traffic. There need be no apprehension of unreasonably high rates, for it is always the privilege of individual railway companies to withdraw from the associations when they find it to their interest to take advantage of competitive possibilities.—Railway Times.

A Notable Reunion. General N. M. Curtis of New York and Colonel William Lamb of Norfolk, who held commands in the Federal and Confederate forces, respectively, at both the Fort Fisher battles, visited the ruins of the old fort together recently. General Curtis pointed out the spot inside the works were he fell seriously wounded by a piece of shell that struck him over the left eye and carried away a large piece of the frontal bone and destroyed the eye. Colonel Lamb, who was in command of the fort at both battles, explained the positions held by its defenders and also pointed out the spot where he too, was broken his hip, and also where General Whiting received his death wound. Strange to say, all three were wounded within a few yards of each other.—New York Post. A "Lightning" Bolt. A new device for fastening doors contains some valuable features. It seems to be fitly named "the lightning bolt," and consists of a slotted link hinged on the jamb post, which passes over a staple of special form secured to the door. When the door is closed it is secured by slamming the link in place, which then passes shot down, a minie ball having over the staple and is automatically locked there by a suitable catch This bolt serves a double purpose, as it also replaces a chain, the staple being so arranged that the link can be held in three different positions, love, in every ray that darted from their corresponding to three widths of door opening. Additional security can be gained, if necessary, by padlocking the link in its staple, provision being made for this purpose at two different points.—Exchange.

Horse Reckoning. A Russian doctor has been experimenting to find how far some of our domestic animals can count. The intelligence of the horse, as this is shown in mathematics, seems to surpass that of the cat or the dog. The instances given by him are interesting, but before they are accepted as authentic they should be verified by the observations of naturalists whose skill and care are unquestioned.

He found a horse which was able to count the mileposts along the way. It had been trained by its master to stop for feed whenever they had covered 25 versts.

One day they tried the horse over a road where three false mile posts had been put in between the real ones, and sure enough, the horse, deceived by this trick, stopped for his oats at the end of 22 versts instead of going the usual 25.

The same horse was accustomed to being fed every day at the stroke of noon. The doctor observed that whenever the clock struck the horse would stop and prick up his ears as if counting. If he heard 12 strokes, he would trot off contentedly to be fed, but if there wero fewer than 12 he would resignedly go on working. The experiment was made of striking 12 strokes at the wrong time, whereupon the horse started for his oats, in spite of the fact that he had

The "Southern Cross" Pearl. The most extraordinary pearl in the world is the "Southern Cross." It occupies a unique position in the history of pearls. It consists of a group of nine pearls naturally grown together in so regular a manner as to form an almost perfect Latin cross. Seven of them compose a shaft, which measures 14 inches in length, while the two arms of the cross are formed by one pearl on each side. All the pearls are of fine lustre.

This remarkable pearl was discovered by a man named Clark while pearl fishing in western Australia. He regarded it as a miracle, and entertaining a superstitious dread of it he buried it. In 1874 it was dug up, and since then it has changed hands many times. Its value is $50,000. How the pearls were grouped together in such a manner no one has as yet been able satisfactorily to explain. It has been suggested that a fragment of serrated seaweed may have got into the shell of the oyster, and that the succession of teeth along the margin of the front may have caused the deposition of nacre at regular intervals so as to form a string of pearls in a straight line.-Jeweler's Weekly.

Breeding Blue Foxes.

On the island of St. George, one of the Pribylov group in the Behring sea, the breeding of blue foxes has already become very profitable. The industry has the advantage of involving no expense for care or feedvery rapidly, and when an island of good size once becomes well stocked it is impossible to deplete it, as the law provides that they must not be shot, but trapped, the restriction being imposed mainly to keep them tame. The business is mainly prosecuted in the Commander islands, belonging to Russia. As the pelts of blue foxes and "cross" foxes bring $5 and $10 each at wholesale and are in great demand, the industry bids fair to become one of considerable profit.

It has no doubt often occurred to you while walking on the street that you have met a pedestrian going in the opposite direction and in the attempt to pass you bob from one side to the other, both being imbued with the same idea. The result is a dodging two or three times

The Intelligent Compositor. The demon compositor who delights in devising ingenious "printer's errors" was the subject of some of Max Adler's best fun. In dedicating his book to "the intelligent compositor," he writes: "It was he who put into type an article of mine which contained the remark. 'Filtration is sometimes accomplished with the assistance of albumen, and transformed it into Flirtation is sometimes. accomplished with the resistance of aldermen.' It was he who caused me to misquote the poet's inquiry, so that I propounded to the world the appalling conundrum, 'Where are the dead, the varnished dead?' And it was his glorious tendency to make the sublime convulsively ridiculous that rejected the line in a poem of mine which declared that a 'comet swept o'er the heavens with its trailing skirt,' and substituted the idea that a 'count slept in the haymow in a traveling shirt,"-London Telegraph.

A Misspelt Menu. Nothing could be more absurd than to forbid a man to serve his country because he cannot remember whether "recommend" has two c's and one m or one c and two m's. Another spelling controversy has raged over menus being written in that strange tongue, cooking French. Misspelled menus have, however, sometimes been the cause of good things.

One of Dean Mansfield's wittiest remarks was made apropos of reform cutlets being spelled in the menu "reforme." Some one objected. "Oh, but," said the dean, "I think it is quite right. Doesn't reform always end with an e mute (emcute)?" -National Review.

Cash Value of a Man,

The last census officials or some other infallible authority have had a man's constituent ingredients weighed, appraised and filed away as a permanent standard of the value in the archives of the National museum at Washington-much as the Smithsonian institution or other grave authorities preserve the standard yardstick or the standard quart.

It is somewhat of a relief thus to find the value of an everyday 154pound young man placed by the govment as high as $18,300. We had not deemed they took so exalted a view of human nature at Washington .-Scribner's.

It is estimated that an average of more than 2,000 vessels and 12,000 lives are lost in the various seas and oceans every year, the value of ships and cargoes being roughly averaged at about $100,000,000.
