of that "third rate theater," as Jack had termed it. Of course the first to be released was the latest addition. and that was the hero of the story. It was true that Mr. Mabley had promised to give Thornton a call as soon as times grew better; but, said Jack:
"With the winter coming right fast and coal not in yet, the prospect, you must admit, little wife, is blue." Alice, stubborn creature that she was, would not admit that there was anything unusual about this condition of things and declared that it might have

"And I've been thinking, dear, that there are one or two things we might sell so as to buy coal enough to last us till the Odeon man wants you again." "What things, for instance," asked Jack, "would you sell?" "Well, there's my watch. You know I never even wind it up, and I'm sure I should never miss it." "No," Jack said decidedly. "The watch is out of the question. What would your Uncle William say if he should find out that you had sold the only present he ever gave you?" "It will serve him right for being so mean to us since we have been married," replied Alice, "as never to have called to ask how we were getting on. But," after a pause, "suppose we sell that old bureau, which was the only present my other rich relative gave me for a wedding gift?" Jack Thornton pondered and blew a prodigious cloud before he replied. "If we have to part with anything," he said, "I suppose we can better do without that lumbering article of furniture. This, after some further deliberation. the young couple decided to do, and as Thursday was Thanksgiving they further decided to consummate the sale of the old bureau the very next day. Thereupon Jack laid down Brown

Bees and brought the old violin, his next best friend, to provide, as it had often done, consolation in their troubles He sways them with harmony merry and loud. He fills with his power their hearts to the brim.

Was aught ever heard like his fiddle and him? Next morning bright and early Jack fell to polishing Aunt Jane's bureau. With a soft rag, a little oil and a fair share of "elbow grease" the old walnut sides of the relio fairly shone. Over the breakfast table Jack began speculating how much they were likely to get for the bureau.

"Not less than $12," was hopeful Alice's opinion, "and while you are gone after old Mr. Myers, who is the most honest of the scondhand furniture dealers, Jack, I will take out and dust the drawers so that whoever buys my aunt's present will find it clean inside

"I was thinking, my dear," said Jack as he put on his well worn overcoat, "that perhaps poor Werner, the trombone player, will have no place to go to for his Thanksgiving, and it would be nice if we could manage to entertain

"Just like you, you old darling!" was the little woman's comment, and | the colony, unto which we promise all she added: "Why, of course, we can have poor Werner and will enjoy his company. You might drop round and see him after you have called on Mr. Myers."

With a goodby kiss Jack Thornton went on his way, his errands of business and sociability being important enough to occupy his mind and to cause him to forget the gloom of the immediate future. Alice was not given to repining, and yet as she began to take out the drawers of the old bureau she could not refrain from a few tears, not, you must understand, at parting with that piece of furniture, but at the dire necessity which prompted the act.

As she removed the first drawer her thoughts went back to the old farmhouse not many miles north of Cincinnati, where she had passed her childhood and received what share of Aunt Jane's love was not given to her chicken farm, which occupied the first place in her affections.

AUNT JANE'S BUREAU

Jack Thornton believed he had the best little wife in the world. He had been married about six months, and, as he told his "old bach" friends, the honeymoon had never ceased. And this was the more remarkable because soon after they were married Jack struck a-streak of bad luck which culminated about a week before the Thanksgiving festival of the year 1889. You remember the old proverb, "When poverty comes

As the second drawer was taken out and carefully dusted the little woman thought of the first meeting with Jack. He had come from the city in answer to Uncle William's advertisement for boarders for the summer. It was a case of love at first sight. Her guardians had offered no objection to the match. Indeed Aunt Jane had seemed glad to be relieved of the charge of the orphan

Then, as she pulled out the third drawer, Alice recalled the memorable event of the wedding, when Jack's Odeon friends had come out to Elmville and the orchestra had given a concert in the farmyard, to the delight of the entire neighborhood and the consternation of Aunt Jane's feathered community. The Odeon people all brought presents, and Alice was richer that day than she had ever expected to be. The fourth drawer stuck, and after a few hard pulls at the brass knobs the busy housewife was about to give it up until Jack returned when she suddenly remembered that on that wedding day she had been so vividly recalling her aunt had at the dinner which was given in the barn made the one speech of her life, an effort which, by the way, had much amused and edified the Odeon

"You have received so many fine presents from your husband's friends and a gold watch and chain from your uncle that my gift must be something of use in housekeeping. The walnut bureau that stands in the parlor shall be my gift, and here is the key which opens all the drawers." So saying, she handed the bride a small brass key and resumed her seat, not a little flustered with having made what she afterward declared was the greatest speech of her

Where was this key? Surely in the lower part of the eight day clock. In a minute Alice had recovered the brass key and had unlocked the last drawer, which she pulled out with no little effort, for it was heavy, while the other three had been light. Another curious thing was that it was covered with a thin panel of polished walnut, which bore the inscription in Uncle William's handwriting:

AUNT JANE'S WEDDING GIFT TO HER NHECE ALICE.

This panel was divided in the center and secured by a sliding bolt. As she opened it an astonishing sight met Alice's gaze. The entire drawer was divided into sections like a cashier's drawer, and each compartment was comfortably filled with money. On the top of a neat bundle of $100 bills was a card addressed to Mrs. Jack Thornton.

"Dear Alice," it ran, "in this drawer you will find the sum of $2,853.43, which is one-half the proceeds of the chicken farm for the last five years. As you earned this by your work in taking care of the chickens during the years since you left school, you may feel that this is justly yours. Take good care of it and of your Aunt Jane's old bureau.' "There's the bureau, Mr. Myers,"

Jack said as he entered the room on Elm street, which the young folks had made their home for several months. 'What is the best you can do for it?" The furniture dealer looked the relic carefully over and slowly drew out a canvas bag and counted out $6. "Six dollars is the best I can do for that old article, Mr. Thornton, and it is a good price too. "It isn't enough, Mr. Myers," Alice said. "I will not sell my aunt's wedding gift for less than $50." 'Good morning, ma'am," the dealer said, with a smile. "I see you don't want to sell the bureau. When he had gone, Jack turned with an inquiring look to his wife: "Yon funny little woman, what is the meaning of this?" For an answer she gave him a volley of kisses, which she fired off with the rapidity of a saluting battery with electrio attachment. Then, first carefully locking the door, she unlocked the drawer and showed Jack her treasure

What looked suspiciously like tears twinkled in his eyes as he clasped "the best wife in the world" in a loving embrace, and then as a relief to his overcharged feelings he filled Brown Bess to the brim and smoked placidly for an hour, thinking much, but saying little.

What a Thanksgiving that was! Werner came and was astonished at the bountiful spread. Jack's violin never discoursed sweeter music, and as he played he drew glad smiles and tears from his little wife as she thought of the happiness that had come to them with Aunt Jane's old bureau. - Chicago Tribune.

THE PILGRIMS' CONTRACT.

Pledged Themselves to Be Governed by the Majority-Spirit of Independence. At Malabarre bay, as some called the Provincetown waters, the Pilgrims formed a compact. It was written on the lid of Elder Brewster's chest. Elder Brewster's looking glass may still be seen in the old Brewster house near Plymouth, into which all of the Pilgrims must have looked, including perhaps Robinson of Leyden, but we do not know where the chest, which should be immortal, may be found. The compact read as follows:

"In the name of God, amen. We whose names are underwritten, the loyal subjects of our dread sovereign lord, King James, by the grace of God, of Great Britain, France and Ireland king, defender of the faith, etc., having undertaken for the glory of God, and advancement of the Christian faith. and honor of our king and country, a voyage to plant the first colony in the northern parts of Virginia, do by these presents, solemnly and mutually, in the presence of God and one of another, covenant and combine ourselves together into a civil body politic, for our better ordering and preservation and furtherance of the ends aforesaid, and by virtue hereof to enact, constitute and frame such just and equal laws, ordinances, acts, constitutions and offices from time to time as shall be thought most meet and convenient for the general good of due submission and obedience.

'In witness whereof we have hereur der subscribed our names, at Cape Cod the 11th of November (O. S.), in the vear of the reign of our sovereign lord, King James of England, France and Ireland, the eighteenth, and of Scotland, the fifty-fourth, Anno Domini, 1620. "

Read this carefully. It ought to be read in all public assemblies on forefathers' day. In it is the principle and spirit of the old Magna Charta of Runymede and the future Declaration of Independence — without Jefferson's splendid rhetoric—the constitution of the United States and the emancipation proclamation. It was signed by all the Pilgrims, and in it they pledged them-selves to be governed by the will of the majority in constitutions and laws made by the majority, and they made their ruler the will of the whole in seeking the independence to follow the will caine."—Washington Post. of God. - Hezekiah - Butterworth in

Had the old Greek sculptors had a knowledge of this plant I am confident they would have made use of it in their treatment of capitals and friezes, for it lends itself as readily to fine effects in sculpture as does the acanthus, which their chisels have immortalized.-Ladies' Home Journal.

Old Fashioned Thanksgiving Dinner. Thanskgiving is a peculiarly American holiday in spite of its slight resemblance to the English rustic sports of harvest home, and in preparing a menu for the dinner let us turn our back on the cookery of France and be boldly and wholly patriotic, eating native dishes and wearing in our buttonholes the stars and stripes in miniature. Food For the Pilgrims' Feast. We moderns, with our luxurious taste, would not have much gratitude for the short commons they called "good cheer," but even we might have approved of the wild turkeys, which tradition tells us sometimes weighed 60 pounds. There were also wild geese in their season, and as one writer assures us "over 200 varieties of fish, including shellfish." Love for the latter seems almost a gift of heredity with New Englanders. The relish for oysters is undying, and as for clams the rule still prevails at the annual clambakes on the seashore that a feaster must eat till the pile of emptied shells in front of him screens him entirely from view.-Ex-

Hints For the Housewife In Preparing the Holiday Feast. The housewife whose prayer was that some new sorts of fish and meat might be created to tempt the appetites of her family probably uttered that entreaty in the spring. At this season of the year, when the poulterer's stall is heavily laden with feathered and furry objects, hanging limply by their feet, there is no lack of variety of foods. Rabbits and squirrels are in the market, and, although they are not used here so much as farther south, they make delicious dishes. Pheasants—not real ones, but what are so called, though they are actually "ruffed grouse"-quail, partridge, wild duck, woodcock, reedbirds and the like are all here to grace not only the sportsman's table, but that of the thrifty marketer. Rabbits are susceptible to all sorts of cooking, as the Virginians know. Roasted, stewed with onions, fricasseed, larded, fried, made into pie and best of all barbecued, they are delicious. Squirrels are stewed, broiled and made into appetizing ragouts. Birds are roasted, broiled or made into pies. As soon as birds are brought home they should be drawn. Then they should be rinsed with soda and water and afterward with clean cold water. When they have been wiped dry, a coating of fine salt and black pepper should be added. Small birds may be kept in a refrigerator. Larger ones should be hung in a cool, dark place with a cloth thrown over them. If they are to be kept for any length of time, a lump of charcoal should be kept in the cavity of each fowl to prevent decomposition .-

Pomp Shorter Punished For Disturbing the Thanksgiving Service. Among the papers of the late ex-State Senator Guy C. Stoddard of the town of Ledyard was found a few days ago an old newspaper clipping containing a quaint account of an old colonial Thanksgiving service and dinner. It was written in the year 1714 by the Rev. Lawrence Conant of the old South parish, in Danvers, Mass., and runs

"Ye governor was in ye house and her majesty's commissioners of ye customs, and they sat together in a high seat of ye pulpit stairs. Ye governor appears very devout and attentive, although he favors Episcopacy and tolerates ye Quakers and Baptists. "He was dressed in a black velvet breeches, with gold buckles at ye knees, and white silk stockings. "There was a disturbance in ye galleries, where it was filled with divers negroes, mulattoes and Indians, and a negro called Pomp Shorter, belonging to Mr. Gardner, was called forth and put in ye broad isle, where he was re-proved with great carefulness and so-coat bordered with gold lace, and buff

lemnity. "He was then put in ye deacons' seat between two deacons in view of ye whole congregation, but ye sexton was ordered by Mr. Prescott to take him out because of his levity and strange contortion of countenance (giving grave scandal to ye grave deacons) and put him in ye lobby under ye stairs. Some children and a mulatto woman were reprimanded for laughing at Pomp Shorter."—Hartford Times.

Thanksgiving Dinner In Paris. A few years ago one of the diplomatic corps in Paris complimented some American visitors by giving a Thanksgiving dinner. He made some elaborate researches regarding our national customs as applied to the day, and with the help of his chef offered, among other things, baked beans well thinned with custard and frozen. The crowning glory of the feast was a pumpkin pie. Its crust was shingly puff paste fully an inch thick. The pumpkin was merely a filmy glaze upon the paste, with a taffylike consistency that made it cling to the eater's teeth.

The cher must have imparted the secret of the national pie, at least in part, to others of his craft, for a little låter a well known restauranteur announced on a little placard at his establishment, "Bounkin pie a l'Ameri-

Brutal Thanksgiving Sport Popular In Some Parts of the State.

Ex-Congressman Ed Barrett of Augusta, Ga., is enthusiastic over Thanksgiving day in the great Empire State of the south. He says that to see it in its pristine purity you must go to Hawkinsville. There are great times in Waynesboro, Millen, Alpharetta and mountain towns like Dahlonega, but nothing in comparison with what occurs at Hawkinsville. In that town all the preachers, deacons and church members are greatly exercised. They gather in a body, like the Christian soldiers. described by Bunyan in the siege of Mansoul. If satan himself was in command against them their indignation could not be greater. It is directed against what the Georgian calls a "gander pullin." The ungodly in Hawkinsville chip in and buy the toughest ganders the country affords. They pick and thoroughly grease their necks and heads. They then adjourn to the outskirts of the town. The gander is hung to the limbs of a tree several feet above the ground. Those who participate in the pulling mount their horses some 50 yards away and break for the tree at full speed, making a grab at the gander as they pass beneath him. The wary old bird keeps his eyes skinned. He is as quick as a flash. No heron, frog hunting, handles his head more deftly. Even if the rough rider grasps the gan-der's neck the grease favors the bird. This tournament is kept up until some big handed citizen of Hawkinsville with an ironlike grip is fastened upon the gander and drags it from the tree. Then another gander is strung up, and the tournament is resumed. The Christian soldiers among the spectators view the scene with horror. The whole country is aroused, but the indignation dies away, and its embers are never again fanned into flame until Thanksgiving approaches.—New York Sun.

Made the Dog Thankful.

When the family came home from service on Thanksgiving morning, they heard Ponto howling dismally from the attic. "However could the dog have got up there?" asked grandma as she looked up and saw his piteous black face at the window. "I didn't know the attic door had been opened this morning." "Oh, yes," said little Annie innocently. "I opened it. I put him up there on purpose. '' "You did, child? What for?" "Well, you see," replied Annie, with all the gravity given by nine years of wisdom. "I tried to think of some way to make Thanksgiving day different to him from other days. We might give him turkey, but how would he know sure it wasn't Christmas turkey instead? So I thought I'd shut him up in the dark, where he hates to be, and when he was let out he'd be thankful enough for Thanksgiving day.'' Her plan was absolutely successful. Once down stairs, having again the run of the house, Ponto frisked and yelped as if he had very special cause for thanksgiving and needed no governor's proclamation to teach him the uses of the day. The town could boast at least one dog with a thankful heart.-Selected. Genuine Pumpkin Pies.

These are to be really pumpkin and neither squash nor custard. The pumpkin should be of dark yellow skin and heavy in proportion to its size—the flesh thick and fine grained. Pare and cut in inch oubes and cook it in a little water until soft, being careful that it does not burn. Then press through a colander, put it back in the kettle with some moasses or sugar and spice and let it mull away until it is a rich red amber marmalade. This must be done a day or two before the pies are made, for it is a work of time. One cupful of such pumpkin is ample for a deep pie, and real pumpkin pie is never baked in a shallow plate. A good proportion for a pie is a cup of pumpkin, an egg, 3 to 4 cups of milk, a half cupful of sugar, a, little salt, a half teaspoonful of ginger, a fourth teaspoonful of cinnamon and a little nutmeg. Bake rather slowly.--

Table Ornamentation. Fruits of various kinds are the usual and appropriate table decorations for such occasions, and if not built up too high pyramidal forms are the most leasing. The brilliant scarlet bitterweet berries, arranged in a broad, low dish, with ferns and the vines of trailing ground pine, are another seasonable decoration. The berries and the ground oine many country lads would be glad to furnish "for a consideration." same berries or those of the mountain ash are effective when grouped with long sprays of the glossy, dark green

English ivy. Autumn leaves, pressed ferns and slender grasses and grains, if they have been saved, can be arranged into artistic decorations, and with ears of red, yellow and white corn can be used to trim the mantel and wall spaces of the dining room.—New York Times.

Thanksgiving Memories.

"My mother always had a generous boiled dish'-all kinds of vegetables and a fowl boiled. It always graced the dinner table in an important place in a big pewter platter, though generally there was little of it eaten, but mother said she always wanted something in the house to live on the rest of the week. Before cooking stoves invaded the land all the cooking was done by the fireplace, with a dish below to catch the drip, and the twisting cord caused the browning of all sides of the bird. Even after the stove appeared in th kitchen the tin kitchen did Thanksgiving duty by the open fire in the fore-room."—New England Matron.

BUCHANAN RECORD

D. H. BOWER,

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 29, 1894.

The Hicks Almanac for 1895 has been issued by Rev. Irl R. Hicks, of St.

The RECORD goes to press one day earlier this week, owing to the fact that our regular publication day coming upon the day set apart as Thanksgiving Day. When our readers are assembled about the loaded tables, let us one and all give thanks for the promising outlook and signs of returning prosperity, and all the blessings we enjoy, both as a nation and as indi-

Postmaster-General Bissell's annual report is somewhat discouraging. It shows that the department is far from self-sustaining, there being a deficit of June 30, 1894, notwithstanding, Mr. Bissell says the utmost economy has been pursued in managing all the affairs of the department. He recommends several reforms, among them a law that will distinguish the advertising and "serial" publications, and bogus trade papers for legitimate newspapers and magazines under the second class matter head.

NEWS BRIEF.

Sylvester Wedge of Allegan has been granted a pension.

The Czar Nicholas of Russia and Princess Alix of Hesse Darmistadt were married on Monday afternoon, at half-past one, amid a magnificent display and gorgeous pageant. Immense crowds witnessed the progress of the bridal procession.

Late dispatches confirm the capture of Port Arthur by the Japanese army. After some hard fighting the place was taken on Nov. 22.

The Infanta Eulalie, as representative of the queen regent of Spain, gave a reception to the officers of the cruiser Detroit at the American legation on Saturday.

For the first time in history Alaska is to be represented by law-makers at Washington city. The territorial convention held June 2 unanimously selected Thomas S. Nowell, a prominent mining man, as delegate with instructions to secure, if possible, the same laws for Alaska as are now in force in Oregon, together with high license and local option measures.

Dun's Weekly says:-In nearly all branches of business gradual improvement appears, and the hopeful feeling observed last week. Then it was also noted that the main conditions of busness and trade had not suddenly changed, and this becomes clearer, to the disappointment of some. Low farm products, low wages, and partial employment of labor, still retard distribution, and the limited demand hinders the recovery of industries. Progress toward recovery has not ceased, and many establishments have resumed or added to their producing force, some also advancing wages, but it will take time to lift business out of its depression, and the progress made, if less than the sanguine expected, is at least encouraging. The decision to offer $50,000,000 bonds for replenishment of the Treasury reserve was, by bankers, generally approved, but events are showing that restoration of confidence cannot by itself remove all embarrassment.

Michigan Registration Report.

A copy of the last Vital Statistics Report of Michigan issued by the Department of State has been received at this office from Secretary Gardner, and appears to be of unusual interest. In addition to the usual statistical study of the births, marriages and deaths returned for the state and counties during the year 1892, the report presents valuable data concerning the methods and results of registration under the State system and under local ordinances in the cities of Michigan, and recommends that such results of local registration, when more efficient then the State system, as they are in many cases, be utilized in the State registration reports. The total number of births returned in Michigan for 1893 was 46,221; of marriages, 20,107; and of deaths, 21,-729. These returns, except for marriages, are much below the true numbers owing to imperfections in the supervisors after the close of the registration year, and would require to be increased by at least sixty per cent, the Secretary estimates to give the true figures. Even then the death rate of the state. 15.9 per 1000 popular rate of the state, 15.9 per 1000 population, would be much less than the death-rates of any states in this country where accurate registration pre-

The articles on causes of death in Michigan in 1892 will be of great interest to physicians and sanitarians, and is well illustrated by diagrams and by two colored maps showing the distribution of the recorded mortality from consumption and from diphther-ia and croup in the different countries of the state during the five year period. 1888-92. The rates are based upon the population of each county, and hence show the relative distribution correctly in counties of small size as well as those with dense populations. Such maps comply in the plainest and most readily understood manner with the primary object of the registration law, viz, to show the comparative healthfulness of different parts of the state.
Attention is called to the great tardiness of the present system of registra-1896 and under which the returns do not reach the compiling office until nearly a year after the close of the year of registration. This delay causes other deficiencies, which are fully discussed in the report, and which, it is strongly urged, should be removed by the passare of a registration and more in accordance with modern requirements.

The report as a whole will be found very interesting act valuable for reference, and may be obtained by supervisors and others entitled to it from the County Clerk, and also directly from the office of the Secretary of State

R. G. Dun's Weekly says: There are some changes for the better. The gain is slow, and in some directions not very distinct, but the signs of it are a little more definite than last week. The most important of them is larger employment of labor, answering a better demand on the whole for manufactured products. Much of this is due to the unnatural delay of orders for the winter, which resulted from prolonged uncertainty, but it means actual increase in earnings and purchasing power of the millions, and so gives promise of a large demand in the future. Prices of farm products in the aggregate do not improve, but the prevailing hopefulness is felt in somewhat larger transactions.

Take Your County Paper. No man is too poor to take his counpaper, says an exchange, and it is false economy to get along without it. Hardly a week passes that something does not appear in its columns that will be a financial Lenefit to the subscriber, and by the end of the year he has made or saved from one to twenty times its subscription price. The city papers do not take the place of a county paper, although some people seem to think they do. The city papers are all right in their way. but they don't give you what you are the most interested in-your county news. You cannot learn from them when and where public meetings are to be held, who are dying or who are marrying, who are moving in and who are are decidedly entertaining, and everyone moving out, court proceedings, who will enjoy reading them. Likewise, everyof items which it might be of particular importants for you to know.

Such matter city papers cannot furnsh, and county paper can and does. you can afford but one paper, by all means take one that is published in the county in which you live-M.  $A.\ Bulletin.$

A couple of years ago, more or less, the enterprising but innocent citizens of Stevensville put $2,000 into the contribution-box as a bonus to induce a man to start a gristmill in that little town. St. Joseph heard of it, and, burning with jealousy and selfishness, is scraping together $5,000 worth of over $9,000,0000 for the year ending miller if he will leave St. Stevensville and move to-St. Josephville. And he'll do it. This subsidizing of private enterprises is a stupendous folly. If a gristmill will pay at either place millers will git a grindin' there quick enough.—Coloma Courier.

A Christmas Woman's Magazine. The sparkle of bright music, in a new ballad by Sir Arthur Sulliyan, entitled "Bid Me at Least Good-Bye," adds much to the pages of the Christmas Ladies' Home Journal, in which the full piano score and words are given. Frank Stockton opens one of his cleverest tales with an equally clever title "As One Woman to Another;" Eugene Field is particularly happy in a striking bit of character verse, to which a whole page with illustrations is well given; Francis Hodgson Burnett is delightfully reminiscent in telling of "The Man Who Most Influenced Me," who, she says, was an enemy of hers; John Kendrick Bangs begins his "Paradise Club" in a really funny "take off" on the equal suffrage question; the Rev. S. D. McConnell makes a very real being of the mother of Christ, in his article "A Girl of Galilee." The new serial, "A Minister of the World," takes us to the border of fashionable religious life in New York City; and in addition to all this there are not less than twenty articles on the practical side of a woman's life at Christmas time. This is indeed a creditable number of The Ladies' Home Journal-the best, in fact, which it has ever issued. The

This is, indeed, a rare Christmas number. The first picture is a charming water-color by Maud Humphreys, "Under the Mistietoe," which is unique in conception; the full-page gravure, "Madonna and child," by a modern artist, is a gem; and there are over two hundred illustrations beside these. "Christmas Chimes," an illustrated poem, "Always With Us," an account of Christmas charities in New York, "Boy Choirs," "The Common Sense of Christmas Gifts," "Lullaby, the Frost Queen," a Christmas story for children, "His Christmas Gift," "Holiday Work for Busy Fingers." and "Some Christmas Menus" furnish Christmas cheer and suggestions galore for everybody. Then there are other charming stories, and everyone of the numerous departments is full to over-flowing with good things. Either letter-press or illustrations, independent of the other, is more than worth the price of the magazine, which is only 20 cents. The subscrption price is $2 a year. Pub lished by W. Jennings Demorest, 15 East 14th St., New York.

Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder

The highest award was given on every claim, comprising superiority in leavening power, keeping properties, purity and excellence. This verdict has been given by the best jury over assembled for such a purpose, backed by the recommendation of the Chief Chemist of the United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. This verdict conclusively settles the question and proves that Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder is superior in every way to any other brand.

More.—The Chief Chemist rejected the Alum baking powders, stating to the World's Fair jury that he considered them unwholesome.

LITERARY NOTE.

Romance never looked so inviting as now. With the December number a change has been made in its front cover, which renders the table of contents more attractive than ever, and the reality bears out the announcement, for every story in it is among the best of its kind. They are largely devoted to Christmas, and are full of the atmosphere of the season, yet utterly unlike in scheme and treatment. Among the authors represented are Octave Thanct, Francois Coppee and Julia Schayer. Besides the Christmas tales, there are a story of adventure in China by Henry Willard French, a charming social study by Hugues Le Roux, a powerful Russian sketch by Ivan Tourgueneff, and a ludicrous Irish ghost story by Urania Locke Bailey. Since its reduction in price Romance gives each month "ten stories for a dime"; and many more than a hundred a year for $1.00. A sample copy of a recent issue may be obtained by sending three two-cent stamps to Romance Publishing Company, Clinton Hall, Astor Place, New York.

More About Swearinger.

A letter received here by Under Sheriff Palmer in reference to Swearinger's career while in North Dakota, gives the true version of the brutal murder with which he is charged. The letter reads as follows:

FARGO, N. D., Nov. 24, 1894.

W. A. PALMER, ESQ, BUCHANAN, MICH. Dear Sir:-Yours in regard to one George Swearinger is at hand. I have had a talk with our County attorney, also the Judge, and they think we had best not try to get him back here for the reason that there is some doubt about conviction, as the evidence is wholly circumstantial, and if convicted he could only get a life sentence and you know that only means a few vears' imprisonment anyhow, as they are always being pardoned. The name of the man he killed here was David Moxon, an old man who worked with Swearinger on a farm in Steele county, this State. The man they worked for paid them off and they came to Fargo. Swearinger hired a rig and took Moxon out to look for work. They went out a few miles along the river where they tied the horse and went down to the river bank to eat a lunch. While there Swearinger pulled a bottle of cold tea out of his pocket and Moxon took a drink, which is the last he remembered. The next seen of Moxon was he staggered up to the road and started for town, and was met and holes found in his head. We found where he was taken and found a bloody hammer which made the holes, and found that he was robbed. The old man died next day. Of course he never knew who hit him and the evidence is so disconnected, and the fact that the old man did not know he would die when he made these state-ments makes it hard to get the evidence before the jury to convict. It was a cold-blooded brutal murder, and if ever a man deserved to hang that man is Geo. Swearinger. Yours truly,

O. S. BARNES, Sheriff.

CAUFFMAN-HOUSWERTH. A happy event occrrred Wednesday evening, Nov. 21, 1894, at the home of the bride's father, Mr. H. G. Houswerth, three miles south of Buchanan, it being the marriage of his youngest daughter, Minerva, to Mr. Jacob E. Cauffman, son of Michael Cauffman of Bertrand township. In response to invitations about one hundred twentyfive relatives and friends were present to witness the ceremony which made the happy couple one for life. Promptly at 7 o'clock, to the sweet strains of a wedding march from Tannhauser, played upon the piano by Miss Fanny Rough and accompanied by Albert Houswerth on the clarinet, the contracting parties were led to the parlor by Rev. W. H. Wagner of the Evangelical church. After taking their places in the east bay window, the ceremony was impressively performed. The bride was attired in a white silk dress, elegantly trimmed, wearing a corsage bouquet of natural flowers. The groom wore the customary black.

After the usual congratulations were extended by the guests, all present partook of an excellent wedding repast The many friends of the happy couple left numerous presents as tokens of their regard. The bride and groom were born and raised in this vicinity, and have a large circle of friends, who wish them joy, happiness and prosperity through life.

Mr. and Mrs. Cauffman will locate upon the Lake Side farm, in the spring. where they will engage in farming and stock raising.

Obituary.

LEWIS DICK was born in Winchester, Virginia, Jan. 1, 1814, and died, at the residence of his son, John C. Dick, Buchanan, Mich., Nov. 15, 1894. He moved to Laporte, Ind., in 1856, and the following spring to New Butfalo, Mich., where he resided until 1873, when he moved to Buchanan.

Dec. 6, 1838, Mr. Dick was married to Miss Octavia Carter who passed into the invisible life, at Laporte, Feb. 6, 1857. Three sons and four daughters were born to them, all of whom survive and were present at the funeral services of their respected father: William I., Marian, Ind.; Edwin, Mishawaka, Ind.; Mrs. Ida Briggs, Portland, Oregon: John C., Mrs. Mary E. Willard, Mrs. Emma Vinton and Mrs. Anna Butler, Buchanan, Mich. These sons and daughters were all affectionately attached to their father, and during his protracted illness everything wa done by them to make him comfortable and happy. About twenty-one years ago, during the pastorate of Rev. Levi Tarr, Mr. Dick was converted and united with the Methodist chruch, of which he continued a consistent member until called to his heavenly home. In his experience he was not demonstrative, but he lived a quiet and consistent Christian life. He was highly respected by all who knew him, and especially loved in the home circle. To him the promise of God was fulfilled: "With long life will I satisfy him and show him my salvation."

The funeral services were held in the Evangelical church, Nov. 27, conducted by Revs. I. Wilson and Geo I. WILSON.

Good Road Arguments on Every Hand. City and Country Taxpayers. With the advent of the season when rural roads are in poor condition the subject of road reform again receives attention. A few farmers and others who find that good roads are a paying investment in saving time, horseflesh and vehicles as well as permitting the drawing of heavier loads Gillette......5488-2218 are beginning to manifest a disposition to voluntarily make their local roads better. It has been found that there are two classes of objectors to improvement of the roads at county expense in New York. First, the farmers are not fully prepared to meet their legal share of the cost of the work; secondly, city taxpayers assert that when country roads my lead business out of the county and be a detriment to the cities they will pay the larger part of the cost.

The farmers of a locality, if roads were improved, would, it is said, seek the best and nearest market, which may not be a city in their county. But what a city which is a county seat would lose in this way would be made up by increased trade from farmers living outside the county boundary, but near the city in question. Hence there would be no loss to taxpayers of cities. The latter, to their credit, be it said, are less adverse to the improvement of county roads at public expense than many residents of rural localities. This is the more remarkable as the roads that will be improved under the county system are outside the cities and lead past property owned by the objecting rural people. An impression has been made on the latter, however, and perhaps in a few years we shall have a demand on the part of the farmers for betthorizing inmates of Soldiers' Homes ter roads.—New York Mail and Ex-

Highway Improvements. The people of Mecklenburg county, N. C., are fairly enthusiastic over the results of their experiments in improving the roads of the county. Some of the benefits derived from the improvements were briefly stated by one of the speakers at the recent road congress at Charlotte. The social isolation of country life, he said, has been greatly decreased. The farmers keep better horses and better vehicles. 'Four bales of cotton can be carried to market with the team that was formerly required to haul one bale." It cost more to haul firewood over the old mud roads than the wood was worth in the market. "The good roads," he added, "enable the farmers to market a great quantity of fruit and vegetables which formerly went to waste. This has encouraged diversified farming, and the farmers are fully conscious of the advantages of good roads."-Charleston News and Courier.

Keep the Road Surface Smooth. The surface of the road should be smooth, for smoothness means easy hauling. OLD TIMES RECALLED old and Young Shared In the Preparations-Welcoming the Guests-Mirth and Jollity Sat at the Board-The Charm of the Day Is Departing.

The Thanksgivings of the present time may be more refined, more stylish, than those of half a century ago, but no style or elegance can give our young the giant oaks of this cometery, by the people or their parents the exhibaration side of his son and daughter, with or the happiness of the Thanksgivings that I recall of more than 70 years ago. Let me for a little while imagine myself a young girl. Will you go with me, gentle reader, to "Bullard's Hill," in Massachusetts, and enter a large, commodious house, with unlimited room for ten happy children and many guests

The door swings open, and the children rush in from school in boisterous mirth, tossing books and garments on the table.

"Hurrah! No more school this week, for it is Thanksgiving. Now, what shall we do to help you, ma?" "Now, set us all to work to help you,

"Put your books on their shelves and your garments in their proper places first, and then we will find you plenty to do," said the gentle mother. The help that the children could give was plainly pointed out and cheerfully entered upon. The turkeys, chickens and ducks were to be killed and carefully dressed by the elder boys. The raisins, fruit and other material for pies, the cake, biscuit and bread were allotted to the girls under the mother's supervision, and this gave full employment for one day and was accomplished with cheerful, happy hearts in joyful antici-pation of the full consummation of their labors on the happy Thanksgiving day. Why does the return of that day now bring so little of the delightful exhilaration and charms that both old and young experienced in the "long ago?"

The next day's work for the boys was to bring wood and to keep two large brick ovens heated to accomplish all the baking that could be properly attended to before the longed for day dawned for them all.

The work is done, and all are ready. The table, extending the full length of the large dining room, "groans with costly piles of food" and sends out a most appetizing welcome to the guests and family, who now file in from the parlor and take their seats. Then the carving is begun, and all understand that there is to be no haste. They come to partake not only of the abundance with which the table is loaded, but also of the richer enjoyment of loving social intercourse, in which the voices of the youngest, with all their frolic and merriment, can join without rebuke.

The carving finished and the plates well filled, there is of course less conversation, but the demands of appetite do not check the pleasant jests and sportive repartees that are constantly passing from one to the other, making the feast most jubilant.

Now the first course is removed, and as the children volunteer to aid in that work the sport and fun that they bring to the work seems to furnish infinite amusement for the guests. Did you ever notice how much more brilliant jests meal, or at least how little disposed the listeners are to criticise even a poor attempt at fun?

Well, after such a surfeit of turkey, chickens, ducks and the many little relicacies that help to fill the table, what more can be expected or disposed of? But whoever heard of a Thanksgiving dinner without the plum pudding, the rich mince pies and pies of squash, custard and apple, together with fruits of all kinds, the tea and coffee, with the richest cream and cheese that would fill our modern cheesemakers with envy? The candles (no gas or lamps in those days) were lighted long before the happy circle rose from the table and adjourned to the parlor. After a pleasant hour in the parlor, while the dining room was being put in order, all returned to it to crack and eat nuts, with fine apples; to play with the children the games that now we seldom hear of-blind man's buff, hunt the slipper, fox and geese, etc.-or to hear from the grandparents stories connected with the old French and Indian war or the later one of the Revolution. —Mrs. H. W. Beecher in Golden Rule.

Medicines of the Puritans. For medicines the old Puritans had the awfulest messes. Sowbugs and roses and pounded coral and toads caught in March and burned to a char and ambergris were some of the drugs. Of course they were bled and physicked to the last degree. They used to make up parties or classes and go to a retreat, where they would all be inoculated for smallpox-not vaccinated, but inoculated with the real disease. There they 'broke out' together, had the fever together, sweat together, scaled off together, and many a love affair sprang up amid such highly unromantic circumstances.—New York World. Thanksgiving Song. A few late roses linger and smilingly deck the FAMILY POULTRY HOUSE.

A Comfortable and Sightly Shelter For . Thirty Fowls of One Breed. It is seldom worth while for those who rear fowls for family use to keep more than one breed requiring a plain, cheap house and one yard. A comfortable shelter for poultry, apart from other kinds of stock, is desirable upon every farm, for while access to the barnyards and cow sheds in the daytime is worth very much to fowls, especially in winter, still it is a bad plan to allow them to roost anywhere and everywhere they choose, as they are not only exposed to inclement weather and to two footed

CONVENIENT POULTRY HOUSE. and four footed thieves, but a regard for cleanliness and order will demand that they be assigned to quarters of their own. The mechanic or the city dweller or other person not possessed of farm buildings, who desires to keep a few fowls for domestic purposes, also needs a small poultry house. In the construction of such a house economy and convenience should be more considered than ornament, yet the building may as well be sightly as not and well proportioned. The cut here reproduced from Stoddard's Poultry Architecture represents a structure 10 feet by 12 feet upon the ground. The height, measured to the south eaves, is 61/2 feet, to the north eaves 4 feet and to the peak 8 feet, in each case including the stone underpinning, which is a foot high. If there is a cement floor, let it be a little higher than the ground outside, for sake of dryness; if an earthen floor, make it by filling in with mellow loam to the top of the underpinning, and renew the same several times a year. The siding may be made of rough boards, battened, or the boards and battens may be planed and painted. For roofing, shingles are in the long run most satisfactory. There is a door at one end for the use of an attendant, its top appearing in the illustration of it. The windows are hung with cords and weights, so that ample ventilation can be given in summer. Upon the north side is a door for the same purpose. This door as well as the glazed windows, is guarded by wire netting, as it may be sometimes convenient to shut in the fowls when the weather is too hot to close the windows, and by the same arrangement the glass is protected from breakage. The ventilation at the top of the house is regulated by a horizontal door at the bottom of the ventilator, which is opened upward by means of a small pulley and a cord that extends to the end of the building and hangs near the door A, so that it may be pulled without entering the room. By slacking the cord the door in the ventilator closes by its own weight. B B are shutters with which to fasten the windows at night against thieves. They are hooked on the inside, after which the door (A) is locked. The shutters do not fit over the window so tightly that ventilation through the latter is prevented, but an aperture is left at the top and bottom of each. In hot weather the shutters may be left entirely open nights, as then depredations are not apt to be committed, for the flesh of animals killed soon spoils. In cold weather the shutters, when opened in the daytime, as in the cut, break the winds from the north. The fence on the north side of the yard, attached to the house, a portion of which is represented, is boarded at the bottom (C C) for the same purpose. The door for the use of the birds is at D. This building is of the proper size for

Profitable Fowls.

Everybody in the market poultry business has his special choice of breed. It is also a fact that equally successful men by no means select the same breed. Not a great while ago one of the editors of The Rural New Yorker christened the Leghorn as the business hen. A. E. Hunter, editor of Farm Poultry, after testing many breeds, selected the Light Brahmas, Barred Plymouth Rocks and White Wyandottes. He says: "If we could devote our time to poultry farming, pure and simple, we would keep mainly the cross White Wyandotte-Light Brahmas. It would be necessary to have one or two good pens of each of those varieties to raise the birds to breed from, but the great bulk, at least ninetenths of the laying stock and the chickens raised, would be of that cross. Mr. Hunter's cross is especially recommended for table qualities." P. H. Jacobs thinks the business fowls are Black Langshans and the Barred Plymouth

PAINTING THE HAND Artists Rarely Succeed In Getting True t Nature In One Particular.

We say without hesitation that in the art of portraiture no portion of the work is usually so neglected as the hand. With the representation of the face it appears to be considered that the design is practically ended, and the hands. like the remaining part of the picture, are looked upon in the light of being mere matters of detail. Lely, Vandyke, Reynolds and Lawrence, with others we could name, illustrate in some of their finest paintings this inexcusable neglect of an all important portion of the human form, Such masters were in the habit of so generalizing that part of their picture that it bore no reference to the particular face to which it belonged. If we examine the hands of Lely's famous "Court Beauties" at Hampton court palace or those in almost all Vandyke's portraits, we find a conventional treatment that wholly lacks individuality, while the hands in Reynolds' pictures were dealt with with a regard to general effect rather than to any special characteristics.

And yet a portrait can only be con-sidered excellent as a complete representation of the original. We are quite aware of the aversion persons have to numerous and repeated sittings and their apparent willingness to accept anything as a portrayal of their hands, provided only in tthe result those hands are small, pretty and shapely. But there are at least some worthy exceptions among the old masters to this dishonest truckling to the whims of sitters. Examine Holbein's noble present-ments of Henry VIII, of Erasmus, the Moore and Rembrant's ever living pictures of persons old and young, and you will find that those never surpassed painters considered every portion of the human frame was worthy to be studied and most carefully reproduced. We could give many more examples of this, but those two great masters will suffice for our purpose.

In the present time, in this age of artistic haste and faithlessness, our limners appear to be content with anything that will save themselves and their sitters trouble, and that expressively beautiful portion of the body-the hand-is painted with the least possible regard to truth and nature.

Portrait painting is not patchwork so that you can fit in parts of different bodies in order to make up an accurate resemblance of one individual, but it is or should be the elaborate copy of that being in all his or her parts, portions and details.

It is worth consideration that those portraits in our national collection and other galleries, to which we turn with the highest admiration, are works of the painters of olden time, who delight ed in the closest possible imitation of nature with a feeling akin to reverence. It is no doubt a difficulty that sitters are reluctant to give the time necessary for proper and complete portraiture, which involves likeness of the hand as well as the face. But rather than slur over and paint in any made up fashion an all important part of the work we would venture to suggest the use of an agent one is almost unwilling to mention in connection with the art of portraiture, and that is photography. By that mechanical means, at any rate, an accurate map of the hands is secured, and relying upon that as regards form and character the actual flesh coloring could be secured in comparatively short time. We might by this means, at any rate, avoid the absurdity of seeing old hands pictured on young bodies, and in other instances hands that have no characteristics of sex represented as belonging to both sexes indiscriminately .-

London Queen. Paul Potter's "Young Bull." "The Young Bull," considered as a peice of portraiture, is doubtless a splendid work. It is one of the most celebrated things in Holland, and The Hague museum owes to it a large part of the curiosity of which it is the object. Though it may not fill all the requirements of a perfect picture—and in this respect it has been the subject of criticism-it nevertheless satisfies as a complete and conclusive portrayal of a bull and has been rightly termed "The Bull." The animal shows its temperament, length, height, joints, bones, muscles, its hair rough or smooth, tangled or curled, its loose or tight skin, all in perfection. The gesture is true and the head admirably living. Consider its setting upon the canvas. It is placed upon a rising of ground opposed to the wide sky and against a white cloud, becoming by this artifice of paramount importance and filling the eye at a glance, so that the other animals, with the herdsman in his safe retreat (not a bull tamer by any means), and the pastures beneath him are but accessories-the bull is the lord of the fields and pastures. In point of execution it is marvelous ly minute. The single hairs upon the brute's head are seemingly palpable to the touch, and flies are seen buzzing about. This closeness of observation extends to the bark and foliage of the tree and the grass and pebbles on the ground, where also a toad is seen; yet, although the artist appears to ignore the art of sacrifices and the fact that things must sometimes be suggested and but half expressed, he does not lose sight of breadth.—Century.

Every one in health (except one to watch the turkey) went to meeting, and after that the invited friends came to dinner. Dinner lasted one hour. Difficulties of Road Improvement. A serious disadvantage to the improvement of our highways arises from he fact that almost half the area of this country-that part of it having ninetenths of its crop giving value-lacks adequate materials for highway construction. Our railway authorities should be brought to realize the importance to the development of their ways in favoring the transportation over their lines of roadmaking materials. The greater number of roads in this country are in effect branches of one or more railways. So far only a few railways have been disposed to foster the betterment of highways by fixing the charge for materials for their construction at actual carriage cost.—Professor N. S. Shaler.

Personal History of the Second Empire, a historical work of unsurpassed importance which will throw a flood of new light upon the checkered career of Napoleon III, and the influences which led to the collapse of his Empire in the gigantic struggle with united Germany, under Wilhelm I. and his Iron Chancellor. It is as fascinating as a romance, being richly anecdotal and full of information drawn from sources hitherto inaccessible, presented in the graphic and vivacious style which "The Englishman in Paris," by the same author, has made familiar to thousands of readers.
