PART ONE.

Being a reprint from the reminiscences of John H. Watson, M. D., late of the army medical department.] [CONTINUED.]

Audley court was not an attractive locality. The narrow passage, led us into a quadrangle paved with flags and lined by sordid dwellings. We picked our way among groups of dirty children and through lines of discolored linen until we came to 46, the door of which was decorated with a small slip of brass, SCHOOL SHOES on which the name Rance was engraved. On inquiry we found that the constable was in bed, and we were shown into a little front parlor to await his coming. He appeared presently, looking a little irritable at being disturbed in his slumbers. "I made my report at the office." he said. Holmes took a half sovereign from his pocket and played with it pensively. 'We thought that we should like to hear it all from your own lips," he said. "I shall be most happy to tell you anything I can," the constable answered, with his eyes upon the little golden

"Just let us hear it all in your way, as it occurred " Rance sat down on the horsehair sofa and knitted his brows, as though determined not to omit anything in his narrative. "I'll tell it ye from the beginnin," he said. "My time is from 10 at night to 6 in the mornin. At 11 there was a fight at the White Hart; but, bar that, all was quiet enough on the beat. At 1 o'clock it began to rain, and I met Harry Murcher, him who has the Holland grove heat, and we stood together at the corner of Henrietta street a-talkin. Presently, maybe about 2 or a little after, I thought I would take a look around and see that all was right down the Brixton road. It was precious dirty and lonely. Not a soul did I meet all the way down, though a cab or two went past me. I was a-strollin down, thinkin between ourselves how uncommon handy a four of hot gin would be, when suddenly a glint of a light caught my eye in that same house. Now I knew that them two houses in Lauriston gardens was empty on account of him that owns them, who won't have the drain seed to, though the very last tenant that lived in one of them died o' typhoid fever. I pected as somethin was wrong. When I got to the door".— 'You stopped and then walked back to the garden gate," my companion interrupted. "What did you do that for?" Rance gave a violent jump and stared at Sherlock Holmes, with the utmost amazement upon his features.

was knocked all in a heap, therefore, at seein a light in the window, and I sus-

"Why, that's true, sir," he said, "though how you come to know it heaven only knows! Ye see, when I got to the door, it was so still and so lonesome that I thought I'd be none the worse for some one with me. I ain't afeard of anythin on this side o' the grave, but I thought that maybe it was him that died o' the typhoid inspectin the drains what killed him. The thought gave me a kind o' turn, and I walked back to the gate to see if I could see Murcher's lantern, but there wasn't no sign of him nor of any one else." "There was no one in the street?" "Not a livin soul, sir, nor so much as a dog. Then I pulled myself together and went back and pushed the door open. All was quiet inside, so I went into the room where the light was a-burnin. There was a candle flickerin on the mantelpiece, a red wax one, and by its light I saw''— "Yes, I know all that you saw. You walked around the room several times, and you knelt down by the body, and then you walked through and tried the kitchen door, and then''-

John Rance sprang to his feet with a frightened face and suspicion in his eyes. "Where was you hid to see all that?" he cried. "It seems to me that you knows a deal more than you should." Holmes laughed and threw his card across the table to the constable. "Don't get arresting me for the murder," he said. "I am one of the hounds and not the wolf. Mr. Gregson or Mr. Lestrade will answer for that. Go on, though.

What did you do next?" Rance resumed his seat, without, however, losing his mystified expression. "I went back to the gate and sounded my whistle. That brought Murcher and two more to the spot." "Was the street empty then?" "Well, it was, as far as anybody that could be of any good goes."

"What do you mean?" The constable's features broadened into a grin. "I've seen many a drunk chap in my time," he said, "but never any one so cryin drunk as that cove. He was at the gate when I came out a-leanin up agin the railin's and a-singin at the pitch of his lungs about Columbine's new fangled banner or some such stuff. He couldn't stand, far less help.'

"What sort of a man was he?" asked Sherlock Holmes. John Rance appeared to be somewhat irritated at this digression. "He was an uncommon drunk sort o' man," he "He'd ha' found hisself in the station if we hadn't been so took up."

"His face, his dress. Didn't you notice them?" Holmes broke in impatient "I should think I did notice them, seeing that I had to prop him up, me and Murcher between us. He was a long chap, with a red face, the lower part muffled round"— "That will do!" cried Holmes. What became of him?" "We'd enough to do without lookin after him," the policeman said in an aggrieved voice. "I'll wager he found his way home all right." How was he dressed?" "A brown overcoat."

"Had he a whip in his hand?" "A whip-no."

"He must have left it behind," mutgred my companion. "You didn't happen to see or hear a cab after that?" "There's a half sovereign for you," my companion said, standing up and taking his hat. "I am afraid, Rance, that you will never rise in the force. That head of yours should be for use as well as ornament. You might have gained your sergeant's stripes last night. The man whom you held in your hands is the man who holds the clew of this mystery and whom we are seeking. There is no use of arguing about it now. I tell you that it is so. Come along, doctor. We started off for the cab together, leaving our informant incredulous, but obviously uncomfortable. "The blundering fool!" Holmes said bitterly as we drove back to our lodgings. "Just to think of his having such an incomparable bit of good luck and not taking advantage of it."

true that the description of this man tallies with your idea of the second party in this mystery. But why should he come back to the house after leaving it? That is not the way of criminals."

"The ring, man, the ring. That was what he came back for. If we have no other way of catching him, we can always bait our line with the ring. I shall have him, doctor. I'll lay you two to one that I have him. I must thank you for it all. I might not have gone but for you and so have missed the finest study I ever came across. A study in scarlet, ch? Why shouldn't we use a little art jargon? There's the scarlet. thread of murder running through the colorless skein of life, and our duty is to unravel it and isolato it and expose overy inch of it. And now for lunch and then for Norman Noruda. Her attack and her bowing are splendid. What's that little thing of Chopin's she plays so magnificently, Tra-la-la liralira-lay. '

Leaning back in the cab, this amateur bloodhound caroled away like a lark, while I meditated upon the many sidedness of the human mind.

CHAPTER V. Our morning's exertions had been too much for my weak health, and I was tired out in the afternoon. After Holmes' departure for the concert, I lay down upon the sofa and endeavored to get a couple of hour's sleep. It was a useless attempt. My mind had been too much excited by all that had occurred, and the strangest fancies and surmises crowded into it. Every time that I closed my eyes I saw before me the distorted, balloonlike countenance of the murdered man. So sinister was the expression which that face had produced upon me that I found it difficult to feel anything but gratitude for him who had removed its owner from the world. If ever human features bespoke vice of the most malignant type, they were certainly those of Enoch J. Drebber of Cleveland. Still I recognized that justice must be done, and that the depravity of the victim was no condonement in the eyes of the law.

The more I thought of it, the more extraordinary did my companion's hypothesis that the man had been poisoned appear. I remembered how he had sniffed his lips and had no doubt that he had detected something which had given rise to the idea. Then, again, if not poison, what had caused the man's death, since there was neither wound nor marks of strangulation. But, on the other hand, whose blood was that which lay so thickly upon the floor? There was no signs of a struggle, nor had the victim any weapon with which he might have wounded an antagonist. As long as all these questions were unsolved I felt that sleep would be no easy matter either for Holmes or myself. His confident manner convinced me that he had already formed a theory which explained all the facts, though what it was I could not for an instant conjecture.

He was very late in returning, so late that I knew that the concert could not have detained him all the time. Dinner was on the table before he appeared. "It was magnificent," he said as he took his seat. "Do you remember what Darwin says about music? He claims that the power of producing and appreciating it existed among the human race long before the power of speech was arrived at. Perhaps that is why we are so subtly influenced by it. There are vague memories in our souls of those misty centuries when the world was in its childhood.' "That's rather a broad idea," I remarked. "One's ideas must be as broad as nature if they are to interpret nature," he answered. "What's the matter? You're not looking quite yourself. This Brixton road affair has upset you."

"To tell the truth, it has," I said. "I ought to be more case hardened after my Afghan experiences. I saw my own comrades hacked to pieces at Maiwand without losing my nerve." "I can understand. There is a mystery about this which stimulates the imagination. Where there is no imagination there is no horror. Have you seen the ovening paper?" "No." "It gives a fairly good account of the affair. It does not mention the fact that when the man was raised up a woman's wedding ring fell upon the floor. It's just as well it does not." "Why?" "Look at this advertisement," he answered. "I had one sent to every paper this morning immediately after the af-He threw the paper across to me, and

I glanced at the place indicated. It was the first announcement in the "Found" column. "In Brixton road this morning," it ran, "a plain gold wedding ring, found in the roadway between the White Hart tayern and Holland grove. Apply Dr. Watson, 221b Baker street, between 8 and 9 this evening."

"Excuse my using your name," he said. "If I used my own, some one of these du; derheads would recognize it and want to meddle in the affair." "That is all right," I answered. But, supposing any one applies, I have no ring. ' "Oh, yes, you have," said he, handing me one. "This will do very well. It is almost a facșimile."

"And who do you expect will answer this advertisement?" . "Why, the man in the brown coat, our florid friend with the square toes. If he does not come himself, he will send an accomplice."

"Would he not consider it as too dangerous?' "Not at all. If my view of the case is correct, and I have every reason to believe that it is, this man would rather risk anything than lose the ring. According to my notion, he dropped it while stooping over Drebber's body and did not miss it at the time. After leaving the house he discovered his loss and hurried back, but found the police already in possession, owing to his own folly in leaving the candle burning. He had to pretend to be drunk in order to allay the suspicions which might have been aroused by his appearance at the gate. Now, put yourself in that man's place. On thinking the matter over ·it must have occurred to him that it was possible that he had lost the ring in the road after leaving the house. What would be do then? He would eagerly look out for the evening papers in the, hope of seeing it among the articles found. His eye, of course, would light upon this. He would be overjoyed. Why should he fear a trap? There would be no reason in his eyes why the find-

"And then?" I asked. "Oh, you can leave me to deal with him then. Have you any arms?" "I have my old service revolver and a few cartridges." "You had better clean it and load it. He will be a desperate man, and though

ing of the ring should be connected with the murder. He would come. He will come. You shall see him within an hour.

"I am rather in the dark still. It is | I shall take him unawares it is as well | to be ready for anything." I went to my bedroom and followed his advice. When I returned with the pistol the table had been cleared, and Holmes was engaged in his favorite occupation of scraping upon his violin.

"The plot thickens," he said as I entered. "I have just had an answer to my American telegram. My view of the case is the correct one." "And that is?" I asked eagerly. "My fiddle would be the better for new strings," he remarked. "Put your pistol in your pocket. When the fellow comes, speak to him in an ordinary way. Leave the rest to me. Don't frighten him by looking at him too "It is & o'clock now," I said, glancing at my watch. "Yes. He will probably be here in a few minutes. Open the door slightly. That will do. Now put the key on the inside. Thank you. This is a queer old book I picked up at a stall yesterday. 'De Jure Inter Gentes,' published in Latin at Liege in the Lowlands in 1642. Charles' head was still firm on his shoulders when this little brown backed volume was struck off." "Who is the printer?" "Philippe de Croy, whoever he may have been. On the fly leaf in very faded ink is written, 'Ex libris Guliolmi Whyte.' I wonder who William Whyte was. Some pragmatical seventeenth century lawyer, I suppose. His writing has a legal twist about it. Here comes our man, I think." As he spoke there was a sharp ring at the bell. Sherlock Holmes rose softly and moved his chair in the direction of the door. We heard the servant pass along the hall and the sharp click of the latch as she opened it.

"Does Dr. Watson live here?" asked a clear but rather sharp voice. We could not hear the servant's reply, but the door closed, and some one began to ascend the stairs. The footfall was an uncertain and shuffling one. A look of surprise passed over the face of my companion as he listened to it. It came slowly along the passage, and there was a feeble tap at the door. "Come in!" I cried. At my summons, instead of the man of violence whom we expected, a very old and wrinkled woman hobbled into the apartment. She appeared to be dazzled by the sudden blaze of light, and after dropping a courtesy she stood blinking at us with her bleared eyes and fumbling in her pocket with nervous, shaky fingers. I glanced at my companion, and his face had assumed such a disconsolate expression that it was all I could do to keep my countenance. The old crone drew out an evening paper and pointed at our advertisement. "It's this as has brought me, good gentlemen," she said, dropping another courtesy. "A gold wedding ring in the Brixton road. It belongs to my girl Sally, as was married only this time twelvementh, which her husband is steward aboard a Union boat, and what he'd say if he come 'ome and found her without her ring is more than I can think, he being short enough at the best o' times, but more especially when he has the drink. If it please you, sho went to the circus last night along with"-

"Is that her ring?" I asked. "The Lord be thanked!" cried the old woman. "Sally will be a glad woman this night. That's the ring." "And what may your address be?"

inquired, taking up a pencil. "Thirteen Duncan street, Houndsditch. A weary way from here." "The Brixton road does not lie between any circus and Houndsditch."

said Sherlock Holmes sharply. The old woman faced round and looked keenly at him from her little red rimmed eyes. "The gentleman asked for my address," she said. "Sally lives in lodgings at 3 Mayfield place, Peckham." "And your name is"-

"My name is Sawyer. Hers is Dennis, which Tom Dennis married her, and a smart, clean lad, too, as long as he's at sea, and no steward in the company more thought of, but when on shore, what with the women and what with liquo: shops"-

"Here is your ring, Mrs. Sawyer," I interrupted in obedience to a sign from my companion. "It clearly belongs to your daughter, and I am glad to be able to restore it to the rightful owner."

With many mumbled blessings and protestations of gratitude the old crone packed it away in her pocket and shuffled off down the stairs. Sherlock Holmes sprang to his feet the moment she was gone and rushed into his room. He returned in a few seconds enveloped in an ulster and a cravat. "I'll follow ber," he said hurriedly. "She must be an accomplice and will lead me to him. Wait up for me." The hall door had hardly slammed behind our visitor before Holmes had descended the stair. Looking through the window, I could see her walking feebly along the other side, while her pursuer dogged her some lit-tle distance behind. "Either his whole theory is incorrect," I thought to myself, "or else he will be led now to the heart of the mystery." There was no need for him to ask me to wait up for him, for I felt that sleep was impossible until I heard the result of his adventure. It was close upon 9 when he set out. had no idea how long he might be, but I sat stolidly puffing at my pipe and skipping over the pages of Henri Murger's "Vie de Boheme." Ten o'olock passed, and I heard the footsteps of the maids as they pattered off to bed. Eleven, and the more stately tread of the landlady passed my door bound for the same destination. It was close upon 12 before I heard the sharp sound of his latch key. The instant he entered I saw by his face that he had not been successful. Amusement and chagrin seemed to be struggling for the mastery, until the former suddenly carried the day, and he burst into a hearty laugh. "I wouldn't have the Scotland Yarders know it for the world!" he cried, dropping into his chair. -"I have chaffed them so much that they would never have let me hear the end of it. I can afford to laugh, because I know that I will be even with them in the long run. "What is it then?" I asked. "Oh, I don't mind telling a story against myself. That creature had gone a little way when she began to limp and show every sign of being footsore. Presently she came to a halt and hailed a four wheeler which was passing. I managed to be close to her so as to hear the address, but I need not have been so anxious, for she sang it out loud enough to be heard at the other side of the street, 'Drive to 13 Duncan street, Houndsditch!' she cried. This bega to look genuine, I thought, and having seen her safely inside I perched myself behind. That's an art which every detective should be an expert at. Well, away we rattled and never drew rein until we reached the street in question. I hopped off before we came to the door and strolled down the street in an easy, lounging way. I saw the cab pull up. The driver jumped down, and I saw him open the door and stand expectantly. Nothing came out though. When

I reached him, he was groping about frantically in the empty cab and giving vent to the finest assorted collection of oaths that ever I listened to. There was no sign or trace of his passenger, and I fear it will be some time before he gets her fare. On inquiring at No. 13 I found that the house belonged to a respectable paperhanger, named Keswick, and that no one of the name, either of Sawyer or Dennis, had ever been heard of there." "You don't mean to say," I cried in amazement, "that that tottering, feeble old woman was able to get out the cab while it was in motion, without either you or the driver seeing her?" "Old woman bo d—d!" said Sher-lock Holmes sharply. "We were the old women to be so taken in. It must have been a young man, an active one, too, besides being an incomparable actor. The getup was inimitable. Herawthat he was followed, no doubt, and need this means of giving me the alip. It shows that the man we are after it not as lonely as I imagined he was, but has triends who are ready to risk something for him. Now, doctor, you are laking done up. Take my advice and tu min."

I was certainly feeling very weary, so I obeyed his injunction. I left Holmes seafed in front of the smold ring fire, and long into the watches of the night I heard the low, inclancially we illings of his violin and know that he was still pondering over the strangs problem which he had set himself to unravel.

CHAPTER VI. The papers muxt day were full of the "Brixton Mystery," as they termed it. Each had a long account of the affair, and some had lengers upon it in addition. There was some information in them which was new to me. I still retain in my scrawings numerous clippings and extracts bearing upon the case. Here is a condensation of a few of

The Daily Telegraph remarked that in the lattery of crime there had seldom been a tragedy which presented stranger features The German man e of the victim, the absence of all other motive and the sinister in cription on the wall, all pointed to its pear tration by political refugees and revolutionist. The socialists had many branches in America, and the deceased had no dealt infringed their nuwritten laws and been tracked down by them. After : lluding to the Vehingerieght, aqua tofa ia, Carbonari, the Marchioners de Brinvilliers, the Darwinian theory, the principles of Malthus and the Ractiff highway murders the article concluded Lyndmonishing the government and advocating a closer watch over fereigners in England.

The Standard commerted upon the fact that lawless entrig a of the sort usually occurred under a Liberal administration. They arose from the unsettling of the minds of the masses and the consequent weakening of all authority. The decessed was an American gentleman who had been residing for some weeks in the metropolis. He had staid at the boarding house of Mme. Charpentier in Torquey Terrace, Camberwell. He was a companied in his travels by his private secretary, Mr. Joseph Stangerson. The two bade adieu to their landlady upon Tuesday, the 4th inst., and departed to Euston station with the avowed intention of catching the Liverpool express. They were afterward seen together on the platform. Nothing more is known of them until Mr. Drebber's body was, as recorded, discovered in an empty house in the Brixton road, many miles from Euston. How he came there or how he met his fate are questions which are still involved in mystery. Nothing is known of the whereabouts of Stangerson. We are glad to learn that Mr. Lestrade and Mr. Gregson of Scotland Yard are both engaged upon the case, and it is confidently anticipated that these well known officers will speedily throw light upon the matter. The Daily News observed that there was no doubt as to the crime being a political one. The despotism and hatred of Liberalism which animated the contineutal governments had had the effect of driving to our shores a number of men who might have made excellent citizens were they not soured by the recollection of all that they had undergone.

Among these men there was a stringent code of honor, any infringement of which was punished by death. Every effort should be made to find the secretary, Stangerson, and to ascertain some particulars of the habits of the deceased. A great step had been gained by the discovery of the address of the house at which he had boarded-a result which was entirely due to the acuteness and energy of Mr. Gregson of Scotland Yard. Sherlock Holmes and I read these notices over together at breakfast, and they appeared to afford him considerable amusement. "I told you that what ever happened Lestrade and Gregson would be sure to

"That depends on how it turns out." "Oh, bless you, it doesn't matter in the least. If the man is caught, it will be on account of their exertions. If he escapes, it will be in spite of their exertions. It's heads I win and tails you lose. What ever they do, they will have followers. 'Un sot trouve toujours un plus sot qui l'admire.' ''

"What on earth is this?" I cried, for at this moment there came the pattering of many steps in the hall and on the stairs, accompanied by audible expressions of disgust upon the part of our landlady. "It's the Baker street division of the detective police force," said my companion gravely, and as he spoke there rushed into the room half a dozen of the dirtiest and most ragged street arabs that ever I clapped eves on. "'Tention!" cried Holmes in a sharp tone, and the six dirty little scoundrels stood in a line like so many disreputable statuettes. "In future you shall send up

Wiggins to report, and the rest of you must wait in the street. Have you found it, Wiggins?" "No, sir, we hain't," said one of the youths. "I hardly expected you would. You must keep on until you do. Here are your wages." He handed each of them a shilling. "Now, off you go, and come back with a better report next time." He waved his hand, and they scampered away down stairs like so many rats, and we heard their shrill voices next moment in the street. "There's more work to be got out of one of those little beggars than out of a dozen of the force," Holmes remarked. "The mere sight of an official looking person seals men's lips. These youngsters, however, go everywhere and hear everything. They are as sharp as needles too. All they want is organization." "Is it on this Brixton case that you are employing them?" I asked. "Yes, there is a point which I wish to ascertain. It is merely a matter of time. Hello, we are going to hear some Gregson coming down the road with beatitude written upon every feature of his face. Bound for us, I know. Yes, he is stopping. There he is!" [TO BE CONTINUED.] granted a pension.

HIS EMINENT FITNESS FOR THE SUPREME BENCH IS CON-CEDED BY ALL.

JOSEPH B. MOORE.

Judges Do Not Regulate Coinage—Democratic Congress Should Have Done So-Next Republican Congress Will Do So.

The nomination of Judge J. B. Moore, of Lapeer, for justice of the supreme court was one of the best that has ever been made in our state. He is a ripe scholar, a lawyer of many years' practice, and he has occupied a seat on the circuit bench for a number of years. In ability, education, legal equipment and experience he is the peer of all the men who in the history of the state have been elevated to the court of last resort. Personally he is courteous, and his manners are peculiarly winning, while his private character is singularly pure, and is in fact without a stain. Recognizing the peculiar qualifications and undeniable fitness of the judge for this judicial position, and also the fact that under ordinary circumstances his election by an overwhelming majority would be among the certainties in Michigan politics, the opposition has adopted an ingenious device by which they hope to accomplish his defeat. This is the injection of the financial question into a judicial and educational campaign-judicial and educational because a justice of the supreme court and two regents of the University are to be elected in April.

The state has been flooded with posters, and later will be with c. ds, eulogising Mr. McGrath and coupling his name with the, at present, quite popular "16 to 1" aspect of the silver ques-

The hope is to float the Democratic candidate for the supreme court on the tide of an assumed popular clamor for free silver.

The fact is that the question of the judgeship of our supreme court is absolutely separated from any question of coinage or finance. But if it were not true why should preference be given to the Democratic candidate over Hon. J. B. Moore? One is a Democrat, and the inquiry is pertinent as to what that party-Judge McGrath's party—has ever been able to accomplish on one side or the other of the question of national finance? It has been on both sides and occupies exactly that attitude today. The fact is simply that if relief is to be secured, the country must look to the Republican party, and the great victories of last autumn emphasized this after two years of Democratic control and business and financial depression. The scheme of the Democratic party managers may be ingenious, but it is only an invention for the purpose of securing votes by false pretenses and misrepresentations. The renomination of Regent Butterfield by the Republicans was a deserved compliment to that earnest and painstaking official. Hon. Charles H. Hackley the other Republican candidate for Regent is the philanthropic and progressive resident of Muskegon, whose name is a synonym for good citizenship. He is a friend of education and in securing his consent to accept the nomination the University and the state have been fortunate. They will both be elected. R. G. Dun & Co's Weekly says: Indications of improvement in business grow distinct. The most obtrusive of them, the speculative advance in cotton and in stocks, is the least reliable, and can reither of these be said to refirst actual improvement in business conditions. Railroad earnings are scarcely better, and the speculation is largely based on expectation of more ffective monopoly in coal and some other products. London was buying largely but is as likely to sell on any ris. Cotton does not rise because there is more demand for goods, but there is more demand for goods because cotton is dearer. More valuable indications are that the volume of domestic !rade gains a little, money is in much better legitimate demand, and the force of hands at work gradually increases in some industries, and in others is restricted only by strikes, which are presumably temporary. The threatened strike of coke workers has been avoided by an advance of 15 per cent in wages, and the strike in building trades here has ended, the men re-

Fire at Decatur.

A fire started at the Hotel Doncombe, at Decatur, about 5 o'clock Saturday morning, and before the flames were under control property to the extent of $25,000 was destroyed. At the Hotei Duncombe the guests had a narrow escape from losing their lives, and many of them losing every particle of their clothing. Assistance was required to he p subdue the flames, which at one time threatened to wipe the entire town, At 8 o'clock the flames were under control, but at 10:30 they broke out again, and after a hard fight they broke out again, and after a hard fight they were put out. Two hotels, two brick stores, a,bank, livery stable, Universalist church, carriage works, and five or six dwelling houses went up insmcke. The loss is about $25,000, with $6,000 insurance.

Another Dam. The Inter-State Power Company filed articles of incorporation at South Bend, Ind., last Saturday, the capital stock being $100,000. The object of the corporation is to harness the St. Joseph river and transmit power by electricity for manufacturing purposes, and for an electric railway from South Bend, Ind., to St. Joseph, Mich. There are ten incorporators, most of them from Michigan. The name of Fred E. Lee, son-in-law of the late P. D. Beckwith, the big stove manufacturer of Dowagiac, and his wife, Kate Beckwith Lee, head the list; Julius O. Becraft, also of Dowagiac; M. L. Howell of Cassopolis; R. D. Dix of Berrien Spring, and several other Berrien county capitalists, have also taken considerable stock in the company. A dam to cost $46,000 will be constructed at Rertrand and it is expected to furnish power enough to run all the manufacturing establishments of Niles, South Bend, Buchanan, Berrien and even Dowagiac. Other reports are that it is intended as a boom for Bertrand, and that some big manutacturing institutions are to be erected there, The scheme is backed by abundant capital, as well as business experience, and promises to be a great

Looking Over the Field.

Assistant Engineer Hotchkiss, of the Michigan Central railroad, and Mr. J. O. Becraft, editor of the Dowagiac Republican, were in the city today on business connected with the Inter-State Power Company, whose organization was noted in the Tribune last week. The wealthy Beckwith estate of Dowagiac, of which Fred E. Lee is manager and Mr. Becraft secretary, owns most of the stock in the new enterprise, and will control the affairs of the company. Mr. Hotchkiss will probably have charge of the details in the construction of the dam. It is said the main purpose of the company is to furnish power for an electric road between this city and St. Joseph, and it will also transmit power for manufacturing to South Bend, Niles, Buchanan and Berrien Springs. The dam will be constructed this season, without doubt. Members of the company are close-mouthed, and avoid the reporters as much as possible, but the secrets will leak out some way or other.—Monday's Sonth Bend Tribun

LITERARY NOTES.

The Arl Amateur for March has two exquisite color plates, "An opening in the forest," by R. M. Shurtleff, and "Garden Poppies", by Paul de Longpre. There are the usual eight page of Practical Working Designs for China Painting, Embroidery, and Wood-Carving. The leading artist represented this month is the famous painter and illustrator, Albert Lynch, and the beautiful drawings (there are ten large ones shown) will delight every one. There is an article on "Landpainting," by R. M. Shurtleff, the well-known painter of Adirondack scenery, with some sketches by him. Other articles are "Drawing for reproduction," "Sketching from nature," "Studio tests for artists' colors," "What is tone?" "Flowers drawing in pen and ink," "Flower painting," and several on "China painting." There is an illustrated account of "Sir Walter Scott's Library at Abbottsford," some "Artistic Window Seats," the use of "Flower and plants in home decoration," and "Talks on embroidery." The editor's "Note Book" is, as usual, full of bright and incisive criticisms of passing art events and suggestions to the unwary picture buyer, which will save hundreds if not thousands of dollars to many a reader who will take them to heart. Mr. Richard Harding Davis, who started from the eastern coast of Honduras about the middle of January to ride across Central America, has arrived at Tegueigalpa, the capital of Honduras, from which place he will continue on to the capital of Nicaragna, and from there to Corinto, on the Pacific side. From that point he takes a steamer south to Caracas in South America, acrossing the Isthmus of Panama on his way. The ride to Tegueigalpa was made on mule-back over the mountains, and lasted sixteen days; the second half of the trip to Corinto will require about ten days more. Mr. Davis is accompanied by Mr. Henry Sumers Somerset and Lloyd C. Griscom, and his purpose is to describe the places visited by these gentlemen and himself in a series of articles which appear in Harper's Monthly and Harper's Neekly as soon as possible after, his return to New York.

turn to New York.

The sweet flavor of an old-fashoned sngar-camp comes to us in the March number of Every Where, with a fine poem, "The Sugarin-Off," by its editor, Will Carleton, with a characteristic illustration by Hawthorne. Another "Lightning Tour" takes us to a quaint old town in Sicily, where we are made to see the place, not only by the fine illustration, but by the vivid description, in everyday language. The other departments are as bright and crisp as ever. The eccentric but faithful Lorenzo Dow of other days is made to furnish us a "Five Minute Sermon"; and the usual fresh, original stories, poems, essays, items, and editorials abound. Among the striking contents of this unique paper, is a list of nearly a hundred Golden Weddings that have taken place in this country, during the past month and a half. One would hardly think a whole year would furnish so many. This charming newspaper-magazine is only fifty cents a year; in cash, stamps, or postoflice order; and the address is Every Where, Brooklyn, N. Y.

The faiction of this number is unusually entertaining.

The Hon. W. T. Harris, United States Commissioner of Education, is an author of a suggestive paper, in the April Harper's Magazine, on "Recent Progress in Public schools," in which he shows the superiority of the graded system over the old plan of individual instruction. The principal point of superiority Mr. Harris finds to be the stimulus of rivalry among members of a class and the better grasp of a subject that comes from seeing how it appeals to other minds.

Obituary.

JEREMIAH B. SHEARER was born in Carroll county, Ohio, June 15th, 1828, at the Presbyterian church for one and was united in marriage to Miss Sarah Shearer (of the same name) Jan: 18, 1852. Two years later moved to this county in which they resided since. on his peaceful quiet loving home on his little farm two miles west of Berrien. Your informant remembers well the sad scene that transpired 10 years in the hay loft where the father was picked up a limp lifeless form. The son, a noble young man, I will say a model young man through sickness became demented, was tired of life, escap ed the watchfulness of parents, resorted to this lonely spot, and took the life he was tired of. His faithful mother was the first one to climb the ladder and found her only beloved son bleeding and dying on Monday afternoon. Mrs. Shearer and daughter called on a neighbor Monday afternoon leaving Mr. Shearer with the hired man feeling l unusually well, the hired man unloading hay. Mr. Snearer said he would go up and throw it back. In the effort of putting back the hay Mr. Shearer threw up his hand and exclaimed, "Oh you are killing me," and sank down a lifeless form. The young man, fright-ened, sprang on a horse and hurried for a doctor. Wife came home, went to the shop to look for her husband, then to the barn and saw they were unloading hay. She climbed up the ladder for the second time and found the lifeless form of her husband. Mr. Shearer had a stroke of paralysis 11 years ago. Since that time his friends have been on the alert, expecting a return at any time. Mr. Shearer was a good husband, a loving father, and had a happy home until blighted by sickness and death. He was a christian of the higher type; good to the poor, al-ways had a kind word and a smile for all who met him. The world was b tter by his living in it. Before a congregation last Sunday he said his lamp was trimmed and burning, and he was ready to enter in and partake of the marriage supper. He leaves three daughters and wife to follow. He was a faithful member of the Baptist

Monson-Spencer.

Yesterday B. H. Spencer, of the firm Spencer, Barnes & Stuart rested a few minutes at the fiftieth mile stone of life's journey. He glanced back over the way, saw all that had happened to concern him, and unhesitatingly pronounced it good. In this reflective mood two forms upproached, hand in hand, asked a father's blessing. They were his newly married daughter, Ada A., and son-in-law, Olaf K Monson, of Monson & Smith; real estate, Chicago. The marriage ceremony took place at high noon at the home of the bride's parents, Rev. A. P. Moore of the Christian Advent church, Buchanan, tying the knot that knit them forever into one. Only the most immediate rela tives of the bride were present the ceremony being quietly performed amid hundreds of flowers relieved by smilax. Congratulations came after the ceremony and then a sumptuous dinner which was partaken amid merriment and good feeling that made the sunshine inside rival that without. Among the guests were relatives from Buchanan and Union Mills, Ind. No more pleasing wav could have been chosen to celebrate Mr. Spencer's arrival at the half century mark. It was a neat way on the part of his oldest to a loving father. Many handsome and useful gifts were presented as to-kens of affections and esteem. Mr. and Mrs. Monson left on the 3 p. m. train for Chicago where they will in future reside, and the News asks the humble privilege of casting all the old shoes about the office after them -Benton Harbor News March 20.

Mr. J. O. Becraft of Dowagiac was in town on Saturday. Mr. Becraft stated that work would be commenced on the new dam of the "Inter-State Power Company", at Bertrand, as soon as the surveys and other necessary preliminaries had been arranged for. He says that the dam at Bertrand will be about the length of the Buchanan dam, but that there would be a little more fall than at this place.

C. E. White, the liveryman, had runaway when returning from Niles Saturday night. As he was crossing the St. Joseph railcoad at the Niles hill his team became frightened and ran through town at a terrific speed. They barely missed colliding with a number of vehicles that were tied on both sides of the street. Mr. White was unable to gain full control over them until about a mile west of town. There was no damage done.

THE ENGLISH SPEECH.

- Oh, the English speech! How true it rings! How masterful and clear! Fit vehicle for greatest things That mortal man may hear.

  Freemen of greatest, noblest thought
  Their songs divine have sung, And aws of highest justice taught
- In this majestic tongue. In stern, defiant, tempest tones Its battle shouts arise, Pelting the coward's heart like stones, Shaking the vaulted skies. But, oh, what frank and hearty mirth
- Doth English speech reveal When Peace, God's angel, walks the earth The wounds of war to heal! There's not an impulse of the mind Or feeling of the heart
- But may its full expression find In this consummate art. Our mother tongue! The English speech!
  The ages' masterpiece!
  Whose sway around the world doth reach.
- And shall, till time doth cease. Oh, the English speech! How true it rings! Simple, direct and clear. The speech of freemen, nature's kings, Language of men sincere!

- BELLS OF FOLLY.

Miranda ran into the meadow, laughing. The grassy slope shelved down into the valley, where the wood lay black and still. Daffodils nedded and cowslips bowed as she passed on her way. A lark got up and rose, singing to heaven. She sped out of the shadow and into the sunlight, and the sound of her young laughter floated down the valley. Echoes joined it there, and the little ravine gurgled with merriment. Miair, and listened. Was it all the echo of her own delight, or was it something more? The peal of her mockery died into the somber copse, and out of it, fresh upward way. Miranda stood and wait-

He came up the bank of wild flowers, his face bright with the love of life and laughter, and at the sight of her he awhile in silence, and then a smile ran round Miranda's lips, and the young man's eyes sparkled with merriment.

"I took your laughter for a signal," said he, making his beaming salutations, "but I reckoned little upon so charming an assignation." "It was but a signal of the spring, sir," says she, with a dainty bow. "Nay," he replied. "I make no such distinctions between the seasons. I laugh the whole year through. It is the manner of the wise. You will perceive my jocund humor, fair mistress. Believe me, 'tis not the whim of an hour contrived by the guiles of a spring morning, but a very settled disposition of the mind. I am broad based upon gayety."

"Ab, to be gay!" cried Miranda. "To be gay is to live." 'Life is at our feet,' said the merry

youth. "I take an infinite pleasure in should matter, save the twinkling of an eye or the dimpling of a cheek." "You are right," said Miranda, smil-

"How can one have enough of "We are of one mind," he answered pleasantly. "Let us go into our corner and be merry together." "Why not?" says Miranda.

"There are 10,000 pleasures in this silly world," he went on, "and, for myself, I have not yet exhausted the head. tenth part of them. Count my years, then, and make threescore and ten the dividend, and what remains? Pack them into the hours never so neatly, and you will not exhaust the store. And that is why I am a spendthrift of pleasures. I eke not out my delights. I would burn and toss a dozen to the ducks upon the lake for pity." "Yes, yes," agreed Miranda. "Time," he continued, with fine scorn, "time has discovered us a conspiracy of the ages to inthrone this melancholy. But we are no traitors to our rightful being, you and I, and we will clap a crown upon the head of laughter, and lay the usurper by the heels in his proper dungeon.

"He were better there," replied Miranda thoughtfully. "There is never a care," he resumed "upon which we may not trample, not a trouble which we may not forget. What a fool is he who would nurse his sorrow and not bury it in the deepest grave!" "What a fool!" murmured Mirauda dreamily. "Should one lose a friend? A fig for friendship!" quoth he. "Does one cast | man. a lover? A snap for a hundred lovers! What has been remains, and what is friend. "It's the story with an immoral Miranda said nothing.

"Subtract love from life," said the young man, "and life remains. I would have the world know that love is a pleasant cipher, an amiable and entertaining mood, and that life is left when love is lost. There is no love. It were more truly writ in the plural and spelled with a small letter." Miranda turned upon him swiftly. "Fiel Fiel" said she, and the light flashed in her eyes. "I know nothing of this love, but I dare swear there be things that matter. Take these from life, and what will rest over? Is there not sorrow, and is there not pain? Is there not remorse, and is there not the thing called sin? I know nothing of these. I am too young to the world. But there they stand, sir, importuning at our doors with outstretched arms, and one has only to lift the latch to let them in. You would deny the very pulse of human nature when you ignore these evils. You would forswear the very

you your sentiments." In the excitement of her retort Miranda's face flushed and grew bright. Wide eyed the young man stared at her and forgot to laugh, and when she had done his head dropped, and he sighed. "Ah," she said, "you sigh. You weaknesses which have composed for yourself have felt and suffered. You have belied yourself. You sigh. There are facts in life even for sighs." "Tis true," he answered softly, "yet I sighed for pleasure."

"What pleasure?" she asked onri-

"Or it may be hope," he added. He looked at her, and his gaze was mild and wistful. She regarded him in perplexity, and then a wild flush took her in the cheek and throat.

"Pooh, pooh!" she cried, and turned off, plucking at the hawthorn bush. The white may smelled rank, but strange and soothing. The petals shivered and fell. Miranda's heart beat on, wondering. Something clapped at its doors again and again. Would she open? What was this impatient visitor that pleaded so for entrance? She had so little knowledge. She was but newly arrived upon the world. Her emotions were still strangers to her. She was a pilgrim still among her new sensations. Ought she to open? Nay, to stay so and wonder was surely pleasantest. One day sho would throw wide the doors and look. But now it was sweet to feel that at the latch, and lie trembling within . faced him. Straightway the clamor occasioned much criticism afterward." ceased, and in her heart was silence. -New York Herald.

She looked him coldly in the face. "You smile for love?" she asked. "Yes, dear," said he, "and for the thought of you.' "Oh, you take me too lightly," sho broke out. "You do not guess what a solemn thing this love may be. You flutter into a thousand follies on the scantest reflection. You will dance, and you will play, and you will jingle jangle through your holiday world without a thought for anything but pirouettes and jigs and whirligigs of laughter. The most sonorous of sacred sorrows may sound in your ears, and wake no echo but a jape within your heart. And you would put me upon that dead plane of ribald merriment with yourself? I will laugh with you. Yes. I will go beg of you for jests in my jocund seasons. I am willing to shrick over your whimsicalities at my own pleasure. In my serene unthinking moments I will be content to exchange humors with you, and to vow that life were more than void and dull were not such as you at my beck. But when I have opened my chamber and fastened the door upon myself my soul and I shall be alone together, and I will weep and pity and repent and ache out my heart with sorrows in which you can have no lot. I am young, but I have an inkling of what the world may mean.

"The world," said he, "means happiness." "The world," she retorted, "means tears and bitter wringing of the hands. Have I not heard of death? And have I not seen pain? You think me gay, yet how long shall I keep this gayety in my heart? I go round upon the wheel. It randa stopped, with her chin in the turns and changes. What shall befall tomorrow that I should not weep today? You would pluck me with no greater consideration than you would pick a flower from its stalk wherewith to deck and clear, a voice trilled merrily on its your coat. Should it wither or fall adust, another will serve until the coming of the wine. Look you, you will sigh and weep for love, and your sighs will be smiles, and your tears will be laughter. Forthright your heart is paused. The two faced each other for singing like a lark. Yours! Yours is the shallowest of paltry passions." "I would do much for you," said he

"Give up your dimples," cried Miranda, "and so to the churchyard with a wry face?"

"Even that," he answered, nodding. "Pah!" said she, "you will not contain your face lugubriously for five minutes by the clock. Though you shall remember to be sober for two sentences, at the third you will be whistling, and the fourth will find you holding your

He moved a step toward her. "And if I should die for you?" he asked pleadingly.

Miranda gasped. She contemplated his face with uncertainty. His eyes shone with the dew of tears. His hands trembled. It was the corner of his mouth betrayed him. Miranda burst into laughter. "You!" she cried. "You! Why, you would forget my coffin as it passed. and the color of my face ere my back was upon you. See here," she said, "I will give you to the hedge for misery, but I swear you will take the lane as jauntily as an hour since. Get you gone, my merry man, and come again to dispute with me in an idle humor. Fie, fie, to think on you and death in the same company!

He sighed and turned away. "You have the smallest heart of any maid I know," he said, shaking his

"The better for my laughter," laughed Miranda. He moved across the meadow, his head hanging, his eyes downcast, his stick dragging among the daisies. Miranda stared after him, her lips parted in amusement. He climbed the stile, 20 in a straw hat out of sheer caprice and stopping on the topmost step turned to her again. "I have at least one solace," he called across the meadow. "I shall forget your fickle face by night." Miranda's laughter touched the skies and ceased. Her face fell thoughtful. She sighed and shrugged her dainty shoulders.-H. B. Marriott-Watson in Sketch.

THE DAY OF SMALL THINGS. No novels now, but novelettes; Cigars give place to cigarettes, Titanic "suns" to twinkling "stars," Pictures to sketches, "pomes" to "pars," Bonnets to things like housemaids caps, Banquets to tidbits, books to scraps, And three volume novels to "short stories," Gibbon-like length and epic glories, Like mammoths and cave bears, are gone. CONFIDENCES OF CLIENTS. A Noted English Precedent Which Stamps Them as Inviolable.

"The matter of confidences between counsel and client is one of great interest and importance," said a well known jurist and ex-judge the other day. "As to the duty of a lawyer on the trial of a case where he has been informed by his client that he is guilty, the best and most controlling example is that of Charles James Phillips, the eminent British barrister who in many directions was rated in his time as second only to Lord Erskine. "He was defending Courvoisier, who was indicted for the murder of Lord Russell. During the trial, on the examination of a very important witness for the people, the accused was much overcome, and in the intensity of his emotion communicated either to Mr. Phillips or to his solicitor the fact that he was guilty of the crime. "Mr. Phillips immediately asked for an adjournment of the case and for a consultation with the judges. The consultation was granted, and Mr. Phillins stated to the bench that the accused had confessed his guilt and requested the judges to point out to him his path of duty. The judges, after deliberation, stated that he would have a perfect right to make such legal and logical deductions from the evidence as he thought tended to the exculpation of the accused, but it would be unprofessional to state to the jury any personal belief of his innocence. "In his argument to the jury Mr. Phillips, carried away by his emotions hand upon the knocker, that clutching and imagination, did state to the jury his own personal bolief in the innocence in feigned insecurity. SWARMING OF HONEYBEES.

A Graphic Account of the Proceeding by Recognized Authority. The renowned Francis Huber describes the signs of swarming as follows: The neen, being angry at the noise which the young females ready to be hatched are making in their cells, runs about the hives, examines the colls and endeavors to destroy those which contain the females, but she meets with resistance from the workers. Not one of them offers her honey. She takes it her

BEES SWARMING FROM A BRANCH. solf from the open cells, which are for the use of the whole hive. They no longer draw up in line on each side of her as she moves along. Her guard of honor no longer surrounds her. She scems fallen from her high rank. However, the first bees which were disturbed by her now follow, running like her self, and spread alarm in their turn among the rest of the population. The road which the queen has traveled is to be recognized by the excitement she has caused on her passage and which cannot now be calmed. Very soon she has visited every corner of the hive, so that the fever has become general. The delirium takes possession of the whole republic. The end of all this is a general sortie. The whole hive, with the queen at the head, precipitates itself toward the door and issues forth to create a swarm. Once in the fresh air they become quiet. Their madness subsides, and they fix themselves to a branch of a tree, and having been captured set to work again

A swarm never comes out except a an hour of the day when the sun is shining, the air calm and the sky clear. If the sky should become overcast or a transient storm arise, all the signs of swarming would cease in the hive and tranquillity be restored. At the moment which precedes their exit, said Huber, the buzzing increases in the hive. Some of the workers go out first as if to ascertain the state of the atmosphere. The moment the queen has passed the threshold, the emigrants follow in a crowd behind her. In an instant the air is blackened with the bees, which crowd together and form a thick cloud.

The swarm rises. It poises itself a ew minutes above the hive and the goes off at full speed. When the branch of a tree has been selected by a certain number, they fix themselves on it. Many others follow them. When a great many have collected, the queen joins the throng and brings in her train the rest of the troop. The group becomes larger and larger, and very soon altogether compose one solid mass or clump of bees, clinging to each other by their legs. This cluster is sometimes spherical, sometimes pyramidal and occasionally attains a weight of nine pounds and may contain as many as 40,000 bees. From this moment, although they are uncovered, they remain In a quarter of an hour everything becomes quiet, and the bees cease to hover about the cluster more than round an ordinary hive. Now is the moment to take possession of the swarm in a hive prepared beforehand to receive it. If delayed too long, the troop flies off and establishes itself in some natural cavity, as the hollow of a tree, etc. The bees then return to their wild state. In the second cut is shown a cluster of queen cells. A A A represents the cell when the egg is deposited; B. finished cell; C, cell from which a mature queen has issued; D, cell in which the queen has been destroyed by a rival and removed by the workers.

Germinating Seeds In Sawdust. The Experiment Station Record calls attention to G. E. Stone's recommendation for the use of sawdust for germinating seeds. Care must be taken not to use the sawdust of oak, chestnut or other tannin bearing wood, as it will result in tannin poisoning of the roots, giving them an abnormal growth. Rather coarse sawdust is preferred to the finer. Seeds may be sown in well drained pots and watered at least once a day. The roots of sawdust cultures present characteristics in their growth which are closely allied to roots grown in moist air.

SCAB.

How Farmers Do It In the Northwest With Corrosive Sublimate. In regard to the use of corrosive sublimate for the prevention of scab on potatoes, in the northwest at least, the experimental stage is past. In using the corrosive sublimate every farmer will have a best way, and each way will be sure to be different. Here is the way farmers do it in the northwest. Following is the story told by a Wisconsin farmer in a letter to Eural New Yorker: "I have a tank made of 2 inch plank, 1 fcot deep by 4 feet wide by 14 feet long. I selected a sunny place for the work, as near the cellar as possible. I lay down boards by the side of the tank until I have a smooth floor about 16 feet square, for drying the potatoes after soaking I fill the tank about onehalf full of water, and to this add an ounce of corrosive sublimate to each eight gallons of water. The tank holds about 80 bushels of potatoes, and this amount of water will cover them nicely. I leave them in the solution 11/2 hours, and then with a potato screen shovel scatter them over the floor by the side of the tank. If the sun shines, they will be dry in a few minutes, but we commence cutting at once, as a wet potato cuts easier than a dry one. Do not be afraid of a cut or sore on the hands getting poisoned, for I have found that keeping the hands wet for a few days in handling the potatoes from the above mixture will cure a cut or bruise of long standing. "The only extra cost to me for putting the seed through this treatment is, which is 61/4 cents per ounce and the cost of shoveling the potatoes from the tank to the platform, which at $1.50 per day amounts to 5 cents per tank of 80 bushels, as it takes a man 20 minutes to clear the tank. Fifty ownces of corrosive sublimate will do for 50 acres of potatoes or 61/4 cents per acre. As a tank of 30 bushels of potatoes will plant about three acres, the extra cost of handling per acre, at 5 cents per tank, would be 1% cents. This, added to 61/4 cents for the poison, makes only 81/4 cents per acre, as the cost of the treatment-outside of the tools. Some of the water will be wasted when shoveling out the potatoes and should be made up by adding more water and poison, in the same proportion as at first."

Draining Overflowed Land. . The automatic action of a waste gate for draining marshes in shown in detail in the following illustration from Country Gentleman. The float in rising with the water draws on the gate by all its buoyancy, and being an airtight box it will lift with a force of over 60 pounds

AUTOMATIC ACTION OF WASTE GATE. per each cubic foot of space in it. It is seen by the jointed lever how the action takes place and how when the float falls with a lowering tide the gate is lifted by the weight of the float and opens the. drain. This gate has been found perfectly effective wherever it has been used. It was first constructed for draining one of the New Jersey tidal marshes a few years ago. It is not patented.

Plowing and Harrowing. In many sections these two operations may not follow closely, but in windy and dry climates they ought not to be far apart, writes J. M. Rice of Oklahoma to Field, Farm and Fireside. Ho says: If there is moisture in the ground and as deep as we would like it, and there is abundance of moisture in the atmosphere, the harrowing might be deferred for weeks, but the soil should be watched and the harrowing be done before clods form. The usual conditions here are that the surface for two inches or more will dry out in a day, and it is a safe rule to harrow one day's there should be much dew or moisture on the surface to harrow just after noon. Either of these ways is convenient in regard to changing from plow to barrow and back again with the least loss of time. We take our harrow to the field at same time as the plow, and the unhooking of the evener is but the work of a minute. Harrowing thus before clods form levels and smooths much quicker and easier than afterward, but the primary thought generally here is to fine the soil to prevent escape of moisture. Not that we always have it dry, but to retain moisture is quite often a feature of western farming.

A corn largely patronized by the market gardeners of Chicago is the Chicago Market or Ballard's Early. Canada Field is a favorite variety of

Mr. Dalrymple means by this that wheat will be fed to live

Highway Bridge Construction. One of the most essential features of good highways is that of bridge construction. At all crossings of streams which might at any time interrupt the passage of vehicles good substantial iron bridges should be erected where the importance of the highway is sufficient to warrant the outlay, and in all cases where bridges are necessary they should be of the most permanent character pos-

Good bridges, besides being more economical, appeal strongly to the eye of the traveler and cause a feeling of pride on the part of every citizen, which the government, for manifest economic reasons, owes it to encourage, even though the saving of dollars and cents did not appeal so strongly to the same end. This result can be reached only by intrusting to a competent engineer the work of bridge

Road Material In Florida. Towns in Florida have a great boon in the so called paving clay found near Bartow and elsewhere farther south. It is not solely clay, but a combination of sand, clay and oxide of iron. It breaks up under the pick when dug and needs no other preparation to be put upon the sandy streets of Floridian towns. It is laid on several inches deep, wet and then rolled. The result is a hard, smooth surface that resists the wear of traffic. Railway companies in Florida have used the material for the approaches to stations and for crossings.

The Bureau of Road Inquiry. The division of roads, which is included in the department of agriculture, was created about two years ago at the request of the National Good Roads league. General Roy Stone was placed in charge, and his duties consist of issuing literature upon this important question, attending conventions in different states and acting as adviser upon the methods of construction, plans of obtaining material, etc.

Smoked Cigarettes Thirty Years. People talk about cigarettes bein unhealthful, but the fact that I am still alive is proof to the contrary," said a middle aged man. "I began smoking them 30 years ago, before they were made in this part of the country and when few were imported. It is a far cry to the time when there were no American cigarettes, and I feel old when I look back to it. I ought to add that I have never inhaled the smoke of cigarettes, which perhaps accounts for their not killing me long ago. I may also add, in strict confidence, that the reason I have smoked cigarettes is that cigars

BRICK HOUSE TO COST $9,000.

Well Proportioned and Pleasing-The Style Is Old Colonial. Copyright, 1895, by George Palliser, Architect,

52 Park place, New York, In this design the exterior proportions are nicely adjusted and the effect from any point of view is very pleasing and satisfying. And why cannot more such houses he built is the query. They can be, only such houses as this require room to stand upon, and not less than 75 feet front ought to be appropriated thereto. Ground s the first consideration, and without it nothing satisfactory can be well accomplished. Get your land first, then get your plans made for your house, as it is simply surprising how much the lay of the land will change your plans, and when you build get the right thing in the right place, taking time and giving the proper study to what your wants really are and what you can do for a given cost, and, above all things, do not be deceived by any of the prices seen in the many architectural works which are given as cost, etc., as they are generally quoted to mislead, and are not reliable unless just made to suit time and place. It does not pay to deceive any one, and I give it as a safe basis to add at least one-third to any books giving prices, if published over two years ago, and especially ten or more years ago. At that time everything in the building line was down at bottom. Plan.—A brick residence. Front, 50 feet; deep, 51 feet. Height of stories: Cellar, 7 feet; first floor, 10 feet 6 inches; second floor, 9 feet 6 inches. Foundation and first and second stories of brick laid in colored mortar. All courses, arches, sills. etc., of brick. Gables frame, sheathed. papered and shingled; roofs shingled; cellar floor cemented; walls hard finished; front and back stairs; cight fireplaces, with neat mantels; large balcony on second floor;

for filling and varnishing. Exterior brick-work cleaned down and oiled; shingles stained. Front stairs of oak, hall floor oak, first floor kitchen yellow pine. The changes in times and scarcity of many kinds of building materials are undoubtedly bringing us nearer to the more general uses of brick as a building material for country houses, and it is safe to predict that the time is not far distant when the brick will, on account of its cheapness, entirely supersede wood for construction. Steel beams and structural steel inside of five years' time will be as cheap as wood, for as the wood is becom ing scarce so is the steel by improved modes and processes of its making becoming cheaper and more plentiful, and it is almost as cheap today to erect a good city building and make it fireproof as it is to erect in the old way one that is easily burn-

SECOND STORY. ed and lost. In good suburban work a sensible brick house as the above design shows is an exception, but it will change to the rule, and the sconer this change is effected the better for all hands. Let your brick be brick and your wood be wood, however, till this day comes, and with the beautiful varieties of brick and the tints and colors possible in clay it will be an era that will be worth waiting for and be hailed with delight by all except the insurance agents. . Profits of Architects.

Conscientious architects produce a multitude of drawings in preparing the plans of even simple and small buildings. So true is this that such architects hardly permit themselves to undertake an inexpensive structure at the current percentage. It is not profitable to the artist-architect to build a $5,000 house unless the owner is willing to pay a disproportion-ately high price for the services of the architect. Indeed large architects that do not usually rank as artists in the profession esteem small contracts as unprofitable unless many can be obtained in the same neighborhood. Much of the detail in such cases is left to the mill that turns out the woodwork, and there are other ways of slighting the contract so that the architect shall save himself whole. It is plain that the architect, loving his art and sensitive as to his own fame, cannot descend to such business. Firms that content themselves with skimping details and in other ways economizing to the artistic detriment of the structure they design often charge somothing less than the reg-ular 5 per cent fee, and thus build up a large and profitable business. It thus comes about that the seemingly cheapest architect is dear enough in the end STATE OF OHIO, CITY OF TOLEDO.
