> PART TWO. [The Country of the Saints.] [CONTINUED.]

"At last one evening I was driving up and down Torquay Terrace, as the street was called in which they boarded, when I saw a cab drive up to their door. Presently some luggage was brought out, and after a time Drebber and Stangerson followed it and drove off. I whipped up my herse and kept within sight of them, feeling ill at ease, for I feared that they were going to shift their quarters. At Euston station they got out, and I left a boy to hold my horse and followed them on to the platform. I heard them ask for the Liverpool train, and the guard answered that one had just gone, and that there would not be another for some hours. Stangerson seemed to be put out at that, but Drebber was rather pleased than otherwise. I got so close to them in the bustle that I could hear every word that passed between them. Drebber said that he had a little business of his own to do, and that if the other would wait for him he would soon rejoin him. His companion remonstrated with him and reminded him that they had resolved to stick together. Drebber answered that the matter was a delicate one, and that he must go alone. I could not eatch what Stangerson said to that, but the other burst out swearing and reminded him that he was nothing more than his paid servant, and that he must not presume to dictate to him. On that the secretary gave it up as a bad job and simply bargained with him that if he missed the last train he should rejoin him at Halliday's Private hotel, to which Drebber answered that he would be back on the platform before 11 and made his way out of the station. "The moment for which I had waited so long had at last come. I had my enemies within my power. Together they could protect each other, but singly they were at my mercy. I did not act, however, with undue precipitation. My plans were already formed. There is no satisfaction in vengeance unless the offender has time to realize who it is that strikes him, and why retribution has come upon him. I had my plans arranged by which I should have the opportunity of making the man who had wronged me understand that his old sin had found him out. It chanced that some engaged in looking over some houses in the Brixton road had dropped the key of one of them in my carriage. It was claimed that same evening and returned, but in the interval I had taken a molding of it and had a duplicate constructed. By means of this I had access to at least one spot in this great city where I could rely upon being free from interruption. How to get Drebber to that house was the difficult problem which I had now to solve. "He walked down the road and went into one or two liquor shops, staying for nearly half an hour in the last of them. When he came out, he staggered in his walk and was evidently pretty well on. There was a hansom just in front of me, and he hailed it. I followed it so close that the nose of my horse was within a yard of his driver the whole way. We rattled across Waterloo bridge and through miles of streets, until, to my astonishment, we found ourselves back in the terrace in which he had boarded. I could not imagine what his intention was in returning there, but I went on and pulled up my cab a hundred yards or so from the house. He entered it, and his hansom drove away. Give me a glass of water, if you please. My mouth gets dry with the talking." I handed him the glass, and he drank it down. "That's better," he said. "Well, I waited for a quarter of an hour or more, when suddenly there came a noise like people struggling inside the house. Next moment the door was flung open, and two men appeared, one of whom was Drebber, and the other was a young chap whom I had never seen before. This fellow had Drebber by the collar, and when they came to the head of the steps he gave him a shove and a kick which sent him half across the road. 'You hound!' he cried, shaking his stick at him. 'I'll teach you to insult an honest girl!' He was so hot that I think he would have thrashed Drebber with his audgel, only that the cur staggered away down the road as fast as his legs would carry him. He ran as far as the corner, and then, seeing my cab, he hailed me and jumped 'Drive me to Halliday's Private hotel,' said he. "When I had him fairly inside my cab. my heart jumped so with joy that I feared lest at this last moment my aneurism might go wrong. I drove along slowly, weighing in my own mind what it was best to do. I might take him right out into the country, and there in some deserted lane have my last interview with him. I had almost decided upon this when he solved the problem for me. The craze for drink had seized him again, and he ordered me to pull up outside a gin palace. He went in, leaving word that I should wait for him. There he remained until closing time, and when he came out he was so far gone that I know the game was in my own hands.

"Don't imaging that I intended to kill him in cold blood. It would only have been rigid justice if I had done so, but I could not bring myself to do it. I had long determined that he should have a show for his life if he chose to take advantage of it. Among the many billets which I have filled in America during my wandering life, I was once a janitor and sweeper out of the laboratory at York college. One day the professor was lecturing on poisons, and he showed his students some alkaloid, as he called it, which he had extracted from some South American arrow poison, and which was so powerful that the least grain meant instant death. I spotted the bottle in which this preparation was kept, and when they were all gone I helped myself to a little of it. I was a fairly good dispenser, so I worked this alkaloid into small, soluble pills, and each pill I put in a box with a similar pill made without poison. I determined at the time that when I had my chance my gentlemen should each have a draw out of one of these boxes, while I ate the pill that remained. It would be quite as deadly and a good deal less noisy than firing across a handkerchief. From that day I had always my pill boxes about with me, and the time had now come when I was to use them.

"It was nearer 1 than 12; and a wild, bleak night, blowing hard and raining in torrenta. Dismal as it was outside, I was glad within-so glad that, I could have shouted out from pure exultation. If any of you gentlemen have ever pined for a thing and longed for it during 20 long years and then suddenly found it within your reach, you would understand my feelings. I lit a cigar and puffed at it to steady my nerves, but my hands were trembling and my temples throbbing with excitement. As I drove, I could see old John Ferrier and sweet Lucy looking at me out of the darkness and smiling at me just as plain as I see you all in this room. All the way they were ahead of me, one on each side of the horse, until I pulled up at the house in the Brixton road. "There was not a soul to be seen, nor a sound to be heard, except the dripping of the rain. When I looked in at the window, I found Drebber all huddled together in a drunken sleep. I shook him by the arm, 'It's time to go out,' I

"'All right, cabby,' said he. "I suppose he thought we had come to the hotel that he had mentioned, for he got out without another word and followed me down the garden. I had to walk beside him to keep him steady, for he was still a little top heavy. When we came to the door, I opened it and led him into the front room. I give you my word that, all the way, the father and daughter were walking in front of us.
"'It's infernally dark,' said he stamping about. "'We'll soon have a light,' I said, striking a match and putting it to a wax candle which I had brought with me. 'Now, Enoch Drebber,' I continued. turning to him and holding the light to my own face, 'who am I?'

"He gazed at me with bleared, drunken eyes for a moment, and then I saw a horror spring up in them and convulse his whole features, which showed me that he knew me. He staggered back with a livid face, and I saw the perspiration broak out upon his brow, while his teeth chattered. At the sight I leaned my back against the door and laughed loud and long. I had always known that vengeance would be sweet, but had never hoped for the contentment of soul which now possessed me.

"'You dog!' I said. "I have hunted you from Salt Lake City to St. Petersburg, and you have always escaped me. Now at last your wanderings have come to an end, for either you or I shall never see tomorrow's sun rise.' He shrank still farther away as I spoke, and I could see on his face that he thought I was mad. So I was for the time. The pulses in my temples beat like sledge hammers, and I believe I would have had a fit of some sort if the blood had not gushed from my nose and relieved me.

"'What do you think of Lucy Ferrier now?' I cried, locking the door and shaking the key in his face. 'Punish ment has been slow in coming, but it has overtaken you at last.' I saw his coward lips tremble as I spoke. He would have begged for his life, but he knew well that it was useless. "Would you murder me? he stam

"There is no murder,' I answered. Who talks of murdering a mad dog? What mercy had you upon my poor darling when you dragged her from her slaughtered father and bore her away to you accursed and shameless harem? "It was not I who killed her fa ther!' he oried.

"But it was you who broke her in nocent heart!' I shricked, thrusting the box before him. 'Let the high God judge between us. Choose and eat. There is death in one and life in the other. I shall take what you leave. Let us see if there is justice upon the earth or if we are ruled by chance.'

"He cowered away with wild cries and prayers for mercy, but I drew my knife and held it to his throat until he had obeyed me. Then I swallowed the other, and we stood facing one another in silence for a minute or more, waiting to see which was to live and which was to die. Shall I ever forget the look which came over his face when the first warning pangs told him that the poison was in his system? I laughed as I saw it and held Lucy's marriage ring in front of his eyes. It was but for a moment, for the action of the alkaloid is rapid. A spasm of pain contorted his features. He threw his hands out in front of him, staggered, and then, with a hoarse cry, fell heavily upon the floor. I turned him over with my foot and placed my hand upon his heart. There was no movement. He was dead!

"The blood had been streaming from my nose, but I had taken no notice of it. I don't know what it was that put it into my head to write upon the wall with it. Perhaps it was some mischievous idea of setting the police upon a wrong track, for I felt light hearted and cheerful. I remembered a German being found in New York with 'Rache' written up above him, and it was argued at the time in the newspapers that the secret societies must have done it. I guessed that what puzzled the New Yorkers would puzzle the Londoners, so I dipped my finger in my own blood and printed it on a convenient place on the wall. Then I walked down to my cab and found that there was nobody about, and that the night was still very wild. I had driven some distance when I put my hand into the pocket in which I usually kept Lucy's ring and found that it was not there. I was thunderstruck at this. for it was the only memento that I had of her. Thinking that I might have dropped it when I stooped over Drebber's body, I drove back, and leaving my cab in a side street I went boldly up to the house, for I was ready to dare anything rather than lose the ring. When I arrived there, I walked right into the arms of a police officer who was coming out and only managed to disarm his suspicions by pretending to be hopelessly drunk.

"That was how Enoch Drebber came to his end. All I had to do then was to do as much for Stangerson, and so pay off John Ferrier's debt. I knew that he was staying at Halliday's Private hotel, and I hung about all day, but he never came out. Ifancy that he suspected something when Drebber failed to put in an appearance. He was cunning, was Stangerson, and always on his guard. If he thought he could keep me off by staying indoors, he was very much mistaken. I soon found out which was the window of his bedroom, and early next morning I took advantage of some ladders which were lying in the lane behind the hotel, and so made my way into his room in the gray of the dawn. "I woke him up and told him that the hour had come when he was to answer for the life he had taken so long before. I described Drebber's death to him, and I gave him the same choice of the poisoned pills. Instead of grasping at the chance of safety which that offered him, he sprang from his bed and flew at my throat. In self defense I stabbed him to the heart. It would have been the same in any case, for Providence would never have allowed his guilty hand to pick out anything but the poi-

"I have little more to say, and it's as well, for I am about done up. I went on cabbing it for a day or so, intending to keep at it until I could save enough to take me back to America. I was standing in the yard when a ragged youngster asked if there was a cabby there called Jefferson Hope and said that his cab was wanted by a gentleman at 221b Baker street. I went round. suspecting no harm, and the next thing I knew this young man here had the bracelets on my wrists and as neatly shackled as ever I was in my life. That's the whole of my story, gentlemen. You may consider me to be a murderer, but I hold that I am just as much an officer of justice as you are." So thrilling had the man's narrative been, and his manner was so impressive, that we had sat silent and absorbed. Even the professional detectives, blase as they were in every detail of crime, appeared to be keenly interested in the man's story. When he finished, we sat for some minutes in a stillness which was only broken by the scratching of Lestrade's pencil as he gave the finishing touches to his shorthand ac-

"There is only one point on which I should like a little more information,' Sherlock Holmes said at last. "Who was your accomplice who came for the ring which I advertised?" The prisoner winked at my friend jocosely. "I can tell my own secrets," he said, "but I don't get other people into trouble. I saw your advertisement, and I thought it might be a plant, or it might be the ring I wanted. My friend volunteered to go and see. I think you'll own he did it smartly.' "Not a doubt of that," said Holmes heartily. "Now, gentlemen," the inspector remarked gravely, "the forms of the law must be complied with. On Thursday the prisoner will be brought before the magistrates, and your attendance will be required. Until then I will be responsible for him." He rang the bell as he spoke, and Jefferson Hope was led off by a couple of warders, while my friend and I made our way out of the station and took a cab back to Baker street.

CHAPTER VII. We had all been warned to appear before the magistrates upon the Thursday, but when the Thursday came there was no occasion for our testimony. A higher Judge had taken the matter in hand, and Jefferson Hope had been summoned before a tribunal where strict justice would be meted out to him. On the very night after his capture the aneurism burst, and he was found in the morning stretched upon the floor of the cell, with a placid smile upon his face, as though he had been able in his dying moments to look back upon a useful life and on work well done.

"Gregson and Lestrade will be wild about his death," Holmes remarked as we chatted it over next evening. "Where will their grand advertisement be now?" "I don't see that they had very much o do with his capture." I answered

"What you do in this world is a matter of no consequence," returned my companion bitterly. "The question is, What can you make people believe you have done? Never mind,3, he continued more brightly after a pause, "I would not have missed the investigation for anything. There has been no better case within my recollection. Simple as it was, there were several most instructive ooints about it." "Simple!" I ejaculated.

"Well, really, it can hardly be decribed as otherwise," said Sherlock Holmes, smiling at my surprise. "The proof of its intrinsic simplicity is that without any help, save a very few ordinary deductions, I was able to lay my hand upon the criminal within three days." "That is true," said I. "I have already explained to you that what is out of the common is usually a guide rather than a hindrance. In solving a problem of this sort the grand thing is to be able to reason backward. That is a very useful accomplishment and a very easy one, but people do not practice it much. In the everyday affairs of life it is more useful to reason forward, and so the other comes to be neglected. There are 50 who can reason synthetically for one who can reason analytically.

"I confess," said I, "that I do not quite follow you." "I hardly expected that you would. Let me see if I can make it clear. Most people, if you describe a train of events to them, will tell you what the result would be. They can put those events together in their minds and argue from them that something will come to pass. There are few people, however, who, if von told them a result, would be able to evolve from their own inner consciousness what the steps were which led up to that result. This power is what I mean when I talk of reasoning backward, or analytically."

"I understand," said I. "Now, this was a case in which you were given the result and had to find everything else for yourself. Now, let me endeavor to show you the different steps in my reasoning. To begin at the beginning, I approached the house, as you know, on foot and with my mind entirely free from all impressions. naturally began by examining the roadway, and there, as I have already explained to you, I saw clearly the marks of a cab, which, I ascertained by inquiry, must have been there during the night. I satisfied myself that it was a cab and not a private carriage by the narrow gauge of the wheels. The ordinary London growler is considerably less wide than a gentleman's brougham.

"This was the first point gained. I then walked slowly down the garden path, which happened to be composed of a clay soil, peculiarly suitable for taking impressions. No doubt it appeared to you to be a mere trampled line of slush, but to my trained eye every mark upon its surface had a meaning. There is no branch of detective science which is so important and so much neglected as the art of tracing footsteps. Happily I have always laid great stress upon it, and much practice has made it second nature to me. I saw the heavy footmarks of the constables, but I saw also the tracks of the two men who had first passed through the garden. It was easy to tell that they had been before the others, because in places their marks had been entirely obliterated by the others coming upon the top of them. In this way my second link was formed, which told me that the nocturnal visitors were two in number, one remarkable for his height, as I calculated from the length of his stride, and the other fashionably dressed, to judge from the small and elegant impression left by his boots. "On entering the house this last inference was confirmed. My well booted man lay before mo. The tall one, then, had done the murder, if murder there was. There was no wound upon the dead man's porson, but the agitated expression upon his face assured me that he had foreseen his fate before it came upon him. Men who die from heart dis ease or any sudden natural cause nevel by any chance exhibit agitation upor their features. Having sniffed the dead man's lips, I detected a slightly sour smell, and I came to the conclusion that he had had poison forced upon him. Again, I argued that it had been forced upon him from the hatred and fear expressed upon his face. By the method of exclusion I had arrived at this result, for no other hypothesis would meet the facts. Do not imagine that it was a very unheard of idea. The forcible administration of poison is by no means a new thing in criminal annals. The cases of Dolsky in Odessa and of Leturier in Montpellier will occur at once to any toxicologist.

"And now came the great question as to the reason why. Robbery had not been the object of the murder, for nothing was taken. Was it politics, then, or was it a woman? That was the question which confronted me. I was inclined from the first to the latter supposition. Political assassins are only too glad to do their work and to fiy. This murder had, on the contrary, been done most deliberately, and the perpetrator had left his tracks all over the room, showing that he had been there all the time It must have been a private wrong and not a political one which called for such a methodical reverge. When the inscription was discovered upon the wall, I was more inclined than ever to my opinion. The thing was too evidently a blind. When the ring was found, however, it settled the question. Clearly the murderer hal used it to remind his victim of some dead or absent woman. It was at this point that I asked Gregson whether he had inquired in his telegram to Cleve hand as to any particular point in Air. Drebber's former career. He answered, you remember, in the negative. "I then proceeded to make a careful examination of the room, which confirmed me in my comion as to the murderer's height and furnished me with the additional detail as to the Trichinopoly eigar and the length of his nails. I had already come to the conclusion, since there were in signs of a struggle, that the blood which covered the floor had burst from the murderer's nose in his excitement. I could perceive that the track of blood coincided with the track of his feet. It is seldom that any man, unless he is very full blooded. breaks out in this way through emotion, so I hazarded the opinion that the criminal was probably a robust and ruddy faced man. Events proved that I had judged correctly.

"Having left the house, I proceeded to do what Gregson had neglected. I telegraphed to the head of the police at Cleveland, limiting my inquiry to the circumstances connected with the marriage of Enoch Drebber. The answer was conclusive. It told me that Drebber had already applied for the protection of the law against an old rival in love, named Jeffer on Pope, and that this same Hope was at present in Europe. I knew now that I held the clew to the mystery in my hand and all that remained was to scenre the murderer. "I had already determined in my o mind that the man who had walked into the house with Drebber was none other than the man who had driven the cab. The marks in the road showed mo that the horse had wandered on in a way which would have been impossible had there been any one in charge of it. Where, then, could the driver be unless he were inside the house? Again, it is absurd to suppose that any sane man would carry out a deliberate crime under the very eyes, as it were, of a third person who was sure to betray him. Lastly, supposing one man wished to dog another through London, what better means could he adopt than to turn cab driver? All these considerations led me to the irresistible conclusion that Jefferson Hope was to be found among the jarveys of the metropolis. "If he had been one, there was no reason to believe that he had ceased to be. On the contrary, from his point of view, any sudden change would be likely to draw attention to himself. He would probably, for a time at least, continue to perform his duties. There was no reason to suppose that he was going under an assumed name. Why should he change his name in a country where no one knew his original one? I therefore organized my street arab detective corps and sent them systematically to every cab proprietor in London until they ferreted out the man that I wanted. How well they succeeded and how quickly I took advantage of it are still fresh in your recollection. The murder of Stangerson was an incident which was entirely unexpected, but which could hardly in any case have been prevented. Through it, as you know, I came into possession of the pills, the existence of which I had already surmised. You see, the whole is a chain of logical sequences without a break or flaw." "It is wonderful!" I cried. "Your merits should be publicly recognized. You should publish an account of the case. If you won't, I will for you." "You may do what you like, doctor,"

he answered. "See here!" he continued, handing a paper over to me. "Look at this!" It was The Echo for the day, and the paragraph to which he pointed was devoted to the case in question. "The public," it said, "have lost a sensational treat through the sudden death of the man Hope, who was suspected of the murder of Mr. Enoch Drebber and of Mr. Joseph Stangerson. The details of the case will probably never be known now, though we are informed upon good authority that the crime was the result of an old standing and romantic feud in which love and Mormonism bore a part. It seems that both the victims belonged in their younger days to the Latter Day Saints, and Hope, the deceased prisoner, hails also from Salt Lake City. If the case has had no other effect, it at least brings out in the most striking manner the efficiency of our detective police force and will serve as a lesson to all foreigners that they will do wisely to settle their feuds at home and not to carry them on to British soil. It is an open secret that the credit of this smart capture belongs entirely to the well known Scotland Yard officials, Messrs. Lestrade and Gregson. The man was apprehended, it appears, in the rooms of a certain Mr. Sherlock Holmes, who has himself, as an amateur, shown some talent in the detective line, and who, with such instructors, may hope in time to attain to some degree of their skill. It is expected that a testimonial of some sort will be presented to the two officers as a fitting recognition of their services. "Didn't I tell you so when we started?" cried Sherlock Holmes, with a laugh. "That's the result of all our Study In Scarlet—to get them a testi-

THOSE OF THE LAKES THAT THE SKIPPERS CALL SWASHES.

They Rise Suddenly From Calm Water and Display Many Strange Caprices-An Old Lake Eric Skipper Talks Interestingly on the Subject.

'Tidal waves on the great lakes are not of uncommon occurrence," said an ald Lake Erie skipper, "and although meteorological exports have for more than 100 years tried to study out their cause we don't know any more about it now than they did at the time the great wave rose suddenly on Lake Erie, off Rockport, and destroyed Colonel Bradstreet's fleet, in October, 1764. That was the first tidal wave on the lakes that we have any record of. "I have seen many of these swashes, as we call them on the lakes, the last one about ten years ago, when my schooner was swept high and dry at Port Stanley by a wave that seemed to rise on the lake like some monster marine animal coming from the depths to the surface. We could see it rushing toward us a mile away. It came with a boiling front ten feet high, hissing like loud escaping steam as it swept toward us. That is a peculiar thing about the lake tidal waves. They do not come with a roar, like the ocean surf, but with a loud, hissing sound, and there is only one instance on record where they are either accompanied or followed by strong winds. "That one instance was at Toledo, in December, 1856, when the wind, which had been blowing stiff offshore, suddenly whirled into a howling nor'easter, and as quick as the change in the wind that wave leaned out of the lake and came hurling upon the shore, a wild and angry mass, eight feet high. In every other recorded occurrence of these mysterious freaks of the lake waters the surface of the lake has been perfectly calm and the air scarcely perceptible. "Such was the condition when that big wave attacked us at Port Stanley, swamping my schooner and drowning one of my men. The wave receded as fast as it had rushed in, and the lake, in less than ten minutes, was as smooth as a mirror. "Within the next hour there were four more swashes, each one of less force and volume, until the last was scarcely more than a ripple.

"Almost the first thing I remember, for I was but three years old at the time, was one of these tidal waves. It appeared early in the spring on the Canada shore, off Otter Creek. There was a piece of woods there then, with a long stretch of beach between it and the lying off the shore half a mile or more. The water was a dead calm, when, without warning of any kind, a wave lifted itself from the bosom of the lake, probably 11/2 miles out, and swept shoreward with its mighty hiss. My mother and I were with father on his schooner. As that swash came rushing upon us it seemed to me as if the leaping foam of its white crest was higher than the schooner's masts, but I know now that it was not more than 12 feet high. The wave was high enough and strong enough, though, to sweep the schooner ashore as if it had been a cockleshell, and across that stretch of beach into the woods, where it was left among the trees, a hopeless wreck.

"In ten minutes the lake was as calm as ever, but an hour later a similar wave appeared at Kettle Creek, 20 miles from Otter Creek, and tumbled all sorts of lake craft ashore.

"I guess the greatest tidal wave ever seen on any of the lakes was the one Dr. Foster and his party of voyagers saw on Lake Superior, between Copper harbor and Eagle river. That was in August, 1845. This swash was more than 20 feet high, and, like all of its kind, sprung suddenly from the lake at dead calm. It was a quarter of a mile distant from Dr. Foster's boat, which, when the disturbance began, was directly in the path of the wave. It was crested with foam, and curled over like a mighty ocean surge. Before reaching the boat, however, the wave turned s that its nearest extremity swept past it at a distance of 50 feet, the water between that extremity and the boat being scarcely ruffled by the influence of the rushing tide.

"The wave was only half a mile from shore, but notwithstanding its great size and velocity it never reached there The same mysterious caprice that caused it to change its course and pass harmlessly by the vessel seemed to seize it once more, and it sank rapidly from its great height as it approached the shore and struck the beach with no more force or rise of water than might have come from the wash of a passing vessel. "I remember a notable swash on Lake

Michigan at the mouth of the Menominee. That one appeared in April, 1858, and rushed into the river with such tremendous force and volume that it upset the ferryboat on the Menomine The recurrent oscillations of thes. swashes are usually of decreasing size and force but this one on the Menominee wasn't that kind. The ebb of this tide was just as sudden as its flow, but in a few minutes it was followed by another wave much larger than the first one, and the ebb of the second swash was followed by a wave still larger than the second. "That seemed to satisfy the mood of the lake at Menominee that day, and, with the receding of the third wave, calmness even unwonted prevailed on its bosom. The time between the coming of the first wave and the receding of the third was less than 20 minutes.

"The curious thing about these lake tidal waves is that they are entirely local in their influence. A swash, even of the greatest force and height, may not affect more than a mile of lake front, the water at either end of them being undisturbed beyond that distance. They always come in from the open water."-New York Sun. concerning Wagon Wheels.

A writer in The Rural New Yorker

says: "There is no gain in power by enlarging the size of wagon wheels. The only advantage of the large wheel over a smaller one is that the excess of leverage will be a help in lifting the load on the wheel over inequalities on a road. On a perfect and an equally smooth surface, a small wheel will carry as much load as a large one with the same power. There is obviously some difference in favor of a small wheel, apparently due to the lifting of the load by the horse, as the line of draft is upward to some extent. But so far as the horse is concerned there is obviously no gain to it, as the exertion of the lifting must neutralize some of the force exerted, and thus, in fact; the work done by the animal is not lessened to any appreciable extent. The easiest draft is due to the line of traction being perpendicular to the line of the shoulder of the horse, by which the pressure on the shoulde is made the most direct. Neglect of this is the cause of the galling of the shoulders of horses."

SUNDAY SCHOOL EVANGEL.

REV. O. J. ROBERTS.

This column is open to any who has any communication bearing upon practical Sunday School work, or has any news concerning the progress of the work. We solicit correspondence along these lines from all workers.

The eye, the ear, and last word, is a sentence fraught with meaning for Sunday school teachers.

Get rid of workers whose temperanents are "unfortunate", whose heads are not level, no matter how cultivated they may be. Better far is it to be netrodox than cantankerous. The committee in charge are planning to make the District Convention at Crystal Springs July 31 and Aug. 1, the greatest gathering of Sunday school workers ever held in South-Western Michigan, The regular Sunday School Convention for Buchanan township will be held on the afternoon and evening of the third Saturday and Sabbath in May. One entire session will be devoted to primary work. Hand and heart touch is one of the essential features of successful teaching. A man that hath friends must show himself friendly. An Indian at a mission school, writing to a friend, sa d: "I shake hands with you with my heart." We will very much miss the Rev. Geo. Johnson in our township Sunday echool work, as he was always a valuable man on any committee, and very helpful at Conventions. We bid him

God speed as he departs, and cordially welcome his successor, Bro. Berger. Mr. B. S. Reid, a tried Sunday school worker in Cass county, writes regarding the District Convention: "I think we shall be prepared in this undertaking. It will do well." Mr. L. G. Stewart, another faithful, experienced Sunday school man from Van Buren eounty, writes: "Is there anything I can do? If so, write me at once, or any time, and I will arrange my matters so

I can attend to it." Theodore Cnyler quotes a southern slave, of the old times, who replied to one who said, "I hope your master has gone to Heaven," with the very wise remark: "I's afraid he has not gone dar, fur I neber heard him speak o' dat. When he go to de norf', or to de Verginny Springs, he allus be gittin' ready fur weeks. I neber see him gittin' ready fur goin' to heben." Dear reader, will any one have reason to believe you have gone to Heaven when you are dead! Do you spend any time in preparation? Where were your last prayer meeting evening? What do you read on Sunday? You go to church, to be sure, but do you wait on God in the sanctuary?

The summary of the Sabbath school work in Kalamazoo Presbytery for 1894-95, shows: 19 schools, 333 officers and teachers, with 2613 pupils; total, 2946. They are all ever green schools. The average attendance is 1613. Eighteen schools report using the Westminister Lesson Helps; 11 report that they do not use the Shorter Catechism. Books in libraries, 2375. Amount of money or to the Sabbath School 72; to other boards of the accon, φ214.33; to other benevolence, $50.05; total for benevolence, $438.15; amount for local school work, $1371.37. Total monies raised, $1809.52. In the amount of money given for benevolence, Buchanan Presbyterian Sabbath school stands third, Kalamazoo first, and Niles being in advance of it. A dark feature of the report is, that of the 2946 members, only 425 are reported as church members, and only 86 that have united with the church from the Sabbath school.

John Bull in Central America. The United States government has been officially informed of the occupation by the British of the city of Corinto, Nicaragua, the situation in that country is at this writing, as follows: Great Britain has occupied Corinto, the principal seaport of Nicaragua, and the British flag waves above the town. The three ships—Royal Arthur, Sattellite and Wild Swan, have taken positions where they can command the appoaches to the town. The Nicaraguans-military and civilians-have abandoned the place, the soldiers withdrawing to the heighth on the mainland—Corinto is on a sort of island and preparing to fight, it seems, if the British shall make any effort to move into the interior. To checkmate the British and prolong and complicate the trouble with difficulty into the domain of the Monroe docrine and getting it where the United States must interfere, the Nicaraguan government has closed the port of Corinto. This will prevent merchant ships from intering to discharge cargo, for if they should do so the goods should not go into the intorior without danger of seizure by the Micaraguaus. The only way to meet this move, for the British, will be for them to occupy other Nicaraguan ports as they are made ports of entry, until the cost is blocaded; or declare war and capture the capital, Managua.

The Wayne Hotel, Detroit.

Tois Hotel was completed and open ed by a banquet to the newspaper men, in December, 1887. With its furnishings and fittings it cost upwards of $250,000. It was owned by the Cass estate, and was first leased to W. P. F. Meserve, who engaged Mr. James R. Hayes as manager.

Sometime after there was a change in the proprietorship, and Mr. Hayes became lessee and proprietor. The original lease expired last month, but it was renewed and Mr. Hayes secured the house for a long term of years. When built this Hotel was considered completed in every detail, but the march of progress has affected hotels as everything else, and of late the Wayne has a led come things needed for the utmost comfort of its guests. No one ecognized this fact as fully as Mr.

Hayes, but he could not put his ideas of improvement into execution until be had secured the lease and this delayed matters. As soon as the new lease was signed he started the improvements that will not only make Wayne what it was at its opening but for surpass this.

Among the many improvements and they will be very thorough when complete, is the lay of a new tile floor in the lavatory, the supplying of hot water where there has been none before, and the complete renovation of the Gentlemen's Toilet room where the old wooden fitings and appurtenances have given way to marble and the latest sanitary appliances. The Bar Room has been entirely refurnished. The old wooden floor has been replaced by marble tiles and handsome quarted oak bar furniture and fixtures have been put in to keep pace with the other improvements. Marble floor, new furniture and decorations in the Readiug Room. The next move was the refurnishing of the Dining Room. Here also marble flooring replaced wood; the ceiling and sidewalls were repainted in lighter and more dainty tints, and new silver table service was provided. Nor was this all; the old stair case leading from the Office to the Dining Room floor, which was of wood and had an abrupt and awkward turn at the bot-

the bottom of the stairs were torn out and replaced by gracefully curved marble platform or landing. While these improvements have already been made, the changes are not by any means complete. The old slow going elevator has been relegated to the past and a new safety Crane elevator, hydraulic, adds to the confort of the guests. Mr. Hayes has also put in an electric light plant, which has a capacity of 700 lights and taken out the annoying old engine, the rattle and clatter of which proved a disturbing element. In its place, with settings that reach to hard pan, is the new machinery, engine and electric dynamo. and from them all there is scarcely vibration enough to be felt even in the engine room, which is entirely sepa-

The improvements already made have cost $25,000. When spring shall make it possible a large number of bath rooms are to be added to the house, and the latest improved steam heating system be put in, and every room supplied with a heater These improvements, when complete, will make the Wayne rank favorably with any hotel in the whole country. The article on Gowns for Commencement Day is most attractively illustrated, and is planned to give ample time for preparing the attire for this imortant occasion. Another timely article is Mrs. Roger A. Pryor's on Weddings and Wedding Germonies, given with facsimile invitations to some very distinguished social events. A very interesting paper on Oberlin College is from the pen of Edith Dickson, and Mae Harris Anson writes eleverly of Government Clerkship as an Employment for Women. There is a very suggestive and valuable illustrated article on the Laying and Decoration of the Dining Table, another on Seasonable Cookery, with a Review of the Markets, and most pleasant Around the Tea-Table. Mrs. Georgen's arcicle on The Cultivation of The Voice will be appreciated by all who are interested in the subject, and the chapters on Mother and Son draw to a pleasant ending. The Fancy Work Departments are well filted with novelties, new designs being shown in Knitting, Grocheting, Tatting Notting, &c.

Knitting, Crocheting, Taiting Netting, &c.

Women's colleges receive Dr. Parkhurst's attention in the May Letties' Home Journal, and the vigor with which he treats the subject is unmistakable. The fact that Florence Nightingalo reaches the ripe age of seventy-five years this month is made the interesting sketch of "The Angel of the Crimea," as she is today, showing a new portrait of her and a view of her London home. John Kendrick Bangs is irresistibly fanny in his report of the sixth meeting of "The Pardise Club." The full score of the "Concert Mazurka," by the well-known composer, Bruno Oscar Klein, the piano composition which won the second prise in the Journal's musical series, is given. Exquisitly illustrated and timely articles are Mrs. Mallon's "Dainty Commencement Gowns" and "The Silks of the Summer." The cover of this May Journal is a reproduction of one Albert Lynch's beautiful girls set into an artistic frame. This beautiful magazine is sold at ten cents per number and at one dollar a year, by the Cartis Paplishing Company, Philadelphia.

Harper's maintains its reputation as the best

Harper's maintains its reputation as the best collection of short stories. The May number contains three, each treating a phase of American life, and each wildly different from the others in scene and manner. Owen Wister's "La Tinaja Bonita," is a love story of Arizona, with a desert and a drought for a hack ground; Robert Gravt, in "By Hook or Crook," relates an incident in the social career of a prosperous Boston architect: social career of a prosperous Boston architect; and Julian Ralph "Dutch Etity's White Slip-pers," introduces his readers to another set of "People We Pass" in the East-side of New York.

A FRAGMENT.

Death is that honored messenger who brings
The proof of God's remembrance. In his hand
He bears an invitation from the King.
They only weep who wait the summons hence.
Those glad souls basking in the light of God.
Forget that tears and sin e'er dimmed their sight.

WHAT GOOD ROADS WILL DO.

Knock Down the Barriers That Now Iso-Civilization and culture have always gone hand in hand with business relation and social intercourse. The more closely men are brought into contact the more they learn to appreciate the good that is in all and to recognize the common bond which should unite them in one great brotherhood. Now, every impassable road is an unsuperable barrier to local advancement, cutting off intercommunication and closing all avenues which lead to social and intellectual development. For the highest good of any community it is quite essential that facilities be established for communication with the outside world, especially with the great centers of civilization, literature, traffic and art. This may be carried on by travel or through the medium of the cents to enable those who so desire to | mail service, preferably by both, but bad roads obstruct both.

Good roads will metamorphose the present unfortunate state of affairs in country towns and introduce the advantages, the polish, refinement and civility now supposed to exist almost exclusively in cities. The quickened intelligence and stimulated thought which result from the constant watching of the political, scientific and religious movements going on will largely banish the mental vacuity which sooner or later takes possession of those whom circumstances consign to isolation.

It will be found impracticable, even in so good a cause, to adopt any revolutionary measures involving great and unusual expense without the intervention and assistance of the state. Farmers will not vote upon their towns high taxes necessary to meet the requirement of establishing and keeping in repair roads good enough to meet the present demand. Whenever we can secure smooth and permanent highways it will be a positive pleasure not merely to ride over them with a light team in a springy buggy, but even to take heavy loads to market, and the worst dreaded and most obnoxious phase of rural life will have become a thing of the past. Then farmers, instead of being the most discontented, fault finding and despondent of mortals, will be the happiest, most independent and most envied.—W. W.

Pendergast. 🖟 Trolley Car Wheels. Car wheels do not last long, as the dirt and sand on the rail, together with the almost constant application of the brakes, have the tendency to wear them out. As soon as the flange becomes sharp or the tread nueven the wheel must be removed. A wheel on a motor car averages about 350 pounds, is made of chilled iron and will make about 35. 000 miles before it is thrown on the scrap heap. The average cost of a wheel is 2 cents per pound, and to replace a wheel costs about $3 to $5, while the old wheels are taken back at from $1.75 to $2.50 apiece, according to weight. Steel tired wheels cost considerably more money than cast iron, yet they are not very popular, and but comparatively few are used, even if they last longer in service. - Philadelphia Press.

"Don John of Austria," Staveley tells us, "governor of the Netherlands, dying in his camp at Nemours, was carried from thence to the great church at Havre, where his funeral was solemnized and a monument erected to him by the Prince of Parma. His body was afterward taken to pieces, and the bones, packed in mails, were privately carried into Spain, where, being set together. with small wires, the body was rejointed again, and, being stuffed with cotton and richly habited, Don John was presented to the king entire, leaning on his commander's staff." It was the grewsome custom in Spain to set up the corpse of its king in state and to have him waited upon as though he were landings of marble to make more easy alive.—London Illustrated News.

HASHEESH SMOKING.

A PREVAILING HABIT AMONG THE TUNKS AND PERSIANS.

It Produces Vivid Dreams, Sometime Causes Terrible Suffering and Is Always

sojourn in Turkey has this to say of the famous drug: Among my purchases at the drugs bazaar at Constantinople was hasheesh. It is strictly illegal to buy or sell this, and the vender made a great show of mystery about the transaction, besides charging me ten times the right price. It is a soft black stick or coil, made with indian hemp and sundry sweet essences. It may either be drunk with water, eaten as it is, smoked in hubble hubbles or smoked in little terra cotta

It is said to have the power of conferring a dual personality upon those who take it. Their dreams are extraordinarily vivid, and every detail of them is remembered for a long time afterward. They do not go off to sleep, but have a kind of fit, which does not sound particularly agreeable, though for some reason or other is evidently popular. These at least are said to be the commonest effects of tho drug, but it affects different people in different ways, and so some get no further than a bad head-

It has been used by magicians ever since the middle ages. I remember during the esoteric Buddhism craze some years ago a friend of mine who was bitten by it got hold of some hasheesh and ato it, in the expectation of being able to project his soul across the garden. The hasheesh was badly mixed, and a heavy dose of it had no effect what-

He found that his soul persisted in remaining where it was. So he grew bold and helped himself to another lump, in which all the strength of the hemp happened to be concentrated. The result was that two doctors had to walk him up and down the garden all night to provent his falling into a sleep that would know no waking. Though its use is forbidden in Constantinople, hasheesh is said to be extensively smoked there, especially among the Persians. I told my guide that l must see this sight, and after a great deal of trouble I managed to get taken to a real hasheesh den. It was a fairly large square room, with a divan running all around it. The walls were whitewashed, and the carpets on the floor were cheap and shabby. One common oil lamp hung from the ceiling, with a big green shade. The center of the room was empty, and there were no tables or looking glasses in it. Two men were squatting Turkish fashion on the divan.

For a long time they seemed to be in a kind of trance, slabbering at the corners of their lips and muttering like madmen. After a short time one of them became livelier and more excited. He burst into a wild laugh which shook his whole body. He placed his hand to his nose, and beginning to stroke it at the top passed his hand down into the air as if his nose had reached an inordinate length.

An attendant passed by with a coffee cup, and the smoker made a wild effort to turn aside his head, angrily telling the attendant to be off, as he was treading on his nose. Then came another wild burst of laughter, and the fit was at an end. His reason gradually seemed to get the upper hand, and he proceeded to express his wonder that he could have fancied that his nose had grown so long. Then, putting his hand up to it, he remarked, "All the same, it is hurting mo confoundedly-just as if some one had twisted it roughly." And, sure enough, the nose was unnaturally red. It is said that under the influence of hashcesh you know neither time nor place, and that if you fix your thoughts on some place, however distant, that you have never seen you obtain a clear and accurate image of it. I was told a story of a man who had taken hasheesh with the grave and find out all about the fu-He soon exclaimed that he was feeling very cold, then that he was going to die. He grew very pale, his feet became numb, and the cold began to get complete possession of him. His sense of hearing became indistinct. Everything seemed to grow dark around him, and he called for light. Then he stretched out his limbs and remained fixed and immovable. A cold thick sweat was all over him, and the pallor of death was on his face. Then the attendant thought it was time to come to the rescue, and he rubbed his face and nostrils with lemon juice and made him sit up. The man presently opened his oyes and absently sipped a cup of coffee that was brought to him. When he recovered his senses completely, he was very angry with the attendant for interfering with him just as he had been on the point of penetrating the unknown.

"assassin" is derived from "hasheeshian," a taker of hasheesh. English Will Soon Be Universal. Gladstone computes that the habitual speakers of the English language have increased from 15,000,000 to 105,000,-000 during the last 100 years, and that

ROAD MOVEMENT IN TEXAS. A System of Good Roads to Be Perfected.

Foundation For Swamp Land. *Road improvement in Texas, as in many other states, is gaining many friends. At a recent meeting of the Texas Road league a large delegation was present. The concensus of opinion was that Texas should perfect a system of good roads at the least expense to the citizens of the state. General Roy Stone, office of road inquiry, department of agriculture, was present and cited the state of New Jersey as an example of the results of having good roads. He said that this state extended aid to the counties in their road building, some 33 per cent, the county paying the remainder. The results to the farmers living in the vicinity of the macadamized roads were in marked contrast to those on the old highways. In the case of the former they were almost invariably prosperous, while the latter were still struggling along to eke out a scanty living. Some of the farmers on the new roads had been able to pay off $1,000 a year on their farm mortgage, while in former years with the poor roads they had not been able to pay even the interest. Another farmer told General Stone that the saving in the repairs on his harnesses and wagons on account of the smooth surface of the new roads had more than paid for the extra taxes for the new roads, thus leaving their use practically free to him. Speaking of the roads in Louisiana and the conditions attending any attempt to improve them, General Stone said that many systems had been tried in road construction, but none was found on trial to be better than the macadam method. He would advocate in the state, especially when the route of the road lay through a swamp or marshy land, that a heavy 'corduroy' road be laid as the foundation, and on top of that a thick coating of earth; then, finally, a macadamized surface laid on top of that.

Several piscatorially inclined persons went trout fishing early yesterday morning, and we persume enjoyed the sport there is in angling for their gamey and toothsome little fish. Others were mad clear through, when they arrived at their usual fishing grounds, to find the sign, "No tresspassing on these grounds", staring them in the face. Mr. Wm. Conradt met with a painful accident Tuesday morning which will confine him to his home for several days if not more. While pushing a drag through a wire fence one end of the drag dropped on his foot and one of the teeth went entirely through his foot, inflicting a painful wound. List of letters remaining uncalled for in the post-office at Buchanan, Mich. for the week ending April 29, 1895: Mrs. B. Thomas. Mrs. Frank White. Mr. Peak Allen, Abraham Weaver, J. F. Emmerson.

Our Berrien Centre items are worthy of especial notice this week inasmuch as they were prepared by probably one of the youngest newspaper correspondents on record, the age of the young miss in question being just thirteen years. Her name is Miss Josie B. Palmer and she prepared the items in the absence of her father who is the RECORD's regular correspondent.

The Galien Advocate has been enlarged to a five-column quarto, and in an editorial last week the publishers stated. "that it had ceased to be an experiment and had become a fixture in Galien." The RECORD extends congratulaions to the young ladies, who have shown so much pluck and energy The fire department had a little pracin establishing and conducting the

> The Niles Star says, "It looks as if Buchanan's boom had bursted." Don't you fool yourself in that style, editor Cook. Just come over to Buchanan, and if you can fine anything that looks like a "bursted boom" lying around loose, the RECORD will pay your expenses and reward you for the discovery. For a "bursted boom", it is a pretty lively one as the RECORD can testify.

At the common council meeting held Tuesday night, the programme as planned was carried out. The petition containing 172 signatures, $4 of which were voters, and relative to the power of the board to reject saloon bonds. and which had been referred to a special committee of three of the trustees, was not acted upon as the committee had "been so busy" that they could not hold any meeting to consider the petition. The saloon bond of A. J. Carothers with H. D. Rough and Solomon Rough as sureties was approved. The train has been at work laying rails on | bond of Wm. Burks with the same sureties was rejected, as the council did not consider the sureties as sufficient for both bonds.

There has been so many misleading statements being published in the various papers, regarding Buchanan's industries that a RECORD representative was sent to the various factories this week for the purpose of finding out just how men were being employed and the amount paid out in wages each month. Only six of the leading factories were visited with the following result: Kompass & Stoll, 25 hands, monthly pay roll, $800; Bainton Bros., 7 hands. pay roll $325; Lee & Porter 50 hands, pay roll $2500; Hatch Cutlery Co., 125 hands, pay roll $4000; Buchanan Cabinet Co., 33 hands, pay roll $1350; Zinc Collar Pad Co., 8 hands, pay roll $275; making a total of 248 hands employed at the present time with a pay roll aggregating $9250 per month. The RECORD respectfully submits that these facts don't look much like a "bursted boom" but rather indicates a good healthy state of af-

The Largest Shipment of Paints on Record. The largest single shipment and bonafide sale of manufactured paints ever sent out by any house in the world was made by Heath & Milligan Manufacturing Company, of Chicago, this year. This mammoth order required a solid train of fifteen cars, averaging 24,310 pounds to the car, all the manufactured product of Heath & Milligan Manufacturing Company, and all sold in a single order, on sixty days' time cash, without consignment of any portion.

In this connection, some idea may be obtained of the facilities of this company for turning out goods, which will account for the promptness displayed in shipping orders.

The order was from Campbell Glass and Paint Company, of Kansas City, general western agents for Heath & Milligan Manufacturing Company, for twelve cars best prepared paint, one car climax tinted paint, one car railway white lead, one car colors in oil and japan. A total of fifteen cars, averaging 24,310 pounds.—Paint, Oil and Drug Review, April 3.

TWO COMEDIANS.

That evening Bloncourt, the son, was to make his first appearance on the stage in "Chatterton." The piece, which, though not forgotten, had dropped out of sight and for some years had filled a narrower sphere in the quiet appreciation of home reading, now excited, on its first night, almost the interest that a great novelty might. Those who were familiar with it without having seen it played were curious to assist at its interpretation—a process in which certain beauties of a work, especially the most subtle points, disappear, are scattered, volatilized, as one may say, in the heat of the footlights, while others burst unexpectedly into view through the medium of voice and gesture.

Those who had been present at former performances of the piece were happy to bring back again two hours of their youth and to glow once more with the warmth of their first artistic emotion. In a word, the old play, reappearing as it did in the midst of the commonplace trivialities of the day, rejuvenated the whole audience and aroused it to en-

It must be admitted that it would be impossible to conceive of a more perfect Chatterton than young Bloncourt made. Son and grandson of comedians, the youth had the blood of a true artist in his veins, and he was evidently bent on proving it to us that evening.

In the tumult and excitement of the applause, in the midst of the hundreds of pairs of eyes and hands that were exclusively concerning themselves with the stage, I caught a glimpse from time to time of a handsome face which looked out, pale and set, from the darkness at the back of the house. It was Bloncourt, the father, who had come to be present at the triumph of his son. Evidently deeply moved, he frequently changed his place and appeared in all the different parts of the theater, sometimes in the midst of the brilliant display in the boxes and at other moments was almost lost in the crowded galleries. It was as though he wished to measure on every side this splendid success, in which he also had a share. The audience recognized him and pointed him out to each other. "Look at Papa Bloncourt. Isn't he happy tonight, though!" And some of them while apthough to include the great artist in the triumph of his child and pupil.

It is a fact that no fame is so short lived as that of a comedian. Once he drops out of the public gaze it is all over with him. No one gives him a further thought. His is the fate of the spoken word, which, however beautiful, is carried off in air; of the musical chord that vanishes as soon as the notes are struck. But in this case, thanks to his son. Bloncourt could escape the terrible destiny that awaits comedians. He was welcoming a new glory which was rising at the fading of his own and would merge his artistic career in another full of hope and promise. So the poor man's emotion was deep and strong. I could see that his lips occasionally trembled, and his limbs twitched with nervousness. Between each act he roamed about in the lobbies, drawing near the different groups to overhear what was being said, and when hand clasps and felicitations were pressed upon him he blushed and shrank away with the awkwardness and embarrassment of a diffident youth.

Passing close by him at one of these moments, I could not restrain the sympathetic impulse which drew me toward this deep, silent joy. "You ought to be a very happy man," I said, shaking his hand. "It's an immense success." The hand I took in mine was cold and moist, and it drew itself sharply, almost angrily, away. Its possessor smiled grimly as he looked at me. "So you compliment, too, do you? Isn't there a single soul to understand what I am suffering? Ah, come. I am suffocating. Let us get out of here.' And he dragged me with him out into the street. An icy wind was whistling round the corners, but the old comedian did not appear to notice its rigor.

"Ah, that is good, good!" he exclaimed, drinking in the cold air with delight. "I thought I should go crazy inside there. For two hours I have endured their applauding and their stupid congratulations, which are a mockery to me. You are astonished that I say this to you? Well, it is so. I am jealous. I am jealous of my own childfairly green with envy of him. That is a frightful thing to say, isn't it? But why did he take my part away from me? It was mine. I was to have played it. It is exactly in my line, and Vigny himself promised it to me. A week before he died he said to me, 'Bloncourt, when they put on "Chatterton" again, I count on you to play it,' and I was waiting with such impatience for them to bring it out. Paris was beginning to forget me in the long period I had been inactive, and I hoped this creation would confer a second youth upon mea renewal of past successes. I studied hard night and day. Finally I was ready.

"One morning the boy comes running to me and throws his arms around my neck: 'Oh, father, how happy I am! I am going to play Chatterton.' He knew as well as any one the promise that had been made me, but in his joy he had Corgotten it. Children are so selfish in their happiness! This one dealt me the blow with a laugh. He told me they had first thought of me for the part, but I was too mature, too marked—ah, there is enough in such a disappointment as that to mark one indeed! I am sure that in five minutes 20 years passed over my head. If the boy had uttered a word of regret or of tenderness, I should simply have said to him: 'Do not play that part. You will kill me,' and I am sure he would not, because, with it all, the child loves me. But pride held me back. We talked of the part. He asked my advice about it. It had been lying on my table for two months. So now | the last four years has completed about we read it together. I gave him my 65 miles of macadam roads. conception of how it ought to be played. From time to time he would break completely away from me and study a line out for himself, and with a surety of insight into the tastes of the public that I no longer possess he would find a point to be made where I saw none at all. Positively one would have to undergo it himself to know what I suffered during that interview, but it was all as nothing to the martyrdom I have endured this evening. "Oh, I ought not to have come, but I could not stay away. I was irresistibly drawn by curiosity and perhaps-I am ashamed to say it-by the secret hope a surprising among the braves a regret, a remembrance for me, of hearing some one in the audience say, 'Oh, if the elder Bloncourt were playing that!' But no. I have heard nothing, not a word. They have had all they could do to appland. But really the boy does not act. well. He is actually bad. I certainly thought they were going to hiss when he came on. He can't even walk well. He has no idea of stage deportment. In all that great, thoughtful, complex part has he made a single original effect? No. He has simply thrown himself headlong into it, with all the heedlessness of youth. Impetuosity is made to do duty for talent. For instance, in the great scene with Kitty when Chatter-

And here the poor man began to illustrate to me in detail his son's defects, imitating his intonations and his gestures. From the point of view of the science of acting it all struck me as being very profound, very just, and I was surprised to find so many false notes in the harmonious whole that had so pleased me, all of which did not alter the fact that we were interrupted every few moments by the sound of applause, like the pattering of hailstones, that reached us from the auditorium and was intensified in sonority by the quiet, empty "Go on-applaud!" said the unhappy comedian, turning pale at each burst. "Appland. He is young. To be young, that is everything. I amold. My age is written on my face. Ah, how stupid it all is!" Then in a low voice, as if talking with himself: "What I feel is almost incomprehensible. Here is a boy who has stolen everything away from me-my name and my glory, who has not oven waited for me to die to step into my shoes-and in spite of it I cannot help loving him. He is my son, after all. I have nourished him, cared for him, taught him, and when I hear them applaud him I feel a movement of gratified pride in spite of myself. There are some clever touches in the young scamp's work. The mistake was teaching him my own calling. I should have diverted his talents in some other direction. Then I could have been proud of him to my heart's content. I should not have had the grief of seeing my 30 years' successes wiped out by his first day of triumph."

At this moment the crowd commenced to pour out of the theater. A murmur of approbation, an atmosphere of success passed from group to group and by way of the silent streets was going to communicate itself throughout all Paris. The old comedian was leaning against a pillar, his ear strained to catch the commentaries of the last straggling spectators. All at once he gave a spring. "Goodby," he called out to me hurriedly. I tried to hold him back. "Bloncourt, Bloncourt, where are you going?" He turned his face toward me, his eyes glistening with tears. "Where am I going? To hug the boy, parbleu!"-From the French of Alphonse Daudet in Short Stories.

Gravels of the Glacial Age. Some 10,000 or more years ago the conditions which had brought about the great ico age were beginning to change. The elevated land began to sink, and a higher temperature slowly followed. The long winter was gradually drawing to a close, and the great springtime of the world was beginning to hasten its influence upon an ice covered land. Tons, rather mountains, of ice began to melt, and the water filled the river valleys to overflowing. Gravel, sand and mud were borne along by these raging waters and deposited wherever the conditions were favorable. Ice rafts covered the surface of the flood, bearing rocks and bowlders from more northern lands. All rivers which had glacial sources were greatly influenced by the final melting. As the southern part of the ice sheet rested over northern Pennsylvania. the Delaware and the Susquehanna were typical rivers of the age. The rocks and gravels which line their banks show how well they have kept the record. In the Delaware valley brick clay and gravel are laid out in beautiful terraces, especially at Stroudsburg and the Water Gap. Here the waters rose some 200 feet, and an artificial dam is supposed to have formed the river into a broad lake. The Indians, it is said, have a curious legend about this flood. They tell us that the "Minsies" were the first race which dwelt here, and the region round about they call "Minisink," meaning that the "waters are gone"-a vague remembrance perhaps of the postglacial floods.—Lippincott's.

STATE AID FOR HIGHWAYS. New Jersey Plan Has Proved a Most Gratifying Success. Speaking of the New Jersey policy of extending state aid to roads, the Boston Advertiser says:

This policy is pronounced a success by leading officials in New Jersey and by outside critics. There are 228 townships, 71 incorporated towns, boroughs and villages (outside of the city limits) in the 21 counties of New Jersey, in which, according to the annual report of the state comptroller, some $610,000 was expended for road construction and improvement in 1894. This sum does not include all the expenditures in the state in roadmaking, and if all the items are counted in the total of the township expenditure is increased to $635,000, and that of borough expenditure $143,-000. In all there was expended on roads outside of the New Jersey cities nearly $780,000. In some instances the township committees objected to this style of improve ment, but the New Jersey courts held that so long as it was shown that a certain amount of work had been done under the order of the road overseer the bills must be paid. Since the policy of state aid has been begun, however, not only the counties, but the townships also, have been authorized to issue bonds for constructing roads. With the capital thus raised in some counties the roads have been built with a thorough system of macadam and telford construction, and other counties are about to enter upon a similar system of practical road building. One county, which began to build improved stone roadways more than two decades ago, has built more than 200 miles of macadam roads, although the county is little more than 12 miles square. Another county during

What the Bicycle Has Done. One of the good effects which the universal use of the bicycle is exerting is to bring about a disposition among the taxpayers to improve country roads. It will enable the bicyclist to extend his tours in all directions, and he will meet on his way, as in France, a single horse easily drawing from three to five tons of freight at a load. At present, in many parts of this country, he is compelled to carry a pocket road map to distinguish between the roads he can venture upon and those he must avoid. --Social Economist.

[Copyright, 1895, by George Palliser, Architect, 32 Park place, New York.] • The sweetness and tranquillity of life are but exemplified and found by being the possessor of a home in the country. The life of a busy man at spare moments over turns to the time when this blessed leisure which the lucky genius is expected to give will be brought about and the fullness and realization of the fondest dreams be thus perfected. Room-room, ground to stand upon, to expand upon, to grow Ah, how we all love thus to get back to mother earth, as it were! Nature is sweet and always lovable, and 'tis a sorry and sordid mind indeed that has not a kindred feeling for country pleasures, quietness and the peace and contentment brought about by the blessed voice and contact with nature. As we journey through life's stormy pathway we still have time to reflect and look into the possibilities of the future. How often our fancy rises and pictures to us the waste places made to bloom as the roso! Passing along a country road, we can by faith se the rough rocks and stone fences turned into practical collars on which hundreds of happy and beautiful homes may stand. Wo can see a value in these rocks for the future that the former owner never dreamed of, and the more rough and rude nature is in her setting the more artistic and beautiful the future is before her. Plan.—Frame suburban villa suitable for a large site and requires plenty of lawn deep, 49. Height of stories: Cellar, 7 feet; first story, 10 feet 3 inches; second story, Cellar walls of stone; frame sheathed and felted: the entire house of shingle finish. Tho interior contains open fireplaces in parlor, sitting room, dining room and three chambers; portable range in kitchen; laundry in basement under kitchen: cellar cemented; walls hard finished; four bedrooms on the third floor and attic; handsome wooden mantels at all fireplaces; first and second floors lined and deadened, the parlor hall, sitting and dining room having parquetry floors in oak; other floors are yellow pine. The front staircase is very large and spacious, very handsome design, lighted by very large stained glass windows on upper platform.

The entire house is trimmed in clear white pine, finished with a satin gloss, the cornices on the first floor main part being of wood. The kitchen, butler's pantry, back hall and bathroom are wainscoted verandas, yellow pine finished with spar varnish. The shingle work throughout is finished

SECOND STORY. Plumbed complete, with water and sower connections to street; refrigerator

This house is one of the best planned houses of its size and such as to commend itself very favorably to those requiring a house of this cost. A brick set range could be placed in the kitchen and a fireplace in the room over it could be had at very slight increase in cost. Architecture as an art and a business is a thing of comparatively recent growth in New York. The undertakings of the last 15 years would have appalled the local architects of 50 or oven 30 years ago. Few structures notable architecturally are mere than a quarter of a century old, and the attempt to lend some semblance of architectural beauty to tall business structures began less than two decades back. The profits of successful architects have enormously increased in that time, and with success has come to some of the least artistic persons the desire to add the repute of artists to their business success. This desire is slowly making places for educated young artists of strong artistic instinct, though some of them hold that the time and place are unfavorable to the highest development of their art.-Now

York Sun.

Virtue In Tenpenny Nails. There's great virtue in tenpenny nails. Let the building be well peppered with them. Even after boarding your walls will have less than two inches of solid wood. If you wish to make an example of yourself, lay this hoarding diagonally, and, to cap the climax of scientific theroughness, having given it a good nailing and a layer of sheathing felt, cover the whole with another wooden garment of the same style as the first and crossing it at right angles. All of this before the final overcoat of clapboards or whatever it may be. A house built in this way would laugh at earthquakes and torna-Joes.—Selected.

Keep the Road Dry.

Where the road rans through wet soils or springy places, it must be thoroughly drained, or all work upon it will bo thrown away. These drains can be made by exewating a trench about 15 inches wide and one or two feet deep in the center under the metaled portion of the road, and placing at the bottom of this a tile drain or a rough stone box drain; the trough is then filled with ttones from two or five inches in size.

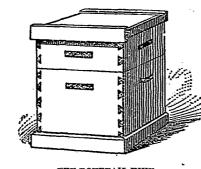

Pleasure and Business. A toy has wrought a revolution in this country. The agitation in favor of good roads, begun by the bicycle manufacturers some yoars ago and taken up and given force by the riders, has at length reached the masses of the people. Those who use the roads for pleasure have aroused those who use them for business, and these latter have come to realize how much of their income is wasted annually in carrying their produce to the markets over poor roads.-San Francisco Argonaut.

Much Depends on Good Roads. Those who are trying to improve good work. When we get a system of first class highways, the farming districts will come to the front. Travel. transportation, trade and civilization all depend upon our facilities in the shape of roads. - Atlanta Constitution.

Tramps May Be Utilized. General opinion favors convict and tramp labor for road improvement. The main idea is to use state prison convicts in preparing road materials, working in quarries where they can be guarded, and to use tramps, county prisoners and short term convicts in macadamizing roads.—General Roy Stone.

The Dovetail and the Simplicity Hives Are Unquestionably Favorites. Of the various patterns of hives used by practical beekeepers the Dovetail and the Simplicity are the favorites and probably shelter four-fifths of all the bees in the country, according to a writer in American Gardening, who makes the following statements:

Of these two the Simplicity is the oldest, and up to a few years ago held almost universal place in well regulated apiaries. True, some have favored the various combination, summer and chaff hive—a great saving of labor in pack-

THE DOVETAIL HIVE. ing for winter. All that one need do to transfer the bees from summer to winter quarters is to open the hive, lay the prepared chaff cushious in place and close again the work of a very few minutes, and no disturbing of the bees necessary. These hives are an undoubted convenience during the packing season and while opening up in the spring. The rest of the year most of them are a decided nuisance, for the simple reason that the more detail there is to anything the harder it is to handle.

These two hives are not patented, and can therefore be made by anybody, but by no means everybody can make them properly. The Simplicity sent out by any dealer in such goods has halved and mitered corners, so they may be nailed from both ways and drawn very tightly together. These corners, if put together rightly and kept painted, should be absolutely weather tight-almost an impossible condition to secure in the home made square joint hive.

The dovetailed hive has even tighter corners than the Simplicity will have after a summer's campaign in the hot sun, the look joints holding them in place as nails alone cannot. This is the main difforence between these two lead-

THE SIMPLICITY HIVE. ers, though, if you ordered a Dovetail without specifying size, you would probably get one holding but eight frames, while the Simplicity holds ten. All modern hives, whether purchased or homemade-that is, if made by a practical beeman, will be of the standard size, for the use of the Langstroth frame, which is 91% by 175%. This requires the inside of hive to clear 9 % in depth and 1914 in length. The width depends upon the number of frames. If ten, it should be 141/4 wide. This uniformity makes it possible to experiment with several different kinds of hives, and at any time transfer to one of the standard makes by simply transferring the combs, the frames and inside furniture being readily adapted to any standard make. Otherwise one must carry a full line of inside furniture for each kind of hive.

Ordinarily chicks' raised with hens are hardier, as it is so easy to neglect brooders. But give the chicks in the brooder as good care as the hen does her brood, and there will be no difference. By the artificial methods, especially in raising broilers, chicks are forced ahead at a much more rapid rate than when in charge of the hen.

The average hen lays best in spring and the early part of summer. The practical poultryman, however, by good housing, good feed and good manage ment, has his hens divide up their product more, so that the results are more even throughout the fall and winter as well as the rest of the year up to molting time.

A broiler is a chick of 11/2 to 2 pounds in weight, and anything over that is classified as a spring chicken, according to Farm Poultry.

Sowing Lawn Grass Seed. To those who intend sowing lawn grass seed Rural New Yorker offers a little advice: Never sow timothy or oats "to protect" the finer grasses, unless convinced that the weaker plant will grow more vigorously if partially starved by the rank growing plant. Don't sow clovers—except it may be a little white clover-orchard grass, velvet grass (especially avoid the last), tall oat grass, meadow fescue, perennial rye grass, Italian rye grass, sheep's fescue, hard fescue. Nearly all the seedmen sell lawn mixtures presented under various taking names. The base of most of thom is either June grass or red top, or both, which, for northern climates, are the very bost kinds for lawns.

PROTECTION AGAINST DROUGHT. A Southern Nebraska Farmer Advocates the

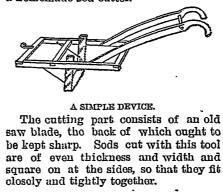

Subsoiling Method. Our method is to first plow eight inches deep with an ordinary 14 inch plow, following this with a subsoil plow running in the same furrow and loosening the soil to a depth of eight inches more, but throwing none of it on the surface. This gives us a reservoir 16 inches deep to catch and retain all the moisture which falls, and we are convinced during the 23 years we have resided in Fillmore county that there has never been a season when the rainfall was not sufficient to fill this reservoir before the growing season commenced. We harrow each evening all the land plowed during the day. This breaks up the clogs before they become hardened and prevents drying by evaporation. Before planting we again harrow and pulverize the surface with a "float." Plant three or four inches deep, following the planter with a harrow. Practice shallow cultivation, running the cultivator just deep enough to destroy weeds and break the surface Georgia's road system are engaged in a soil. We cultivate the ground just as soon after a rain as the condition of the soil will permit. If the rain is a heavy one, the soil is firmly packed. It is of the utmost importance that the crust be broken as soon as possible, in order to retain moisture in the soil, the loose upper layer acting as a mulch. We find that it is not necessary to subsoil each season. Once every three years will answer all practical purposes. If the field is subsoiled and planted to corn the first or the first or second year, then followed by oats or wheat, the results will be satisfactory, though a sliight falling off will be noticed in the third crop after subsoiling.

As to results, land subsoiled in the fall of 1892 and planted to corn the next spring yielded 75 bushels per acre. Other land not subsoiled, but otherwise treated in identically the same manner, yielded about 35 bushels. In 1893 potatoes on the subsoiled soil produced 125 bushels to the acro. The crop on unsubsoiled land was practically a failure. Lat year rye yielded 301/3 bushels on subsoiled and on not subsoiled 21/2. Oats on corn ground one year from subsoiling 441% bushels, two years from subsoiling 3914 bushels, not subsoiled 17 bushels. We are convinced that if there is a fair amount of moisture in the soil hot winds are not necessarily fatal to the corn crop. The foregoing is from a communication to American Agriculturist.

Celery on a Small Plot. At the Toledo meeting of Ohio horticulturists W. J. Green told how to grow a large amount of celery upon a small plot of ground. He would take a plot of ground five feet wide and any desired length and throw out the upper five inches of soil on either side. Then spade the ground one foot deep and mix, a large amount of fine manure. In this plant the dwarf varieties of celery, with plants six inches apart and rows eight inches. Late large kinds should be planted 6 by 12. The self blanching varieties planted the smaller distance will not need earthing up, but the large, late kinds will, by putting earth between the rows. Where celery is planted thickly this way it should have one inch of water per week. If it does not fall from the clouds, it should be supplied artificially.. The sinking of the bed five inches below the surface aids in artificial irrigation.

Desirable Varieties of Lettuce. Early plantings of lettuce in open ground have always done well at the Oklahoma experiment station. For conveience lettuce is planted in rows, between which the five tooth cultivator is run as in other garden crops, and this method, though not economical of space, produced fine large heads of superior quality. After two years' trial here we feel satisfied in recommending the following varieties of lettuce; Denver Market, Hanson and Henderson's New York. Others are good, but these are most satisfactory. The following varieties have proved unsatisfactory: Salamander, Chartier Pink, Buttercup, Brown Dutch, Oakleaved.-Oklahoma Experiment Station.

Homemade Sod Cutter. A simple device, which was originally sketched for Gardening, represents a bomemade sod cutter.

News and Notes. Concorning "stonemeal," which is Agriculturist says: This stonemeal is a finely ground limestone, and we do not believe it would be worth carting, much less paying a fancy price for it. Wise beckeepers will not be caught without the necessary hives, sections, court foundation, etc. It does not pay to wait until the last minute and then be compelled to telegraph for goods. Buff Leghorns are a new breed possessing many good points. Every one who attends a thrashing machine knows how disagreeable the dust is. To obviate this a Pennsylvania genius has invented a cyclone dust collector which collects the dust and blows it through a canvas tube out of the barn. Some of the largest farms and cattle ranches in Kansas and western Texas are managed by women. The big alfalfa growers of Colorado estimate that they can put up hay at 85 cents per ton.
