Blue Print Photos.

Miss Georgia Emery, Engines in the Business with a Fine Collection. Miss Georgia Emery, one of the most expert amateur photographers in this part of the state, has recently devoted her talents to a new branch of the art and with success that she has decided to give her vacations and spare time to it as a business. This new branch is the reproduction by the blue print process of photographs of the world's most celebrated paintings, painters, authors, buildings and scenes. This branch of photography has had a rapid growth in certain quarters in the east. The blue prints can be produced at a very low cost and are especially valuable for use in public schools and with a class generally. Miss Ruth Warner first called attention to them last summer having learned of their value at Pratt Institute, Brooklyn. She introduced their use in the public schools of Syracuse, N. Y., and was instrumental in getting them used to the extent they have been in the schools of this city the past year.

For several months Miss Emery has been securing negatives of such photographs as she wished to include in her collection, and has had special privileges in the use of some of the finest collections gathered by their owners at the art centers of Europe. Miss Emery now has over five hundred negatives and is constantly adding to them. The list includes nearly all the great masterpieces in art. She has just issued a handsome catalogue giving a list of about five hundred of the most remarkable reproductions she has prepared to publish. The list includes painters and paintings; Egyptian, Greek and Roman historic ornaments; cathedrals, public buildings and miscellany; and portraits. The size, variety and general excellence of the collection make it especially valuable. Miss Emery will leave in a few days for her home at Buchanan, Mich., to spend the school vacation, and will thereafter expect to improve the time making these blue prints by the thousand to fill orders already received or for future orders.

BENTON HARBOR.

From our Regular Correspondent.

June 15, 1907.

Work on the tunnel road is proceeding, in spite of the lawsuit.

From one hundred to two hundred tramps are hanging about the city.

The Baptist, Congregational, Presbyterian and Methodist Sunday schools observed Children's Day with the usual pleasing and profitable exercises.

Two old barns not far from the city hall were destroyed by fire Sunday afternoon. Three horses which were in one of them, were rescued. A stream of water was playing on the fire in two minutes after the alarm sounded.

Dan Marshall whose home was three miles north of this city, suicided Saturday night by blowing off the top of his head with a shot-gun. Domestic troubles was the cause, his wife having left him.

The strawberry season is at its height. Buyers were here yesterday from Peoria, Albany, Minneapolis, Buffalo and other points. The Armour fruit men were also here. An immense shipment of berries was made last night.

A piece of ground on the lowland between the Zwin cities has been leased for a term of five years and will be fitted up for a ball park. The Zwin intimates that the Buchanan Blues had better be looking out for their scalps in the near future.

The measles has become epidemic. The health officer says that forty-four cases have been reported since June 1st, and there are probably many that have not been reported at all. Nearly all the pupils of Miss Daker, who died with the disease, have come down with it, but in a lighter form.

A native of the orient took a prescription written in Greek to Dr. Fabry's drug store, the other day to get it filled. He expected to be refused as he had been in several of the large cities of our country, but the doctor filled it for him much to his delight.

The Misses Mattie and Jennie Gano, who recently graduated from the college, will not return to Georgia, but will teach for a time and then resume their studies at some educational institution.

BACCALAUREATE ADDRESS.

By Prof. J. H. HETLEY.

PSALM VIII: WHAT IS MAN THAT THOU ART MINDFUL OF HIM?

Among all the thoughts of man there are none of greater importance than those which cause him to investigate the cause of his own existence. True it is that man is the most wonderful of all God made creatures. How his sympathetic nature reaches out, on the one hand, into the tenderest considerations and affections, and his lofty and expansive greatness on the other, enable him to grasp the greatest and most perplexing problems of the age. The tenderness of his nature is likened unto the artist's sensitive film which is capable of receiving and recording the most delicate sensations of light, while his sturdiness is likened unto the lofty oak, the pillar of granite or the trunk of steel. What is man? Whence his wonderful power? Is he the product of mere chance? Does his power increase with years of development?

The cultivation of this being called man is the theme to which I would call your attention at this time. It is a subject that concerns not the teacher alone, but every man, woman and child in the land. Our government has established bureaus for the purpose of gathering and disseminating information in regard to the condition of growing crops, to the products of the spindle, and the mine; of the number of its citizens, their race, color, the value of their property, and their employment; but it has never attempted to tabulate the growth in the manhood or womanhood of its citizens. The proper study of mankind is not supply and demand, business, money making, etc., but it is man. Man in his twofold nature, the physical and mental or spiritual, the outward manifestation and the inward reality, the visible and the invisible. Man in all his relations to cause and effect, to time and eternity.

The historical phase of the study of psychology bids us go back to our finished systems of any study to their roots in the primary thoughts, sensations and feelings of early man, which grow more secretly secret and hard to extract as tribes lose their ethnic originality. These must often be gleaned from words, stories, maxims and social organizations. When in the development of a race such material shoots together into cosmogonies, national myths, or ethnic beliefs, the psychic basis for a period of culture is laid, a spiritual cosmos begins. Of this same mother-life, philosophy in all of its manifold forms, is but a more elaborate organization. It is from this point of view that the Christian can look out upon the world and say with all the eloquence of his soul, that "God created the heavens and the earth," and that "without Him was not anything made that has stood." It was here that Sir Isaac Newton made when he uttered these marvellous words: "I seem to have been only like a boy playing on the sea shore, and diverting myself in now and then finding a smoother pebble or prettier shell than ordinary, whilst the great ocean of truth lay all undiscovered before me." Here, too, belong the studies of childhood from the sentiment of love in the parents up to maturity. The soul and body of the young child is frightened with potencies and reverberations from a past we know not how remote. The child was to our savior, of all things in the world most worthy of love, of reverence and service, and was referred to by him as the type of man's true attitude toward God.

Oh! that child! the image of father, the image of mother, the image of God! the product of our best influences of past and present; the book in which are recorded facts which neither time nor eternity can efface, and yet every fact recorded was the direct result of the action of the human will. Not one the result of memory but all the effects of collation. Volitions over which it had no control as well as those over which it had complete control. Our children's characteristics are not the results of chance; they are the effects of causes which may be known. It is not my purpose to dwell at length upon this phase of the subject, and yet I cannot leave it without a few comments. What of the child? What shall we do with it? When shall we begin its training? What food material is best for the growth of the real child, the mental or spiritual child? When shall we begin that tender, earnest, solicitous planning of food material within the grasp of the child's soul-feeders? Parents, you have formed a partnership with God in this work, and He expects you to do your duty well. He has made known, in man's ways, his laws governing mental and moral growth. He expects you to observe them. If you do, He has promised that "your children shall rise up and call you blessed"; they will crown your old age with joys untold.

Notice the young plant sending out its tender rootlets in search of food; its tiny leaves in search of light and air. Notice, too, if you will, that every particle of food is appropriated after due selection on the part of the plant and also that its limitations for growth are only determined by time and the limitations of the food material. All that you can do is to place the food material within its reach. You may determine the quantity, the quality, and the time of its selection, but you can never determine its location. Just so it is with the child mind. You can awaken and stimulate the child's slumbering activities. You can determine the quantity and quality of the food and the time for placing the material within the range of his mental grasp; but you cannot get him to imbibe a particular of that which you have prepared. This means that if you wish the child to grow certain characteristics, you must begin early enough to develop those appetites which will lead him to choose the elements of moral food which make such character growth possible. "Train up a child in the way he should go; and when he is old he will not depart from it." This does not mean that you should tug him, nor that you should scold him; but that you should train him. Train him, by helping him to discover and to use his own powers. The child is too sacred to be left to prey upon himself. Lead him into the sunshine of God's love; or perhaps I had better say, do nothing that would lead him out of it. You have observed the benefits resulting from the thought and attention of the florist, in the improved plant. Why not see the same in our own children? Why do we neglect them? They are worth more than money. Why not choose his playthings with the thought in mind that they exercise an influence over all his future life? Many a sailor can trace his love for the sea to the paintings hung on the walls of his early home. Many an engineer can trace his love for machinery to his toys. Seek for the causes of the child's thoughts and actions if you would correct him. There is a world of life, of light, of truth in it for you, and blessings untold for your children.

The teacher must receive the product of parents work and continue the lines of growth or correct when possible, false impressions. He must begin to lead the pupil to depend upon himself and the environments in which he is placed. The teacher's task is no light one. He must understand that the child's mind is now sending out nerve fibers or feeders into books, papers, play, work and society. He must inspire in him a love for the things he wishes him to study, and for those things from which come good influence.

Did you ever know a plant to continue to send out rootlets where there was no nourishment? Will the child spread his mental rootlets where there is little or no nourishment? Is it any wonder that pupils grow listless when there is no mental activity, no mental growth? How important it is that teachers should realize that memorizing facts is not obtaining an education; that repeating these facts is no test of mental growth and that too much of it will prevent development altogether. Memory has its office in the work; but we must ever keep in mind that it is only one of several functions of the mind and, too, that it is not the one that leads us on to higher and nobler things in life. "Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." The heart in this case does not mean the head but the life, Help your children to live well and there will be less sorrow and suffering in the world. The intensifying of life; of true living is the great problem of the age in which we live; and your sons and daughters have a divine right to demand of you proper introduction to this true-living. From all over our land comes the demand for a richer and fuller common school course, a course of study that enables the child to come into contact with living forces and not so much with the dead forms of the past. A well-planned systematic study of the fundamental types of all development is essential to the proper understanding of any type. This being true, then childhood's experiences must be increased, its observations made more definite, and a better and firmer foundation prepared upon which to rear the enlarged superstructure. While civilization is grounded in the conventionalities of the past, its new growth, its advancement, depends upon higher and nobler ideals. Ideals constitute the true wealth of any community, yes, of any nation. You may rejoice in the possession of your "houses of gold and your silver" but you are forgetting that riches of this nature take to themselves wings. You do not realize that a new invention or a new combi may rob you of one-half of your wealth. This very year has furnished us with proof enough of this statement. The bicycle has relieved your horses of much of their former labor, and in consequence the price for horses is low. Carnegie and Rockefeller form a combine which gives the latter the carrying trade of the iron and coal industries on our great lakes for ten years. This reduces the value of every private boat built on the lakes for trade purposes. But it is not necessary to enumerate further. I want to say that recent researches into child-life and child-activity has rendered valueless many phases of what is now termed, the old education. The new-education has come and to stay. It says that all intellectual growth depends upon child-activity; that this activity is determined by the child's own will; and can be stimulated only from without; that it is the business of the modern school to stimulate this activity and to give the child those experiences, early in life, upon which depend his proper understanding of the world in which he moves and from which he expects to go, enriched and enrolled to "fairer worlds on high."

Does it make you weep to see a man doing a work for which he is not fitted? Would you hire a mason to do your carpenter work, or a carpenter to do your mason work? No, you would choose men to fill positions for which they had made special preparation; provided you could tell them when you saw them. What sad failures are made by our boys and girls in life? But why do they make failures? Well! the truth is that in many cases, the failure is due to the lack of co-operation of those directly interested and associated with them in their work.

We are all members of one grand army whose chief business is to serve faithfully the creator of all things. We are all members one of another; working together to carry out the destiny of man. Do the parts fit the design together? Do we clog the wheel of progress or do we add to its momentum? What shall be done with the hangers-on when the Judge shall come? I would like to answer:

Our selfish desires have been so cultured and nurtured that we see but little of the good and sorrow or joys of the world that do not immediately concern ourselves. We become so dead in our cold formal selves that our presence serves more the nature of a frost, than that of a warming, inspiring sun. Heart-culture is as much a necessity as head-culture. It can take place only under favorable conditions. What are the conditions? Scientists tell us that the conditions necessary to plant growth are (1) light, (2) heat, and (3) moisture. Is there any light necessary for soul-growth? Yes: The light of a soul-inspiring teacher living or dead as the case may be. Is there any heat necessary? Yes: The warmth of a soul that is a glow with brands from the altar of learning. Is there any moisture necessary? Yes: Service in this soul-culture. The wonderful depth of meaning contained in our Saviors' words: "But he that is great among you, let him be as the youngest; and he that is chief, as he that doth serve; for whether he the greater, he shall be as the least." Do you see that the sixth at the top? The soul that lives for others is doing a noble service.

Bishop Warren said in a service in Chicago that it was no wonder the sin and crime of the city had become so corrupt; that in order to prevent its rapid increase morals that reached the hearts of the children must be taught in the public schools. But all true education leads us to right living and places us in harmony with our better environments, in harmony with the created and the creator.

This is the life that the new education demands. This is the life that the teacher must bring into her school-room and live with her pupils, not above them. Their books must represent living forces and not be simply recorded facts to be learned. The fruit that is borne by your orchards is always upon the new growth. The advancement made in civilization while built upon the old is always the result of the new.

There was a man who lived less than three-quarters of a century ago, who could live with his pupils and for them who, although ridiculed and abused by the people whom he sought to serve, yet set into life influences that have grown and extended until now they embrace within their limits, three-fourths of the habitable globe, and have become the fundamental principles in all professional teaching. That man was Pestalozzi. We know little of the man in his work. The people who lived then lost sight of the man in his imperfections and held before the world his errors. Error always is greater than truth, because it is so near us. Let us seek for the good and true while we drop out of sight the wrong or evil.

I would fall to do my duty to these young people on this occasion if I did not call their attention to what is required of the rising generation. At no previous period in the history of the world has so much been demanded. Your education is but begun. The ground work only has been laid. Only the building itself is it. It is only through your conscious effort, your own willing, that the edifice will be completed. Do you know what factors to gather material for? Do you know what material to select?

You have stood on the river bank and observed the depth of the river bed, you have turned and looked over the flats, you have climbed the hill and observed plain after plain rising higher and higher as you look away in the distance. You have doubtless read descriptions of the approach of the Alps through France; how that plateau after plateau is passed, rising higher and higher until by and by you approach the great foot-hills beyond and above which rise the Alps themselves. So in your imagination view with me the succeeding generations whose onward and upward march has brought civilization to the degree of perfection it has attained.

Observe the early Egyptians gathering to the remnants of previous generations and embodying them in the idea of the State. Although their vision was dull; although their idea of the state was embodied in the person of the king and had not worked itself out into a conscious separate existence; it was there nevertheless. They were struggling through the mists of a dawning civilization. They were laying a foundation upon which the next great advancement was to be placed. This came in the form of the Church for which preparation had been made both by God's chosen people, and by Grecian philosophy and life. The temporal power of the Church reached its height in the days of the Roman Empire; but thanks be to God its spiritual power has not yet begun to decline. From the Saxon or (perhaps better) German tribes came the Home in which women was first recognized on an equal with her Lord. From this small beginning and scattered where: ever the Anglo-Saxon race has gone, backed by the Word of God, has come a recognition of Women's Rights, of her equality with man; yes from this has come the social purity and sacredness of the Home. It is not necessary to go into details to prove or elucidate this. The same social forces gave us our Schools which today based on the foundation thought that true education is a social growth and not a filling up process are doing more for the emancipation of a fallen race than all other forces combined.

Society has contributed its mite, and a mighty mite it has been and is. Who today would dare stem the tide of a social wave of fashion, in dress, in thought, or in act? What a power for good is consecrated fashion? What a revelation and revolution would follow the introduction of a fashion to "do unto others as you would have others do unto you?"

Today we stand upon the sixth and latest plateau in the scale of evolution. It is industrial organization. You can scarcely pick up a morning paper that does not give an account of some new organization. Manufacturers are combining salesmen; laboring-men; shippers; churches; schools; nations—All, all are combining for mutual advantage and interest. What is to be the outcome? I don't know. Do you? What does it mean? To me it means that man is today recognizing the great "principle in union there is strength", that men are seeing the immense loss of time, of money, of energy, of life, in the absence of the most thorough cooperation; that economy of time and money means an increase in power, in soul-life. You see the peace of Europe today maintained in a large measure by the organization known as the "League of Nations". You see in our own land the influence exerted by the various industrial organizations in shaping the policy of our government. You as American citizens, as candidates for the elective franchise soon to be gained, ought to know well the foundations upon which our structure is built, you ought to know right well the factors which have contributed to our growth and which are cementing together the spiritual factors of the form in preparation for our Master's coming. You as Christians ought to see in these the manifestations of God's omnipotent power. My soul kindles afresh in the presence of every healthy child because I see in him "a great and noble monument of human and divine wisdom, founded on the combined dictates of reason and experience, a precious inheritance bequeathed to us by generations"; because it is in us we must take care to build whatever it may be our part to add to their acquisitions, if, indeed, we wish to maintain and to consolidate the brotherhood of man, and to promote the peace and welfare of mankind; because I see in him the possibilities of a Hamilton, a Garfield, or a Lincoln. I recognize in him the man who is most likely to scale the Alps and from his lofty peaks catch a glimpse of the day when right shall be the law of the land. But you call this fancy, vain imaginations, illusions. They are not illusions.

Ideal are the reals and the ruling, inspiring, ennobling, soul-healing influences of this world. Give us facts, you say. Well what is a fact? It is something that is true. It is a truth. Not that it was a truth; that's not now; that was a fact. It may be a fact now, and it may not be. Facts are living and growing as much as you and I are living and growing. Let us get away from the idea that our physical senses constitute the man. Man is a living spirit, a living soul. These physical senses are only of service as the soul makes use of them. Take away the soul and what have you? What is it that awakes the soul to activity and enables it to become conscious of its own existence and the lines of its development? What is it? I say for it is this that makes the man what he is. And I answer it is the will. It is through the human will that God reaches all men. Let us reach the child where he lives. The manning of his life are his ideals. Help him to form ideas, noble, lofty, ideals and you bless the world thereby. Strengthen his will; never break it. Help him to consecrate his will and all his powers to the advancement of the human race and you will have kindled a fire that discouragement, abuse and derision can not quench. Lead him to see truth face to face in his surroundings and you have armed him with all the weapons of warfare, he will need. Away with the idea that children know only that which is told or what they glean from books. Truths have been discovered and re-discovered. They have contributed to the mental growth of men and nations just in proportion to the effort put forth for their discovery. Train the child to be a discoverer, an investigator and you have grown in him the power that will enable him to become an educated man whether he goes to college or not, omit this training and he becomes a mere tool fit only to carry out the plans of others. There are gems that run your streets, clothed in rags and hidden so deeply under the squalor of life that you do not discover them. They need to be brought to light; they need to be brought into the presence of truth, and polished by coming into contact with life and living forces; and then you can see the lustre; then you can measure the usefulness of a life that otherwise would have passed unnoticed.

I cannot stand before you for this first and last time with trying to remind you that the great richness of nature, the great richness of life, comes when we understand that behind every specific action of man there is some one of the more elemental and primary forces of the universe that are always trying to express themselves. There is nothing that man does that finds its beginning within itself, but everything, every work of every trade, of every occupation, is simply the utterance of some one of these great forces which lie behind all life, and in the various ways of the different generations and of the different men are always trying to make their mark upon the world. Behind the power that man exercises there always lies the power of life. God has created the various advance steps taken by the generations in the past. He has given us our position on the foot-hills. Who, of you, are filled with the ambition to scale the Alps? or to guide others in the perilous task. Who, of you, have your spiritual and intellectual ears so close to nature that you can hear her heart throbbings as she struggles on her duties to perform. Get into life's current and move forward. Don't wait to be carried along by the tide. God is calling for positive characters to be leaders and pilots. Will you be one? You can if you will.

Members of the Class of '07. Your boat has been anchored in the bay, while you have been gleaning a cargo of thoughts and ideals from the surroundings. Books, companions, social organizations, churches, schools, parents, and teachers have been called upon to furnish a portion of your cargo. You are now ready to weigh anchor and embark upon the sea of life. Whom have you at the helm? What preparations have you made for the storms of life? Can you now respond, yes, when I ask you to those sunnier climes where storms may be more severe there are seasons of basking in the glory and effulgence of God's love. Think not that your need for books and study is past, but in the fuller powers of your own being glean more and more; that you may do more and more. Trust in God and yourselves and ever show to fellow travelers that sympathy and love that you need for your own soul-growth.

Obituary.

On the 16th of June, 1897, at the home of his parents Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Schermerhorn, near Clear Lake, Buchanan, Mich., Mr. Flavell Schermerhorn quietly passed away from the scenes of time. Flavell was born at N. Itawa, Mich., Nov. 4, 1850. Closing a life in his thirty-seventh year. He came to his parents' home a few weeks ago, not in very good health, hoping that a change of air and scene might benefit him. But consumption had to find a hold upon him. He has been in the employ of the Baltimore and Ohio R. R. for many years being stationed at New Haven, Ind. He was very highly appreciated by the company as a trusted servant, always true and upright.

He leaves his wife and one daughter, his parents; four brothers and three sisters.

The funeral is to be from the home of his parents on Friday, morning the 18th, conducted by the Rev. O. J. Roberts of the Presbyterian Church, consisting of songs appropriate and a short address owing to the fact that the remains are to be sent for interment to Nottawa on the 9:47 train, the 18th.

Well, is it for us the living to be ready, when called upon to charge worlds.
