TIME: AN ALLEGORY. Morn calleth fondly to a fair boy straying

With the dawn fresh and young. And she smiles, and waves him an adieu.

There was one bundle of clothes that belonged to a lady named Mrs. Stevens.

She was a real nice girl, and "perhaps," thought Bettie, "some day, a long time afterward, I'll tell her I was here."

She could not if she had tried a long time find words appropriate enough to explain to her how much she owed to you.

When a girl says awfully three times in a row—"well, it is beyond me, that is," do not believe it, either.

This picnic which Bettie so ardently desired to attend was to be under the grove of oaks in Judge Potter's big field.

Three long tables of rough boards had already been nailed together for the picnic.

She was suffering already from her wrongdoing, you see. But there was more trouble in store for poor Bettie.

Bettie washed and starched the dress, and hung it on the line to dry, but she never saw the whole of that dress again.

"Oh, dear!" Bettie exclaimed, catching her breath. "What if I can get it!"

He had it, when she found out this terrible thing, and what Bettie's mother did when she found it out, and what Mrs. Stevens did when she found it out.

It was a warm dress, you see—one that would have been appropriate to wear to a picnic in January, if ever they do have picnics in that month.

Death shrugged his shoulder-blades depressing. "Rarely," he replied, "now and then some girl with old-fashioned opinions of the fitness of things get red-headed when I call for her."

She had secretly resolved to coax her mother into buying her a new calico dress for the picnic, if she should find out in time that Mrs. Montandon did not wear her mother on the picnic day.

But let us be charitable. Perhaps we've all of us done things quite as wrong as that Mrs. Bettie did, if not worse. And then you must remember that Bettie wanted to go to the picnic awfully.

Well, not to morrow further, the morning of the picnic came, and Mrs. Cochran, who really had no idea how much her Bettie was disappointed about going to the picnic, bustled off to see work.

A TRUE HELPMATE. Congressman's Wife's Scheme to Gain Popularity.

Great successes often depend upon small considerations, and the wife of a member of congress, a statesman to whom his constituents are wont to point as a man of the people who faithfully carry out his duty.

Conservative estimates place the increase of the business this season over that of July, 1896, at 25 per cent. or better.

Marquette, Mich., July 24.—Harry M. Mason was Thursday sentenced in the U. S. District court to a year and a half in the Detroit house of correction for robbing the United States mails.

It is claimed that this story originated in Cleveland, a claim which may very well be true, because Cleveland—and especially the east end—has more prominent children to the name than Boston could boast of in her palmiest days.

But when, about noon, little Cora, who had been enjoying herself amazingly, eating cake and pie and peckles, and the end of the matter was that she did not believe Lulu would care at all.
