allowed.

Others in the Vicinity Bring the Aggregate for Wednesday Up to Twenty-Five-Damage by a Cloudburst in Texas.

New York, June 8.-Although the temperature was several degrees lower during the latter part of the day and a stiff, cooling breeze from the northeast started up at night, the record of fatalities exceeded by far those of Tuesday in this city and vicinity. Altogether there were 25 deaths from the heat in this vicinity, and ten of these victims were women. Aside from this there were 33 prostrations, the victims of which are still in the city hospitals in a more or less serious condition. In New York city alone 19 deaths were recorded up to ten o'clock p. m., and Hackensack, Newark, Plainfield, Passaic and Morristown each reported one death. One of the victims was a suicide who took his own life because of his sufferings from the heat. At the beginning of the day the thermometer registered two or three degrees above that of Tuesday. But as the day passed the mercury slowly contracted, and the afternoon was slightly cooler than Tuesday. The wind, which had been shifting during the day from the south to the northwest, suddenly took a change and came from the northeast. The temperature rapidly fell. Between eight o'clock and 8:30 p. m. a drop of 13 degrees was recorded. At 8:30 p. m. the thermometer registered 73 degrees at the office of the weather bureau.

Little Relief Is Promised. Washington, June 8.—The maximum temperature Wednesday was 97, a degree hotter than Tuesday. The city suffered intensely with the heat, but the absence of casualties is considered remarkable. The general situation has improved on the North Atlantic coast. There was a drop of 32 degrees in 24 hours at Boston, and New York Wednesday night was reported six degrees cooler than Tuesday. On the other hand, the maximum temperatures had risen at points south, Norfolk and Charlotte being each 98, Lynchburg 96 and Nashville and Chattanooga each 94. Little relief is promised the country at large except from local storms, all the indications being that the hot wave is as long lived as it is widespread.

Waterspout Causes Ruin. St. Louis, June 8.-A special to the Republic from Austin, Tex., says: As a result of the terrible waterspout and exceedingly heavy rains Tuesday night on the upper watersheds the Colorado river is raging out of its banks. Reports from Marble Falls and Llano, 30 miles above, show a 25-foot rise there. doing great damage to property all along the river.

The cotton mill at Marble Falls suffered considerable damage, high water destroying the mill race and tearing out all the southern portion of the mill. The waterworks, the river bridge and other property to the amount of $25,-000 was damaged. Between here and there there are 30 miles of river front which has been washed and torn. All day long the torrent rose, and debris is pouring down the river by the carload. Small houses, which have been swept from their insecure mooring along the river front, are seen floating far out in the stream, though the inmates have escaped, as there is no sign of life about the cottages.

The water began to rise here about one o'clock Wednesday afternoon and by night had gone up 12 feet, and still A special program is in preparation is rising. Word has been sent on down the river to the people to take to the higher lands, and so far there has been no lives lost, though there has been considerable loss of stock and property.

Five Years an Editor. The BUCHANAN RECORD, published by Mr. D. H. Bower, at Buchanan, Mich. has been coming regularly to The Journal office every week for five years. We can hardly realize it is so long but in the copy before us, dated April 27, the editor states the paper has been under his management for five years. The RECORD shows signs of prosperity. It is well edited and has a liberal display of advertisements, going to show the people of Michigen appreciate a good newspaper. "Bert" Bower is a "Newburgh boy." He is a graduate of our Academy, and has had several years experience in The Journal office-in fact resigned a position of trust with us to embark in the newspaper business for himself in Michigan. His wife is a Newburgh lady (formely Miss Sallander), and both have many friends here who will join with us in congratulating the editor on his prosperity and the fact that he publishes a first class newspaper. THURSDAY, JUNE 8, 1899. R. G. Dun & Co's. Review says: April failures were the smallest ever reported in any month. May failures are nearly $2,000,000 smaller. only 62.8 per cent. of the smallest previously reported in any month, and only 34.3 per cent of those in May last year. Solvent payments were $8,328,292,052, and defaults were $3,820,686, or 45.7 cts, on $1,000, against 70 cts. in April, $1.19 in March, and $8.02 in September, 1896. Comparison with previous years given elsewhere indicates that the ratio of defaults to solvent business has never been as small in any other month as in May, 1899. Both in manufacturing and in trading failures were the smallest ever known in any month, and in each branch eight of the fourteen classes showed smaller failures than in May of any other year. the mismanagement of the shippers than to any other cause. There is never a full suppy of first-class choice stock, properly cooped, and sent to market in an attractive manner. If 100 birds are crowded into a coop that should only hold half that number, and in a condition which prevents them from eating and drinking, with filth under them, they will find the market full. But although prices are usually low at certain seasons that are plenty of buyers for the LICE ON THE ROOSTS. There is one kind of louse (or rather, mite,) that attacks the fowls on the roost at night only, hiding away in the cracks and crevics during the day. This belongs to the bed-bug, or chinch family, and does its damage so silently, and at a time when it cannot be seen, that the fowls often droop and gradually die when no cause can be discovered. The best preventive is to keep the roost saturated with coal oil. Kerosene oil will answer, but the crude

It is better to scattered in every direction, but the ammonia, and potash 150 pounds, practice of plucking them every time the feathers are renewed is not always economical. It takes vitality and a varied assortment of food to reproduce feathers, and as this is a drain on the system the females will not lay, You cannot always have feathers and eggs. In winter a hen will raise six chicks The summer is an excellent time to more easily than she will a larger they grow they will require more room, until finally she will be unable to hover them. This accounts for the loss of chicks in winter after they are four and five weeks old. THREE ELEMENTS WHICH ARE

In the home mixing of fertilizers three things must be considered: First what our soil needs, second where and how to get the fertilizer and third how to mix it. What our soil needs will depend on the crop to be grown, the crops grown previous and the character of the soil. But three fertilizing elements are required in most soils, these are nitrogen usually given as ammonia; phosphorus as phosphoric acid, either soluble or reverted, both of which are available for plant food, and potash, elt er muriate or sulphate. Truckers require more ammonia in their soil, grain-growers more phosphoric acid and fruit and potato growers more potash. Previous crops may have drawn largely on one or more of these elements or the soil may be naturally deficient in them. The best way to determine what is wanted, aside from the above conditions, is to take the analysis of a fertilizer which has given good results, or take the analysis of some fertilizer prepared for the kind of crop to be grown by some reputable manufacturer, and follow this in your mixture. In order to get just what you want write to one or more large manufacturers of fertilizers and ask them for their lowest cash prices on dissolved South Carolina rock, dissolved animal bone and dissolved bone black. These are for the supply of phosphoric acid. Get prices on nitrate of soda, tankage and sulphate of ammonia for the ammonia and on muriate of potash, sulphate of potash and kainit for the potash. Demand a guaranteed analysis of each but do not buy South Carolina rock that is below 14 per cent available phosphoric acid. Get your neighbors to join in with you and buy in carload lots putting different goods in the same car. It is usually best and cheapest to use the following: For the ammonia, nitrate of soda or tankage; for the phosphoric acid, dissolved South Carolina rock, and for the potash, muriate of potash. Mix them on a smooth floor: spread the South Carolina rock first, then the tankage if used, then the muriate of potash, distributing them as evenly as you can and crushing with the hands or foot any lumps found. Next take the nitrate of soda, which will be in crystals, and with a heavy shoe crush it on the floor and sift evenly over the mixture crushing such lumps as will not go through the sieve; then mix all thoroughly with a hoe, rake or shovel. I have used the following with excellent results: South Carolina rock 1,700 pounds, making 12 per cent phosphoric acid! muriate of pot-

1 per cent of ammonia in the mixture; 145 pounds of South Carolina rock will give 1 per cent of phosphoric acid and forty pounds of muriate of potash will give 1 per cent of potash. With droppings is kainit (German potash salts.) It is sulphate of potash in a crude form, is soluble and serves better than plaster for "fixing" the volatile matter. If the kainit is used freely under the roosts as an absorbent, and cleaned up with the droppings, the two form a combination that is superior to either alone, as chemical changes and reactions not only render inert substances soluble

It is not economical to keep food where the fowls can have free access to it. No bird or animal should be so fed so as to deprive it of work. The keeping of food continually before hens get them in a very fat condition, prevents laying, and renders them liable to disease. The hen should be made to work for her food to scratch for it, and thereby take exercise. She will be in a proper condition for laying only when kept

Of late years the birds are killed by being bled in the mouth with the feathers pulled out while they are dying. If each bird is given a severe blow on the head with a stick before the blood is drawn from the mouth it will be rendered senseless, and much of the cruelty of modern killing can thus be avoided. There are those who give little thought or consideration to the pain inflicted, the object being to kill in whatever manner will enable them to pick the birds while dry with the least difficulty, but it should be the duty of all to endeavor to effect reform in week, keep an account of the exact amount of food consumed, and you will know more regarding the matter, of expense, profit, and ratio of grain than would be derived in any other manner. Experiments with different kinds of food could easily be made and chicks of several breeds could be used for comparison. It would take but a small proportion of time, while the knowledge gained would be invaluable.

this rule you can compound to suit any requirement.—J. A. Grundy. HANDLING MANURE.

A Very Good Plan For Handling and Making It.

Almost every farmer has his way of handling and making manure, I will give my plan which after years of experience I am still practicing. I first of all bed my stables for my stock with some good bedding such as straw from wheat, oats, rye or clover, or if these can not be had I use forest leaves. I make the bedding just deep enough so it will make a good bed and it also acts as an absorbent to suck up and retain all liquid manure which is undoubtedly the best part of the manure. I do not clean out my stables daily but let the manure accumulate until it becomes necessary or I have time. I always use all the bedding that can be properly mixed in the manure so as to retain all the moisture. In this way the liquid manure is retained and the manure heap is also increased by the amount of straw put in it for when bedding is trampled and mashed by the stock it soon rots from the chemical action of the manure and makes nearly double the amount it would if just thrown out each morning as it would not then be rotted. And if thrown out under the eaves of the stable, as many do, the rain will wash almost all the manure out of it. Handle the manure just as little as possible if you are working for economy and also profit. Leave it where it falls till it is necessary to clean your stables, then run your wagon to the stable and throw your manure in the wagon as you throw it out. Haul it in dry or frozen weather direct to the field where it is wanted and scatter it as you throw it from the wagon. I prefer using it on my wheat field after the ground is broken and before it is prepared for sowing so it may be harrowed and thoroughly worked in the ground and the young plants can take hold of it. In the winter take it to the wheat field and scatter it and the rains will wash it down in the drill rows and the plants will drink in the benefits. If the manure is to be used for the garden I break the ground in the fall and during the winter, while it is frozen I scatter the manure. I do this when there is a snow on the ground if possible, then it gradually sinks into the moist ground as it thaws and by spring will be ready for use. When it is dry enough plow your ground again and if not rich enough put well rotted manure over it again and you will have ground that will raise anything you wish to plant.-C. The Early Ducklings. Now is the time to hatch ducklings. and as they grow much faster than chicks, and are subject to fewer diseases, they not only reach the market in a short time after being hatched, but the percentage of loss is very Fumigation of Fruit Trees. small. They also come to market after the chicks are low in price. They at pounds a pair at the age of eight weeks, being ready for market in three months from the time the eggs are put in the incubator, four weeks being allowed for incubation. This ex traordinary weight shows an increase of half a pound for each week from the date of hatching for each duck, but as they increase faster as they become older, until maturity, those over six weeks of age increase at the rate of nearly one pound a week. The cost of raising each duckling to the age of eight weeks is about five cents

ducks need no pond or water excep

SHEEP AND WOOL.

Owner of a Good Flock Is Very Lucky

The owner of a good flock of wool

or mutton sheep just now is to be congratulated. Never before was the outlook more gratifying to the sheep owners than this fall. I can remember the time when the boom in sheep was much greater than now-when the 'American Merino was supposed to be worth its weight in gold, and again when the newly imported fancy breeds were in the greatest demand-but to the quiet observer, the unhealthfulness of these two former booms could be detected. They were not founded upon the firm industrial conditions that prevail to-day, and consequently they burst. There is, of course, the chance of the present boom in wool and mutton raising too high and meeting with its Waterloo. But at present the outlook is encouraging. The sheep are worth the money paid for them, and they are going to make a good income for their owners. The man who goes right ahead, says a writer in American Cultivator, and breeds either for wool or mutton will profit in the end. Now is the time to make the most of the flocks. By another season it may not pay so well. There will be too many in the field. At present the market supply of lambs is below the actual consumptive demand. The herds of sheep cannot supply the farmers' demands for good breeders, and the wool clip must consequently be limited. It is an all-around demand that has its root in general prosperity and under production in sheep. During the hard times of recent years the flocks of sheep were so reduced in numbers that now it is hard work to recruit their ranks up to the needed numbers. This is the plain condition of affairs, and the man who has well-bred sheep and neglects to make the most of his opportunities deserves to fail. Sheep bought last spring and fall are today worth more than double what was paid for them. Their value, moreover, is steadily increasing, and if the present wave of prosperity continues, there is no saying what they will be worth next season. Brood Mares.

Brood mares should have all the well cured hay that they will eat when fed regularly three times a day, says the Horse Breeder. If in addition to this, they are fed not less than six quarts of the best oats, there will be but little danger of getting them too fat. Where there is one brood mare in the country injured by over-feeding, there are many that are actually suffering from lack of nourishment. Those who cannot afford to feed liberally had better reduce their stock or go out of business altogether. What has been said of brood mares is equally true of foals of all ages, from weanlings to maturity. Most farmers who raise only a few foals feed too sparingly. There is little danger of colts eating too much, either of hav or oats, prowided they have plenty of pure air and a chance to exercise every day. The feet of the youngsters need particular attention during the winter months. If not looked after carefully and often, they are likely to suffer from thrush, which, if not cured, will result in contracted feet. The practice of allowing colts to stand in filth to keep their feet soft has ruined the feet of many a promising foal. The feet should be seveled and dressed with a rasp at least every month to keep them in proper shape. A sharp lookout should be kept during winter for vermin and worms, either of which will cause a promising colt to become unthrifty in a short time. The former can generally be easily detected by examining the skin on the neck and around the fore shoulders. There are several varieties, some of which are so small that they may at first be mistaken for small specks of dandruff. Colts suffering from worms are often pot-bellied, the coat looks dead and rough, and the hair points toward the ears. When such a condition exists some good remedy should be tried without delay.

Frosted Combs. For years breeders have bred both rose and single comb fowls, and have most always found, when the thermometer was near the zero-point, that the single-comb fowls had their combs frozen, while the rose-comb birds were not seriously injured. One breeder of Leghorns claims that his stock of single-combed hens (though housed) ceased laying on account of frosted combs, while the rose-combed hens continued laying, unhurt by the frost. They were all fed and housed alike, yet such was his experience. Rosecombed birds have roosted out of doors on a zero night, and although the wattles were frozen badly their combs were unhurt, whereas a singlecomb bird under the same conditions lost both comb and wattles. It is reasonable to suppose that a rose comb will endure more cold than a single comb; but a large comb, either rose or single, is liable to be attacked in very cold weather. A rose comb is compact and full of blood, while the single comb is thin, with little blood in it, and whether large or small, cannot stand severe freezing. The ears, toes and fingers of a person freeze first because they are the extremities of the body, and have not sufficient bulk and blood to withstand the cold that the body has; and so with combs. The rose-comb fowls will endure much more cold than single-comb birds.

Snow That Is Alive. A most curious phenomenon is the northwest of Canada is the appearance of millions of minute black insects whenever a thaw occurs.

During the winter the snow is dry and crisp, like sand, and nothing whatever can be discovered of these insects, but as soon as a thaw comes they are found everywhere in large patches looking like a dusting of soot. They are generally known as snowfleas or jumpers; and have slight hopping powers, being able to leap some three or four inches. They entirely disappear when it freezes again, and not a trace of them can be found. They do not fall with the snow, as there may have been no snow for a month or more before their arrival, and are probably some thing similar to the "red snow" of arctic regions.

Elephant Hairs.

Superstitious Burmese pull out the hairs of an elephant's tail for talismans, making rings out of them and other charms. At Ahlone recently a native went into an elephant's shed and pulled six hairs out of the animal's tail, secreting them in his umbrella The mahout seized the thief and recovered the hairs. As a punishment the would-be charmer received twenty

"Never in the world would a traveler on European railways receive the courteous and considerate treatment that is accorded him on your American roads," remarked a London man recently. "I speak from personal experience, having been the recipient of such kindness, not once, but many times. Coming east not long ago from California, I stopped over in a city on rather a sudden impulse, and forgot to pack up all my belongings in the hurry. Thus it was that some rather costly sleeping garments went on with the train. The conductor, however, had referred me to a hotel in the town which I concluded to tarryin, and not long after reaching there *I got a telegram addressed to me say. ing my missing property had been taken up and would either be forwarded or left at a hotel in Chicago. I recovered it a few days later in that city. That is a simple enough incident, but it showed me the wonderful difference between the ways of this country and of Europe. Over there I would have mourned in vain for my lost apparel. If you are careless enough to leave anything on railroad trains outside of America, you never think of having

TIPPED A NAVAL OFFICER.

They Were Not Used to Officers in Workmen's Clothing.

An officer of the navy, who shall be nameless in deference to his extreme modesty, exhibited a curious trinket in the corridor of the St. Charles recently. It was a 5-cent coin, around which a narrow gold hoop had been welded. On the hoop was "Requiem Donum." in small, black, enameled letters. "I am going to give it to my wife for luck," said its possessor. "The story is this: I was at the Key West docks one day while the row was still in progress, helping with some repairs on the torpedo-boat Porter, when three ladies put in an appearance, eager to see the sights. They were wealthy Bostonians, and as they had the neeessary credentials I volunteered to show them around. I must have been a pretty disreputable-looking individual, for I had just crawled out of the engine room, and my old blue blouse and canvas trousers were a mass of oil and grime, but there was no time to fix up, and I proceeded to my duties as cicerone just as I was. The visitors were greatly interested, and as they insisted on seeing everything, were upward of three hours in making the rounds. I took them aboard an auxiliary cruiser, explained the workings of the guns, showed them a Whitehead torpedo, and, in brief, left nothing of interest unseen. When the tour was finally completed I suggested that they take a cup of tea at the officers' mess, supposing of course that they understood my rank from the salutes and salutations as we made the rounds, but they looked shocked and embarrassed. 'I am afraid,' said one of them, 'that we should hardly be welcome without a regular invitation. At that she opened her purse and extracted this nickel. 'Here, my good man,' she continued, 'take this for tobacco.' I was so stunned I forgot to thank her, and nodding pleasantly, the party sauntered away. The boys rigged me a good deal about the affair, but I concluded to keep the nickel in the family as a sort of talisman. A

Or if he does not do any of these things, he does something equally annoying. It may be that you yourself, when you sit thinking what you will say next to your typewriter girl, beat time with the tips of your finger-nails, while she taps her foot. All these little idiosyncrasies the neurologist classes as physical automatisms and regards as energy wasters. Mental automatisms are attracting a great deal of attention, and Dr. G. Stanley Hall, of Clark university, has sent out a syllabus asking you whether you find yourself avoiding or stepping on cracks, or counting the windows, grouping uniformly re-jeweler at Jacksonville put on the curring shapes in wall paper, or bisecting lines and rows of figures. The great Napoleon counted windows as he walked abroad, and if he happened to lose count his temper was completely upset for the rest of his walk. Everybody knows the story of poor old Dr. Johnson, who counted posts, and many sad insane men are doing the same today. There is a man who rides on the Olive street cars who plays a tattoo with his pencil from Grand avenue to Broadway, and you know just who the lady is who fans constantly while you are trying to get interested in the sermon, the cold blast striking you in the most tender part of the neck. One should avoid as much as possible this tendency of

Don't Buy. "It is not necessary to buy a new umbrella," said the observant man. "You may acquire them easier by what is called the right of conquest or protocol. In the first place you find a man who has an umbrella that doesn't belong to him. That is easy. Then you take it. Equally easy. You see this one? Well, I was caught out in the rain after lunch, and wondering what I could do, when I noticed a chan under an awning trying to open an umbrella. It was clear he didn't understand the fastening, and, as the umbrella itself was not new, the circumstancial evidence against him was conclusive. "So I walked up and said firmly: 'That's my umbrella, sir.' At the same time I took it out of his hand. He stammered something about a mistake and crept off, while I walked away proudly, sheltered from a very bad shower. That's what nerve will do. Wonder, by the way, whose it really is?"-Cincinnati Enquirer.

One of the sights that has always interested tourists who stopped over at the delightfully unmodernized city of Guanajuato is the catacombs beneath the cemetery. Vaults in the thick wall of the pantheon are sold for a term of years, and if at the end of the period the lease is not renewed, the bones of the departed are thrown into the common heap in the underground corridors. The dry, rare air of Guanajuato has, during the last 100 years, mummified the remains of many, and instead of consigning these to the general pile, they have been stood up against the walls of the passages, grim sentinels of death in death's abode. Many people visit the place out of curiosity, and the authorities recently decided that these mummies were an immoral sight. They have accordingly had white gowns made for them and the watchers now keep their silent vigils modestly at-

Novelist's Memory. A characteristic of the late William Black was his ignorance of his own hooks, and it was very difficult to get him to talk about his novels. It seemed that as soon as the proofsheets were returned to the printers Mr. Black forgot all about his own creations. "In talking to my husband the other day," Mrs. Black once said to a visitor, "I suddenly remembered an ancedote in one of his novels which and then turned eagerly to me: But where did you hear so good a story? My husband wouldn't believe it was in one of his books until I found it for

Saturated With Energy. No wonder Theobald Chartran, the French portrait painter, has a very high opinion of the United States of America. "The atmosphere of America," he says, "is saturated with energy which communicates to the nerves an unaccustomed tension, and to the whole organism a sort of fever that gives one tenfold one's usual energy. Carolus Duran, Benjamin-Constant, Raffaelli, have all experienced this. Even Madrasso, laziness person. ified, becomes almost industrious the instant he sets foot in Brooklyn. They are seized with a sort of rage to produce, and tremble like thoroughbreds under the whip." In M. Chartran's own case this theory is certainly corroborated. He lives in New York from October to April each year, during which time he contrives to paint on an average from twenty-five to thirty portraits. As his usual price is $5,000, his annual jaunt is very far from being unprofitable. He strenuously advises young protrait painters to cultivate America.

Butterflies in Winter. By way of comment upon our note about the appearance of butterflies in December, says the Westminster Gazette, an entomological correspondent points out that it does not seem to be generally known that several of our species of British butterflies hibernate, and appear during the winter when the weather is genial enough to tempt them from their hiding-places. The brimstone butterfly is the most frequently noticed, but all our British varieties of Vanessa may be occasionally seen, including both varieties of tortoiseshell, the Peacock and the Cumberwell Beauty. These are often taken for spring insects. They are, in fact, late summer and autumn flies; and the numbers of them seen during the spring months are those which have survived the

LOVE ON A CYCLE.

"Much better learn in the road, miss. Some of the quiet roads about here is worth all the cycle tracks in the kingdom. Stands to reason you learn more

"But-but wouldn't it be worse to fall off in a public road?" the young lady suggested timidly.

"You won't fall off," said the proprietor, reassuringly. "My young man will see to that. He'll hold you on right enough.

"Is the young man in now?" inquired Hetty.

She was an exceedingly pretty brunette of 19, with wavy dark hair and sunny blue eyes, a girl any young man might have been proud to hold on to a bicycle. She had recently come un from the country with her mother, a doctor's widow, who had one daughter married and settled in London already, and who had taken a small house in a quiet street in that part of Hammersmith which now genteelly styles itself "West Kensington."

Hetty's married sister, Mrs. Mornington-Willoughby, insisted that Hetty wanted "smartening and brightening up to date." To this end Hetty must at once learn to "bike," this being the year of the bicycle craze among smart and would-be smart Londoners.

No girl had a chance of marrying decently, opined Mrs. Mornington-Willoughby, unless she could golf and bike. And as Hetty hadn't any money marriage was the only thing for her.

Mr. Mornington-Willoughby was a successful auctioneer. His wife spent his money and looked down upon the means by which it was made. Her aim was to be "smart" above all things, and she intended that her pretty sister, Hetty, "who really has no style, poor child, and is dreadfully provincial." should be an attraction at her "at homes" ("second Sundays 9 to 12, first Sundays 4 to 7") and should marry really well. To this end she decreed that Hetty should bike, and chose a costume for her sister from a "smart" lady's tailor, in which Hetty looken distractingly pretty. "Only you really should powder to tone down those red cheeks," said Mrs. Mornington-Willoughby, "and practice cycling somewhere in back streets, for beetroot color over an exercise until you're used to it." Thus it came about that Hetty Sylvester stood in a cycle shop bargaining with the proprietor for a course of lessons from one of his two "young men."

you're just the kind of girl to grow

"The instructors are in the back of the shop there-at least one of them is," said the proprietor, jerking his head in the direction of a long vista of bicycles which led from the shop to a capacious shed at the other end. "He's a new hand I've had to take on lately through press of work, a crack rider and first-class instructor, thoroughly reliable. Now, when will you have your first lesson? Will to-morrow morning at 10 suit you, or is that too early?" "Oh, earlier, if possible," returned Hetty. "There'll be less people to see me fall about"

The proprietor laughed. "Some other young ladies are of your way of thinking, for both my young men have engagements for 9 o'clock onward. How would a quarter to 10 suit you? A quarter to 10 in the Meredale road? I wouldn't have more than ten minutes or so the first time if I was you. Vaughan," he called out down the shop, "a quarter to 10 in the Meredale road to-morrow morning; you'll have finished Mrs. Jenkins and be able to take this young lady, Miss Sylvester, won't you?"

"Yes, sir." The answer came from the depths of the shop, beyond the avenue of machines, where a group of three young men were standing beside a workman who was explaining something about a broken-down machine. One of the young men was broad-shouldered and well built and was dressed in a smart tweed cycling get-up; and even at this distance and by the bad light of the shed, it seemed to Hetty that he was markably good-looking. She hoped, t unnaturally, that this might prove be Vaughan, the teacher. It was rely pleasanter to be held on to a chine by an eminently presentable ing man, who looked at a distance is cycling dress quite like a gentle-, than by some ugly, grimy 'Arry. of course, such a trifle was really of no consequence; still, when, the next morning, Hetty arrived at the Meredale road, she glanced with some interest up and down it in search of her

At first she could only see a stout lady in a shepherd's plaid costume wabbling along with difficulty on a bicycle, supported by a sallow-faced, weedy-looking youth in a shabby black coat and shocking boots. The youth and the lady went up and down the road, taking no notice of her, and Hetturning the corner of the road, beto her relief the handsome young an she had seen in the shop on the previous day coming briskly along by the pavement in charge of a lady's machine and evidently on the lookout for "Stop!" said Hetty; and the young man stopped, smiled and raised his

His manner of doing so was so natural and so eminently gentlemanly that Hetty grew embarrassed and blushed.

"I beg your pardon," she said, "but don't you come from Messrs. Tynn & Harris' bicycle shop?"

.. "I do," said the young man. "I think," said Hetty, blushing again, for Messrs. Tynn & Harris' young man had laughing gray eyes under dark eyelashes and a trick of staring intently in the face of any one who was. talking to him, "I think I am your appointment for a quarter to 10?" "I am very glad to hear it," said the young man. "Glad?" "Well, you see, miss," he said, quickly, "it's a relief to teach any one young and slight, like you, after some of the weights I've had to pull round." "There's a very stout lady being taught in the Meredale road, just round the corner, by a man in a black

"Ah, that's my mate, Bill," observed the roung man, as he lowered the seat

He was so handsome and so eminently well-bred looking that it seemed a pity he should speak in rather a common style and allude to the youth in the bad boots as "my mate, Bill," and call his pupil "miss." His manner of teaching, too, was charming, and, although he occasionally dropped, or misplaced, rather, a large and necessary "h," as, for instance, when he alluded to the "'ouses at the hend of the road," his voice was pleasant and mellow, with hardly a trace of a cockney inflection, Hetty was timid at first, and clung to him as is the manner of all beginners. But he did not seem to mind. He was provided with a leather strap, which he fastened round her waist as she had seen other instructors do, and he caught her most cleverly when she was about to tumble off.

"You must have had a great deal of practice," said Hetty, "and I am immensely obliged to you. They told me at the shop you were a crack rider as well as instructor." "Very 'andsome of Mr. 'Arris," murmured the young man. Hetty felt sorry about his "h's." It was a pity, she thought, that they could not exchange instruction, and that in return for his gentle and kindly teaching of balance on a bicycle she could not initiate him in the mysteries of the eighth letter of the alphabet. The "mate, Bill,"-came along during

at the edge of the pavement to eve them curiously. "Your friend looks annoved," said

the progress of the lesson and stopped

Hetty. "He's so greedy; he wants all the custom," her instructor explained. Excusing himself, he joined the pallid young man in the bad boots on the payement and interchanged some talk with him, after which the shabby young man smiled and walked away. "I'm immensely obliged to you, Mr.

Vaughan," Hetty said at the end of about twenty minutes, "but I'm rather tired now. Shall I make an appointment for to-morrow with you or at the shop?" "Oh, with me, please."

"I wonder," said Mr. Vaughan, after consulting an extremely smart Russia leather pocketbok, "whether 9 o'clock to-morrow would be too early for you? Then we shall have the place to ourselves."

"Nine will do beautifully. Good morning, Mr. Vaughan, and thank

He raised his cap and she noticed how pretty his short, curly hair looked in the spring sunshine. He was cer-'tainly a most good-looking young man, and there was, of course, no harm in his smiling at her when he said goodby, especially as he had such nice, white teeth. On her way home Hetty wondered whether Mr. Vaughan had a "young woman," and, if so, whether she was not very proud of him?

Calling on her sister that afternoon, she recounted to her her first experiences on the "bike."

"And what sort of a man was your teacher?" asked Mrs. Mornington-Willoughby, a tall, slender woman, with elaborately waved hair, touched up with chestnut hair dye, a highpitched voice and a manner suggestive at once of irresponsibility and artificiality and which contrasted ill with Hetty's frank simplicity. "Oh, wonderfully good-looking, and so nice!" "Heavens, child! You're blushing! It's horribly bad form to blush when you talk about men of that class. You'll be blushing about your hairdresser next. Of course they choose good-looking men for that sort of thing -holding girls on bikes and all that. Broken-down gentlemen they are sometimes, and awful scamps you may be sure."

"But Mr. Vaughan isn't a brokendown gentleman," said Hetty, hastily. "At least I mean, though he looks and behaves like a gentleman, he drops his

"Oh, lots of university men do that. We're not so particular about h's in town as the good people in the provinces. But I'm glad he's not a gentleman. Makes him safer. Why, there was an awful scandal last season at the Regency skating rink. They had two instructors there all the girls went mad about. Awfully good-looking, you know. The dress showed them off. The girls used to take them out to lunch and stand them all sorts of things." "Maud! How disgusting of them!" "Don't look so shocked. It is so provincial to be easily shocked. At last Lady Betty Wardroper's guardians found she'd given one of these men a pair of diamond sleeve-links and was secretly corresponding with him. Of course there was an awful row." "Of course!" Hetty repeated. "But -but she was fond of him?" "As if anybody bothered about that! She was packed off abroad and the young man got sent away. Oh, those handsome young men who go in for teaching young girls riding, or skating, or biking, make a very good thing of Hetty was silent. She could not bring herself to think that nice, big, gentle-mannered Mr. Vaughan "made a good thing" of the folly of well-educated girls, who ought to know better than to fall in love with him. Yet her manner on the following morning, when she met him at 9 o'clock in the deserted Meredale road, was marked by a slight touch of constraint, which,

however, soon vanished under the ence in a quiet country town. Hetty was an unselfish, sweet-nat ured girl, and all that could be learned about her was to her credit. She had been an excellent daughter and had nursed her father devotedly through his long illness; she loved outdoor exercise, skating, riding, rowing and gardening: she was fond, too, of dancing, but she had no taste for the round of trivial engagements with which her sister filled her time, nor had she the least desire to emulate that lady's "smartness."

"Is Mrs. Mornington-Willoughby your sister?" Mr. Vaughan had asked in evident surprise. "Yes. Do you-have you ever heard of her?" "My mate taught a friend of hers, I think," the young man answered in rather a confused way.

Hetty was startled on looking back to recall the extreme friendliness with which she and Mr. Vaughan had parted and the length of that second lesson. She could not get the young man out of her head, and with a hot flush of shame she asked herself whether she was not "just as bad" as those girls at the skating rink of whom her sister had told her. None of the men she met at Mrs. Mornington-Willoughby's "at home" were half so good-looking or charming in manner as Mr. Vaughan, even if they were more certain in their h's. The girl began to feel troubled and distressed. She went to bed thinking about the bicycle teache sgray eyes, and as a consequence about them, and next red as a rose when

of the bicycle. Now, will you mount, "Miss Sylvester," said Hetty, correcting him.

This time it was her turn to learn about him. His mother was dead, Mr. Vauchan told her, and his father was "in business in Westminster," which Hetty took to mean a shop there. He himself was quite independent, 26, and on the lookout for a wife. "In my own station of life, of course," he added.

"Yes, I hope you will find a very good one," murmured Hetty. "I suppose I oughtn't to look so high as a lady?" Mr. Vaughan suggested. insinuatingly, as he held her hand in his while assisting her to alight. . "I really don't know why you shouldn't," she answered, simply. "You only want, if you will forgive me for saying so-"Pray, tell me!" "Well, to be just a little more careful with your h's." "Thank you, immensely," he said, gratefully. "Now, will you help me at that? You will want at least a dozen lessons more to teach you cycling. Will you look after my h's if I look after your balance?"

"Of course I will," said Hetty, promptly. But three pouring wet days put a stop to the cycling, and on the evening of the third even the constantly recurring thought of Mr. Vaughan was banished for the time from Hetty's mind by the event of her first dance in London. It was a subscription dance. and Hetty, in white tulle and lilies of the valley, looked lovely enough to almost satisfy her sister.

very young and fresh and all that." The member for Kensington, Sir. Henry Grahame, a wealthy baronet, was among those who sought an introduction to Mrs. Mornington-Willoughby's pretty sister. He was a handsome, erect man of about 50, and he exclaimed gallantly that the belle of the room must not be wasted on "a fogy like himself" for a round dance, but that she must know his son.

"No style," that lady declared, "but "I am enormously proud of my boy Eric," he told her, "and I must find him for you." Mentally he was wondering how such a sweet, well-bred girl came to be the sister of that handsome snob, Mrs. Mornington-Willoughby. "Here is my boy," Sir Henry exclaimed with fatherly pride, as a handsome, well-built young man, with laughing gray eyes and curly fair hair, approached them. "Eric, I want to introduce you to Miss Sylvester." "Miss Sylvester and I are old friends, father. We have met-out cycling. May I have this waltz, Miss Sylvester; or are you engaged?"

"You have been making fun of me all the time," whispered Hetty, with burning cheeks, as she laid her fingers on Mr. Vaughan's arm. "It was cruel of you, "On my honor I haven't. You met me in the bicycle shop, and next day, as I was on my way to my sister's house to give her a lesson on her new machine, you asked me if I came from Tynn & Harris' and I told you truthfully that I did. Then you told me that my name was Vaughan and that you had an appointment with me, and I couldn't find it in my heart to contradict you."

"And where was, Mr. Vaughan all the time?" "Mr. Vaughan was 'my mate, Bill." He wanted to spoil the sport, so I squared him.

"You were laughing at me all the time," faltered Hetty, "and I can never forgive you." "Not if I never drop another 'h'? Remember you encouraged me to believe I might some day marry a lady if I only took care of that." "It's extraordinary what luck some girls have," Mrs. Mornington-Willoughby asserted, not without envy, a week later. "There's my little sister, fresh from the country and can't say boo to a goose, and she has managed to hook the son and heir of a rich baronet at her very first dance. The man had never seen her before and he proposed the same evening!" But Mrs. Mornington-Willoughby was never let into the secret between Eric and Hetty, of love on a cycle!

Proposition for the Establishment of a Reserve to Be Submitted to the Members.

Kansas City, Mo., June 8.—Renewed interest showed at the second day's session of the eleventh biennial convention of the Modern Woodmen of America. Several thousand belated members of the order had arrived during the night, and on the questions of importance developed enthusiastic work and discussion. The action of Tuesday night's session, which took the preliminary steps toward creating a reserve fund, a question which has been fought for ten years, was discussed freely by the delegates before the gathering met. Head Consul Northcott had been instructed to appoint a committee of five to draft a plan for such a fund and to report Wednesday. Thereport was made the special business of the day, and it proved one for fruitful

The committee on reserve fund reported at the afternoon session. The plan that it recommends is that 12 regular assessments be made each year. The assessments are now made only as the money is needed in paying the faces of beneficiary certificates. The committee suggested that all the surplus from the assessments be placed in the reserve fund. The fund is only to be drawn upon when more than the 12 assessments are necessary in the year, or in cases of epidemics of disease. The report was taken up for debate at once. Head Consul Northcott was the first to speak on the report. He estimated that the surplus from the assessments by the plan recommended by the committee would make a fund of $1,200,000 in a year, and suggested that when this sum had been reached it be invested in government bonds.

Against the proposal to order assessments for the creation of a reserve fund. it was argued that the head camp would not be justified in taking such radical action without first having given the 400,000 members of the order an opportunity to discuss the proposition and instruct their delegates to the head camp.

A. R. Talbot, of Nebraska, offered as a substitute for the committee recommendation a resolution providing for the submission of the question to the membership of the society, with instructions to the head clerk to report the result of the ballot to the head camp at its next meeting, in 1901. The substitute resolution was adopted by a large majority.

KRUGER IS TOO EXACTING. Fails to Come to Agreement with the British High Commissioner

at Bloemfontein. Brussels, June 8. - Dr. Leyds, the European representative of the Transvaal, has received an official dispatch from Pretoria, confirming the report of the failure of President Kruger and the British high commissioner, Sir Alfred Milner, to reach an agreement at the conference just held at Bloemfontein. It is added that, although President Kruger offered important concessions, he made them contingent upon the British acceptance of the principle of arbitration on the differences existing between Great Britain and the Transvaal. This Great Britain heretofore has invariably refused on the ground that it ent of the inequalities of the two countries. According to the dispatch received by Dr. Leyds, President Kruger proposed that a sojourn of two years be neces sary for naturalization and that the full franchise be acquirable five years later, coupled with property and other qualifications. The British high commissioner regarded the proposal as insufficient and made a counter-proposal. President Kruger, it is further asserted, intends to submit both proposals to the volksraad, subject to the favorable decision of Great Britain relative to ar-

London, June 8. - The report of the breakdown of the Bloemfontein negotiations has created considerable anxiety in political and official circles and there is much speculation as to the next move of the British government. While Great Britain probably does not mean war, it is generally thought that, at any rate, there will be military prepbitration.

The Proposed Dewey Home. 1 am a farmer located near Stony Brook, one of the most malarious districts in this State, and was bothered with malaria for years, at times so I could not work, and was always very constipated as well. For years I had malaria so bad in the spring, when engaged in plowing, that I could do nothing but shake. I must have taken about a barrel of quinine pills besides dozens of other remedies, but never obtained any permanent benefit. Last fall, in peach time, I had a most serious attack of chills and then commenced to take Ripans Tabules, upon a friend's advice, and the first box made me all right and I have never been without them since. I take one Tabule each morning and night and sometimes when I feel more than usually exhausted I take three in a day. They have kept my stomach sweet, my bowels regular and I have not had the least touch of malaria nor splitting headache since l commenced using them. I know also that I sleep better and wake up more refreshed than formerly. I don't know how many complaints Ripans Tabules will help, but I do know they will cure any one in the condition I was and I would not be without them at any price. I honestly consider them the cheapest-priced medicine in the world, as they are also the most beneficial and the most convenient to take. I am twenty-seven years of age and have worked hard all my life, the same as most farmers, both early and late and in all kinds of weather, and I have never enjoyed such good health as I have since last fall; in fact, my neighbors have all remarked my improved condition and have "Say, John, what are you doing to look so healthy?"
